TU'RBANED. } "A Turkish hat, of white and fine linnen, wreathed into a rundle, broad at the bottom, to inclose the head, and lessening, for ornament, towards the top," (Cotgrave.)

Dampier calls it,—a turbat.

The men of the same countrey vse to have their haire kempt, and trimmed like vnto our women: and they weare golden turbants vpon their heades richly set with pearle, and pretious stones.

Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. p. 54.

And twin'd of sixty elles of lawne and more,
A turbant strange, adorn'd his tresses hore.

Fairefax. Godfrey of Boulogne, b. xvii. s. 10.

— Set you downe this:

And say besides, that in Aleppo once,
Where a malignant, and a turbant-Turke
Beate a Venetian, and traduc'd the state,
I tooke by th' throat the circumcised dogge,
And smoate him, thus.—Shakes. Othello, Act v. sc. 2.

But if ye take that course which Erasmus was wont to say Luther took against the pope and monks, if ye denounce war against their miters and their bellies, ye shall soon discern that turbant of pride which they wear upon their heads, to be no helmet of salvation, but the meer mettle and horn-work of papal jurisdiction.

Milton. Apology for Smectymnus.

O how the fair queen with the golden maids,
The sun of night, thy happy fortunes aids!
Though turban'd princes for a badge her wear,
To them she wains, to thee would full appear.

Drummond. The Speech of the Moon.

He had on a long robe of purple silk, and a kind of turban on his head of the same colour, which had a star of gold wrought on it, worn just before.—Glanvill. Ess. 7.

They wear but few cloaths; their heads are circled with a short turbat, fringed or laced at both ends; it goes once about the head, and is tied in a knot, the laced ends hanging down.—Dampier. Voyages, an. 1686.

They wear no hat, cap, nor turbat, nor any thing to keep off the sun.—Id. Ib. an. 1687.

— With front unblest'd, came towering in Proctor armipotent, in stern deport

Resembling turban'd Turk.

J. Philips. Cerealia.

TU'RBULENT.

TU'RBULENTLY.

TU'RBULENCE.

TU'RBULENCY.

Fr. Turbulent; It. Torbido, turbulento; Sp. Turbado, turbulento; Lat. Turbidus, turbulentus, om turba; Gr. Τυρβη, a mob or multitude. Lennep derives from συν-ειν, trahere, and his Editor—from τυρ-ειν miscere. By mere transposition of the letter, it appears to be the same word as trib-ul-are, to trouble. (See TROUBLE.) Turbed is—

Troubled,—disordered, vexed, disquieted, agitated, muddy. Turbulent,— Disquieted, agitated, confused; confusedly noisy, or clamorous; stormy, tempestuous.

Since I was hurl'd among these walls, I had divers fits of melancholy, and such turbid intervals that use to attend close prisoners, who for the most part have no other companions, but confus'd troops of wandering cogitations.

Howell. b. ii. Let. 30.

Mast'ring the mighty, humbling the poorer wight,
By all severest means that could be wrought;
And, making the succession doubtful, rent
This new-got state, and left it turbulent.

Daniel. Civil Wars, b. i.

Yet as being oft times noxious where they light
On man, beast, plant, wastfull and turbulent,
Like turbulencies in the affairs of men,
Over whose heads they rore, and seem to point,
They oft fore-signifie and threaten ill.

Milton. Paradise Regained, b. iv.

— For I haue dreamt

Of bloody turbulence; and this whole night
Hath nothing beene but shapes, and formes of slaughter.
Shakespeare. Troil. & Cres. Act v. sc. 3.

Since the turbulency of these times, the same moderation shines in you, notwithstanding that the mitre is so trampled upon, and that there be such violent factions afoot.

Howell. b. i. Let. 54.

But now, of turbid elements the sport,
From clear to cloudy tost, from hot to cold,
And dry to moist, with inward-eating change,
Our drooping days are dwindled down to nought,
Their period finish'd ere 'tis well begun.

Thomson. Spring.

With jealous eyes, at distance she had seen,
Whispering with Jove, the silver-footed queen;
Then, impotent of tongue (her silence broke)
Thus turbulent in rattling tone she spoke.

Dryden. Homer. Iliad, b. i.

As this innocent way of passing a leisure hour is not only consistent with a great character, but very graceful in it; so there are two sorts of people to whom I would most earnestly recommend it. The first are those who are uneasy out of want of thought; the second are those who are so out of a turbulence of spirit.—Tatler, No. 112.

Their religion, like an hecick body, hath, by degrees, been consumed by its own heats, whilst that zeal and fervour, which should move and animate it, hath been converted into its disease, and wholly evaporated into faction and turbulency.—Scott. Christian Life, pt. i. c. 4

It is true, indeed, that benevolence, arising from this source, at first runs thick and turbid; but, as it holds its way, it refines; it purifies and expands its current, till it hath lost all memory of its low original.

Warburton, vol. ix. Ser. 3.

A person of small merit is anxiously jealous of imputations on his honour, because he knows his title is weak; one of great merit turbidly resents them, because he knows his title is strong.—Young. Estimation of Human Life.

To thorny thickets flock'd the feather'd throng,
And pensive plied their melancholy song,
Or to the shelter of the forest driven,
Escap'd the windy turbulence of Heav'n.

Fawke. Description of Winter.

Has any nymph her faithful lover lost,
And in the visions of the night,
And all the day-dreams of the light;
In sorrow's tempest turbulently tost—
From her cheeks the roses die.

Smart. Ode on St. Cecilia's Day.

TUR

TU'RBINATED. Fr. Turbine; Lat. Turbatus. Formed like a top (turbo), like an inverted cone; or a cone—spiral; moving like a top.

Let mechanism here make an experiment of its power, and produce a spiral and turbinated motion of the whole moved body without an external director.—Bentley. Ser. 4.

An irregular contortion of a turbinated shell, which common eyes pass unregarded, will ten times treble its price in the imagination of philosophers.—Idler, No. 56.

TU'RBOT. Fr. Turbot; Dut. Turbot, terbot. In Latin called the Rhombus, from Gr. Ρομβος, ρεμβ-ειν, to turn or roll round; and Scaliger thinks the turbot is so called from turbo, a top.

Of sea-fishes some be plaine and flat, as byrts or turbots, solds, plaice, and flounders. And these differ from the turbots onlie in the making of their bodie. For in a turbot the right side turneth upward, and in a plaice the left.

Holland. Plinie, b. ix. c. 20.

To make thy meal of sauces, and to make the accessory become the principal, and pleasure to rule the table, and all the regions of thy soul, is to make a man less and lower than an oglio, of a cheaper value than a turbat.

Bp. Taylor, vol. i. Ser. 16.

Not oysters of the Lucrine lake

My sober appetites would wish,

Nor turbot, or the foreign fish

That rolling tempests overtake,

And hither waft the costly dish.

Dryden. Horace, Epode 2.

Turbots grow to a very large size; we have seen them of three and twenty pounds weight, but have heard of some that weighed thirty.

Pennant. British Zoology. Turbot Flounder.

TU'RCISM. } Religion, manners, &c. of the

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 8.

Cato, not content to have defended the graft with clay or past aforesaid, yea and to preserve it with turf and mosse against the injurie of rain and cold, bound it about also with little knitches of soft osier twigs slyved in twalne.

Holland. Plinie, b. xvii. c. 14.

They pierce the turfie ground, and under it meet with a black and deadish water, and in it small fishes do swim.
Fuller. Worthies. Lancashire.

Then after length of time, the labouring swains,
Who turn the turfs of those unhappy plains,
Shall rusty piles from the plough'd furrows take,
And over empty helmets pass the rake.

Dryden. Virgil. Georgics, b. i.

When Charion saw me, from his turfy bed
With eagerness he rais'd his drooping head:
"Oh! fly, my dear, this guilty place," he cry'd,
"And in some distant clime thy virtue hide!"

Pomfret. Cruelty & Lust.

Thus you call a canal the same notwithstanding a perpetual influx and efflux of the waters, and after you have new turfed the banks; but tho' it be the same canal no man will esteem it the same substance, for it seems necessary to substantial identity that the component parts should remain unchanged.—Search. Light of Nature, vol. ii. pt. i. c. 4.

There is, indeed, an elegance and a classical simplicity in the turf-clad heap of mould which covers the poor man's grave, though it has nothing to defend it from the insults of the proud but a bramble.—Knox. Ess. No. 93.

TURGENT. Fr. Turgent; It. Turgido; Lat. Turgidus, turgens, pres. part. of turgere, to swell; of unknown origin. Vossius suggests from urgere, by prefixing t.

TURN, v. See TOURN, TOURNAMENT.
TURN, n. Fr. Tourner; It. Tornare; Sp. Tornar; Lat. Tornare; Gr. Topvos, a tool or instrument to form a round or circle, whether concave or convex,—all from the Gr. Τερ-ειν, terebrare, (Skinner.)
And see Mencege,—Le Origini It. in v. Tornare.
The A. S. Tyrn-an, vertere, flectere, volvere, is probably the original word.

To move or cause to move out of a straight line, out of a direction or course; to be or cause to be, to take, to put or place in another, an altered, a changed course or direction; an altered or changed form, posture, or position, state or condition, or appearance; to change or alter; to wind, to round.

Turn—with prepositions expressed or understood—is used as equivalent to various compound words derived from the Latin; as—

To avert, to convert, to invert, to pervert, to revert or reverse.

To deflect, to inflect, to reflect.

To revolve, to retort; to transfer, to transpose, to transform.

Turn, the noun, besides its usage in common with the verb, is applied to—

A vicissitude, a chance, an occasion, an opportunity, a purpose.

The Englis kynges turned, thei mot do no more,
But soiornd tham a while in rest a Bangore.

TURPITUDE. Fr. Turpitude; It. Turpitudine; Lat. Turpido, from turpis: of unknown origin; perhaps from turba. (See TURBID.) Applied to—

Moral foulness or defilement; baseness.

But though no other plague and reuenge should follow sacrilegious violations of holy things, the naturall secret disgrace and ignominy, the very turpitude of such actions in the eye of a wise vnderstanding heart, is it selfe a heauy punishment.—Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, b. v. § 79.

The second effect is shame, which conscience never fails to inflict secretly, there being a secret turpitude and base-ness in sin, which cannot be better express'd than by its opposition and contradiction to conscience.

Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. i. c. 1.

Vice [ought] to be avoided, for that evil of turpitude which is in it, and not for any other external evil consequent thereupon.—Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 419.

When we have surveyed them round about, and considered them in all their natural turpitude, disingenuity, and indecency, and applied them to our selves in all their appendent strings, shameful effects, and dismal circumstances, so that our hearts begin to feel them, and to smart and bleed under the dolorous sense of them; then must we pour them out before God, in sad and mournful confessions.

Scott. Christian Life, pt. i. c. 4.

TURRET, n. } Fr. Tourette; It. Torricella; length of the lower part, whereupon the lamp standeth, &c.

you shall finde, that it will burne slow, and a long time.

Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 373.

Now like a maiden queen she will behold,
From her high turrets, hourly suitors;
The east with incense, and the west with gold,
Will stand like suppliants to receive her doom.

Dryden. Annus Mirabilis.

His equals, over whom he attempts to rise, shoot at him from the ground the shafts of envy, and those who have already risen, assail him from the turret with the missile weapons of jealousy.—Knox. Winter Evenings, Even. 45.

TURTLE. Fr. Tourterelle; It. Tortola; Sp.
Tortolilla; Lat. Turtur. In A. S. Tūrl, turtle, turtele.

They schulen geve an offrynge aftr that is seid in the lawe of the lord: a payre of turturis or tweie culver briddis.

Wiclif. Luk, c. 2.

& to offer (as it is sayde in the lawe of the Lorde) a payre of turtle doues or two yonge pignons.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

" Rise up, my wif, my love, my lady free;
The turtles vois is herd, myn owen swete:
The winter is gon, with all his raines wete."
Chaucer. The Marchantes Tale, v. 10,012.

He saw the body of his dearly esteemed prince, and heard Gynecia's lamenting: not such as the turtle-like love is wont to make for the over-soon loss of her only loved mate.

Sidney. Arcadia, b. iv.

And ye, faire ladies, that your kingdomes make
In th' harts of men, them governe wisely well,
And of faire Britomart ensample take,
That was as trew in love as turtle to her mate.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 11.

" And have a flock of turtle-doves,
A guard on us to keep,
As witness of our honest loves,
To watch us till we sleep."

Drayton. The Shepherd's Sirena.

Not half so swift the sailing falcon flies,
That drives a turtle through the liquid skies;
As Phœbus, shooting from th' Idæan brow,
Glides down the mountain to the plain below.

Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. xv.

Almah. So two kind turtles, when a storm is nigh,
Look up, and see it gath'ring in the skie:
Each calls his mate to shelter in the groves,
Leaving in murmur their unfinished loves:
Perch'd on some drooping branch they sit alone,
And coo, and hearken to each other's moan.

Dryden. 2 Pt. Conquest of Granada, Act i. sc. 2.

TURTLE. } Seamen (says Skinner) call TURTLER. } the sea tortoises turtles, from the
It. Tartùga, tartarùga. See TORTOISE.

These people have great large nets, with wide meshes to catch the turtle. The Jamaica turtlers have such; and I did never see the like nets but at Jamaica and here.

Dampier. Voyages, an. 1687.

The Jamaica turtlers visit these keys with good success for turtle all the year long, and from thence bring most of their turtle wherewith the market of Port-royal is served.

Id. Ib. Discourse of Winds, c. 4.

TUSH. } Or as Holinshed writes it—TUSHING, n. } Twish. I know not, says Skinner, whether from the Dut. Twissen, discordare, (q.d.)
That is dissonant or absonant, or absurd.
See the quotation from Udal.

Nowe after a peruerse kynde of iudgement (as it wer, setting the cart beefore the horses) thou flatterest and pleasest thy self in thine owne good qualitees, as though they were singular, and at an other mannes thou makest much tushing, and many excepcions.—Udal. Luke, c. 6.

There is a cholericke or disdainfull interiection vsed in the Irish language called Boagh, which is as much in English as twish.—Holinshed. Description of Ireland, c. 8.

Tush, tush, son, said Cecropia, if you say you love, but withal you fear, you fear least you should offend.

Sidney. Arcadia, b. iii.

Cleon. Tush, nymph, his swans will prove but geese,
His barge drinks water like a fleece:
A boat is base; I'll thee provide
A chariot, wherein Jove may ride.

Drayton. The Muses' Elysium, Nymph. 2.

TUSK, n. } A. S. Tuxas. Dentes exerti.
TUSK, v. } Tusks of a boar; the projecting TUSKY. } teeth of the boar.
TUSH. } Tusked,—having tusks.
To tusk,—to shew, or move the tusks.

And up and doune as he that forrest sought,
He met he saw a bore, with tuskes great,
That slept ayenst the bright sunnes heat.

Chaucer. Troil. & Cres, b. v.

Janus sit by the fire with double berd,
And drinketh of his bugle horn the wine:
Before him stant braune of the tusked swine,
And "Nowell" crieth every lusty man.

Id. The Frankeleines Tale, v. 11,564.

Meriones lent Ithacus his quiver and his bow;
His helmet fashiond of a hide: the workman did bestow
Much labour in it, quilting it, with bow-strings; and without,
With snowie tuskes of white-mouth'd bores, 'twas armed round about

Right cunningly.—Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. x.

The chase she lov'd not, nor with hound or spear
Would charge the tusked bore, or savage bear.

Sherburne. Salmacis.

Nay, now you puffed, tusk, and draw up your chin, Twirle the poore chain you run a feasting in.

B. Jonson. Epig, 107.

TWA

O be advis'd; thou know'st not what it is
With javelin's point a churlish swine to gore, Whose tusks, never-sheath'd, he whetteth still,
Like to a mortal butcher, bent to kill.

Shakespeare. Venus & Adonis.

On Oeneus' field she sent a monstrous boar,
That levell'd harvests, and whole forests tore:
This beast (when many a chief his tusks had slain)
Great Meleager stretch'd along the plain.

Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. ix.

Cor. These branches of a stag, this tusky boar,
(The first essay of arms untry'd before)
Young Mycon offers, Delia, to thy shrine.

Dryden. Virgil. Past, 7.

Rous'd by their smart, the savage lion roars,
And mad to combat rush the tusky boars,
Of wounds secure.

Wilkie. The Epigoniad, b. i.

TUSSEL, n. } i. e. a Tousel, dim. of touse
TUSSEL, v. } or tease.

And, scarcely hatch'd, these sons of him
That hurls the bolt trisulcate,
With helmet shell on tender head
Did tustle with red-ey'd pole-cat.

Percy. Reliques. Saint George for England.

I hate to see two people bear ill-will to one another, after they have had a tussel.

Fielding. History of a Foundling, b. ix. c. 4.

TUT. Perhaps Toot, toot; i. e. See, see.

And that he [my lord of Norfolk] said, (to what she had spoken, as it seems in her own defence) "Tut, tut, tut;"— and shaking his head three or four times.

State Trials. Hen. VIII, an. 1536. Q. Anna Boleyn.

TUTELAGE. } See TUITION.
TUTOR.

TUTSAN. Fr. Tutsan. Skinner says, it is remarkable for its efficacy in healing wounds;
and thinks it so called, (q.d.) Totum sanum or sanans.

The yarrow, wherewithal he stops the wound-made gore;
The healing tutsan then, and plantane for a sore.

Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 13.

TUTTY. Fr. Tuthie; Low Lat. Tutia, from Ger. Tootsen, explorare, to try, to examine; or Fr. Toucher, to touch. (See Vossius, de Vit. lib.
ii. c. 18.) The true tuthie (says Cotgrave) is bred of the sparkles of brazen furnaces whereinto store of the mineral calamine, beaten to dust, hath been cast.

Upon the mantle-tree (for I am a pretty curious observer,) stood a pot of lambitive electuary, with a stick of liquorice, and near it a phial of rose-water, and powder of tutty.

Tatler, No. 266.

TUZ. Perhaps from the Fr. Tasse, a tuff (or tuff) of grass. Tasse de foin, a bundle of hay, (Cotgrave,) or it may be a corruption of Tush or tusks; tufts of hairs projecting like tusks. Donne, in his Hist. of the Septuagint, has the expression—
Tussies of all fruits.

A girdle of flowers and tussies of all fruits, intertyed and following together, (p. 49, ed. 1633.)

With odorous oyl, thy head and hair are sleek;
And then thou kemb'st the tuzzes on thy cheek.

Dryden. Persius, Sat. 4.

— With Proserpine
When I am dead, I will won in pine,
And there I will eternally complain
My wo, and how that twinned be we twain.
Chaucer. Troil. & Cres. b. iv.

So soon as he [Taurus] is risen from the coast of the East Indian Sea, he parteth in twaine: and taking the right hand, passeth northward, and on the left hand southward, somewhat bending into the west: yea, and dividing Asia through the mids.—Holland. Plinie, b. v. c. 27.

— I may be bold
To justifie a truth, this very sword
Of mine slew more than any twain besides.
Beaum. & Fletcher. The Laws of Candy, Act i. sc. 2.

And when cold winter split the rocks in twain,
And ice the running rivers did restrain,
He stripp'd the bears-foot of its leafy growth,
And, calling western winds, accus'd the spring of sloth.
Dryden. Virgil. Georgics, b. iv.

TWANG, n. } Either (as Minshew believes) TWANG, v. } from the Lat. Tang-ere; or TW'NGLE, v. } rather a word formed from the TWANK, v. } sound, (Skinner.) The A. S.
Twecog-an, twcon-an, is, hæsitare, fluctuare. Twcon-unge or twecung, hæsitatio, a hesitation, a sticking; fluctuatio, a fluctuation, a wavering. And twang,—
The sound of metal—the reverberation from the concussion, shaking, quavering, of metal; of a bow-string in quivering motion; then applied to other ringing sounds.

Twang of the vessel, (in Search,) should be tang.

When the harper twangeth or singeth a song, all the company must be whist, or else he chafeth like a cutpurse, by reason his harmonie is not had in better price.
Holinshed. Description of Ireland, c. 8.

Twanged the string, out flew the quarrell long,
And through the subtil aire did singing passe,
It hit the knight the buckels rich among,
Wherewith his precious girdle fast'ned was.
Fairefax. Godfrey of Boulogne, b. vii. s. 103.

He was an arch-robber, and withall an excellent archer; though surely the poet gives a twang to the loose of his arrow, making him shoot once a cloth-yard long, at full forty score mark, for compass never higher than the breast, and within less than a foot of the mark.
Fuller. Worthies. Nottinghamshire.

Their arrows finely pair'd, for timber, and for feather,
With birch and brazil piec'd, to fly in any weather;
And shot they with the round, the square, or forked pile,
The loose gave such a twang, as might be heard a mile.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 26.

For it comes to passe oft, that a terrible oath, with a swaggering accent sharpen twang'd off, gives manhoode more approbation, then euer prooffe it selfe would haue earn'd him.—Shakespeare. Twelfth Night, Act iii. sc. 4.

— The sinew forged string
Did give a mighty twang; and forth the eager shaft did sing, (Affecting speedinesse of flight) amongst the Achive throng.
Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. iv.

Sometimes a thousand twangling instruments
Will hum about mine eares.
Shakespeare. The Tempest, Act iii. sc. 2.

While she did call me rascall, fidler,
And twangling Jacke, with twentie such like tearmes,
As had she studied to misuse me so.
Id. The Taming of the Shrew, Act ii. sc. 1.

Yet shooting upward, sends his shaft, to show
An archer's art, and boasts his twangling bow.
Dryden. Virgil. Æneis, b. v.

When we in merry plight, airy and gay,
Surpris'd to find the hours so swiftly fly,
With hasty knock, or twang of pendant cord,
Alarm the drowsy youth from slumbering nod.
Gay. Wine.

A freeman of London has the privilege of disturbing a whole street with twanking of a brass kettle.—Addison.

I took notice indeed that his voice was something different from the human, having a little twang like that of string-music.—Search. Light of Nature, vol. ii. pt. ii. c. 23.

He then owned that he had received heavenly gifts in earthen vessels, and though the liquor was not at all impaired thereby in substance or virtue, it might get some twang of the vessel.—Id. Ib.

TWA'TTLE, v. } Perhaps tattle, (Junius.)

TWE'EDLE, v. } tattle, differ only in the v.
TWA'TTLER. } Be-twattled, Mr. Brockett explains, stupified, confounded, infatuated. See TWIDLE.

TWE

To tweedle is, perhaps,—to make a small chattering noise; a small unmeaning or insignificant noise or sound, like the tuning of an instrument; the bad play.

Let vs, in God's name, leaue lieng for varlets, berding for ruffians, facing for crakers, chatting for twattlers.

Holinshed. Description of Ireland, c. 6.

Such fables twitted, such vntrue reports twattled.—Id. Ib.

Insomuch that a man that heareth, would say; all that ever he did was not worth so much as the twittle-twattle that he maketh.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 85.

When one talks toys or trifles, and speaks shadows or gawds that yield no profit; such twattling cuts out the heart of good time.—Whately. Redemption of Time, p. 15.

You keep such a twattling with you and your bottling.
Swift. To Dr. Sheridan.

A fidler brought in with him a body of lusty young fellows, whom he had tweedled into the service.—Addison.

TWEAGUE. From Twecog, indicative of twecog-an, dubitare, hesitare, (says Lye,) comes the Sw. Tuckan, and our tweague.

Perplexity, anxiety, fluctuation of mind.

Mrs. Bull. I fancy this put the old fellow in a rare tweague.—Swift. Hist. of John Bull, pt. ii. c. 6.

TWEAK, v. } A. S. Twiccan, twiccian, to TWEAK, n. } pluck, to catch, to twitch, (Somner.) See TWITCH.
To pluck or pull.

— Am I a coward?

Who calles me villaine? breakes my pate a-crosse?
Pluckes off my beard, and blowes it in my face?
Tweakes me by th' nose? giues me the lye i' th' throate;
As deepe as to the lungs?
Shakespeare. Hamlet, Act ii. sc. 2.

— Quoth he,

Tweaking his nose, "You are, great sir,
A self-denying conqueror."
Hudibras, pt. i. c. 2.

It wanders about without stirring out;
No passion so weak but gives it a tweak.—Swift, Rid. 25.

Tweezers is now usually applied to—a small instrument, to pinch and pull out hairs, &c.

I have sent you by Vacandary the post, the French bever and tweezers you writ for.—Howell, b. i. Let. 17.

By drawing a little penknife out of a pair of tweezers I then chanced to have about me, and approaching it to the north point of the needle, which, according to the known custom of such needles, readily followed it, or rested over-against it, which way soever I turned the penknife, or whereabouts soever I held it still.—Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 419.

Then his tweezer-cases are incomparable: you shall have one not much bigger than your finger, with seventeen several instruments in it, all necessary every hour of the day, during the whole course of a man's life.
Tatler, No. 142.

Hast thou not wondred, Adam, at my stay?
Thee I have misst, and thought it long, depriv'd
Thy presence, agonie of love till now
Not felt, nor shall be twice.—Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ix.

By virtue of this property of the mind, the having done any thing once becomes a motive to the doing of it again;
the having done it twice is a double motive: and so many times as the act is repeated, so many times the motive to the doing of it once more is multiplied.
Bp. Horsley, vol. ii. Ser. 28.

That overhangs a torrent, to a twig.—Couper. Task, b. i.

TWILIGHT. The waning light immediately after the setting, or before the rising of the sun.
Dut. Twee-licht; A. S. Tweonliht, dubia lux.
Tweon, from tweon-an, dubitare, to doubt.
A dim light; a dim sight.

"Whan that the day his light gan withdraw,
And the night approched in the twilight,
How a woman came and met him I saw,
Talking with him vnder shade of the night."
Chaucer. The Remedie of Loue.

As the twilight beginneth, you shall haue about you two or three hundred foxes, which make a marueilous wawling or howling.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 400.

This famine must beginne at the heart of the prophet. He must haue darknesse for a vision, hee must stumble at noone-dayes, as at the twi-light, and then truth shall fall in the middest of the streets.—Hooker. Ser. vpon Jude.

The sun was sunk, and after him the starr
Of Hesperus, whose office is to bring Twilight vpon the earth, short arbiter Twixt day and night.—Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ix.

— And now on earth the seventh Eev'ning arose in Eden, for the sun
Was set, and twilight from the east came on, Forerunning night. Id. Ib. b. vii.

Some few sparks or flashes of this divine knowledge may possibly be driven out by rational consideration; philosophy may yield some twilight glimmerings thereof.
Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 45.

My evening is now fully come, and the night is fast approaching: yet if we shall have a tolerably lengthened twilight, we may still perhaps find time enough for a further conversation on this subject.
Tooke. Diversions of Purley, pt. ii. c. 8.

TWILLED. From the Fr. Tuyan, we have tewell, tiwill, or tuill or twill, any thing tubular. See TEWELL.

A cane, a reed; and in this contested passage of Shakespeare, twilled may be merely can-y, reed-y, or abounding with twills, canes, or reeds. A quill is very commonly called twill in the north. See RAY.

In Ovid's Banquet of Sense, by Chapman, (1625,) Mr. Steevens found twill-pants enumerated among flowers.

Thy bankes with pioned, and twilled brims
Which spungie Aprill, at thy hest betrimms;
To make cold nymphes chaste crownes.

TWINE, v. } Dut. Tweyn, twyn; A. S. Twin, TWINE, n. } twyne, or twined, thread, filum duplex, from the v. Twain-an, dupicare, to twine, (i.e. to twain,) or twist, (i.e. twist.)

A double thread, one thread strengthened by another twined around it; a thin string.

To twine,—to turn, roll, or wind around; to convolve, to involve; to embrace.

To twain or twine,—is, to unite into two; make two into one; and also, to disunite into two; to make one into two; to separate. See TO TWIN.

They all of them do weare long haire vpon their heads and, after the maner of women, do curiously keame their dainty locks hanging downe to the ground, and, hauing twined and bound them vp, they couer them with calles, wearing sundry caps thereupon, according to their age and condition.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. p. 91.

She then began them humbly to intreate
To draw them longer out, and better twine,
That so their lives might be prolonged late.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 2.

Dryden. Virgil. Aeneis, b. viii.

TWINK, v. } A. S. Twinc-lian, rutlare, TWINKLE, v. } scintillare, is probably the TWINKLE, n. } dim. of Twyn-an, to twine, TWINKLING, n. } or twain, to separate.

A twinkling (of a star) is caused by the apparent separation of the continuous surface.

The twink or twinkle of the eye,—the quick separation of the lids, or the sparkle caused by it;
the space of time in which it is finished.

To shine with a sparkling, quivering light; to sparkle, to quiver; to emit or throw forth a small portion of light.

"Whan that I twinkin upon the Loke for to be gon,
And cast away the fetteris,
And come to me anon."
Imputed to Chaucer. The Coke's Tale of Gamelyn.

His eyen twinkled in his hed aright,
As don the sterres in a frosty night.
Chaucer. Prologue to the Canterbury Tales, v. 250.

It is of Loue, as of Fortune,
That chaungeth oft, and nill contune,
Which whylome wolle of folke smile,
And glombe on hem another while,
Now friend, now foe, shalt her feelee,
For a twinkling tourneth her wheele.
Id. Rom. of the Rose.

And than hir ioy for aught I can espie.

Id. The Comp. of Mars & Venus.

And in a twinklyng of a loke
His man's forme ageine he toke
And was reformed to the reigne,
In whiche that he was wont to reigne.
Gower. Con. A. b. i.

And so in the very twinkling of an eye, both shippe and men were all cast away.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 612

When suddenly, with twinkle of her eye,
The damzell broke his misintended dart.—Spenser, s. 16

If women have an ague, and the same accompanied with head-ach and much twinkling or inordinat palpitation of the eyes, it is thought they shall find much good by drinking them in some hard and austere wine.

Well may we be thus ignorant of all the solar systems beyond our own, the very phenomena of which, except the twinkling of some of their suns and our fixed stars, are imperceptible to human sight.
Bolingbroke, Ess. 1. On Human Knowledge.

Happy who walks with him! whom what he finds
Of flavour or of scent in fruit or flow'r,
Or what he views of beautiful or grand
In nature, from the broad majestic oak
To the green blade, that twinkles in the sun, Prompts with remembrance of a present God.
Cowper. Task, b. vi.

TWIRE. "Twyereth (says Skinner,) is interpreted—singeth; twyer, to sing: I know not whether from the Dut. Wieren; Fr. Virer; It. Girare, circuire; gyrare, (i. e.) vocem reciprocare, vibrissare, et quasi circumrotare.

Steevens thinks—twire may perhaps have the same signification as quire, or that it may be a corruption—of twink, for twinkling. Gifford says—to twire is to leer affectedly, to glance at obliquely or surreptitiously, at intervals, &c.

But whence have we the word? It is perhaps the A. S. Thwyr-ian, thweor-ian, to wrest, to twist, (to twirl), to turn or put out of a straight course; to swerve.

To swerve from a straight line; to look or direct the look askance, askint, obliquely; to leer, to wink, to twinkle.

In Chaucer, twireth appears to be applied to the interrupted, intermitted sounds of a bird, its short chirp or whisper of gladness on escaping from its cage—as distinguished from continuous song.

If thilke birde skipping out of her strait cage, seeth the agreeable shadowes of the wodes, she defouleth with her feete her meat ishad, and seketh on morning onely the woode, and twirethe, [silvas dulci voce susurrat,] desiring the woode with her swete voise.—Chaucer. Boecius, b. iii.

Suppose 'twixt noon and night the sun his half way wrought

(The shadowes to be large, by his descending brought)
Who with a fervent eye looks through the twyring glades,
And his dispersed rays commixeth with the shades.

Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 13.

I saw the wench that twired and twinkled at thee
The other day, the wench that's new come hither,
The young smug wench.

Beaum. & Fletch. Women Pleas'd, Act iv. sc. 1.

Tho. Ye are an ass, a twirepipe,
A Jeffery John bo peepe, thou minister.

Id. Monsieur Thomas, Act iii. sc. 1.

I tell the day, to please him, thou art bright,
And dost him grace when clouds do blot the heaven;
So flatter I the swart-complexion'd night;
When sparkling stars twire not, thou gild'st the even.

Shakespeare, son. 28.

Which maids will twire at 'tween their fingers thus!

B. Jonson. Sad Shepherd, Act ii. sc. 1.

TWIRL, v. } Holland writes—turling, the TWIRL, n. } same word probably as trilling, from the A. S. verb Thirl-ian, to turn round, to turn about.

To turn, to run or cause to run round; to revolve fast or speedily; to whirl about.

If a man in private chamber twirls his band-strings or plays with a rush to please himself, 'tis well enough; but if he should go into Fleet Street, and sit upon a stall, and twirl a band-string, or play with a rush, then all the boys in the street would laugh at him.—Selden. Table Talk. Poetry.

But what a dizziness and giddiness of the brain is this to say; that he who is indigent of nothing, yet hath need of the good things which he hath; and that the lewd and vicious person is indigent of many things, and yet needeth nothing: for this is the very assertion which Chrysippus holdeth: That wicked persons have no need, and yet are indigent, turling, shifting, and transporting the common notions, like unto cockall bones or chasse-men upon the board.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 893.

Mary. Can you love a young lady? how he blushes!

Alt. Leave twirling of your hat, and hold your head up,
And speak to th' lady.

Beaum. & Fletch. Rule a Wife, and have a Wife, Act ii.

Yet when I meet again those sorcerers eies,
Their beams my hardest resolutions thaw,
As if that cakes of ice and July met,
And her sighs powerful as the violent North,
Like a light feather twirl me round about
And leave me in mine own low state again.

Id. Love's Cure, Act iii. sc. 3.

So when the wriggling snake is snatch'd on high
In eagle's claws, and hisses in the sky,
Around the foe his twirling tail he flings,
And twists her legs, and writhes about her wings.

Addison. Ovid. Metam. b. iv.

Then to my few companions, bold and brave,

TWIT, v. } A. S. Edwit-an, to reproach, TWITTINGLY. } to rebuke, to taunt, to twit, to backbite, to slander, to deprave, (Somner.) And Edwit-an, Skinner forms of ed, again, and wit-an, to give, to wit, (or cause to wit or know;) i. e. openly to signify to any one the fault he may have committed.

The A. S. Wit-an is not only to know, but to censure. Chaucer and G. Douglas use the noun wite, and Spenser,—the noun and verb, as equivalent to—twit, i. e. censure, reproach. (Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 12. s. 16; b. vi. c. 3. s. 16.)

To name, or tell of, a fault, defect, infirmity; any matter of blame, scoff, mockery; to scoff, to reproach. And see Toor.

May it not be from twight, the past part. of twitch? (See the quotations from Chaucer, in v. TWITCH.)

To pull or pluck; to have a twitch or pull at; to carp at; and hence, to taunt, scoff, flout.

TY'MPANY. } Timpano; Lat. Tympanum.
A drum; any thing stretched, extended, expanded, swollen, like a drum; sounding or echoing like a drum; a swelling of the body.

Ireland [saith one] uses the harp and pipe, which he calls tympanum: Scotland the harp tympan, and chorus: Wales the harp, pipe, and chorus.—Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 6.

Some of slight judgment, that were standing by,
Said, it was nothing but a tympany.—Id. The Moon-Calf.

So that as in a tympany their very greatness was their disease.—Fuller. Worthies. Cambridgeshire.

In the first leaf of my defence, I fore-told you so much;
as finding nothing in that swollen bulk, but a meer unsound tympanie, in stead of a truly solid conception.
Bp. Hall. A Short Answer, Pref.

By striving to be short, they grow obscure,
And when they would write smoothly, they want strength,
Their spirits sink; while others, that effect
A lofty style, swell to a tympany.
Roscommon. Horace. Art of Poetry.

Nor let thy mountain-belly make pretence
Of likeness; thine's a tympany of sense.
Dryden. Mac-Flecknoe.

A tipe of heauen, a liuely hew of hell.
Gascoigne. Voyage into Hollande.

So mought thy Redcrosse knight with happy hand Victorious be in that farie ilands right,
(Which thou dost vayne in type of Faery land)
Eliza's blessed field, that Albion hight.
To the Learned Shepheard. Addressed to Spenser.

Great ladie of the greatest isle, whose light
Like Phœbus lampe throughout the world doth shine,
Shed thy faire beames into my feeble eyne,
And raise my thoughtes, too humble and too vile,
To thinke of that true glorious type of thine,
The argument of mine afflicted stile.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 1.

So St. Hierome—he offered wine not water in the type [representation of sacrament] of his bloud.
Bp. Taylor. Of the Real Presence, § 6.

The truth is, he [Erghom] renewed the custome of expounding scripture in a typicall way, which crowded his church with auditors, seeing such soft preaching breaks no bones, much pleased their fancy, and little cross'd or curb'd their corruptions.—Fuller. Worthies. York.

S. Gregory clearly enough expresses himself, that in the immolation of the Passeeover Christ was figured; that in the Eucharist he still is figured, there more obscurely, here more clearly, but yet still but typically, or in figure.
Bp. Taylor. Dissuasive from Popery, pt. ii. b. ii. § 3.

Alluding herein unto the heart of man and the precious bloud of our Saviour, who was typified by the goat that was slain, and the scape goat in the wilderness.
Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. ii. c. 5.

Pieces maintaining rather typography then verity; authors presumably writing by common places.—Id. Ib. b. i. c. 8.

To reduce surnames to a methode, is a matter for a Ramist, who should haply finde it to be a typocosmie.
Camden. Remaines. Surnames.

Great father of the gods, when, for our crimes,
Thou send'st some heavy judgment on the times;
Some tyrant-king, the terrour of his age,
The type and true vicegerent of thy rage;
Thus punish him.
Dryden. Persius, Sat. 3.

TYR

How many passages of the prophets by lazy readers are thought to have no use, which, as the star did the wise men, lead the attentive considerers to Christ; and so loudly and harmoniously, together with Moses's typick shades, utter those words of the Baptist's, Behold the Lamb of God that taketh away the sins of the world!
Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 278.

Indeed the Mosaic law was intended for a single people only who were to be shut in, as it were, from the rest of the world, by a fence of legal rites, and typical ceremonies; and to be kept by that means separate and unmixed, till the great Antitype, the Messiah, should appear.
Atterbury, vol. i. Ser. 4.

Thus, for example, the words relating to Jonah carry but one meaning, the literal meaning, expressing such a fact;
by them that fact expresses, prefigures, or typifies another fact of a higher and more important nature.
Waterland. Works, vol. vi. p. 8.

He who wishes to trace the art in its gradual progress, from the wooden and immoveable letter to the moveable and metal type, and to the completion of the whole contrivance, will receive satisfactory information from the annals of the elaborate Mattaire.—Knox. Ess. No. 135.

— And where the peacock shews
His azure eyes, is tinctur'd black and red
With spots quadrangular of diamond form,
Ensanguin'd hearts, clubs typical of strife,
And spades, the emblem of untimely graves.
Cowper. Task, b. iv.

Give us, say they, a bible-proof that God declared or revealed his intention of prefiguring the death of Jesus; or some better authority at least than a modern typifier, who deals only in similitudes and correspondences.
Warburton. Works, vol. xi. p. 403.

It [the history of a mechanical art] often exhibits manual excellence united with such meanness of sentiment and vulgarity of manners, as unavoidably mingle disgust with admiration; but to the truth of this general remark, the annals of typography are a singular exception.
Knox. Ess. No. 135.

Caxton taught us typography about the year 1474. The first book printed in English was a translation.—Idler, No. 69.

It was printed, subjoined to Tully's offices, in the infancy of the typographic art.
Warlton. History of English Poetry, vol. ii. p. 218.

In the possession of good men, it [eloquence] cannot do so much good as a written discourse, sent into the wide world by the operation of that providential discovery, the typo- graphical art, the most important in effect which the world ever received.—Knox. Winter Evenings, Even. 33.

There is a very ancient edition of this work, [Justinian's Institutes] without date, place or typographer.

home to the v. Tir-an, to tear, to prey upon; an origin which will suit very well with the use of the word as explained by Smith, but not to the just and merciful of Potter. See the quotations from those writers.

This shold a rightwise love have in his thought,
And nat be like tiraunts of Lombardie,
That han no reward but at tyrannie,
For he that king or lorde is tyrannell,
Him ought nat be tiraunt ne cruell.
Chaucer. Prol. to the Legende of Good Women.

He had of counsell many one,

A tyrant they name him, who by force commeth to the monarchy against the will of the people, breaketh lawes already made, at his pleasure, maketh other without the aduise & consent of the people, and regardeth not the wealth of his commons, but the aduancement of himselfe, his faction and kindred.—Smith. Commonwealth, b. i. c. 7.

They blame Lewes the xi. for bringing the administration royall of Fraunce, frō the lawfull and regulate raigne, to the absolute and tyrannical power and gouernment.—Id. Ib.

For, what ciuill countrey hath euer suffered themselues to be conquered by so few men as they were; to be depriued of their naturall king, and to be tyrannized ouer thus long, but they?—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. p. 147.

With his false doctryne capcious othes, articles, and interrogacions he shall fraudelently deceyue and trappe the simple innocents, and shed their blode tyrannously.
Joye. Expositio of Daniel, c. 7.

What glorie or what guerdon hast thou found
In feeble ladies tyranning so sore,
And adding anguish to the bitter wound
With which their lives thou launchedst long afore,
By heaping stormes of trouble on them daily more!
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 6.

But his familiar friends above all rebuked him, saying he was to be accounted no better than a beast, if for fear of the name of tyrant, he would refuse to take upon him a kingdom: which is the most just and honourable estate, if one take it upon him that is an honest man.
North. Plutarch, p. 72.

This encouraged the Irish grandees (their O's and Mac's) to rent and tyrant it in their respective seignieuries, whilst such English who were planted there had nothing native (save their surnames) left.
Fuller. Worthies. Buckinghamshire.

They were by law of that proud tyrannesse, [Covetise]
Provokt with Wrath and Envyes false surmise, Condemned to that dongeon mercilesse,
Where they should live in wo, and dye in wretchednesse.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 6.

— I can forget
Thy barbarous usage; and though thou to me
(When I was in thy power) didst shew thyself
A most insulting tyranness, I to thee
May prove a gentle mistriss.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Prophetess, Act iv. sc. 4.

They say that he answered his friends, that principality and tyranny was indeed a goodly place: howbeit there was no way for a man to get out, when he was entred into it.
North. Plutarch, p. 72.

The crocodile with running deepes in love,

With upmost iawes which (and none else) do move,
Whose cleansing first is sweet, oft after sow'r.
Stirling. Domes-day. The Third Houre.

Brutus being chosen Consul of Rome by the general voice of the whole people, chased out of the city Tarquinius Superbus who raigned tyrannically.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 744.

Whosoever is most unreasonable and importunate, he will ever tyrannize and domineer over such an one, forcing by his impudency the bashfulness of the other.—Id. Ib. p. 136.

The example of Leæna the courtisan, is most rare and singular, who for all the dolorous tortures that could be devised, would never bewray Harmodius and Aristogiton, who slew the tyrannous king.—Holland. Plinie, b. vii. c. 23.

There being both together in the floud,
They each at other tyrannously flew;
Ne ought the water cooled their whot bloud,
But rather in them kindled choler new.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 2.

They would then, in all probability, open their mines, and gladly embrace a traffick of such mutual convenience to both nations; for then their gold, instead of proving an incitement to enslave them, would procure them weapons to assert their liberty, to chastise their tyrants, and to secure themselves for ever from the Spanish yoke.
Anson. Voyages, b. i. c. 9.

Tupavos, by the antient Greeks, was applied to all kings, as well the just and merciful, as the cruel, and whom we now call tyrannical: but in more modern ages, was appropriated to that latter sort, and became a name of the greatest ignominy and detestation.—Potter. Antiquities, b. ii. c. 12.

These poor prisoners eat nothing but rice, and drink water, and are tyrannically insulted over by their rigid creditors, till the debt is satisfied.
Dampier. Voyages, an. 1688.

This prince and his minister had strained prerogative to the utmost, and had governed by it very tyrannically.
Bolingbroke. A Discourse upon Parties, Lect. 15.

Lynd. You want not cunning what you please to prove; But my poor heart knows only how to love, And, finding this, you tyrannize the more.
Dryden. 1 Pt. Conquest of Granada, Act iv.

We love the man, the paltry pageant you:
We the chief patron of the commonwealth,
You the regardless author of its woes:
We for the sake of liberty a king,
You chains and bondage for a tyrant's sake.
Cowper. Task, b. v.

— From the vulgar crowd
Though Superstition, tyranness abhor'd,
The reverence due to this majestic pair
With threats and execration still demands.
Akenside. Pleasures of Imagination, b. i.

The law which restrains a man from doing mischief to his fellow-citizens, though it diminishes the natural, increases the civil liberty of mankind; but every wanton and causeless restraint of the will of the subject, whether practised by a monarch, a nobility, or a popular assembly, is a degree of tyranny.—Blackstone. Commentaries, b. i. c. 1.

Tyrannicide, or the assassination of usurpers and oppressive princes, was highly extolled in ancient times; because it both freed mankind from many of these monsters, and seemed to keep the others in awe whom the sword or poniard could not reach.
Hume. On the Principles of Morals, § 2.

Th' oppression of a tyrannous control
Can find no warrant there.
Cowper. Task, b. vi.

V. U.

V is framed (says Wilkins) by a kind of straining or percolation of the breath through a chink between the lower lip and upper teeth, with some kind of murmur. F is the correspondent mute. See F.

U. As a vowel, (says B. Jonson,) it soundeth thin and sharp, as in use; thick and flat, as in us. It never endeth any word for the nakedness, but yieldeth to the termination of the diphthong ew, as in new, screw, &c. or the qualifying e as in sue, due, true, and the like.

R. Brunne, p. 110.

For ye shall vnderstāde that, at those dayes, they [plees] were kepte in dyuerse placys of Englande, whyche nowe been holden at Westmynster, and iudgys ordeyned to kepe a cyrcuyte as nowe they kepe the syzys in the tyme of vacacyon.—Fabyan. Chronicle, an. 1258.

He dooeth not onely thynke this in his minde, I will haue a toure—but before he caste any foundation, he will with good laisure at a vacant time sitte down and cast his peniworthes in his minde, what charges will bee requisite for the finishing of such a toure.—Udal. Luke, c. 14.

The pope had accursed the English people, because they suffred the bishops sees to be vacant so long a time.
Holinshed. Historie of England, b. vi. c. 18.

An industrious husbandman, tradesman, scholar, will never want business for occasional vacancies and horæ subcisivæ.—Hale. Cont. Of the Redemption of Time.

— And for three months before,
No intrin, not a minutes vacancie,
Both day and night did we keepe companie.
Shakespeare. Twelfth Night, Act v. sc. 1.

— And Anthony
Enthron'd i' th' market-place did sit alone,
Whisling to th' ayre: which but for vacancie,
Had gone to gaze on Cleopatra too,
And made a gap in nature.
Id. Anthony & Cleopatra, Act i. sc. 2.

Men, if wee view them in their spring, are at the first without vnderstanding or knowledge at all. Neuerthelesse from this vttter vacuitie they grow by degrees, till they come at length to be euen as the angels them selues are.
Hooker. Eccles. Politie, b. i. s. 6.

My overshadowing spirit and might with thee
I send along, ride forth, and bid the deep Within appointed bounds be heav'n and earth,
Boundless the deep, because I am who fill Infinitude, not vacuous the space.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. vii.

For nothing nauseateth the minde so soon, as an emptiness of thoughts, bespoken and fitted for her entertainment, since in their vacuousness the winds and vapours of tediousness and displice rise and fume out of our imagination into our spirits.
Montague. Devoute Essayes, pt. i. Treat. 9. s. 5.

Here there was a vacant seat prepared for the commodore, in which he was placed on his arrival.
Anson. Voyages, b. iii. c. 10.

Were men as intent upon this as they are on things of lower concernment, there are none so enslav'd to the necessities of life, who might not find many vacancies that might be husbanded to this advantage of their knowledge.
Locke. Hum. Underst. b. iv. c. 20.

But experience shews on the contrary, that the resistance of all fluids is not equal: there being large spaces, in which no sensible resistance at all is made to the swiftest and most lasting motion of the solidest bodies. Therefore all space is not filled with matter; but, of necessary consequence, there must be a vacuum.
Clarke. On the Attributes, Prop. 3.

For if, notwithstanding the absence of the air, it should appear by the effects, that a stream of other matter capable to set visible bodies a moving, should issue out of the pipe of the compressed bellows, it would also appear that there may be a much subtiler body than common air, and as yet unobserved by the vacuists.—Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 251.

Mean while Opinion gilds with varying rays
Those painted clouds that beautify our days;
Each want of happiness by Hope supply'd,
And each vacuity of Sense by Pride.
Pope. Essay on Man, Ep. 2.

These superfluous parts (which might be spared, without prejudice to the movement of the watch,) even if we were completely assured that they were such, would not vacate the reasoning which we had instituted concerning other parts.—Paley. Natural Theology, c. 1.

The church interposed and exempted certain holy seasons from being profaned by the tumult of forensick litigations. As particularly, the time of Advent, and Christmas, which gave rise to the winter vacation; the time, &c.
Blackstone. Commentaries, b. iii. c. 18.

He landed them in safety, and conducted them to their companions, among whom he remarked the same vacant indifference, as in those who had been on board.
Cook. First Voyage, b. i. c. 3.

However pleased people may appear, they commonly retire from the company in which these [noise and laughter] have formed the only entertainment with an unsatisfied and uneasy vacuity, and sometimes with disgust and disagreeable reflection.—Knox. Ess. No. 133.

VACCINE, v. } These words are of very

VACCINATION. } inoculation of human beings with the variolæ vaccinæ, or cow-pox, a disease discovered in some of the western counties of England, particularly Gloucestershire. Dr. Jenner's Inquiry was first published in 1798.

VACILLATE, v. } Fr. Vaciller; It. Vacil- VACILLATION. } lare; Sp. Vacilar; Lat.
Vacillare, to wag or waggle (qv).

To wag, to waver; to move to and from; to have an unsteady or inconstant motion or action; to be unsteady, or inconstant.

I knew a man, saith he, that after much temptation concerning one of the articles of belief, was suddenly brought into so great light of truth and certainty, that there was left no remainders of doubt, no vacillation, but much clearness and serenity, by the command of him that overrules the waves, &c.—Bp. Hall. The Peace-Maker, § 15.

VAG

The ministry of the muscles [is] to answer all the motions, of the legs and thighs, and at the same time to keep the body upright, and prevent its falling, by readily assisting against every vacillation thereof.

Derham. Physico-Theology, b. v. c. 2.

But whilst it [a spheroid] turns upon an axis which is not permanent (and the number of those we have seen infinitely exceeds the number of the other), it is always liable to shift and vacillate from one axis to another, with a corresponding change in the inclination of its poles.

Paley. Natural Theology, c. 22.

They [the bones of the feet] are put in action by every slip or vacillation of the body, and seem to assist in restoring its balance.—Id. Ib. c. 11.

VADE, v. Lat. Vad-ere; Gr. Βαδ-ειν, to go.

To go, to pass; to escape, to vanish, (to evade, qv.)

As who would saie, that when he departed, the onelie shield, defense and comfort of the commonwealth was vaded and gone.—Holinshed. Chron. Rich. II. an. 1399.

— Like sunny beames,
That in a clowd their light did long time stay,
Their vapour vaded, shew their golden gleames
And through the present ayre shoot forth their azure streames.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 9.

How-euer gay their blossome or their blade
Doe flourish now, they into dust shall vade.

Id. Ib. b. v. c. 2.

Then, with me, Willie, ay sing care away.
It's wood to be fore-hind with wastefull carke

A wanderer, a vagrant, (qv. and the quotation from Blackstone.)

But how so it was vnto men of honeste, to vacobondys and other that lokyd for pylfry and ryfflynge, it was a great occasyon & styrynge.—Fabyan. Chronicle, an. 1456.

Dubtles the author of this libell was some vagabond huckster or pedler.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 586.

The third [sort] consisteth of thriftlesse poore, as the riotour that hath consumed all, the vagabund that will abide no where, but runneth vp and downe from place to place (as it were seeking worke and finding none) and finallie the roge and strumpet.

Holinshed. Description of England, b. ii. c. 10.

— To heav'n thir prayers
Flew up, nor missed the way, by envious windes
Blown vagabond or frustrate: in they passd Dimentionless through heav'nly dores.

Milton. Paradise Lost, b. xi.

In the time of Frezier and Shelvocke, this place served only as a retreat to vagabonds and outlaws, who fled thither from all parts of Brazil.—Anson. Voyages, b. i. c. 5.

Of late (for reasons which shall be hereafter mentioned) these honest vagabonds have been obliged to receive amongst them a new colony, and to submit to new laws and new forms of government.—Id. Ib.

Why—what a brainsick vagabond art thou!
Who neither to the smithy wilt, for sleep,
Nor to the public portico repair.

Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. xviii.

A wanderer, a roamer. See the quotation from Blackstone. A vagary—

A wandering or roaming: applied (met.)—to a quick motion or flitting to and fro; a caprice, a whim, a freak.

The first taken from the verie name it selfe, for that the worde Turk signifieth a shepherd or one that followeth a vagrant and wilde kinde of life.

Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 490.

The Irish enimie spieng that the citizens were accustomed to fetch such od vagaries, especiallie on the holie daies.

Holinshed. Description of Ireland, c. 3.

Doct. That intemperate surfet of her eye, hath distemper'd the Other senses, that may return and settle again to Execute their preordained faculties, but they are Now in a most extravagant vagary.

Beaumont & Fletcher. Two Noble Kinsmen, Act iv. sc. 3.

May. Lucan. Pharsalia, b. viii.

As for me, if I sit down in my great chair and begin to ponder, the vagaries of a child are not more ridiculous than the circumstances which are heaped up in my memory; fine gowns, country-dances, &c.—Spectator, No. 260.

To be banished from one's native soil, secluded from all comforts of friendly acquaintance, deposed irrevocably of great estate and dignity; becoming a vagrant and a servant in vile employment, in a strange countrey, every man would be apt to deem a wretched condition.

Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 15.

Nature delighteth in ease, in quiet, in liberty; therefore did he spend his days in continual labour, in restless travel, in endless vagrancy, going about doing good.—Id. Ser. 4.

From my heart I pity the condition of a respectable servant of the publick, like this war minister, obliged in his old age to pledge their assembly in their civick cups, and to enter with a hoary head into all the fantastick vagaries of these juvenile politicians.—Burke. French Revolution.

The civil law expelled all sturdy vagrants from the city; and, in our own law, all idle persons or vagabonds, whom our antient statutes describe to be "such as wake on the night, and sleep on the day, and haunt customable taverns, and ale-houses, and routs about; and no man wot from whence they come, nor whither they go."

Blackstone. Commentaries, b. iv. c. 13.

He shall by office prosecute them for the offences of idleness, drunkenness, quarrelling, gaming, or vagrancy in the supreme court.—Burke. Sketch of the Negro Code.

VAGUE, n. } gante, vagare; Sp. Vagar; Lat.
VA/GUELY. } Vagare, to wander, to roam.
VA/GUENESS. } See VAGRANT.

To wander, to roam, to stray, to err; and Vague, adj. (Lat. Vagus.)—

Wandering, unsettled, unsteady, uncertain, unsure, indeterminate, indefinite.

So as the Scots had some leasure to plaie their vagues, and follow their accustomed manner.

Holinshed. Historie of Scotland, an. 1542.

But to use the right terme indeed, and to speake according to the very truth, she [the soule] doth vague and wander as banished, chased, and driven by the divine laws and statutes to and fro, untill such time as it setleth to a body.

Holland. Plutarch, p. 231.

These small bodies being hudled perforce one upon another, leave a large void space, to vague and range abroad.

Id. Ib. p. 630.

Vague and insignificant forms of speech and abuse of language, have so long passed for mysteries of science; and hard and misapplied words, with little or no meaning, have, by prescription, such a right to be mistaken for deep learning and height of speculation, that it will not be easy to persuade, either those who speak, or those who hear them, that they are but the covers of ignorance, and hindrance of true knowledge.—Locke. Hum. Underst. To the Reader.

In his address to his assembled chiefs,
Sweet to the ear, but brief was the harangue
Of Menelaus, neither loosely vague,
Nor wordy, though he were the younger man.

Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. iii.

This law has been styled, and (notwithstanding the objections of some writers to the vagueness of the language) appears to have been styled with great propriety, "The Law of Nature."

Mackintosh. On the Study of the Law of Nature, p. 8.

VAIL, v. } See AVALE. Fr. Avaler, to let,
VAIL, n. } put, lay, or fell down, to let fall down, (Cotgrave.) from Dut. Vallen; Ger. Fallen;
A. S. Feallan, to fall or cause to fall.

To fall; to drop, to put, to lay down, to lower, to depress, to sink; to submit (to fail).

VAI

Vail, the n.—Malone affirms is a mere abridgment of avail, and produces an instance of the word so written (40s. with the availes, &c.) It is—

"Any casual emolument," any gain, profit, &c. that may fall in. In vulgar speech, a wind-fall.

Thore Brittik bare him so in that ilk bataille,
The dede gede Danes to, the Noreis gan him vaile.

R. Brunne, p. 10.

When the emperors sister, the spouse of Spaine, with a fleete of an 130 sailes, stoutly and proudly passed the narrow seas, your lordship accompanied with ten ships onelie of her Majesties Nauie Roill, enuironed their fleet in most strange and warrelike sort, enforced them to stooppe gallant, and to vaile their bonets for the queene of England.

Hackluyt. Voyages, Ep. Ded.

The haughty Cambrian hills:—

Did seem in great disdain the bold affront to take
That any petty hill, upon the English side Should dare not [with a crouch] to vaile unto their pride.

Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 12.

This said; the virgin gan her beauoir vaile,
And thank't him first, and thus began her tale.

Fairefax. Godfrey of Boulogne, b. xiii. s. 48.

She hit him, where with gold and rich annaile
This diademe did on his helmet flame;
She broke and cleft the crown; and caus'd him vaile
His proud and lofty top.

Id. Ib. b. xx. s. 42

As for veiling bonnet before great rulers and magistrats, or within their sight, Varro saith, it was a fashion at first not commaunded for any reverence or honour therby to be done unto governours, but for health sake; and namely, that men's heads might be more firme and hardie, by the ordinarie use and custome of being bare.

Holland. Plinie, b. xxviii. c. 6.

Every one that does not know cries, what nobleman is that? all the gallants on the stage rise, vaile to me, kiss their hand, offer me their places.

Beaumont & Fletcher. The Woman Hater, Act i. sc. 3.

I will propose in your pledge, sir, the health of that honourable countess, and the sweet lady that sat by her, sir.

2 Cup. I do vaile to it with reverence.

B. Jonson. Every Man out of his Humour, Act v. sc. 4.

— I know you were one could keep
The buttery-hatch still lock'd, and save the chippings,
Sell the dole beer to aqua-vitæ men,
The which, together with your Christmas vailes
At post and pair, your letting out of counters,
Made you a pretty stock, some twenty marks.

Id. The Alchemist, Act i. sc. 1.

But since our knights and senators account
To what their sordid begging vailes amount,
Judge what a wretched share the poor attends,
Whose whole subsistence on those alms depends!

Dryden. Juvenal, Sat. 1.

VAIL, v. } See AVAIL, PREVAIL. To have VA/ILABLE. } value, force or effect; influence or power; to serve, aid or assist.

About a king good counsaile is preise,
Aboue all other things most vaileable.

Chaucer. A Ballade to K. Hen. IV.

Through this science [physike] it is full sought
Which vaileth and which vaileth nought.

Gower. Con. A. b. vii.

— Pitee is the fundamente
Of euery kynges regimete,
If it be medled with Justice,
Thei two remeueth all vice,
And ben of vertue most vaileable
To make a kinges roylme stable.—Id. Ib.

For in a kyng, if so befall
That his pitee be ferme and stable,
To all the londe it is vaileable
Onely through grace of his persone.—Id. Ib.

And if thou wilt not, it should vaile to glorifie me as a friende.—Golden Boke, Let. 8.

But with more awe the souldier might bee kept in more strait obedience, without which neuer captaine can doe any thing vaileable in the warres.

Smith. Commonwealth, b. ii. c. 4.

VA/IMURE. Fr. Avant-mure. An avant-mure, forewall, out-wall, or outward wall, (Cotgrave.)

The one and twentieth day of June they put fire to the mine of the turrett of the arsenal, whereas Giambelat Bay tooke charge, who with great ruine rent in sunder a most great and thicke wall, and so opened the same, that he threw downe more then halfe thereof, breaking also one part of the vaimure, made before to vpholde the assault.

Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. p. 124.

They brought their hangings, cortaines, carpets, euen to their very sheets, to make and stuffe vp their foresayd sacks, a very good and ready way to make vp againe their vaimures, the which were throwen downe with the fury of the artillery.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. p. 124.

On the west side was a great rampire or bank, very steep without and within, and like to a vamure of a fortress; by the vamure the ditches were twenty four deep.

Sir T. Wyatt. Description of a Feate of Arms, an. 1525.

So many ladders to the earth they threw
That well they seem'd a mount thereof to make,
Or else some vamure fit to save the towne,
Instead of that the Christians late beat downe.

Fairefax. Godfrey of Boulogne, b. xi. s. 64.

VAIN, adj. } Fr. Vain; It. Vano; Sp. Vano; It. Vanagloria; Sp. Vanagloria; Lat. Vanus; for which Vossius proposes various etymologies. Tooke derives it from the A.S. Fyn-igean, to wither, to fade, to pass away, to faint. It may be more immediately from the A. S. verb Wan-ian, to wane, to fall away. The Fr. adj. Vain is,— “Faint, weak, feeble; forceless;” (Cotgrave;) fruitless, frustrate, idle, trifling, frivolous; rejoicing in trifles, ostentatious of, displaying trifles, or decorations. And see the quotation from Cogan.

Vain glory, &c.—now usually written as one word,—see the quotation from Chaucer.

Be we not maad coueitouse of veyn glorie, stiringe ech othir to wraththe or hauynge enuye ech to other.

Wiclif. Galathies, c. 5.

Let vs not be vaine glorious prouokynge one another, and enuyng one another.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

No man disseue ghou willynge to teche in mekenesse and religioun of aungelis tho thingis whiche he hath not seen, walkynge veynli bolned with witt of his fleisch.

Wiclif. Colocensis, c. 2.

And thei speken in pride of vanytee, and disseuen in desires of fleisch of lecherie hem that scapen a little.

Id. 2 Petir, c. 2.

For when they haue spokē the swelling wordes of vanitie, they beguyle with wantonnes thorowe the lustes of the fleshe, them that were clene escaped.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

Therefore I seie and witenesse this thing in the lord, that ghe walke not now as hethene men walken in the vanyte of her witt.—Wiclif. Effesies, c. 4.

Thys I say therefore and testifie in the Lord, that ye hence forth walke not as other Gentylys walke, in vanytye of theyr mynde.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

Vaine-glorie is for to have pompe, and delit in his temporal highnesse, and glorie him in his worldly estate.

Chaucer. The Persones Tale.

The heauen is far, the worlde is nigh,
And vaine-glorie is eke so sligh,
Which couetise hath now withholde,
That thei none other thinge beholde,
But only that thei mighten winne.—Gower. Con. A. Prol.

My father as touchend of all,
I maie not well, ne noughten shall,
Of vaine glorie excuse mee.—Id. Ib. b. i.

But yet ne ferde I not the bet:
Thus was my glorie in vaine beset
Of all the ioy that I made.—Id. Ib.

And all was this the cause why,
That while he stode in his noblesse,
He shulde his vanitee repress
With suche wordes as he herde.—Id. Ib. b. vii.

And therefore hee which since the ouerthrowe of Darius had left consultation with the deuiners and prophetes, turned him self agayn to the vanitie and supersticion of men, willing Aristader (to whom he was addicted in beliefe) that he should trye out by sacrifice what hys successe should be.—Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 194.

Whiche lacke of charity and desyre of veyn glory causeth many good actes and dedys to dye and growe out of minde.

Fabyan. Chronycle, an. 1478.

The Spaniards according to their vsuall maner, fill the world with their vain-glorious vaunts, making great appearance of victories, when on the contrary, themselves are most commonly and shamefully beaten and dishonoured.

Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. p. 169.

Let it therefore no more enter into your heartes to thinke with your selues vaingloriously.—Udal. Luke, c. 3.

Supplies beyond necessity of the present, are apt to make us either vainly profuse, or vainly confident.

Hale. Cont. Meditations upon the Lord's Prayer.

And leauing home, to royall court I sought;
Where I did sell myselfe for yearly hire,
And in the princes garden daily wrought;
There I behelde such vainnesse, as I neuer thought.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 9.

O how great vainnesse is it then to scorne
The weake, that hath the strong so oft forlorne!
Spenser. Vis. of the Worlds Vanitie, s. 6.

All their exhortations were to set light of the things in this world, to count riches and honors vanitie, and in token thereof not onely to seek neither, but if men were possessors of both, euen to cast away the one and resigne the other that all men might see their vnfaigned conuersion vnto Christ.—Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, Pref. § 8.

Let him tell that he takes in every day as much wine as would refresh the sorrows of 40 languishing prisoners; or let him set up his vain-glorious triumph, that he hath knock'd down Damalis with the 25th bottle, and hath out-feasted Anthony or Cleopatra's luxury.—Bp. Taylor, vol. i. Ser. 16.

Is there, who, lock'd from ink and paper, scrawls
With desp'rate charcoal round his darken'd walls?
All fly to Twit'nham, and, in humble strain,
Apply to me, to keep them mad or vain.

Pope. Prol. to Satires, v. 19.

Yet hence the poor are cloth'd, the hungry fed;
Health to himself, and to his infants bread
The lab'rer bears: what his hard heart denies,
His charitable vanity supplies.

Id. Ep. iv.

Full sure he thought Troy's fatal hour arriv'd.
Vain thought! he knew not the designs of Jove;
That both to Greeks and Trojans he ordain'd Hard conflict yet, and agonies and groans.

Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. ii.

Neptune, that speech vain-glorious hearing, grasp'd
His trident, and the huge Gyraean rock
Smiting indignant, dash'd it half away.

Id. Ib. Odyssey, b. iv.

Vanity is that species of pride, which, while it presumes upon a degree of superiority in some particular articles, fondly courts the applause of every one within its sphere of action; seeking every occasion to display some talent or some supposed excellency.—Cogan. On the Passions, p. 75.

Holinshed. Description of Britaine, c. 18.

Whose causeway parts the vale with shady rows?
Whose seats the weary travellers repose?—Pope. Ep. 3.

And [we] entred our selves under the conduct of our new guide, who immediately led us away, and crost another river, and enter'd into a large valley of the fattest land I did ever take notice of.—Dampier. Voyages, an. 1681.

On the 3d, Mr. Banks set out early in the morning with some Indian guides, to trace our river up the valley from whence it issues, and examine how far its banks were inhabited.—Cook. First Voyage, b. i. c. 16.

VALEDICTION. } From the Lat. Vale-
VALEDICTORY. } dicere; vale, farewell, and dicere, to say; to say or bid farewell.

A saying or bidding to farewell; a farewell.

When he went forth of his college on any journey for any long continuance, he alwayes took this solemn valediction of the fellows: “I commend you to the love of God, and to the hatred of popery and superstition.”

Fuller. Worthies. Shropshire.

Let us leave this grateful clerk in his quiet grave, and return to Mr. Hooker himself, continuing our observations of his Christian behaviour in this place, where he gave a holy valediction to all the pleasures and allurements of earth.—Warton. Life of Hooker.

They are things which I may lose while I live, but I am sure I cannot keep them when I die; and if they take their farewell sooner, they do but their kind; and, at best, do but little anticipate their last and necessary valediction.

The shore was thronged with crowds of people, that followed him to the water's edge,—studious to pay to their popular chief governor every valedictory honour that their zeal and attention could devise.—Cumberland. Memoirs.

VA'LENTINE. Met.—A letter; a person seen, selected—on Valentine's day, Feb. 14.

For, on a day, when Cupid kept his court,
As he is wont at each Saint Valentide,
Vnto the which all lovers doe resort,
That of their loues successe they there may make report.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 7.

VALE'RIAN. Fr. Valeriane; It. Valeriana. So called of valere, to avail, because of its great virtues; or of Valerius, who first used it in physis.

Valerian then he [the hermit] crops, and purposely doth stamp,

VALETUDINARIENESS. } the Lat. Valetudo, strength, health, (see VALID;) applied, generally, to the bodily state or condition; and hence,—

Valetudinarius,—one whose bodily state or condition requires care or cure; an unhealthy, sickly, infirm person.

For physick is either curative or preventive; preventive we call that which by purging noxious humors, and the causes of diseases, preventeth sickness in the healthy, or the recourse thereof in the valetudinarius.

Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. iv. c. 13.

This opportunity of shifting our abode from the warmer and more vaporous air of the valleys, to the colder and more subtle air of the hills to the vales, is an admirable easement, refreshment, and great benefit to the valetudinarian, feeble part of mankind; affording those an easy and comfortable life, who would otherwise live miserably, languish, and pine away.—Derham. Physico-Theology, b. iii. c. 4.

I am one of that sickly tribe who are commonly known by the name of valetudinarians; and do confess to you, that I first contracted this ill habit of body, or rather of mind, by the study of physic.—Spectator, No. 25.

But if there be an habitual thinness, leanness, tenderness and valetudinarieness, there must be some dyscrasy in the juices, or imbecillity in the solids.

Cheyne. Method of Cure, pt. ii. c. 4.

There are books which pretend to render every man his own physician; and they have done great mischief to the weak and valetudinarius.

Knox. To a Young Nobleman, Let. 16.

Abstemiousness has been carried to a pernicious extreme by the present age. Dr. Cheyne's books contributed to introduce it, and Dr. Cadogan's pamphlet on the gout rendered it universal among valetudinarians.—Id. Ib.

Sound, firm, strong, of great or full force or efficacy; forceful, powerful, efficient.

To deliuer in our name and for vs, sufficient and effectual letters and instruments and to require letters and instruments of the like validitie and effect of the other part.

Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 456.

— Perhaps more valid armes,
Weapons more violent, when next we meet,
May serve to better us, and worse our foes,
Or equal what between us made the odds,
In nature none.

Milton. Paradise Lost, b. vi.

They are tied in conscience to verefie this contrast, if all these conditions were observed which could make the act valid in the law of nature, because no civil law can evacuate a natural.—Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. iii. c. 1.

Nature as much as is possible inclineth vnto validities and preservations.

Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, b. v. § 62.

By meanes whereof, one and the same star seemeth to rise in sundrie times in diuerse countries, and appeareth sooner or later to some than to others: and therefore the cause depending thereupon is not in all places of like validity, nor sheweth the same effects alwaies at the same times.—Holland. Plinie, b. xviii. c. 25.

— O behold this ring,
Whose high respect and rich validitie
Did lacke a paralell.

Shakespeare. All's Well that Ends Well, Act v. sc. 3.

That even miracles themselves, "can never render a foundation valid, which is in itself invalid; can never make a false inference, true; can never make a prophecy fulfilled, which is not fulfilled."—Clarke. Evidences, Prop. 14.

We must acknowledge, that bonds of resignation on demand have been declared by the temporal judges valid, and not simoniacal.—Secker. Charge to the Clergy, an. 1747.

It being my interest, as well as my inclination, to pay court to all the great men, without making inquiry into the validity of their assumed titles, I invited Poulaho on board.

Cook. Third Voyage, b. ii. c. 6.

VALLA'TION. } See CIRCUMVALLATION.
VAL'LATORY. } Lat. Vallatus, fortified or surrounded with fortifications, walled. The Lat.
Vallum, Tooke derives from the A. S. Wil-an, to join together, to consolidate, to cement.

A fortification; a rampart, an entrenchment.

Mention is made in Ezekiel of a measuring reed of six cubits: with such differences of reeds vallatory, sagittary, scriptory, and others, they might be furnished in Judea.

Broune. Miscellany, p. 82.

The vallation south-west of Dorchester in this county, called Dyke-hills, consisting of two ridges or borders with an intermediate trench, although so near a Roman town and road, is not Roman, but I imagine Saxon or Danish.

VAL'OROUS. } Valore, valoroso; Sp. Valor, VAL'OROUSLY. } valeroso; Lat. Valor, of questionable authority. The Fr. Valeur, or valoir, is the worth or value, (qv. anciently written valure), price or estimation; and hence the adjective is applied as equivalent to vaillant, and our English noun—valour, worth in arms.

Boldness, bravery, courage.

Now for thi grete valow, I ask the a bone,
That or we grante trew, fight we als so sone.
That on noon other side body so bolde to be,
On fote ne hors ride, to socour me no the.

R. Brunne, p. 196.

In which voiage his [duke Robert] valorous hart at all manifestlie perceiued, to his high fame and renoume among the princes and nobilitie there and then assembled.

Holinshed. William Rufus, an. 1095.

But gathering force, and courage valorous,
Encountred him in bataille well ordaind,
In which him vanquisht she to fle constraind.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 10

They [besiegers] break up the siege, and left the besieged at liberty to fetch in booty out of the country adjoining;
which they valourously and stoutly performed, wounding James himself.—Camden. Hist. of Q. Elizabeth, an. 1579.

Too late we brought him aid, and drove them back;
Ere that his frantic valor had provok'd
The death he seem'd to wish for from their swords.

Rowe. Fair Penitent, Act v

My mother much rever'd! no wine for me;
Quench not my valour, steal not from my limbs
Their needful force with draughts of luscious wine.

Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. vi.

There was a Trojan leader, Podes, son
Of old Eetion, valorous and rich,
Whom Hector most of all his Trojan friends
Respected, in convivial pleasures sweet
His chos'n companion.

Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 442.

The marchants haue all one house or magason, which house they call Godon which is made of bricke, and there they put all their goods of any valure, to saue them from the often mischances that there happen to houses made of such stuffe.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. p. 234.

On the other side, the king's officers will giue no licence to make ordinance thereof; whereupon the mines lie vnlaboured, and of no valuation.—Id. Ib. vol. iii. p. 466.

I doubt not, but by his fame and renowne in learning, shall be answerable to his desert and valure in writing.

Holinshed. Description of Ireland, c. 7.

Of hewen stone the porch was fairely wrought,
Stone more of valew, and more smooth and fine,
Then let or marble farre from Ireland brought.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 9.

If there be either vnderable apparence that so it doth, or reason such as cannot deceiue, then scripture-prooffe (no doubt) in strength and value exceedeth all.

Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, b. ii. § 7.

The party that with most boldness and vehemence declaims against them [ceremonies] is valued by them as a most precious man, a man of zeal and courage, and needs little else to justify and magnify him with his party.

Such peace granted contrary to the rigour of the gospel, contrary to the law of our Lord and God, doth but under colour of merciful relaxation deceive sinners, and by soft handling destroy them, a grace dangerous for the giver, and to let him which receiveth it nothing at all valuable.

Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, b. vi. Of Satisfaction.

There be which write, that the numbring of men and of places, the valuation of goods and substance, as well in cattell as readie monie, was not taken till about the xix. yeere of this king's reigne.

Holinshed. William the Conqueror, an. 1084.

Const. You haue beguill'd me with a counterfeit Resembling maiesty, which being touch'd and tride, Proues valuelesse.—Shakespeare. K. John, Act iii. sc. 1.

A man of excellent parts; though he who rod post to tell him so, might come too late to bring him tidings thereof; being such a valuer of himself, that he swelled every drop of his ability into a bubble by his vain ostentation.

Fuller. Worthies. London.

Of whom [a careful physician] most men are willing to make use, thankful for their care, great valuers of their skill.—Bp. Taylor, vol. i. Ser. 25.

The Grand Canary is an island much superior to Tenerife both in bulk and value; but this gentleman chooses rather to reside in this his native island.

Dampier. Voyages, an. 1699.

Authors, like coins, grow dear as they grow old;
It is the rust we value, not the gold.

Pope. Horace, b. ii. Ep. 1.

These were the principal goods on board her; but we found besides, what was to us much more valuable than the rest of the cargo: This was some trunks of wrought plate, and twenty three ferons of dollars, each weighing upwards of 200 lb. averdupois.—Anson. Voyages, b. ii. c. 4.

The valuableness of my principal aim may atone for running some little hazard of giving offence in the manner of pursuing it.—Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 346.

I am therefore at a loss, what kind of valuators the bishops will make use of.

Swift. Considerations upon two Bills.

Besides the ornaments that are thrust through the holes of the ears, many others are suspended to them by strings; such as chissels or bodkins made of green talc upon which they set a high value; the nails and teeth of their deceased relations, the teeth of dogs, and every thing else that they can get, which they think either curious or valuable.

Cook. First Voyage, b. ii. c. 10.

Besides, there lies a nearer way for good qualities to arrive at their valuableness; for we find the very sight of them raising an esteem in the beholder without staying for the benefits to be received from them.

Search. Light of Nature, vol. i. pt. ii. c. 24.

They would learn a higher valuation of themselves, and felt how justly the son of Sirach had directed: Glorify thy soul in meekness, and give it honour according to the dignity thereof.—Secker, vol. iv. Ser. 7.

VALVE, n. Fr. Valve; Lat. Valvæ, quasi volvæ quia introrsum revolvantur, folding (sc.) doors or shutters. Vossius, who well distinguishes the valvæ from the bifores,—

A folding-door or shutter; a cover, folding or lapping, and refolding, over the aperture.

Then the vessels we call arteries, which carry from the heart to the several parts, have valves which open outwards like trap-doors, and give the blood a free passage out of the heart, but will not suffer it to return back again thither, and the veins, which bring it back from the several members to the heart, have valves and trap-doors which open inwards, so as to give way unto the blood to run into the heart, but prevent it running back again that way.

Ray. On the Creation, pt. ii.

The heat dilating, and the cold contracting those little tubes, supposing there be valves in them, it is easy to be conceived how the circulation is performed in plants where it is not required to be so rapid and quick as in animals.

Locke. Elements of Natural Philosophy, c. 9.

— In ev'ry tower,
Strong valves and solid shall afford free pass (Thrown open) to the chariot and its steeds.

Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. vii.

The way of preventing a reflux of the fluid, in both these cases, is to fix valves, which, like flood-gates, may open a way to the stream in one direction, and shut up the passage against it in another.—Paley. Natural Theology, c. 10.

VAMP, n. } The Fr. Avant, the van or fore VAMP, v. } part, is frequently corrupted into vam, as vambrace, vamure, (vam-mure.) And Skinner thinks, that the vamp of the boot or shoe is the fore or front, and, consequentially, the upper part of it,—the upper leather; and that to vamp boots is—

To repair them by the addition of new upper leather. The Sp. Avampier,—the short splatterdash or gaiter, has probably the same origin. Hence, to vamp, generally,—

To patch old with new; to give any thing that is old, worn-out or thread-bare—a new face or appearance.

Sutton, of Salisbury. Tradition and an old pamphlet (newly vamped with two additions) make him a great clothier.—Fuller. Worthies. Wiltshire.

You, Corporal Curry-Comb, what will your fighting Profit the common-wealth? do you hope to triumph,
Or dare your vamping valour, good man cobbler,
Clap a new soul to th' kingdom?

Beaum. & Fletch. Bonduca, Act i. sc. 2.

Cham. Rise then, and get you gone, and let me hear of you
As of an advocate new vamp.

Id. The Little French Lawyer, Act iv.

They wrote on subjects on which they were well informed, and they treated them fully: they maintained the dignity of history, and thought it beneath them to vamp up old traditions, like the writers of their age and country, and to be the trumpeters of a lying antiquity.

Bolingbroke. On the Study of History, Let. 3.

VAN, n. } The Fr. Avant; It. Avante; VAN-CO'URIER. } Dut. Van, fore, before, and the VANGUA'RD. } Ger. Von, from, are the same word. The French etymologists endeavour to trace the French and Italian prepositions to the Latin preposition. Wachter attempts no etymology; though in Dutch and German, van or von are used merely as prepositions. In English, van is a noun, and means—

The front, the fore part. See VAUNT.

And her vantwarde was to broke.—R. Gloucester, p. 362.

The vaunt wardes hem mette wrot, as rygte was to done.

Id. p. 437.

On the brigge were alle the vamward & the rere,
Under tham the brigge gan falle down in the riure.

R. Brunne, p. 204.

Elde the hore. was in the vauntwardes.

Piers Plouhman, p. 397.

He than sette forth his waye; comaüdyng his vaunewardes to kepe their iourney towards Paris.

Fabyan. Chronycle, c. 181.

And when our vauntgard was passed the towne, our regard gaue an assault therevnto, and tooke the same.

Holinshed. Chron. Edw. III. an. 1346.

El. Lo. Th'art in a good beginning; come who leads?
Sir Roger, you shall have the van: lead the way.

Beaum. & Fletch. The Scornful Lady, Act v.

And whilst the front of the French vanguard makes Upon the English, thinking them to rout,
Their horses run upon the armed stakes,
And being wounded, turn themselves about.

Drayton. The Battle of Agincourt.

The earl of Ewe, in war that had been bred
These mighty men the mighty vaward led.—Id. Ib.

But the most part of them [diseases] have their vant-curreurs as it were, their messengers, and trumpets: namely, crudities of stomack, wearinesse, and heavinesse over all the body.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 506.

Nor vain (said Merion) are our martial toils!

We too can boast of no ignoble spoils,
But those my ship contains: whence distant far,
I fight conspicuous in the van of war.

Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. viii.

Till fiery flashes in the van

Proclaim too sure the robber clan

Have well secured the only way

Could now avail the promis'd prey.—Byron. The Giaour.

VAN, n. } Fr. Van, vanner; It. Vànni; Dut.
VAN, v. } and Ger. Wanne; A. S. Fanne; from the Lat. Vannus,—say the etymologists: and the Lat. Vannus, from the Gr. Βάλλειν, to throw or cast, ob jactationem et succussionem vanni, because the corn is winnowed by the stroke,—the blow or blast of the air; but the origin is probably northern. (See WINNOW, and WIND.) To van, (or fân,) qv.—

To act upon with the wind, to beat with the wind; and a van,—

Any thing that catches or holds the wind, that beats or strikes the wind; (sc.) a wing, a sail.

As for the winnowing, vanning, and laying up either of corne or pulse, they would have done in the old moone, about the last quarter.—Holland. Plinie, b. xviii. c. 22.

The corne, which in the vanning lieth lowest, is the best.
Bacon. Naturali Historie, § 671.

— At last his sail-broad vannes

He spreads for flight, and in the surging smoak Uplifted spurns the ground.—Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ii.

So Satan fell, and strait a fiery globe
Of angels on full sail of wing flew nigh,
Who on their plummy vans receiv'd him soft
From his uneasy station, and upbore
As on a floating couch through the blithe air,
Then in a flowing valley set him down
On a green bank. Id. Paradise Regained, b. iv.

Light was the wound; but in the sinew hung,
The point; and his disabled wing unstrung.
He wheeld in air, and stretch'd his vans in vain;
His vans no longer cou'd his flight sustain:
For while one gather'd wind, one unsupply'd
Hung drooping down; nor pois'd his other side.

Dryden. Ovid. Metam. b. ii.

VANE, n. A. S. Fana; Ger. Fane; Dut. Vaene, vexillum. A standard, an ensign (Somner); who adds,—hence our fane and vane, pro tritone. Chaucer writes it,—Fane, (qv.) and see VAN.

Any thing placed to catch the wind, and move as it blows.

Mar. Lost, lost again; the wild rage of my blood
Doth ocean like oreflow the shallow shore
Of my weak virtue: my desire's a vane,
That the last breath from her turns every way.

Beaum. & Fletch. Moral Representations.

The quadrant was eagerly seized, but on examination it unluckily wanted vanes, and therefore in its present state was altogether useless; however, fortune still continuing in a favourable mood, it was not long before a person through curiosity pulling out the drawer of an old table, which had been driven on shore, found therein some vanes, which fitted the quadrant very well.—Anson. Voyages, b. iii. c. 3.

But the artificial part of a feather is the beard, or, as it is sometimes I believe called, the vane.

Paley. Natural Philosophy, c. 12.

VANISH, v. Fr. Vanoyer, évanouir; It. Svanire; Lat. Vanescere, from Vanus, for which Vossius gives six different etymologies. Tooke derives it from the A. S. Fyn-ig-can, to corrupt, spoil, decay, wither; and this is not improbably formed upon the A. S. Wan-can, to wane, to decrease, to decay, to fall away. (See VAIN.) And thus (to vanish),—

To disappear, to pass or go away, out of sight or view, beyond perception; to be or become imperceptible.

For al worth a God wole. and ther with he vanshede.

Piers Plouhman, p. 241.

And with that word, the arwes in the cas
Of the goddesse clatteren fast and ring,
And forth she went, and made a vanishing.

Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 2360.

Tho vanished the olde man, he n'iste wher.

Id. The Second Nonnes Tale, v. 15,685.

Thus it befell vpon a night,
Whan there was nought but sterre light,
She was vanished right as hir list,
That no wight, but hir selfe wist.—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

About the moneth of December, in ye thyrde yere of Johns reygne, in the prouynce of Yorke, were seen .v. moonys, one in the east, the seconde in the west, the thyrde in the north, the fourth in the south, and the fyfthe, as it were, set in the myddys of ye other, & yode vi tymes in compassynge the other, as it were, by the space of an houre, and vanysshed away soone after.—Fabyan. Chronycle, an. 1202.

We may not therefore imagine that the properties of the weaker nature haue vanisht with the presence of the more glorious, and haue bin therein swallowed up as in a gulfe.
Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, b. v. § 53.

Farewell, she said, and vanish'd from the place;
The sheaf of arrows shook, and rattl'd in the case.

Dryden. The Knight's Tale, b. iii.

By observing what passes in our minds, how our ideas there in train constantly some vanish, and others begin to appear, we come by the idea of succession.

Locke. Hum. Underst. b. ii. c. 14.

VAN

— For when he bow'd
His hoary head, and strove to drink, the flood Vanish'd absorb'd, and at his feet adust
The soil appear'd, dried instant by the gods.

better, to subject, to subdue, to conquer.

If thei that tyme had wonnen, & vanquished Sir Edward.
R. Brunne, p. 261.

But in conclusion, the enemies beaten on all sides, and in so many sorts, with artillery were put backe, and vanquished, that there died that day at all the foure places fifteene or sixteene thousand.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. p. 84.

Cesar remembryng how Lucius Cassius the consull had heretofore by the Heluetians bene slayne, and his armie vanquished & compelled dishonourably to crepe vnder a yoke, thought it not conuenient to graunt their requeste.
Goldinge. Caesar, fol. 6.

I am alone the vanquisher of time,
Bearing those sweets which cure death's bitterness.
Drayton. Robert, Duke of Normandy.

It was the parable of Iphicrates, that an army of harts, with a lyon to their captain, would be able to vanquish an armie of lyons, if their captain were but an hart.
Hale. Rem. Ser. Phil. iv. 13.

That great giant was only vanquishable by the Knights of the Wells.—Gayton. On Don Quixote.

Yet he opposes three daies pestilence to seven years famine and three moneths vanquishment: so much odds he knew there was betwixt the dull activity of man and the quick dispatch of an angel.

Bp. Hall. The Balm of Gilead, s. 7.

Shall a stripling David gloriously triumph over giants, while I basely am vanquished by dwarfs?
Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 2.

Averse from pains, and loath to learn the part Of Cato, dying with a dauntless heart!
Though much, my master, that stern virtue prais'd,
Which o'er the vanquisher, the vanquish'd rais'd.
And my pleas'd father came, with pride, to see His boy, defend the Roman liberty.
Dryden. Persius, Sat. 3.

Ah, Helen, pierce me not with taunts so keen!
Me Menelaus, by Minerva's aid,
Hath vanquish'd now, who may hereafter him.
We also have our gods.—Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. iii.

It obliged sovereigns to submit to the soft collar of social esteem, compelled stern authority to submit to elegance, and gave a domination vanquisher of laws, to be subdued by manners.—Burke. On the French Revolution.

VA'NTAGE, v. } See ADVANTAGE.
VA'NTAGE, n. } To place or set before or forward, to prefer;—to promote (or advance) to benefit, to profit.

For he is not vnkynde, nor vnrighteous in suche wyse that he wyl forget your good dedes, & the labour ye haue susteyned, not for renowne, or vauntage sake, but for the loue of his name.—Udal. Hebrues, c. 6.

For so shall the mā be cursed that obeieth not God, and that happeneth twoo maner of waies: eyther when we put the cōmaundēmētes of God in practyse in outwarde shew before men, or els for ambitious vaine glory or vauntage sake.
Bp. Gardner. Of True Obedience, fol. 14.

At the first to take the vantage of the ground, they gaue

Holinshed. Historie of Scotland, an. 1333.

We yet of present peril be afraid;
For needless fear did never vantage none.—Spenser.

For bending all my loving thoughts on thee,
The injuries that to myself I do
Doing thee vantage, double vantage me.
Shakespeare, son. 88.

Yet always he [Fabius] followed the enemy at his tail, and made him ever afraid of him, thinking still that he sought to get the vantage, to give the charge upon him.
North. Plutarch, p. 152.

For good thoughts (though God accept them) yet towards men, a little better than good dreames: except they be put in act; and that cannot be without power, and place;
as the vantage and commanding ground.
Bacon. Ess. Of Great Place.

Amphialus let his staff fall to Agenors vampall.
Sidney. Arcadia, b. iii.

Amphialus was run through the vamplate.—Id. Ib.

— And men at arms devise,
The greaves or guises were the surer guard,
The vambrass or the pouldron they should prize.
Drayton. The Battle of Agincourt.

— Tell him from me,
I'll hide my siluer beard in a gold beauer,
And in my vambrace put this wither'd brawne,
And meeting him, will tell him, that my lady
Was fayrer then his grandame, and as chaste
As may be in the world.
Shakespeare. Troyl. & Cress. Act i. sc. 3.

Then put on all thy gorgeous arms, thy helmet
And brigandine of brass, thy broad habergeon, Vant-brass and greaves, and gauntlet, and thy spear
A weaver's beam; and seven-times-folded shield,
I only with an oak'n staff will meet thee.

Not to be nam'd when souls are question'd;
They are vain and flying vapours.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Island Princess, Act v.

He now is dead, and all his glory gone,
And all his greatnes vapoured to nought,
That as a glasse vpon the water shone,
Which vanisht quite, so soone as it was sought.
Spenser. The Ruines of Time.

Thomas Stukely, an English-man, a ruffian, a riotous spendthrift, and a notable vapourer (who having consumed his estate had fled into Ireland,) disappointed of his hope of a stewardship of Wexford.
Camden. Hist. of Q. Elizabeth, an. 1570.

The waxen taper which I burn by night,
With the dull vap'ry dimness mocks my sight,
As though the damp, which hinders the clear flame,
Came from my breath in that night of my shame.
Drayton. Rosamond to Henry II.

Consider that mists, fogs, and clouds are no congelations, but onely gatherings, and thickenings of a moist and va-

VAR

Ant. Maria Shirlæus, with a new telescope of a larger diameter than ordinary, discovered five other stars more remote from Jupiter than his satellites, and a kind of vapid atmosphere about that planet.—Glanvill, Ess. 7.

No faint reflections of the distant light
Streak with long gleams the scatt'ring shades of night;
From the damp earth impervious vapours rise,
Increase the darkness, and involve the skies.
Pope. Statius. Thebaid, b. i.

They told Barnaby, in a vapouring sort (which that nation was then much addicted to) how little harm England in their wars was like to do them.

be wicked and abominable.

Warburton. Apology for the two first Letters.

There is a light cloud by the moon—
'Tis passing, and will pass full soon—
If, by the time its vapoury sail
Hath ceased her shaded orb to veil,
Thy heart within thee is not changed,
Then God and man are both avenged.
Byron. Siege of Corinth, s. 21.

I was not one, a miss, who might presume
Now to be crazed by mirth, now sunk in gloom; known to the ancients. Now (he adds), many people so call the gum of the juniper, much used by painters to brighten colours. Some learned men think it so called, quasi vernum rorem, because it flows from the tree in spring. But he agrees with Salmasius that it is the Gr. Βερνικις, Βερνικη, sive Βερνικη, which the Græco-barbarians use pro succino, for amber. Skinner refers to burnish, (qv.) And to varnish, is—

To lay on or impose a bright, a burnished—surface; to give a bright or glossy, a shining or dazzling—appearance; and thus to cover, hide, or conceal deformity, or disagreeable reality.

Wel hath this miller varnished his hed,
Ful pale he was, for drunken, and nought red.
Chaucer. The Reves Tale, v. 4147.

With seeming good so varnishing their ill,
That it went current by the fair event,
And of their hopes the utmost to fulfill.
Drayton. The Barons' Wars, s. 67.

Even varnish the wall after the colour is dried upon it in this manner: take white punice wax, melt it with oile, and while it is hote, wash the said painting all over with pensils or fine brushes of bristles wet in the said varnish.
Holland. Plinie, b. xxxiii. c. 7.

Yet though there be more fancy in the varnish, there is much faith in the ground-work of this relation, presenting a four-fold truth to posterity.

Fuller. Worthies. Northumberland.

The knowledge of some gums and liquors in that country [China] afforded those useful as well as most beautiful varnishes, which we call by the name of the kingdom that supplies us with them, and which do both there, and in Japan, employ multitudes of tradesmen; I am credibly informed, that the art of making the like varnished wares is now begun to be a trade at Paris, and I doubt not but it will before long be so in London too.

Because that king Lucius was dead, and had left no issue to succeed him, the Britains (as before ye haue heard) were at variance amongst themselves.
Holinshed. Historie of England, b. iv. c. 21.

It [world] is a goodly place, fitted with all grateful objects to our senses, full of variety and pleasantness, and the soul fastening upon them, is ready with Peter in the mount to conclude, "That it is good to be here."
Bp. Hall. Cont. Victory of Faith over the World.

And so it is with the principle of true religion, the principle it self lies in a narrow compass, but the activity and energy of it is diffusive and various.
Id. Ib. Discourse of Religion.

Divers men equally wise and good speak variously in the question, and the inquirer cannot be indifferent to both, but must resolve vpon one.
Bp. Taylor Rule of Conscience, b. i. c. 4.

As Jacob used an ingenious invention to make Laban's cattle speckled or ring-straked, so, much the skill in making tulips feathered and variegated, with stripes of diuers colours.
Fuller. Worthies. Norfolk.

His attributes are but the several modes and variegations of Almighty love, from which they differ but as the colours of the rain-bow do from the light of the sun.
Glanvill, Ser. 10.

[Plant now your choice tulips,] but plant them in natural earth somewhat impoveris'd with very fine sand, else they will soon loose their variegations.
Evelyn. Kalendarium. October.

Whether we consider the force of the squadron sent on this service, or the diversified distresses that each single ship was separately involved in, or the uncommon instances of varying fortune, which attended the whole enterprize, each of these articles, I conceive, must, from it's rude, well-known outlines, appear worthy of a compleater and more finished delineation.—Anson. Voyages, Introd.

Another thing that stumbled me here was the variation, which, at this time, by the last amplitude I had, I found to be but 7 deg. 58 min. W. whereas the variation at the Cape (from which I found myself not 30 leagues distant) was then computed, and truly, about 11 deg. or more.
Dampier. Voyages, an. 1699.

Absolute necessity, in which there can be no variation in any kind or degree, cannot be the ground of existence of a number of beings, however similar and agreeing; because, without any other difference, even number is itself a manifest difformity or inequality (if I may so speak) of efficiency or causality.—Clarke. On the Attributes, Prop. 7.

Is there a variance? enter but his door,

Pope. Epis. to Lord Bathurst.

And all variety or difference of existence, must needs arise from some external cause, and be dependent upon it, and proportionable to the efficiency of that cause, whatsoever it be.—Clarke. On the Attributes, Prop. 7.

On the whole we lost little less than a month by our attendance upon her, [the Gloucester,] in consequence of the various mischances she encountered.
Anson. Voyages, b. iii. c. 1.

Her short performance was no sooner try'd,
When she I sought, the nightingale reply'd;
So sweet, so shrill, so variously she sung,
That the grove echo'd, and the valleys rung.
Dryden. The Flower and the Leaf.

Ladies, like variegated tulips, show,
'Tis to their changes half their charms we owe;
Fine by defect, and delicately weak,
Their happy spots the nice admirer take.
Pope. Epis. 2. To a Lady.

We now tacked and stood off till twelve, then tacked and stood in again till four in the morning, when we made a trip off till day-light; and during all this time we lost ground, owing to the variableness of the winds.
Cook. First Voyage, b. iii. c. 1.

We should also recollect, that, besides this temporary variableness of the mind, the tongue is unruly, and, when the spirits or the passions are high, utters almost spontaneously what the mind, which ought to hold the bridle, would, in more deliberate moments, willingly restrain.
Knox. Ess. No. 25.

Whoever compares his state of mind on feeling soft, and smooth, variated, unangular bodies, with that in which he finds himself, on the view of a beautiful object, will perceive a very striking analogy in the effects of both; and which may go a good way towards discovering their common cause.
Burke. On the Sublime & Beautiful.

It first thankfully confesses the great goodness of our blessed Redeemer, in disposing our minds, of themselves so variously and wrongly inclined, to ask unanimously of him such things as we ought, and encouraging our applications by such explicit assurances of hearing us.
Secker, vol. iii. Ser. 27.

The clouds in the west were variegated with colours, such as no pencil has yet been able to imitate.
Knox. Winter Evenings, Even. 59.

VA'SCULAR. Lat. Vasculum, from vas, a vessel.

Containing or consisting of vessels.

Anger acts as a stimulus of the most potent kind, upon the muscular, vascular, and nervous systems. It is not surprising, therefore, that its pathological effects should be numerous and alarming.—Cogan. On the Passions, pt. ii. c. 3.

It [the spleen] must be vascular, and admit of a circulation through it, in order to be kept alive or be part of a living body.—Paley. Natural Theology, c. 11.

VASE. Fr. Vase; It. Vaso; Sp. Vaso; Lat. Vas. See VAS.

A vessel; applied usually—to one intended for ornamental purposes.

No chargers then were wrought in burnish'd gold,

They plac'd, that should illumine the spacious hall;
These with dry fuel-wood all newly riv'n
And intermix'd with torches they supplied,
And damsels watch'd by turns and fed the fires.
Couper. Homer. Odyssey, b. xviii.

VA'SSAL, n. } Fr. Vassall; It. Vassallo; Sp.
VA'SSAL, v. } Vassallo; Low Lat. Vassallus.
VA'SSALAGE. } The etymologists have written VASSALA'TION. } very largely upon this word and VA'SSALESS. } its origin. (See Menage, Wach- ter, Du Cange, Vossius, and Junius.) In our old writers, (sc. Chaucer, Gower, G. Douglas,) as in the ancient romance, Vassalage, or as it is sometimes improperly written Vesselage, is used as equivalent to—Valour, valiantness, prowess. And Junius supposes it to be so used from the powerful and faithful assistance which the fiduciary clients, then called Vassi or vassalli, supplied to their superior lord in times of danger: the word is indeed evidently as much a term of honour as knighthood was. The Low Lat. Vassus is derived by Vossius (de Vitiis, p. 634) from vas, a pledge or surety: and the vassals undoubtedly were tenants in vad-uo, upon wage or gage, or pledge; (sc.) to render certain services to the lord or proprietor, such as to follow and assist in war; and were so far bondsmen, that, by the very nature of their tenure, they were bound or under obligation or allegiance to the performance of certain conditions. Vossius, with little reason, hesitates to derive vas (vads, vadis) from vad- ere, which we have in the A. S. Wad-an, to go, generally, not as we now restrict the verb, to wade. The Law Lat. Vad-ium was also written Wad-ium; A. S. Wæda, pignus, vadimonium.

A vassal then is—

A follower, or attendant; one bound to follow or attend; one holding certain lands under bond, or obligation, or allegiance—to follow or attend,
to aid or assist.

For the common application, see the quotation from Blackstone.

And that was lo! in this londe the firste vassayl,
As in langage of Saxonie, that me mygte euer y wytte,
And so wel he haith that folk aboute, that he nys not get

The grantor [of lands] was called the proprietor or lord; being he who retained the dominion or ultimate property of the feud or fee; and the grantee who had only the use and possession, according to the terms of the grant was stiled the feudatory or vasal, which was only an other name for the tenant or holder of the lands: though, on account of the prejudices which we have justly conceived against the doctrines that were afterwards grafted on this system, we now use the word vasal opprobriously, as synonymous to slave or bondsman.—Blackstone. Commentaries, b. ii. c. 4.

Cla. Perpetuall durance?
Isa. I, just, perpetual durance, a restraint Through all the worlds vastiditie you had
To a determin'd scope.

Shakespeare. Meas. for Meas, Act iii. sc. 1.

What a vast field for contemplation is here opend! Such regions of matter about us, in which there is not the least particle that does not carry with it an argument of God's existence; not the least stick or straw, or other trifle that falls to the ground, but shews it; not the slightest motion produced, the least whisper of the air, but tells it.

Wollaston. Religion of Nature, § 5.

The Copernicans (that growing sect of astronomers), as their hypothesis requires, suppose the vastness of the firmament to be exceedingly greater than the ancients believed it.—Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 21.

The Psalms are indeed miscellaneous. But so are many other parts of scripture. The book of Proverbs is vastly more so. Yet no one objects against reading those, as they lie.—Secker, vol. iii. Ser. 26.

Profusion of ornament, and complicated vastness, have never yet been able to cause that effect which is produced by simple magnificence.—Knox. Ess. No. 79.

VAT, n. Dut. Vat; Ger. Fass; Sw. Fat;
A. S. Feet, fat. Wachter derives from the Ger.
Fassen; Dut. Vatten; Sw. Fatta, capere, con-tinere, to hold, to retain; and he refers the Lat.
Vas to the same origin. Vat (also written fat, qv.) is now usually applied to—
A vessel of large size.

In our fattes our cares be drown'd,
With thy grapes our hairees be crown'd.

Shakespeare. Anthony & Cleopatra, Act iii. sc. 7.

Would'st thou thy vats with gen'rous juice should froth?
Respect thy orchards; think not, that the trees
Spontaneous will produce an wholesome draught.

J. Phillips. Cider, b. 1.

— Lo! for thee my mill
Now grinds choice apples, and the British vats O'erflow with generous cider. Id. Ib. b. ii.

A whole vintage is very often spoiled by the number of bad grapes which are mixed in the vat, and that which they [the people of Madeira] will not throw out, because they increase the quantity of wine.

Cook. First Voyage, b. i. c. 1.

VA'TICIDE. } Fr. Vaticinier; It. Vatici-

VA'TICINATE. } Vaticinari, fata canere vates
VA'TICINA'TION. } vel phates, from the Gr. φήμι, VA'TICINAL. } to tell. Vaticinate—
To tell the fates, or any thing fated; to sooth-say, to foretell, to prophesy.

Vaticide,—a slayer of a prophet.

Then was fulfilled the vaticine or prophesie of old Merlin:
"A burning globe shall rise out of the east, and shall compasse about the land of Ireland, and all the foules of that iland shall flee round about the fire."

Holinshed. Conquest of Ireland, c. 34.

And is it not all one to say, that there was never any woman but Sappho in love, nor had the gift of prophecy, save only Sybilla, and Aristonice, or such as published their vaticinations and prophecies in verse?

Holland. Plutarch, p. 977.

A man would think that the memorable prophecy of Jacob, that the scepter should not depart from Judah till Shiloh come, should have been so clear a determination of the time of the Messiah, that a Jew should never have doubted it to have been verified in Jesus of Nazareth; and yet for this so clear vaticination, they have no less than twenty six answers.—Bp. Taylor. Liberty of Prophesying.

Then first (if poets aught of truth declare)
The caittiff vaticide conceiv'd a prayer.

Pope. The Dunciad, b. ii.

The phenomena of nature are alike visible to all; but all have not alike learned the connexion of natural things, or understand what they signify, or know how to vaticinate by them.—Berkley. Siris, § 253.

My patience being quite exhausted, I desired a gentleman who interested himself in my concerns to go and expostulate with the vaticide [sc. the manager of Covent Garden Theatre].—Smollett. Regicide, Pref.

He [Thomas Rhymer] has left vaticinal rhymes, in which he predicted the union of Scotland with England about the year 1279.—Warton. English Poetry, s. 79.

VA'VASOUR, n. } Law Lat. Vavassor, or VAVA'SORY. } vasvasor; Fr. Vavasseur, vavassorie. A lord that held of some duke, marquess, or earl, and (at least among us) was in degree inferior to a baron; a mesne, or mesne lord; or as arrière vassal: also, a villain, (Cot-grave.) (See VASSAL. See also Spelman, Menage, and Wachter.) Vasvass-or is, perhaps, formed from vassus vassi.

Syuard the gode westreis, Edald the vavasoure,
Wilaf kyng of Merce, he com to that stoure.

R. Brunne, p. 1^m.

Sir kyng Isakin I am thi vavasour,
My nam is Statin, I wille be no traitoure.
R. Brunne, p. 166.

A shereve hadde he ben, and a countour.
Was no wher swiche a worthy vavasour.
Chaucer. Prol. to the Canterbury Tales, v. 362.

Such knights and souldiers as had serued him in the warres, he also adorned with the names of dukes, marquesses, earles, valuasors or capteins, and valuasines.
Holinshed. Description of England, b. ii. c. 5.

The middle thane was feudal, but not honorary; he was also call'd a vavasor, and his lands a vavasory, which held of some mesn lord, and not immediately of the king.
Harrington. Works, p. 65.

The causes of vavasors or vavasories appertain'd to the cognizance of this court [Shiremoote] where wills were prov'd, judgment and execution given, cases criminal and civil determin'd.—Id. Ib.

The first name of dignity, next beneath a peer, was antiently that of vidames, vice-domini, or vavasors, who are mentioned by our antient lawyers as vir magnæ dignitatis.
Our legal antiquaries are not agreed upon even their original or antient office.—Blackstone. Commentaries, b. i. c. 12.

VAULT, n. } Fr. Volte, a round or turn;

VAULTER. } Sp. Vuelta; Low Lat. Voluta, VAULTING, n. } from volutum, past part. of VAULTY. } volvere, to turn.

A vault,—a turn, or bow; an arch, an arched building; a turn; the bounding turn (says Cot-grave) which riders teach their horses; a curvet;
the turn or flexure, in which men throw themselves on or off their horses, (Junius.) And hence to vault—

To curvet; to turn or tumble; to leap with the body turned or bent; generally, to leap.

So within sixe dayes, they had broken the roffes of the towres and chambers, that they within durste nat abyde, but in lowe vaultes.
Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 106.

And the very sparkles after the fire is out of them doe
serue in stead of stones to make walles and vaultes.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 123.

The houses within were well vawted with stone, so that the engynes nor spryngalles dyd the men but small damage.
Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. c. 89.

And if ye doe not thus with your good will, wee shall vault and vndermine your foundations in such maner, that they shal be torne vpside downe.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. p. 77.

The said citie of Alexandria is an old thing decayed or ruinated, hauing bene a faire and great citie neere two miles in length, being all vaulted vnderneath for prouision of fresh water, which water commeth thither but once euery yeere.—Id. Ib. p. 281.

In deed it is a common opinion among the people there vnto this daie, that the Romans built those vaults, or tauerns (which in that citie are vnder the ground) with some part of the castell.
Holinshed. Historie of England, b. iv. c. 7.

He affirmed, that at Carteia there was one of these Polyphi, which used commonly to go forth of the sea, and enter into some of their open cesterns and vaults among their ponds and stewes, wherein they keep great sea-fishes, and otherwhiles would rob them of theirsalt-fish, and so go his waies againe.
Holland. Plinie, b. ix. c. 30.

Deepe in the bottome of the sea, her bowre
Is built, of hollow billowes heaped hie
Like to thick clowdes, that threat a stormy showre,
And vaulted all within, like to the sky,
In which the gods doe dwell eternally.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 4.

Hee'll call you to so hot an answer of it,
That caues and wombe vaultages of France
Shall chide your trespas, and returne your mock
In second accent of his ordinance.
Shakespeare. Hen. V. Act ii. sc. 4.

— There be young ladies
Both fair and honourable that would leap to reach 'em,
And leap aloft too.
Evan. Such are light enough;
I am no vaulter, wench.
Beaum. & Fletch. A Wife for a Month, Act iv.

If after you are married, your wife do run away with a vaulter, or the Frenchman, that walks upon ropes, or him that dances the jig, &c.
B. Jonson. The Silent Woman, Act ii. sc. 1.

The man (for feare) began to retire and go backe againe, but the wild beast kept a tumbling and vaulting all about him.—Holland. Plinie, b. viii. c. 17.

And I will kisse thy detestable bones,
And put my eye-balls in thy vaultie browes,
And ring these fingers with thy household wormes.
Shakespeare. K. John, Act iii. sc. 4.

And he has bespoken a vaulting-horse, you shall see him come forth presently.
Beaum. & Fletch. Cwoid's Revenge, Act ii.

To her former husband she bare Lord George Dacres, who had died young by the fall of a vaulting-horse upon him, as he had learned to vault.
Camden. Hist. of Q. Elizabeth, an. 1567.

This vault of air, this congregated ball
Self center'd sun, and stars that rise and fall.
Pope. To Mr. Murray.

The herald ends: The vaulted firmament
With loud acclams, and vast applause is rent:
Heav'n guard a prince so gracious and so good,
So just, and yet so provident of blood!
This was the gen'ral cry.
Dryden. The Knight's Tale, b. iii.

Nestor had fail'd the fall of Troy to see,
But leaning on his lance, he vaulted on a tree;
Then gath'ring up his feet, look'd down with fear,
And thought his monstrous foe was still too near.
Id. Ovid. Metam. b. viii.

In bad way, it is not easy to compute distances, but they imagined they had walked about six miles farther, following the course of the river, when they frequently passed under vaults, formed by fragments of the rock, in which they were told people who were benighted frequently passed the night.
Cook. First Voyage, b. i. c. 16.

Then eccho'd through the gloomy vaults of all
The lofty roof the suitor's boist'rous roar.
Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. i.

The sun, emerging from the lucid waves,
Ascended now the brazen vault with light
For the inhabitants of earth and heav'n,
When in their bark at Pylus they arriv'd,
City of Neleus.
Id. Ib. b. iii.

In 1245 he [Henry III.] undertook this great work in the mode of architecture which began to take place in his days, but did not carry it on farther than four arches west of the Middle Tower, and the vaulting of this was not finished till 1296.—Pennant. London. Westminster Abbey.

Goldinge. Cesar, fol. 36.

He had before sayd and vaunted, howe and the kynge came to reyse the siege before Ipre, he wolde abyde and fight with hym and all his puissace.
Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 438.

The Englisshemen had the vauntage of the byll, and helde themselfe so cloose together, that none coude entre into them.—Id. Ib. vol. i. c. 199.

Their glorying so presumptuously in their former victorie, and their vaunting of escapinge so longe vnponnyshed for their wrongfull dealynges, hadde brought them to the point they were at.—Id. Ib. vol. i. c. 438.

And [you] made a plantation of the people of your owne English nation in Virginia, the first English colonie that euer was there planted, to the no little derogation of the glorie of the Spaniards, & an impeach to their vaunts.
Holinshed. Chron. Ep. Ded.

[And hither am I come] to tell you [faire beholders] that our play
Leapes ore the vaunt and firslings of those broyles, Begging in the middle.—Shakespeare. Troyl. & Cress. Prol.

All others may vaunt verely, that they have vanquished men: but Sergius may boast, that he hath conquered and overcome even Fortune her selfe.
Holland. Plinie, b. vii. c. 28.

But chiefly skill to ride, seemes a science
Proper to gentle blood; some others faime
To menage steeds, as did this vaunter; but in vaine.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 4.

[Euripides] doth use a most odious and importune vantery, especially in this, that he would seeme to interlace amongst the passionate accidents and affaires of tragically matters, the speech of a man's selfe, which is not befitting nor pertinent unto the subject argument.—Holland. Plut. p. 248.

Moreover, this vantery and glorious boasting of a man's selfe, is not befitting those only who are accused, or in trouble, and danger of the law, but to as many also as be in adversity rather than in prosperity.—Id. Ib. p. 249.

Young Clarion with vauntfull lustie hed

And thereto gan his furnitures prepare.
Spenser. Muipotmos.

I my selfe have seen these vaunting mountebanks called themselves Psylli, as comming from the race of those people Psylli who feared no kind of poison.
Holland. Plinie, b. xxv. c. 10.

By that faire sunne, that shewes me where thou stand'st,
I heard thee say (and vauntingly thou spak'st it)
That thou we'rt cause of noble Gloucester's death.
Shakespeare. Rich. II. Act iv. sc. 1.

Who in his march the earl doth oft molest,
(By their vauntcursers hearing how they came)
In many a streight, and often him distress'd
By stakes and trenches that his horse might lame.
Drayton. The Miseries of Q. Margaret.

This prince king James the third followed vpon a wilfull pretense, and obstinat mind, the counsell and aduise of vaunterlors, and such as (being advanced from base degree vnto high authoritie) studied more to keepe themselves in fauor, than to giue true aduertisements, and faithfull aduise vnto their prince.—Holinshed. Hist. of Scotland, an. 1487.

— Our tender maids
And trembling children, shall with scorn behold
The haughty captive, who had made his vaunts
To lay their dwellings level.
Dryden. Love Triumphant, Act i. sc. 1.

Tongue-valiant hero, vaunter of thy might,
In threats the foremost, but the lag in fight;
When did'st thou thrust amid the mingled preace,
Content to bid the war aloof in peace?
Id. Homer. Iliad, b. 1.

Then loudly vaunting cried the king of Crete:
What thinks Deiphobus, vain boaster, now?
Seem not the Greeks, three warriors slain for one,
To yield thee just amends?—Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. xiii.

Ah, let me never in my father's courts
Such vauntings hear of thine again, that thou Wouldst dare confront the ocean's king in arms.

the world, the fleshe and the deuill, to be forwardest, and as it wer the ensigne beatouts, in the very foremost ranks.
Bp. Gardner. Of True Obedience, fol. 44.

The report was, the earl of Huntley had the vaward, the duke the battele and the earl of Cassels, and their nobility of their west, the rereward.
Strype. Eccles. Mem. 1 Mary, an. 1557.

Now the main battle of the French came on,
The vaward vanquish'd, quite the field doth fly.

Johnson explains, Whereness,—ubiety.

VEC

No one sequel urged by the apostles against the Galatians, for joining circumcision with Christ, but may be as well enforced against the Lutherans holding ubiquity.
Walton. Life of Hooker.

It is impossible for any author of a voluminous book, consisting of several persons and circumstances, (reader, in pleading for Master Fox, I plead for my self) to have such ubiquitary intelligence, as to apply the same infallibly to every particular.—Fuller. Worthies. Berkshire.

This knight, [Sir Philip Sidney] in relation to my book, may be termed an ubiquitary, and appear amongst statesmen, souldiers, lawyers, writers.—Id. Ib. Kent.

Some ubiquitaries, while they hold the possibility of conversion and salvation of reprobates, overthrow the doctrine of God's eternall decree, and immutabilitie.
Bp. Hall. Works, vol. i. p. 352.

The ubiquitarians defend their errors, by denying the judgment of reason; and the Macedonians would not have the deity of the Holy Ghost proved by consequence.
Glanvill, Ess. 5.

Relations, ubications, duration, the vulgar philosophy admits to be something; and yet to inquire in what place they are, were gross.—Id. Ib.

It seems to me, that the reason you do not apprehend ubiquity to be necessarily connected with self-existence, is, because, in the order of your ideas, you first conceive a being, (a finite being, suppose,) and then conceive self existence to be a property of that being; as the angles are properties of a triangle, when a triangle exists.
Clarke. Answer to Second Letter.

For, besides the court, she's the most eternal visiter of the town; and yet manages her time so well, that she seems ubiquitary.—Dryden. Marriage a-la-Mode, Act i. sc. 1.

I remember at a full table in the city, one of these ubiquitary wits was entertaining the company with a soliloquy, for so I call it when a man talks to those who do not understand him, concerning wit and humour.—Tatler, No. 244.

Have ye, ye sage intendants of the whole,
A ubiquarian presence and control,
Elisha's eye, that, when Gehazi stray'd,
Went with him, and saw all the game he play'd.
Cowper. Tirocinium.

Marian, that soft could stroke the udder'd cow,
Or lessen with her sieve the barley mow.
Gay. Shepherd's Week. Tuesday.

There thrice within the year the flocks produce;
Nor master there nor shepherd ever feels
A dearth of cheese, of flesh, or of sweet milk
Delicious, drawn from udders never dry.
Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. iv.

To turn, (out of a right line;) to change or alter, the course or direction; to bend, to incline; to evolve or turn out.

Being thus at the very pinch of death, the winde and seas raging beyond measure, our master veered some of the maine sheate; and whether it was by that occasion, or by some current, or by the wonderfull power of God, as wee verily thinke it was, the ship quickened her way, and shot past that rocke, where wee thought shee would haue shored.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 848.

— Trains shall seek out engine,
And they two fill the town with't; every cable
Is to be veer'd.

B. Jonson. The Divelle is an Asse, Act v. sc. 3.

Thou weather-cock of government: that when the wind blows for the subject, point'st to privilege; and when it changes for the soveragin, veers to prerogative.

Dryden. Amphitryon, Act v.

When we find the winds south, S. by W. and S.S.W. fresh gales; veerable to S.W. and back to south, we stand off to the westward with larboard tacks on board.

Dampier. Discourse of Winds, c. 5.

This obliged us to let go our sheet anchor, veering out a good scope of cable, which stopt us till 10 or 11 a clock the next day.—Id. Ib. an. 1687.

It is a double misfortune to a nation, given to change, when they have a soveraign that is prone to fall in with all the turns and veerings of the people.

Addison. The Freeholder.

We were now within little more than a cable's length of the rock, and had more than seventy-five fathom water; but upon dropping an anchor, and veering about one hundred and fifty fathom of cable, the ship was happily brought up.

Sir T. Elyot. The Governour, b. iii. c. 23.

Out of the fertil ground he caus'd to grow
All trees of noblest kinds for sight, smell, taste,
And all amid them stood the tree of life
High eminent, blooming ambrosial fruit
Of vegetable gold.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. iv.

[First,] things vegetable, that have simply life, with those operations incident to life. The second sensible, that have not only a life of vegetation, but a life of sense and faculties, and operations corresponding to it. The third rational or intellectual, that hath not only a life of vegetation and sense, but an intellectual life, and faculties and operations subservient and suitable to that life.

Hale. Origin. of Mankind, p. 266.

Bœtius in his accurate tract De Gemmis, is of the same opinion; not ascribing its [coral] concretion unto the air, but the coagulating spirits of salt, and lapidificial juyce of the sea, which entering the parts of that plant, overcomes its vegetability, and converts it into a lapideous substance.

Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. ii. c. 5.

Massinger. The Old Law, Act i. sc. 1.

We must therefore consider wherein an oak differs from a mass of matter, and that seems to me to be in this; that the one is only the cohesion of particles of matter any how united, the other such a disposition of them as constitutes the parts of an oak; and such an organization of those parts as is fit to receive and distribute nourishment, so as to continue and frame the wood, bark, and leaves, &c. of an oak, in which consists the vegetable life.

Locke. Hum. Underst. b. ii. c. 27.

Next to the earth itself, we may consider those that are maintained on its surface; which though they are fastened to it, yet are very distinct from it, and those are the whole tribes of vegetables or plants. These may be divided into herbs, shrubs, and trees.

Porous, solide, equal, and smooth; vnequal, venous, and fibrous.—Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 839.

As the arteries (saith he) are known to export the blood, so the veins to carry it back again to the heart, but having already described their extremities, we come now to the large trunks of the veins, and here, as in the arteries, we find the common practice of nature in disposing the branches of veins to discharge the reflux blood into the next adjacent trunk, and so on to the heart.—Ray. On the Creation, pt. ii.

Effulgent, hence the veiny marble shines.
Thomson. Summer.

As soon as the blood is received by the heart from the veins of the body and before that it is sent out again into its arteries, it is carried, by the force of the contraction of the heart, and by means of a separate and supplementary artery, to the lungs, and made to enter the vessels of the lungs, from which, after it has undergone the action, whatever it be, of that viscus, it is brought back by a large vein once more to the heart, in order, when thus concocted and prepared, to be thence distributed anew into the system.

Paley. Natural Theology, c. 10.

Though the arterial [system] with its trunk and branches and small twigs, may be imagined to issue or proceed; in other words, to grow from the heart, like a plant from its root, or the fibres of a leaf from its foot-stalk (which however, were it so, would be only to resolve one mechanism into another,) yet the venal, the returning system, can never be formed in this manner.—Id. Ib.

VE/INED. These seem to be a misprint (in Speght) for veined, i.e. weived. See WAVE.

Trewly she hath wounded the conscience of manye, with florishinge of mokell ianglinge wordes: and good worthe thanked I it for no glose, I am gladde of my prudence thou haste so manly her veined.—Id. Ib.

VEIZE, v. See to PHEEZE.

Some have confidently affirmed, in my hearing, that the word to veize (that is, in the West, to drive away with a witness) had its originall from his [Vesty] profligating of the lands of his bishoprick; but I yet demurre to the truth hereof.—Fuller. Worthies. Warwickshire.

But Bishop Turbervil recovered some lost lands, which Bishop Voysey had vezed: and particularly obtained of Queen Mary the restitution of the fair manor of Crediton.
Id. Ib. Dorsetshire.

VELIFEROUS. Sail-bearing, (vela-ferens.)

The Æthiopians, Persians, Indians, and Chinezes, may be reckon'd among the nations of traffic, especially the last nam'd, as who are by some thought to have had knowledge of the magnet before the Europeans; nay, so addicted were they to sailing, that they invented veliferous chariots, and to sail upon the land.—Evelyn. Navigation & Commerce.

VELITATION, n. Lat. Velitatio, from velites, (a light-armed soldier,) and velites non a volando, quasi volites, ut vulgo creditur, sed quia sub velis, seu verillis militabant, non sub aquilis legionum, a velis nomen traxisse, unde et verillarii postea dicti, (Facciolati Lex.)

An attack, an onset; a contest, a skirmish.

In good time, brethren; and why should not I take leave to return the same answer to you in this your tedious velitation of episcopacy?
Bp. Hall. Answer to the Vindication of Smectymnues.

They abide even after the conquest, after their main body is broken, and therefore cannot at all be cured by those slight velitations and pick queerings of single actions of hostility.
Bp. Taylor. Of Repentance, c. 8. § 8.

But all these were but small velitations and conflicts preparatory to the main battle.
Hale. Cont. Of the Knowledge of Christ Crucified.

VELLEITY, n. Fr. Velleité; It. Velleità; Lat. Velleitas, from velle, to will. See the quotation from Hammond in v. Would. A term (Locke) used to signify—

The lowest degree of desire.

One while sleighting the measure of contrition as unsufficient; another while working the heart to take up with the least velleity of penitent sorrow, without straining it to any further afflictive degrees of true repentance.
Bp. Hall. The Invisible World, b. iii. § 5.

Thy word alone, thy beck alone, thy wish alone, yea, the least act of velleity from thee might have wrought this cure.
Id. Cont. The Deaf & Dumb Man Cured.

The wishing of a thing is not properly the willing of it; though too often mistaken by men for such: but it is that, which is called by the schools an imperfect velleity, and imports no more than an idle, un-operative complacency in, and desire of the end without any consideration of, nay, for the most part, with a direct abhorrence of the means.
South, vol. i. Ser. 10.

For whatever good is propos'd, if its absence carries no displeasure nor pain with it, if a man be easy and content without it, there is no desire of it, nor endeavour after it; there is no more but a bare velleity, the term us'd to signify the lowest degree of desire, and that which is next to none at all, when there is so little uneasiness in the absence of any thing, that it carries a man no farther than some faint wishes for it, without any more effectual or vigorous use of the means to attain it.—Locke. Hum. Underst. b. ii. c. 20.

 To pluck or pull, to twitch or twinge.

For those kind of smells, that we have mentioned, are all strong, and do pull and vellicate the sense.

Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 835.

And therefore we see that almost all purgers have a kind of twitching and vellication, besides the griping which cometh of wind.—Id. Ib. § 37.

[I would demand] why the infusion of Crocus metallorum or of glass of antimony, though it require no pungent, or so much as manifest taste, whereby to vellicate the palate or the tongue, are yet violently both vomitive and cathartick.

Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 191.

There can be no doubt that bodies which are rough and angular, rouse and vellicate the organs of feeling, causing a sense of pain, which consist in the violent tension or contraction of the muscular fibres.

Burke. On the Sublime & Beautiful, § 20.

VELLUM. Fr. Velin, calf's skin; veller, to calve.

Calf's skin, (dressed for use in writing, book-binding, &c.)

He ought rather to make sute for some good vellum parchment for the ingrossing thereof [his pardon] than for munition and artillery to withstand his prince.

Holinshed. Chronicles of Ireland, an. 1534.

The house is builded like a maze within,
 With turning staires, false doors, and winding waies,
 The shape whereof plotted in velum thin
 I will you giue.

Fairefax. Godfrey of Boulogne, b. xiv. s. 76.

The tree, so pruned, dressed, and cultivated, was, within a few days, transplanted into a large sheet of vellum, and placed in the great hall, where it attracts the veneration of his tenants every Sunday morning.—Spectator, No. 612.

VELO'CIDITY. Fr. Vélocité; It. Velocità, velocità; Sp. Veloz, velocidad; Lat. Velox, velocitas, proprie de navibus, from velum, a sail, (Vossius.)

Swiftness, speed, rapidity.

Nor on the other side can it be avoided, but that all motions would be equal in velocity.—Glanvill, Ess. 1.

It appears from experiments of falling bodies, and from experiments of pendulums, which (being of equal lengths and unequal gravities) vibrate in equal times; that all bodies whatsoever, in spaces void of sensible resistance, fall from the same height with equal velocities.

Clarke. On the Attributes, Prop. 3.

The aorta of a whale is larger in the bore than the main pipe of the water-works at London-bridge; and the water roaring in its passage through that pipe is inferior in impetus and velocity to the blood gushing from the whale's heart.—Paley. Natural Theology, c. 10.

Pepper is the chief vendible commodity in this country, it thrives very well on all the coasts.

Dampier. Voyages, an. 1690.

They perform a work, or vend a commodity, equivalent to the compensation they receive; and owe no obligation beyond that which civility or benevolence, towards those with whom they negotiate, imposes.—Knox. Spirit of Despotism.

Whatever is found to gratify the publick, will be multiplied by the emulation of venders beyond necessity or use. This plenty, indeed, produces cheapness, but cheapness always ends in negligence and deprivation.—Idler, No. 7.

And therefore, if the vendor says, the price of a beast is four pounds, and the vendee says he will give four pounds, the bargain is struck; and they neither of them are at liberty to be off, provided immediate possession be tendered by the other side.—Blackstone. Commentaries, b. ii. c. 30.

Some are hoping for a bloody battle, because a bloody battle makes a vendible narrative.—Idler, No. 5.

It appears that the said revolutions were occasioned by the excessive gabells laid upon common vendibles.

Wee extenuate not our guilt; what ever wee sinne, we condemne it as mortall; they palliate wickednesse with the faire pretence of venialitie.

Id. Sermon preached at Westminster, April 5, 1628.

There is no certainty of distinction between the mortal and venial sins; there being no catalogues of one and the other, save only that they usually reckon but seven deadly sins; and the rest are, or may be easily by the ignorant supposed to be venial; and even those sins which are under those seven heads, are not all mortall; for there are amongst them many ways of changing their mortality into veniality.

Bp. Taylor. Dissuasive from Popery, pt. ii. b. i. s. 11.

He who would have been ashamed to participate in Laud, or to yield to corruption, may begin to think the fault venial, when he sees men, who were far below him, rise above him by fraud and by corruption; when he sees them maintain themselves by these means in an elevation, which they could not have acquired by the contrary virtues, if they had had them.—*Bolingbroke. Venue, venew, or venny, in fencing,—a coming, a coming on, an onset; a turn or bout; a hit.
The commentators on Shakespeare have produced a great variety of instances; and differ in their explanations, because they mistake application for meaning.

Finding his own strength, he did not stick to warn such as he disputed with in their own arguments, to take heed to their answers, like a perfect fencer, that will tell aforehand in what button he will give his venew.
Fuller. Worthies. Lincolnshire.

But Thrasibulus and Lampis came afront, and ran upon

Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. iii. c. 1.

I observe farther, that this faith doth relate only to propositions revealed by God, or at least deduced from principles of reason, such as are, that there is a God; that God is in effect to say, that the veracity of God is not a firm and sure foundation of faith to rely upon, without the concurrent testimony of reason; i. e. with reverence be it spoken, God is not to be believ'd on his own word, unless what he reveals be in itself credible, and might be believ'd without him.—Locke. Second Reply to the Bp. of Worcester.

Holinshed. Chron. Epis. Ded.

A verb is a word of number, which hath both time and person. Time is the difference of a verb, by the present, past and future, or to come. A verb finite therefore hath three only times, and those always imperfect.
B. Jonson. English Grammar, c. 16.

Forasmuch then, as by the verb we express sufficiently the actions and passions; and by the noun, the persons doing or suffering as he himself saith; it seemeth that these be the two parts of speech that he meaneth: as for the rest,

Holland. Plutarch, p. 139.

That so it might appear, that the assistance of the Spirit promised to the church was not a vain thing, or a mere verb.

South, vol. ix. Ser. 5.

That part of speech, which by our common grammarians is stiled a verb (whether neuter, active or passive) ought to have no distinct place amongst integrals in a philosophical grammar; because it is really no other than an adjective, and the copula sum affixed to it, or contained in it: so caleo, calefacio, is the same with sum calidus, calefaciens, calefactus.—Wilkins. Real Characters, pt. iii. c. 1.

And this is what is properly called a verb, a word whose principal use is to signify the affirmation: that is, to shew that the discourse in which this word is used, is the discourse of a man who not only has a conception of things, but moreover judges and affirms something of them.

Port Royal, c. 13.

Whereas if only the general signification of the affirmation had been given to the verb, without joining any particular attribute, there would have been no occasion for more than one verb in every language, which is that we call substantive.—Id. Ib.

These verbal signs they [children] sometimes borrow from others, and sometimes make themselves as one may observe among the new and unusual names children often give to things in their first use of language.

The good way they took was by Crumwel's and Cranmer's direction; who foresaw, that in these conferences between men of such differing judgments, there would happen nothing but verbose janglings and endless disceptations, and little would be concluded.

Strype. Eccles. Mem. Hen. VIII. an. 1540.

You have told me that a verb is (as every word also must be) a noun; but you added, that it is also something more; and that the title of verb was given to it on account of that distinguishing something more than the mere nouns convey.—Tooke. Diversions of Purley, pt. ii. c. 8.

The verb must be accounted for from the necessary use of it in communication. It is in fact the communication itself.—Id. Ib. pt. i. c. 3.

He [Lowth] would have said more truly, that to placed before some nouns makes verbs.—Id. Ib. c. 9. Note.

Verbs in English, not being distinguished as in other languages by a peculiar termination, and it being sometimes impossible to distinguish them by their place, when the old termination of the A.S. verbs was dropped, this word To (i.e. act) became necessary to be prefixed, in order to distinguish them from nouns, and to invest them with a verbal character: for there is no difference between the noun, Love, and the verb to love, but what must be comprized in the prefix To. The infinitive therefore, appears plainly to be, what the stoics call it—the very verb itself.—Id. Ib.

The matter, when stripped of the parade of eloquence, and cleared from the perplexity of the abounding verbiage, lies open to this easy answer.

bank, the margin, the border.

Her [Idleness] acquaintance is perillous,
First soft, and after noyous,
She hath thee trashed without wene,
The god of loue had thee not sene,
Ne had Idleness thee conuaid
In the verge where Mirth him pleid.

Chaucer. Rom. of the Rose.

And henceforward the sun of the king's cause declined, verging more and more westward, till at last it set in Cornwall.—Fuller. Worthies. Somersetshire.

So that although the lord of nature did not break the bands of nature in some instances, to manifest his glory to succeeding great and never failing purposes; yet (besides that this shall be no more) it was also instanced in such persons who were holy and innocent, and within the verge and comprehensions of the Eternal mercy.

Bp. Taylor, vol. iii. Ser. 8.

Though they have had their Perigæ's as well as their Apogæ's: I mean their verges towards the body and its joys, as well as their aspires to nobler and sublimer objects, yet they kept the station of their natures, and made their orderly returns.—Digby. Pre-existence of Souls, c. 14.

VERGE. } Also written Virge. It. Verga; VE'RGER. } Fr. Verger, one who bears the verge
(i.e. rod or staff, Lat. Virga,) before a magistrate, (Cotgrave.) Vergers which go before their deanes with little staves tipped, (Minsheu.)

Verge, generally, is,—a staff, or rod: and—Verger,—one that beareth a staff or rod: (a servitor of billes that beareth a staff, Stat.

2 Hen. IV.)

Verge is, hence, also, the bounds or limits, (see the quotation from Blackstone;) and thus (met.) becomes equivalent to Verge, ante, as applied to a bounding line.

P. Fletcher. Purple Island, c. 10.

The cruell ſteele ſo greedily doth bite
In tender fleſh, that ſtreames of blood downe flowe,
With which the armes, that earſt ſo bright did ſhow,
Into a pure vermillion now are dide.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 5.

There is found alſo in ſilver mines a minerall called Minium, i. vermillion, which is a colour at this day of great price and eſtimation, like as it was in old time; for the ancient Romans made exceeding great account of it, not only for pictures, but alſo for divers ſacred and holy uſes.

Holland. Plinie, b. xxxiii. c. 7.

The ſame ſhe tempred with fine mercury,

VERMICULATE, v. } Vermiculus, dim. of Vermes, VERMICULATION. } a worm.

Vermicule,—a ſmall worm, or grub.

To vermiculate, literally, and alſo conſequentially, —tessellated, becauſe variegated and divided by ſmall tessellæ, reſembling worms or grubs.

Vermiculation,—a motion reſembling that of worms; a continuous motion from part to part.

We ſee many vermicules towards the outſide of many of the oak apples, which I gueſs were not what the primitive inſects laid up in the gem, from which the oak-apple had its riſe; but ſome other ſupervenient, additional inſects, laid in after the apple was grown, and whiſt it was tender and ſoft.—Derham. Physico-Theology, b. viii. c. 6.

Surely, like as many ſubſtances in nature which are ſolid, do putrify and corrupt into worms; ſo it is the property of good and ſound knowledge, to putrify and diſſolve into a number of ſubtle, idle, unwholſom, and, as I may term them, vermiculate queſtions, which have indeed a kind of quickneſs, and life of ſpirit, but no ſoundneſs of matter, or goodneſs of quality.—Bacon. On the Advan. of Learning, b. i.

If there be any ſpirit can answer give
Of ſuch as hence depart to ſuch as live;
Speak, doth his body there vermiculate,
Crumble to duſt, and feel the laws of fate?

Elegy upon Dr. Donne.

My heart moves naturally by the motion of palpitatiõ;
my blood by motion of circulation, excretion, perſpiration;
my guts by the motion of vermiculation.

Hale. Orig. of Mankind, p. 31.

At length a generation more refin'd Improv'd the ſimple plan; made three legs four,
Gave them a twiſted form vermicular.—Cowper. Task, b. i.

Fabyan. Chronycle, c. 219.

Theophrastus reporteth, that theſe vermine [rats] having diſpeopled the Island Gyarus and driven away the inhabitants, gnawed & devoured every thing they could meet withall, even to their very yron.

Holland. Plinie, b. viii. c. 57.

[We do injuriouſly] ſearching among the verminous and polluted rags dropt over-worn from the toiling ſhoulders of Time, with theſe deformedly to quilt and interlace the intire, the ſpotleſs, and undecaying robe of Truth.

Milton. Of Prelatical Episcopacy.

So when we perceive that bats have teats, it is not unreaſonable to infer they ſuckle their younglings with milk; but whereas no other flying animal hath theſe parts, we cannot from them expect a viviparous excluſion; but either a generation of eggs, or ſome vermiparous ſeparation.

Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. iii. c. 20.

Theſe operations were extremely neceſſary for correcting the noiſome ſtench on board, and deſtroying the vermin; for from the number of our men, and the heat of the climate, both theſe nuiſances had increaſed upon us to a very loathſome degree.—Anſon. Voyages, b. i. c. 5.

Many tribes among them eat nothing that has life; they are fearful of killing the meanest inſect; and have even erected hoſpitals for the maintenance of all kinds of vermin.

Goldsmith. Animated Nature, pt. ii. c. 11.

VERNACULAR. } Lat. Vernaculus, born
VERNACULOUS. } at home, from verna, a Native, indigenous, peculiar to a country or family.

Vernaculous,—ſcurrilous, insolent, as the language of ſlaves.

From the pupil he became the favourite and the companion of his inſtructor, whoſe regard he appears to have particularly conciliated by his ſkill in the vernacular dialect of the Celtic tongue ſpoken in that iſland.

Fuller. Worthies. General.

A name ſo full of authority, antiquity, and all great mark, is, through their inſolence, become the loweſt ſcorn of the age; and thoſe men ſubject to the petulancy of every vernaculous orator, that were wont to be the care of kings and happieſt monarchs.—B. Jonſon. Dedication to Volpone.

Which in our vernacular idiom may be thus interpreted.

Pope. Of the Hero of the Poem.

Though Brown is an excellent writer, yet it muſt be allowed he is pedantic; and that he preferred polysyllabic expreſſions derived from the language of ancient Rome, to his vernacular vocabulary, even in inſtances where it was equally elegant and ſignificant.

Knox. Winter Evenings, Even. 22.

VERNAGE. A ſweet wine. It. Vernaccia, ſo called becauſe that made in Verona was thought beſt, (Skinner.)

The gadfly dissipates, infester fell
Of grazing herds, when vernal heats prevail.
Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. xxii.

VERNICLE. A cloth or napkin whereon was the figure of Christ's face; undoubtedly (Skinner) from Santa Veronica, whose napkin was believed to be impressed with that figure.

An hundred amples on hys hatte sette,
Sygnes of Sinay and shelles of Calice,
And many a crouch on his cloke and kayes of Rome,
And the vernicle before, for men should knowe
And se by hys signes, whom he sought hadde.
Piers Ploughman, p. 28.

A vernicle hadde he sewed upon his cappe.
Chaucer. Prologue to the Canterbury Tales, v. 688.

VERRY. Fr. Vaire, verry, diversified (varius)

Ferrers his taberd with rich verry spred,
Well known in many a warlike match before.
Dryden. The Barons' Wars, s. 23.

VERSATILE. } Fr. Versatil; Sp. Versatil; VERSATILITY. } Lat. Versatilis.

That can or may be turned; easy to turn or change, changeable, variable; that can or may turn to any point, to any object.

Th' advent'rous pilot in a single year Learn'd his state-cock boat dextrously to steer;
Versatile, and sharp-piercing like a screw,
Made good th' old passage, and still forc'd a new.
Harte. Eulogius.

Muse, make the man thy theme, for shrewdness fam'd
And genius versatile.—Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. i.

Nature seems incapable of such extraordinary combinations as composed his [Julius Cæsar] versatile capacity, which was the wonder even of the Romans themselves.
Byron. Child Harold, c. 4. Note 47.

This versatility and duplicity of the grand monde may, indeed, constitute a man of the world; but let it be remembered, that a book of some authority classes the world, when

VERTICLE. } Vertices circa quos cælum ipsum verti dicitur; around which the heavens are said to turn; and hence—

A vertical point or line; a point in the zenith;
a line perpendicular to the horizon, situate or being in the zenith, or immediately over head.
See VORTEX.

I behold him [Essex] in his high-noon, when he brought victory with him home from Cadiz, and was vertical in the esteem of the souldiery.—Fuller. Worthies. Herefordshire.

For unto them [the tropicks] the sun is vertical twice a year, making two distinct summers in the different points of verticality.—Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. vi. c. 3.

And although it be not vertical unto any part of Asia, but only passeth by Beach, in terra incognita; yet it is so unto America, and vertically passeth over the habitations of Peru and Brasilia.—Id. ib. c. 10.

I hardly believe he hath from elder times unknown the verticity of the load-stone; surely his perspicacity discerned it to respect the north, when ours beheld it indeterminately.
Id. ib. b. i. c. 10.

Now grows our nation to its zenith; fama is no friend to continuance: the verticle is near, when admiration from abroad, and luxury at home, threaten our change.
Waterhouse. Apology for Learning, p. 51.

'Tis raging noon; and vertical, the sun
Darts on the head direct his forceful rays.
Thomson. Summer.

If, having been heated and refrigerated, it have very long lain north and south, it will appear endowed with a stronger and more durable verticity.—Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 313.

Muscles, most artificially disposed for carrying on the compound motion of the lower jaw, half lateral, and half vertical, by which the mill is worked.
Paley. Natural Theology, c. 9.

This is the place also for observing, that the pinions are so set upon the body as to bring down the wings, not verti- cally, but in a direction obliquely tending towards the tail;
which motion, by virtue of the common resolution of forces, does two things at the same time; it supports the body in the air, and carries it forward.—Id. ib. c. 12.

VERTIGINOUS. } Fr. Vertige, vertigieux, VERTIGINOUSNESS. } vertigineux; It. Vertigine, vertiginoso; Sp. Vertiginoso; Lat. Vertigo, a turning, from vertere, to turn.

Turning, dizzy, giddy.

If he will not resist the trifling temptations of a drinking friend to preserve his temperance, how shall he chuse to be banished by the rage of a drunken prince, rather than keep the circle in their giddy and vertiginous method?

Bp. Taylor. Of Repentance, c. 3. § 3.

For, as Plutarch said well to avoid the opinion of an un-civil man, or being clownish, to run into a pain of thy sides or belly, into madness or an head-ach, is the part of a fool and coward, and of one that knows not how to converse with men in any thing but in the famelick smells of meat and vertiginous drinkings.—Id. Ib. vol. i. Ser. 15.

Lust, passion, humour, interest, are things very mutable, as depending upon temper of body, casualties of time, the winds and tides of this vertiginous world.

Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 5.

We would all climb into high places, not considering the precipices on which they stand, nor the vertiginousness of our own braine: but God keeps us safe in the humble valleys, allotting to us employments which we are more capable to manage.—Id. Ib. Ser. 9.

VERVAINE. Fr. Verveine; It. Verbena; Sp.
Verbena; Lat. Verbena, a name, as some think,
given to the green (virides) boughs of all odoriferous plants; others think Herbenæ is the original word, applied to all sorts of herbs used in the decoration of altars. See Vossius.

Tho toke the feldwodde, and verucyne,
Of herbes ben not better tweyne.—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

The night-shade strews to work him ill,
Therewith her vervain and her dill.
That hind'reth witches of their will,
Of purpose to despight him.

Drayton. The Court of Fairy.

And thou light varvin too, thou must go after,
Provoking easie souls to mirth and laughter.

Beaum. & Fletcher. The Faithful Shepherdess, Act ii.

And o'er their linen hoods, and shaded hair,
Long twisted wreaths of sacred vervain wear.

fulness.—Chaucer. Boecius, b. iii.

For wite it well in speciall
That loue of his verai iustice, Aboue all other ayene this vice,
At all times most debateth
With all his herte: and most it hateth.

Gower. Con. A. b. i.

And men mutter amonge them selfe, that y^t boke was not only faultles, but also very wel translated.

Sir T. More. Workes, p. 108.

They fyll vpon hym of an hole assent and kyllled hym, whenne he had reigned, or more verely vsurped, by the serme of. iiii. yeres.—Fabyan. Chronycle, c. 74.

For there are many verities, which yet may be no soche artycles of oure fayth.—Id. Ib. fol. 107.

This emperour was so wyse in all thynges, that among theim that were mery, he was of great mirthe. And in verities he was very veritable.—Golden Boke, c. 14.

Lord in thy anger do not reprehend me,
Nor in thy hot displeasure me correct;
Pity me, Lord, for I am much deject,
And very weak and faint; heal and amend me.

Milton, Ps. 6.

Through verie displeasure of such iniuries as she dailie sustained at the hands of his concubines, shee found means to strangle him secretlye one night as he lay in bed.

Holinshed. Historie of Scotland. Fergus.

And so much verely the Scottish men did by such their continuall rodes and incursions which they made into Angus, that the countrie was left void and desolate of all the inhabitants.—Id. Ib. Alpine.

For vnto hym nothyng may be acceptable, wherin lacketh veryle, called communely truth, he hym selfe beyng all veryle: and al thing conteynynge vntrithe, is to hym contraryous and aduerse.—Brown. Vulgar Err. b. iii. c. 4.

But where the real works of nature, or veritable acts of story are to be described, digressions are aberrations.

Id. Ib. b. v. c. 19.

And if liberty be a power of doing what one liketh best;
then is he, who by his sloth is disabled from doing any thing wherein he can find any reasonable satisfaction, the veriest slave that can be.—Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 19.

This is the more necessary to be done by all those who search after knowledge and philosophical verity, in that children being taught words whilst they have but imperfect notions of things, apply them at random, and without much thinking, and seldom frame determin'd ideas to be signifi'd by them.—Locke. Hum. Underst. b. iii. c. 11.

VE'SICATE, v. } Fr. Vésicatoire, vésicule;
VESICA'TION. } It. Vescica; Lat. Vesica, a VE'SICLE, n. } blister or bladder.

To blister, to raise a blister or bladder.

I saw [the arm] swelled, the cuticula vesicated, and shining with a burning heat of a citron colour.

Wiseman. Surgery, b. i. c. 6.

I applied some vinegar prepared with litharge, defending the vesication with pledgets.—Id. Ib.

Hasten revulsion by venæsection or vesicatories.

Id. Ib. b. v. c. 1.

That the lungs should be made up of such innumerable appears first after) the setting sun, from εσπεσθαι, for επείσθαι, to follow. See YESTER.

And thus whan that the light is faded,
And vesper sheweth hym alofte
And that the night is longe and softe
Under the cloudes derke and stille,
Than hath this thyng most of his wille.

Gower. Con. A. b. iv.

But though his spirit was willing, yet his flesh was weak; and as the apostles in the vespers of Christ's, so he in the eye of his own dissolution was heavy, not to sleep, but heavy unto death, and looked for the last warning, which seized on him in the midst of business.

Bp. Taylor, vol. ii. Ser. 7.

"See, Phlegon, drenched in the hissing main,
Allays his thirst, and cools the flaming ear;
Vesper fair Cynthia ushers, and her train."

P. Fletcher. The Purple Island, c. 5.

This is agreed upon and resolved, that these stars or planets in their evening setting, are nearest to the earth, both in regard of latitude, and also of altitude: and then they be called occidentall vespertine, i. when the sun toward the evening covereth them with his raies.

Holland. Plinie, b. ii. c. 16.

VE'SSEL, v. } Vàso, vascello; Sp. Vaso; Lat.
Vas, vasculum, Vossius derives from the Gr. Πα-ειν, habere, possidere; and adds—that movables and domestic utensils of all sorts were called Vasa;
not merely those which were provided—edendi, bibendique causa.

A concave utensil, formed to hold or contain either liquids or solids: also—a boat or ship; the parts of animal bodies that contain the fluids; a measure of capacity: applied, (met.)—to those who contain or hold, or into whom any gracious gift, any thing has been infused or poured.

Of gold ther is a borde, & tretels ther bi,
Of siluer other vesselle gilte fulle richeli.

R. Brunne, p. 152.

But the fyve foolis tooken her lampis, and tooken not oile

And like a weather-beaten vessel holds
Gladly the port, though shrouds and tackle torn.

Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ii.

Take earth, and vessel it; and in that set the seed.

Bacon.

That all the bones, and all the muscles, and all the vessels of the body should be so admirably contrived, and adapted, and compacted together for their several motions and uses, and that most geometrically, according to the strictest rules of mechanicks.—Ray. On the Creation, pt. ii.

There is no water on this island but at one place on the east side, close by the sea; there it drills slowly down from the rocks, where it may be received into vessels.

Dampier. Voyages, an. 1684.

The disposition of the blood-vessels, as far as regards the supply of the body, is like that of the water-pipes in a city, viz. large and main trunks branching off by smaller pipes (and these again by still narrower tubes) in every direction, and towards every part in which the fluid, which they convey, can be wanted.—Paley. Natural Theology, c. 10.

Drayton. Matilda to K. John.

The terme of time limited and appointed for the vestall virgins or nuns votaries at Rome, was divided into three parts: the first, to learne that which pertained to the religion; the second, to practice; and the third, to teach the younger.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 328.

The institution of the vestal virgins is generally attributed to Numa; though we meet with the sacred fire long before, and even in the time of Aeneas.

Kennett. Antiquities of Rome, pt. ii. b. ii. c. 6.

It is to the piety of Christians that we owe the venerable foundations of schools and colleges, those institutions, which, though they have often been perverted, have still kept the light burning like the vestal fire, and handed the torch from one generation to another like the runners in the torch race.—Knox. Ess. No. 112.

VE/STIBULE. Lat. Vestibulum; It. Vestibulo; Sp. Vestibulo, perhaps comp. of Ve, augm. and stabulum.

A spacious standing, or place for standing at or before the entrance into the house or ædes.

But your lordship knows, that the citizens of Rome placed the images of their ancestors in the vestibules of their houses; so that, whenever they went in or out, these venerable bustoes met their eyes, and recalled the glorious actions of the dead to fire the living, to excite them to imitate and even to emulate their great forefathers.

Bolingbroke. On the Study of History.

But when Aurora, daughter of the dawn,

Bp. Taylor, vol. ii. Ser. 25.

The first is that which Nazianzen calls accusations and vexings of a man when he is in misery; then when he needs most comfort, he shall by his evil conscience be most disquieted.—Id. Rule of Conscience, b. i. c. 1.

In the evening we returned to our boat weary and vext at our ill success.—Dampier. Voyages, an. 1675.

But when the morning broke, and day light came on, we were most strangely and vexatiously disappointed, by finding that the light which had occasioned all this bustle and expectancy, was only a fire on the shore.

Anson. Voyages, b. ii. c. 9.

For I had purpos'd yet with many a storm

To vex Ulysses, ere he reach'd his home,

Though finally to sink whom thou hadst sworn

At last to save, was never my design.

Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. xiii.

In disappointments, where the affections have been strongly placed, and the expectations sanguine, particularly where the agency of others is concerned, sorrow may degenerate into vexation and chagrin.

Cogan. On the Passions, pt. i. c. 2. § 3.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 6.

The mistresses of our vile affections are so ugly, we cannot endure to kiss them but through a veil, either the veil of excuse, or pretence, or darkness; something to hide their ugliness; and yet even these also are so thin that the filthiness and shame are not hid.

Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. i. c. 1.

The monkies that are in these parts are the ugliest I ever saw.—Dampier. Voyages, an. 1676.

Burnet. Life of Sir M. Hale.

The doctrine of a future state of rewards and punishments, was always pushing on its influence: it was their constant viaticum through life; it stimulated them to war, and spirited their songs of triumph; it made them insensible of pain, immovable in danger, and superior to the approach of death.—*Warburton. See the quotation from Belsham.

It appears from experiments of falling bodies, and from experiments of pendulums, which (being of equal lengths and unequal gravities) vibrate in equal times; that all bodies whatsoever, in spaces void of sensible resistance, fall from the same height with equal velocities.

Clarke. On the Attributes, Prop. 3.

Let him then subtract his finger, and he will perceive the quick-silver to descend from the tube into the subjacent vessell till it comes to 29 digits or thereabouts; there, after some vibrations, it ordinarily rests.—Glanvill. Ess. 3.

He ceas'd. But still their trembling ears retain'd
The deep vibrations of his witching song.

Thomson. Castle of Indolence, c. 1.

Heat is only an accident of light, occasioned by the rays putting a fine, subtle, ethereal medium, which pervades all bodies, into a vibrative motion, which gives us that sensation.—Newton.

The eustachian tube [is] like the hole in a drum, to let the air pass freely into and out of the barrel of the ear, as the covering membrane vibrates, or as the temperature may be altered: the whole labyrinth hewn out of a rock; that is, wrought into the substance of the hardest bone in the body.

Paley. Natural Theology, c. 3.

The office of the drum of the ear is to spread out an extended surface, capable of receiving the impressions of sound, and of being put by them into a state of vibration. The office of the stapes is to repeat these vibrations.—Id. Ib.

The theory of vibrations suggested by Sir Isaac Newton, adopted and amplified by Dr. Hartley, and supported by Dr. Priestley, assumes that the nerves are continuations of the medullary substance of the brain, that impressions made upon the organs of sense produce vibrations in the minute particles of the nerves; that these vibrations are propagated to the brain; that a vibration is excited in the particles of the corresponding region of the medullary substance; which vibration excites a sensation in the percipient principle, which remains as long as the vibration lasts, that is, as long as the object continues to affect the organ of sense; which object being removed, the vibration gradually subsides.

Belsham. Philosophy of the Mind, § 4.

The renewed vibration being less vigorous than the original one, (unless when excited by the presence of the object, or in certain morbid cases) is called a miniature vibration, or vibratiuncle.—Id. Ib.

Impressions made upon the principal organs of sensations, are vibratory; the vibratory agitations of light and of air, or any other medium of sound, may reasonably be supposed to excite corresponding vibrations, directly or indirectly, in the minute particles of the optic and auditory nerves.

Id. Ib.

Through, and out of this, passed rays of light of a brighter colour, which vanished, and were renewed nearly in the same time as those of the aurora borealis, but had no degree of the tremulous or vibratory motion which is observed in that phenomenon.—Cook. First Voyage, b. iii. c. 8.

Than kyng Edgar gaue to ye vykers the lande that before belonged to the prebendaryes, trustyng the by, that they wolde do theyr duetyes. But it was nat longe to, or the sayd vicaryes were as necligent as the other.

Fabyan. Chronycle, c. 193.

When Saint Paul sent for Timothy from Ephesus, he sent Tychius to be his vicar. (Do thy diligence to come unto me shortly, for Demas hath forsaken me, &c. and Tychicus have I sent to Ephesus.) Here was an expresse delegation of the power of jurisdiction to Tychicus, who for the time was curate to Saint Timothy.

Bp. Taylor. Episcopacy Asserted, § 50.

Then it was devised, that by their common seal (which is the tongue of their corporation) they might appoint a deputy or vicar to do it for them; which invention gave the wound unto the church, whereof she bleedeth at this day.

Spelman. On Tythes, c. 29.

This whole discourse shews clearly not only the bishops to be superiour in jurisdiction, but that they have sole jurisdiction, and the presbyters only in substitution and vicaridge.—Bp. Taylor. Episcopacy Asserted, § 50.

The Son of God, a little before his ascension, could say, All power is given unto me, both in heaven and in earth: and ever since, rules the church by a vicariate of his spirit, as Tertullian expresses it, according to that order of government which he hath appointed.

Bp. Hall. Revelation Revealed.

Be truth so found, with sacred heed possest,
Not kings have pow'r to tear it from thy breast.
By no blank charters harm they where they hate,
Nor are they vicars, but the hands of Fate.

Pope. Donne Versified, Sat. 3.

The popes indeed in the fourth century began to practice a fine trick, very serviceable to the enlargement of their power; which was to confer on certain bishops, as occasion served, or for continuance, the title of their vicar or lieutenant; thereby pretending to impart authority to them.

Barrow. Of the Pope's Supremacy.

Pope Simplicius to Zeno bishop of Seville, We thought it convenient that you should be held up by the vicarial authority of our See.—Id. Ib.

The death of Christ, by the Scripture account, was properly a vicarious punishment of sin, a true and proper expiatory sacrifice for the sins of mankind; and therefore it ought to be remembered as such, in the memorial we make of it at the Lord's table.—Waterland. Works, vol. vii. p. 72.

But the great proprietors of land soon found the inconvenience of a ministry so precarious and distant, intolerable; and obtained for each a resident pastor, either rectorial or vicarial, either an incumbent or a substitute.

Knox, vol. vi. Ser. 26.

The tithes of many things, as wood in particular, are in some parishes rectorial, and in some vicarial tithes.

Blackstone. Commentaries, b. i. c. 11.

They, who do not love religion, hate it. The rebels to God perfectly abhor the author of their being. They hate him "with all their heart, with all their mind, with all their strength." He never presents himself to their thoughts, but to menace and alarm them. They cannot strike the sun out of heaven, but they are able to raise a smouldering smoke that obscures him from their own eyes. Not being able to revenge themselves on God, they have a delight in vicariously defacing, degrading, torturing and tearing in pieces, his image in man.

That this is the common measure of virtue and vice, will appear to any one who considers, that though that passes for vice in one country, which is counted a virtue, or at least not vice in another; yet every where, virtue and praise, vice and blame go together.

Locke. Hum. Underst. b. ii. c. 28.

He that will allow exquisite and endless happiness to be but the possible consequence of a good life here, and the contrary state the possible reward of a bad one; must own himself to judge very much amiss if he does not conclude, that a virtuous life, with the certain expectation of everlasting bliss, which may come, is to be prefer'd to a vicious one, with the fear of that dreadful state of misery, which 'tis very possible may overtake the guilty; or at best the terrible uncertain hope of annihilation.—*Id. On the other hand, what does a vitious man gain? only such enjoyments, as a virtuous man leaves; and those are such, as most commonly owe their being to a vitiated taste; grow insipid in time; require more trouble and contrivance to obtain them, than they are worth; go off disagreeably, are followed many times by sharp reflexions and bitter penances in the rear, and at best after a short time end in nothing, as if they had never been.—Wollaston. Religion of Nature, s. 9.

Christianity in the spirituality of its precepts has as far exceeded all that they [the professors of Christianity] have writ, as some of their lives have most of ours; though that be not to be imputed to our religion, unless it were justly chargeable upon the vitiosity or defect of its principles or rules.—Pleydell. Sermon at Glanvil's Funeral.

Fabyan. Chronycle, c. 147.

If thou wilt not bee content, but wilt dispute, and inquire causes of God's inscrutable will, then will I stand by, and looke on, and see what victordome thou shalt get.

Barnes. Workes, fol. 278.

And as longe as the royalme of Englande was in vnyte, ye king with his people and they wt hym, the we prospered and reigned victoriously.

Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. c. 49.

Such is ever more the finall victorie of all truth, that they which haue not the hearts to loue her acknowledge, that to hate her they haue no cause.

Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, b. v. § 71.

The manner was to hang this ridiculous puppet under the chariots of noble victors riding in triumph, not only to defend them by a medicinale power against the venome of envious and spightfull tongues, but also to returne all envie upon them, and bid as it were to take it among them.

Holland. Plinie, b. xxviii. c. 4.

"Brave friends, now for your grandsires sakes,
Your country, honours, or what may inspire
Your souls with courage, strain up all your pou'rs
To make this day victoriously ours."

Drayton. The Battle of Agincourt.

But when the victorese arriued there,
Where late she slept the pensive Scudamore
With her owne trusty squire, both full of feare,
Neither of them she found where she them bore.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 12.

Bound with triumphant garlands will I come,
And leade thy daughter to a conquerors bed:
To whom I will retelle my conquest wonne,
And she shal be sole victorese, Cæsars Cæsar.

Shakespeare. Rich. III. Act iv. sc. 4.

To have her captived spirit freed from flesh,
And on her innocence, a garment fresh
And white as that put on; and in her hand
With boughs of palm, a crowned victrice stand.

B. Jonson. Elegy on his Muse.

These his lance reaches, over those he rowls
His rapid car, and crushes out their souls:
In vain the vanquish'd fly; the victor sends
The dead men's weapons at their living friends.

Dryden. Virgil. Æneis, b. xii.

— They command me, that I ask
A pause of battle, till the slain, consum'd
In fun'ral fires, our conflict be renew'd,
Nor cease again, till victory descend
From all-deciding Heav'n on us or you.

VIE, n. } Skinner prefers the Ger. Wagen;
VIE, v. } Dut. Waeghen, periclitari, to put to hazard. He believes that there formerly existed a French verb vier, still preserved in the compound renvier, to reuy, at play. Envier escaped his notice, or it might have led him to infer, that envier was formed upon the noun Vie, Lat. Via, as envoyer is upon voye, the same word as vie, differently written, and meaning, as voyager does,—to go on the way; to put, to send on the way. Cotgrave tells us, that vie-vie (an adverb of encouraging or commanding) signifies—"On, on apace, go on, forward, make haste, march, march quickly; speed it, my hearts." We have similar expressions now in use—Keep on, get on, go it. And hence the verb to vie may denote,—

To urge, to press on (sc. the way), to press forward, to strive to surpass or outstrip; to ply, to strive or contend; to emulate, to rival, to challenge to a contest; to defy.

To vie at cards,—to throw down, or play a card, in challenge to the adversary, for him to play upon, or in return; to revie,—to play in return or acceptance of the challenge. And hence, further, vyng and revyng (qv.)—

Challenging and retorting, criminating and recriminating; defying.

This caue was also as derke
As hell pitte, ouer all about,
They had good leysse for to rout,
To vye who might sleepe best.—Chaucer. Dreame.

A friend that is himselfe solemnly invited must be careful, that he take not with him, for to goe unto another mans house, those that he first meeteth or that come next hand, but such especially as he knoweth to be friends and of familiar acquaintance with the feast-maker, as if he strived a vie to prevent him in bidding of them.

Holland. Plutarch, p. 619.

Then came in Theon also with his vie, adding moreover and saying, that it could not be denied, but that in truth herein there have been great changes and mutations.

Id. Ib. p. 974.

Wel! Slight, here's a trick vied and revied.

VIEWER. } look.
VIEWLESS. } To see, to look; to behold, to observe, to hold or keep before the eye, in sight, in prospect; to keep before the mind; to perceive, to examine, to regard.

Thenglysshmen sawe the well, and knewe well howe they were come thyder to a view them, they let them alone, and made no countenance towarde the, and let them retourne as they came.—Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 129.

And whan they were nombred and viewed, they thought the selfe able to fight with the greatest prince in all the worlde.—Id. Ib. c. 397.

— For what can force or guile

With him, or who deceive his mind; whose eye
Views all things at one view? he from heav'n's highth
All these our motions vain, sees and derides.

Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ii.

You are as fair, as if the morning bare ye,

Imagination never made a sweeter;

Can it be possible this frame should suffer,

And built on slight affections, fright the viewer?

Beaum. & Fletch. Custom of the Country, Act iii. sc. 2.

Tis here, 'tis done, behold you fearfull viewers,
Shake, and behold the model of the world here,
The pride, and strength, look, look again, 'tis finish'd.

Id. The False One, Act ii. sc. 1.

To be imprison'd in the viewlesse windes
And blowne with restlesse violence round about
The pendant world.

Shakespeare. Measure for Measure, Act iii. sc. 1.

— But I hear the tread

Of hateful steps, I must be viewless now.—Milton. Comus.

And this magistrate [at Canton] as he was more intelligent than any other person of his nation that came to our knowledge, so likewise was he more curious and inquisitive, viewing each part of the ship with extraordinary attention, and appearing greatly surprized at the largeness of the lower deck guns, and at the weight and size of the shot.

Anson. Voyage, b. iii. c. 7.

Viewing things on every side, observing how far consequences reach, and proceeding to collect and hear evidence, till reason saith there needs no more, is grievous labour to indolence and impatience, and by no means answers the ends of conceit and affectation.—Secker, vol. i. Ser. 1.

— In her arch'd recess

He slept the night beside her, and, by day,
Reclining on the rocks that lin'd the shore,
And viewing wishfully the barren deep,
Wept, groan'd, desponded, sigh'd, and wept again.

Couper. Homer. Odyssey, b. vi.

— Oh, that I were

The viewless spirit of a lovely sound,
A living voice, a breathing harmony,
A bodiless enjoyment—born and dying
With the blest tone which made me!

Byron. Manfred, Act i. sc. 2.

Sir T. Elyot. The Governour, b. i. c. 13.

This I truste shall suffice, for the expressynge of that incomparable treasure, called amytye: in the declaration thereof I haue aboden the longer, to the intente to perswade the reders, to enserche therfore vigilantly.

Id. Ib. b. ii. c. 14.

The brethren in Egypt (saith Saint Augustine, Epis. 121) are reported to haue many prayers, but euerie of them verie short, as if they were darts throwne out with a kind of suddaine quicknesse, lest that vigilant and erect attention of mind, which in prayer is verie necessarie, should bee wasted or dulled through continuance, if their prayers were few and long.—Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, b. v. § 33.

12 A

In regard of which enormities it behoveth parents to repress and bridle their wild and untamed affections with great care and vigilance.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 12.

— They towards the throne supream Accountable made haste to make appear
With righteous plea, thir utmost vigilance,
And easily approv'd.—Milton. Paradise Lost, b. x.

If these shepherds had been snoring in their beds, they had no more seen angels, nor heard news of their Saviour, than their neighbours: their vigilancy is honoured with this heavenly vision.—Bp. Hall. Cont. The Birth of Christ.

Because, be it never so true which we teach the world to believe, yet if once their affections begin to be alienated, a small thing persuadeth them to change their opinions, it behoveth, that we vigilantly note and prevent by all means those evils, whereby the hearts of men are lost.

Id. Ib. Epist. Ded.

Visits to ev'ry church we daily paid
And march'd in ev'ry holy masquerade;
The stations duly, and the vigils kept;
Not much we fasted, but scarce ever slept.

Pope. The Wife of Bath.

The queen much esteemed this her treasurer, who managed her exchequer with great care and vigilancy; of which she was very sensible.

Strype. Eccles. Mem. 1 Mary, an. 1554.

— Keep thou, meantime,
All here with vigilance, but chiefly watch
For thy own good, and save thyself from harm;
For num'rous here brood mischief.

Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. xvii.

While we watch vigilantly over every political measure, and communicate an alarm through the empire with a speed almost equal to the shock of electricity, there will be no danger that a king should establish despotism, even though he were to invade the rights of his people at the head of a standing army.—Knox. Ess. No. 122.

VIGNE/TTE. Fr. Vignette, a little vine.
Applied to—a vine branch, or branchlike border, or a flourish with the branches of vines.

This lady, with the dagger at her breast, and a ridiculous expression of agony in her face, formed a vignette to most of his books; the same figure was also stamped on the covers of them.

Sir T. More. Workes, p. 1267.

But the Sarazeyns beyng ware of theyr cōmyng, issued out of the cytie, and defended ye porte vigorously.

Fabyan. Chron. Louis X. an. 22.

The foresayd mantellets were appointed to beat S. Nicholas tower, and by the space of ten or twelue dayes they shot sore against it; but they had so sharpe and vigorous answers, that there was not one mantellet that abode whole an houre.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. p. 81.

— Unto his limmes (though tir'd,) His mother's touch a vigour fresh inspir'd.

May. Lucan. Pharsalia, b. iv.

— Now we find this our empyreal form Incapable of mortal injurie Inperishable, and though peirc'd with wound Soon closing, and by native vigour heal'd.

Milton. Paradise Lost, b. vi.

So vertue giv'n for lost,
Deprest, and overthrow'n, as seem'd, Revives, reflowerishes, then vigorous most
When most unactive deem'd,
And though her body die, her fame survives,
A secular bird ages of lives.—Id. Samson Agonistes.

[The power of God] in the strength of which, and by whose aid, as we do not doubt of the performance of the promise, so we vigorously pursue all the parts of the condition, and are enabled to work all the work of God.

Bp. Taylor, vol. ii. Ser. 1.

If the elephant knew his strength, or the horse the vigorousness of his own spirit, they would be as rebellious against their rulers as unreasonable men against government.—Id. Ib. Ser. 19.

The heart of the former was the largest, the latter the least, he had ever beheld; inferring hence, that contracted spirits act with the greatest vigorousness.

Fuller. Worthies. Norfolk.

The lab'ring bee, when his sharp sting is gone,
Forget's his golden work, and turns a drone:
Such is a satyr, when you take away
That rage, in which his noble vigour lay.

Dryden. Prol. to Amphitryon.

And the vigorous vegetation which constantly takes place there, furnishes such a prodigious quantity of vapour, that all the night and great part of the morning a thick fog covers the whole country, and continues till either the sun gathers strength to dissipate it, or it is dispersed by a brisk sea breeze.—Anson. Voyages, b. i. c. 5.

The states of Austria have furnished Marshal Heister with a considerable sum of money, to enable him to push on the war vigorously in Hungary, where all things as yet are in perfect tranquillity.—Tatler, No. 7.

New confidence and new hope, however founded, inspired new vigour; and though our state was the same as when the men first began to slacken in their labour, through weariness and despondency, they now renewed their efforts with alacrity and spirit.—Cook. First Voyage, b. iii. c. 3.

A grain of mustard-seed has been known to lie in the earth for a hundred years; and as soon as it had acquired a favourable situation, to shoot as vigorously as if just gathered from the plant.—Paley. Natural Theology, c. 20.

The day-labourer in a country village has commonly but a small pittance of knowledge, because his ideas and notions have been confined to the narrow bounds of a poor conversation and employment.

Locke. Conduct of the Understanding, § 3.

And if there are conveniences of life which common use reaches not, it is not reason to reject them because they are not grown into the ordinary fashion of the country, and every villager doth not know them.—Ib. § 24.

A certain pragmatist fellow, in a certain village, took it into his head to write the names of the 'squire, of all his family, of the principal officers, and of some of the notable members of the vestry, in the margin of the Whole Duty of Man, over against every sin which he found mentioned in that most excellent treatise.

Bolingbroke. On Parties, Let. 19.

These were thy charms, sweet village! sports like these, With sweet succession, taught e'en toil to please; These round thy bow'rs their cheerful influence shed, These were thy charms—but all these charms are fled.

Goldsmith. The Deserted Village.

VILLAIN, n. } Fr. Villain, vilein, vilence;

 as, if not more, commonly written with two. (See in Du Cange.) And Spelman affirms that Villani were so called, because they belonged ad Villam domini, that is, to the manor or town of their lord.—Of Antient Deeds, c. 10. The gradations from the inhabitants of villis or villages to any base fellow or rascal are well stated in Cotgrave (in his coarse manner.) See in v. VILAIN.

A servant in the country; a servant, one employed in servile offices,—in base or degrading offices,—in vile or wicked actions; a wicked fellow, a rogue, a rascal, a scoundrel.

Ac for he hab now the maistry, such pruyd hym hab y nome,

R. Brunne, p. 224.

He never yet no vilanie ne sayde In alle his lif, unto no manere wight.

Chaucer. Prol. to the Canterbury Tales, v. 71.

But firste I prae you of your curtesie, That ye ne arette it not my vilanie, Though that I plainly speke in this matere, To tellen you hir wordes and hir chere; Ne though I speke hir wordes proprely.—Id. Ib. v. 728.

Alas! well oughten they than have disdeigne to be servants and thralls to sinne, and sore to be ashamed of himself, that God of his endless goodness hath sette in high estat, or yeve him witte, strength of body, hele, beautee, or prosperitee, and brought hem fro the deth with his herte blood, that they so unkindly against his gentillesse, quiten him so vilainly, to slaughter of her owen soules.

Id. The Persones Tale.

Reason saith, that I shulde leue To loue, where there is no leue To spede: and will saith there ageine, That suche an herte is to vileine, Whiche dare not loue, till that he spede, Let Hope serue at suche a nede.—Gower. Con. A. b. iii.

And whan he had hem so forleyn, As he, whiche was all vileyn, He did hem oute of londe exile.

Id. Ib. b. viii.

But suche a grace God hir sent, That for the sorowe, whiche she made, Was none of hem, which power hade To done hir any vilanie.

Id. Ib. b. vii.

Manumission of all kinde of villaines or bondmen in England, is vsed and done after diuers sortes, and by other, and more light and easie meanes than is prescribed in the ciuill law.—Smith. Commonwealth, b. iii. c. 10.

And when they haue once vilayned the sacrament of matrimonye, then woulde they make vs violate the sacrament of the gaulter too.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 344.

The Burgoyns & men of the towne of Verdeley rebelled agayne the hed churche, or abbey of yt towne, & inteded to haue done some vilany to ye abbot & mukys of the same.

Fabyan. Chronycle, c. 235.

To piteouse and to abhominable were it, to rehearse the vilanouse paine and tormentes yt thei deuised on the sely womē.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 258.

And whan the other cōmons sawe that, they began to sterre, and sayde to the burgesses many euyll and vylanous wordes.—Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 66.

Than the regent drewe vnto hym the nobles of Cham-payne and of Prouynce, and began to manace ye prouost and other of Paris that had before put hym to dishonoure, and slayne so vylaynously his trewe counceylours.

Fabyan. Chronycle. John of France, an. 8.

But thus the poor sinner shall not be affrighted from his danger, nor chastised by severe language, but the villain that eats his meat shall take him by the hand, and dance about the pit till he falls in, and dies with shame and folly.

Bp. Taylor, vol. i. Ser. 24.

No wretchednesse is like to sinfull villanage.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 11.

We hate villanage no lesse than you hate peace, and hold [in capite] of him that is the head of his body, the church.

Bp. Hall. Apologie against Brownists, s. 51.

Did never yet no damned libertine, Nor elder heathen, nor new Florentine, Tho they were famous for lewd libertie, Venture upon so shamefull villanie.—Id. b. i. Sat. 9.

I remember at a trial in Kent where Sir George Rooke was indicted for calling a gentleman knave and villain, the lawyer, for the defendant, brought off his client by alledging, that the words were not injurious; for knave, in the old and true signification, imported only a servant; and villain in Latin, is villicus, which is no more than a man employed in country labour, or rather a bailly.

Swift. Letter to Lord Middleton.

A certain author writes to this purpose, if a souldier, who had taken the oath to Caesar, should run over to the enemy, and serve him against Caesar, and after that be taken; would he not be punished as a deserter, and a perjured villain?

Wollaston. Religion of Nature, s. 1.

Were virtue by descent, a noble name Cou'd never villanize his father's fame; But as the first the last of all the line, Wou'd like the sun ev'n in descending shine.

Dryden. The Wife of Bath's Tale.

Nobility of blood is but renown Of thy great fathers by their virtue known, And a long trail of light, to thee descending down. If in thy smoke it ends: Their glories shine; But infamy and villanage are thine.—Id. Ib.

On the other side, if vitious and wicked men do prosper and make a figure; yet it is possible their sufferings hereafter may be such, as that the excess of them above their past enjoyments may be equal to the just mulet of their villanies and wickedness.—Wollaston. Rel. of Nat. s. 5.

Love of that which is amiable, compassion towards the miserable and helpless, a natural abhorrence and resentment of that which is villainous or vitious or base, fear of evils, are things, which duly tempered have laudable effects; and without them mankind could not well subsist.—Id. Ib. s. 9.

It has been observed that those writings, which villanize mankind, have a pernicious tendency towards propagating, and protecting villany; and help the most of all to teach and encourage it.—Law. Theory of Religion, pt. iii.

This they call villanage, and the tenants villeins, either from the word vilis, or else, as sir Edward Coke tells us, a villa; because they lived chiefly in villages, and were employed in rustic works of the same sordid kind; resembling the Spartan helotes, to whom alone the culture of the lands was consigned.—Blackstone. Commentaries, b. ii. c. 6.

VILLOUS. Lat. Villosus, hairy, shaggy, rough as hair.

The liquor of the stomach, which with fasting grows extremely sharp, and the quick sensation of the inward villous coat of the stomach, seem to be the cause of the sense of hunger.—Arbuthnot. Of Aliments, c. 1.

VIMINEOUS. Fr. Viminal; It. Vimine; Lat. Vimen, a twig, from viere, to bend, to bind. Formed of twigs.

— In a hive's vimineous dome Ten thousand bees enjoy their home, Each does her studious actions vary, To go and come, to fetch and carry.—Prior. Alma, c. 3.

VINCIBLE. It. Vincibile, vincibile; Lat. Vincibilis. See VICTOR, and INVINCIBLE.

That may be overpowered or overcome; that may be conquered.

All sorts of ignorance use to lessen a fault amongst men, but before God some sorts of ignorance do aggravate; such as is, the voluntary and malicious, which is the worst sort of vincible.—Bp. Taylor. Of Repentance, c. 3. § 3.

The man cannot by humane judgement be concluded a hereticke, unless his opinion be an open recession from plain demonstrative Divine authority (which must needs be notorious, voluntary, vincible and criminal) or that there be a palpable serving of an end accidentall and extrinsecall to the opinion.—Bp. Taylor. Liberty of Prophesying, § 12.

The regulated degree of contractile force with which they are endowed, sufficient for retention, yet vincible when requisite, together with their ordinary state of actual contraction, by means of which their dependence upon the will is not constant, but occasional, gives to them a constitution, of which the conveniency is inestimable.

Paley. Natural Theology, c. 9.

At length he commanded an inquiry to be made by physicians, whether such a blindness and debility were vincible by human aid.—Id. Evidences of Christianity, Prop. 2.

VINDE/MIATE, v. Sp. Vindemia; Lat. Vindemia, vini demia, or vitis demia, a demendo vino, from taking the fruit of the vine. Vindemiate is a Latinism peculiar to Evelyn.

Now vindemiate and take your bees towards the expiration of this moneth; unless you see cause (by reason of the weather and season) to defer it till mid-September.

Evelyn. Kalendarium. August.

 VINDICATOR. } Sp. Vindicar, vindicativo; VINDICATORY. } Lat. Vindicare, vim dicere,
 VINDICTIVE. } to denounce violence.
 VINDICTIVELY. } To avenge, to punish VINDICTIVENESS. } or inflict punishment (in retribution or retaliation for wrongs committed), to redress wrongs; to redeem or deliver from wrong; and, consequentially, to assert innocence, to justify; to assert a claim to; to maintain, to sustain, to support.

Vindictive, or vindictive,—that can or may avenge; vengeful, revengeful; that will revenge.

Behold the kings of the earth how they oppress Thy chosen, to what highth thir pow'r unjust They have exalted, and behind them cast All fear of thee, arise and vindicate Thy glory, free thy people from thir yoke.

Milton. Paradise Regained, b. ii.

— For God, Nothing more certain, will not long defer To vindicate the glory of his name Against all competition, nor will long Endure it, doubtfull whether God be Lord, Or Dagon.

Id. Samson Agonistes.

Yea, and we shall by daily experience see in the world, that if one proud man injure or oppress a humble man, it is a thousand to one, another undertakes his patronage, defence, and vindication, and very oftentimes is a means of his protection and deliverance.—Hale. Cont. Of Humility.

It is true that warre is a thing that should not, but must be; neither is it other than an unavoidable act of vindicative justice; an usefull enemy, an harsh friend.

Id. The Defeat of Crueltie.

Nerva and Antoninus Pius impress'd upon their money a thunderbolt upon a pillow: to signifie that vindicative justice ought to sleep sometimes.

Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. iii. c. 3.

For in all penal laws and inflictions, although there be much vindictive justice, yet this justice is but a handmaid to government and correction.—Id. Ib. b. ii. c. 2.

If they be only actions punitive and vindictive, they do indeed punish the man, and help so far as they can to destroy the sin; but of these alone, S. Paul said well, Bodily exercise profiteth but little; and of the latter sort he added, but Godliness is profitable in all things, having the promise of the life that now is, and that which is to come: and this indeed is our exactest measure.

Id. Of Repentance, c. 10. § 9.

Under injuries [we are obnoxious to, we are subject] to vindictiveness and immoderate anger.

Hale. Cont. Paraphrase upon the Lord's Prayer.

Forgiveness of injuries to a person that seeks it: the contrary whereof are a rigorous exaction of our own rights to the extremity, taking the utmost advantage of the severity of laws, or implacableness, vindictiveness, fierceness.—Id. Ib.

But how that vindicates the making use of identical propositions for the improvement of knowledg, from the imputation of trifling, I do not see.

Locke. Hum. Underst. b. iv. c. 8.

But here I have no reason to be sorry that your lordship has given me this occasion for the vindication of this passage of my book; if there should be any one besides your lordship, who should so far mistake it, as to think it in the least invalidates the argument for a God, from the universal consent of mankind.—Id. Third Letter to Bp. of Worcester.

If I had, upon this occasion, been forward to assure to myself the honour of an original, I think I had been pretty safe in it; since I should have had your lordship for my guarantee and vindicator in that point, who are pleased to call it new; and, as such, to write against it.

Locke. Second Letter to Bp. of Worcester.

The afflictions of Job were no vindictory punishments to take vengeance of his sins, but probatory chastisements to make trial of his graces.—Bramhall. Answer to Hobbes.

Eucrate argued, that nothing but the most severe and vindictive punishment, such as placing the bodies of the offenders in chains, and putting them to death by the most exquisite torments, would be sufficient to extirpate a crime [duels] which had so long prevailed, and was so firmly fixed in the opinion of the world as great and laudable.

Spectator, No. 97.

Revengefully [is] with vengeance, vindictively.

Johnson, in v. Revengefully.

We are, for example, disposed to be angry at whatever occasions sorrow, and there is a vindictiveness in fear, which may render it dangerous to its most innocent cause.

Cogan. On the Passions, pt. ii. c. 1.

VINE. See WINE. Fr. Vigne; It. Vigna, vite; Lat. Vinea, a place planted with vines, (vites.) Vitis is from viere, to bend, and so called from the slenderness and flexibility of the branches. VINTAGER. Viere (Vossius thinks) is from the Gr. Βι-ειν, Æolic for Μι-ειν, ligare, to bind. VINTNER. Vinoly,—fond of wine, addicted to drink wine. VINEYARD. Vintage,—the season for gathering the produce of the vine; the produce itself.

Vinegar,—Fr. Vin aigre,—sour wine; sourness, acidity, crabbedness.

So fashioned a porch with rare deuse,
Archt over head with an embracing vine,
Whose bunches hanging downe, seem'd to entice
All passers by, to taste their luscious wine,
And did themselves into their hands incline,
As freely offering to be gathered.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 12.

These vines again grow sometime no taller than the ordinarie height of a man of middle stature, and being supported and underpropped with stakes and forkes, cleave and cling thicke together, and in this order fill whole vineyards.

Holland. Plinie, b. xiv. c. 1.

The grape-gatherer in time of vintage, putteth in a clause in the covenants of his bargain when hee is hired, that in case his foot should faile him, and he breake his necke, his maister who sets him aworke should give order for his funerall fire and tombe at his owne proper cost and charges.

From thence he furrow'd many a churlish sea,
The vinie Rhene, and Volgha's self did pass.

P. Fletcher. Pisc. Ec. Ec. 2.

To dress thy vines new labour is requir'd,
Nor must the painful husbandman be tir'd:
For thrice, at least, in compass of the year,
Thy vineyard must employ the sturdy steer,
To turn the glebe; besides thy daily pain
To break the clods, and make the surface plain:
T' unload the branches or the leaves to thin,
That suck the vital moisture of the vine.

Dryden. Virgil. Georgics, b. ii.

Your microscopes bring to sight shoals of living creatures in a spoonful of vinegar; but we who can distinguish them in their different magnitudes, see among them several huge Leviathans that terrify the little fry of animals about them, and take their pastime as in an ocean or the great deep.

Tatler, No. 119.

Lest the water which we had taken in at Prince's Island should have had any share in our sickness, we purified it with lime, and we washed all parts of the ship between decks with vinegar, as a remedy against infection.

Cook. First Voyage, b. iii. c. 13.

There too, well rooted, and of fruit profuse,
His vineyard grows; part, wide-extended, basks
In the sun's beams; the arid level glows;
In part they gather, and in part they tread
The wine-press, while, before the eye, the grapes
Here put their blossom forth, there gather fast
Their blackness.

Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. vii.

Had it [water] been vinous, or oleaginous, or acid; had the sea been filled, or the rivers flowed, with wine or milk; fish, constituted as they are, must have died; plants, constituted as they are, would have withered; the lives of animals which feed upon plants must have perished.

Paley. Natural Theology, c. 21.

The viners, or vintonnors, were incorporated in the reign of Edward III. They were originally divided into vinetarii et tabernarii, viners who imported the wine, and taverners who kept taverns, and retailed it for the former.

Beaum. & Fletch. Maid in the Mill, Act iii. sc. 1.

Since he, who begins to violate the happiness of another, does what is wrong, he who endeavours to obviate or put a stop to that violence, does in that respect what is right, by the terms.—Wollaston. Religion of Nature, s. 6.

When any thing may be either done, or not done, equally without the violation of truth, that thing is indifferent.

Id. Ib. s. 1.

When it comes to be these men's own case, to be oppressed by violence, or over-reached by fraud; where then are all their pleas against the eternal distinction of right and wrong? How, on the contrary, do they then cry out for equity, and exclaim against injustice! How do they then challenge and object against providence, and think neither God nor man severe enough, in punishing the violators of right and truth!—Clarke. On the Evidences, Prop. 1.

I was at Jamaica when there happened a violent south wind. It made great havock in the woods; and blew down many great trees.—Dampier. Discourse of Winds, c. 6.

For tho' the surface of the sea is raised in waves and driven violently with the winds to the southward, yet the current underneath runs still to the northward.

Id. Ib. c. 8.

But though from violence, yet not from words
Abstain'd Achilles, but with bitter taunt Opprobrious, his antagonist reproach'd.

Spenser. Shepherd's Calender. April.

I ask'd a nodding violet 'Why
'It sadly hung the head?'
It told me, 'Cynthia late past by,
'Too soon from it that fled.'

Drayton. The Quest of Cynthia.

The lakes and rivers which receive the sun beams, by that means seem in their superficies to be some time reddish, and otherwhiles of a violet colour.

Holland. Plutarch, p. 957.

Four fountains of serenest lymph
Their sinuous course pursuing side by side,
Stray'd all around, and ev'ry where appear'd
Meadows of softest verdure, purpled o'er
With violets, it was a scene to fill
A God from heav'n with wonder and delight.

Venemous; stinging, biting—venemously, maliciously.

First of all therefore we have the adder (in our old Saxon toong called an atter) which some men dooe not rashly take to be the viper.

Holinshed. Description of England, b. iii. c. 6.

Yt wer too longe, yea it is doubt, whether one man might comprehend, to write all that maye be truly verified of their wicked lyves, and viperouse behaviour toward the said bishope.—Strype. Eccles. Mem. Originals. Q. Mary, No. 46

He [I say] in that copious treatise hauing spoken as maliciouslie & viperouslie as he might of Wicliffes life, which he concludeth to be lewd.—Holinshed. Rich. II. an. 1377.

Out, viper! thou that eat'st thy parents, hence!
Rather such speckled creatures, as thyself,
Should be eschew'd, and shunn'd.

B. Jonson. The Poetaster, Act v. sc. 1.

Special care therefore must be taken to find out this lurking viper [pride] in our bosoms, and to cast it far from us.

Waterland, vol. ix. Ser. 1.

Let us now see into how many cursed consequences, this viperous piece of villany is like to spread itself; and that, whether we consider the accusation as true or as false; as relating to the person accused, or to him before whom he is accused.—South, vol. x. Ser. 9.

The viper, that is but a slow, feeble-bodied animal, makes way, in a heavy, undulating manner; advancing his head, then drawing up its tail behind, and bending the body into a bow; then from the spot where the head and tail were united, advancing the head forward as before.

Goldsmith. Animated Nature, b. iii. c. 1.

Vives. Instruction of a Christian Woman, b. i. c. 6.

Virginitie was euer an holy thing, euen amongst theenes, breakers of sanctuary, vngracious liuers, murderers, and also among wild beastes.—Id. Ib.

Of euery sort, which in that meadow grew,
They gathered some; the violet pallid blew,
The little dazie, that at euening closes,
The virgin lillie, and the primrose trew.

Spenser. Prothalamion.

Then toldst her doubting how these things could be
To her a virgin, that on her should come
The Holy Ghost, and the power of the highest O're-shadow her.—Milton. Paradise Regained, b. i.

Some say no evil thing that walks by night,
In fog, or fire, by lake, or moorish fen,
Blue meagre hag, or stubborn unlaide ghost,
That breaks his magic chains at curfeu time,
No goblin, or swart faery of the mine,
Hath hurtful pow'r o'er true virginity.—Id. Comus.

Where, gentle court and gracious delight
She to them made, with mildnesse virginall,
Shewing her selfe both wise and liberall.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 9.

With this faire flowre your goodly girlonds dight,
Of chastitie and vertue virginall,
That shall embellish more your beauty bright,
And crowne your heads with heavenly coronall.

Id. Ib. b. iii. c. 5.

So as I suppose, that if a virginall was made with a double concave; the one all the length as the virginall hath; the other at the end of the strings, as the harp hath, it must needs make the sound perfecter, and not so shallow, and jarring.—Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 223.

— O a kisse
Long as my exile, sweet as my reuenge!
Now by the iealous queene of heauen, that kisse
I carried from thee deare; and my true lippe Hath virgin'd it here since.
Shakespeare. Coriolanus, Act v. sc. 3.

Tam'd by superiour force he turn'd his eyes
Aghast at first, and stupid with surprize:
But by her sparkling eyes, and ardent look,
The virgin-warrior known, he thus bespoke.
Dryden. Homer. Iliad, b. i.

Fair was her face, and spotless was her mind,
Where filial love with virgin sweetness join'd:
Happy! and happy still she might have prov'd
Were she less beautiful or less belov'd.
Pope. Statius. Thebaid, b. i.

Virginals (for instance) though furnished with wire-strings, will, for the most part of them (for some he has observed to be so well seasoned that they are not altered by the weather) be out of tune in wet weather.

But let us view philosophy, like mere virtuoso-ship, in its usual career, and we shall find the ridicule rising full as strongly against the professors of the higher as the lower kind. Cockle-shell abounds with each.—Id. Ib.

The exemplary desire of regulating our thoughts and pursuits by right principles, constitutes virtue; and all the duties which are performed with warmth and feeling are deemed the result of virtuous affections: the opposite propensities and conduct constitute vice, whose characteristic consists in depraved affections, and ungoverned passions.
Cogan. On the Passions, pt. i. c. 2.

But the divisions of virtue, to which we are in modern times most accustomed, is into duties.

Towards God; as piety, reverence, resignation, gratitude, &c.

Towards other men (or relative duties); as justice, charity, fidelity, loyalty, &c.

Towards ourselves; as chastity, sobriety, temperance, preservation of life, care of health, &c.
Paley. Moral Philosophy, c. 7.

Virtue is the tendency of an action, affection, habit, or character, to the ultimate happiness of the agent.
Belsham. Moral Philosophy, § 1.

But America is virtually represented. What! does the electric force of virtual representation more easily pass over the Atlantick, than pervade Wales, which lies in your neighbourhood; or than Chester and Durham, surrounded by abundance of representation, that is actual and palpable? But, sir, your ancestors thought this sort of virtual representation, however ample, to be totally insufficient for the freedom of the inhabitants of territories that are so near, and comparatively so inconsiderable.
Burke. Speech on Conciliation with America.

If the Jews had prevailed, they would have imagined their success a full proof, that the Messiah was yet virtually, though not yet corporally, amongst them; and proceeded to extend his dominion as wide as they could.

[Religion consists] not in harsh censuring and virulently inveighing against others, but in a careful amending our own ways.—Barrow, vol. ii. Ser. 17.

Our water too began to grow scarce; so that a general dejection prevailed amongst us, which added much to the virulence of the disease, and destroyed numbers of our best men.—Anson. Voyages, b. i. c. 10.

There be fair ways of disputing our cause, without contumelious reflections upon persons; and the errors of men may be sufficiently refuted without satirical virulency.

Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 29.

Now that all other animal and vegetable poisons may be corrected, without losing their force with their virulency, is the affirmation of Helmont.—Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 122.

The virulence of party hesitates not to represent royalty itself in situations, which must render it contemptible in the eyes of kennel-rakers, shoe-blackers, chimney-sweepers, and beggars.—Knox. Winter Evenings, Even. 27.

Milton. Paradise Lost, b. v.

It is not sufficient to carry religion in our hearts, as fire is carried in flint-stones, but we are outwardly, visibly, apparently to serve and honour the living God.

Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, b. vii. § 22.

You may as well measure eternity with a span, and grasp an infinite in the palm of your hand, as draw the circles and depict him that hath no colour or figure, no parts nor body, no accidents or visibility.

Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. ii. c. 2.

[Hope] the first of [these virtues] beginning with a weak apprehension of things not seene, endeth with the intuitive vision of God in the world to come.

Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, b. i. § 11.

Our visive beams are (at our best) so weak, that they are not able to look upon a sight so spiritually glorious.

Bp. Hall. The Rem. of Prophanenesse, b. i. § 5.

Yea, I doubt not to say, God hath never been so cleerly seen as in the darkest dungeons; for the outward light of prosperity distracts our visive beams, which are strongly contracted in a deep obscurity.

Id. The Balm of Gilead, § 3.

It fareth with us in this case, as with those who would see a thing very far distant; for of necessity the visual beames of his sight do fall before they can reach thereto.

Holland. Plutarch, p. 1107.

Nor can any conversant in letters be ignorant what error is oftimes fallen into, by trusting authorities at second hand, and rash collecting (as it were) from visual beams refracted through another's eye.

Drayton. Poly-Oibion. To the Reader.

Suppose a chain hung down out of the heavens from an unknown height, and the every link of it gravitated toward the earth, and what it hung upon was not visible, yet it did not descend, but kept its situation; and upon this a question should arise, What supported or kept up this chain?

would it be a sufficient answer to say, that the first (or lower) link hung upon the second (or that next above it), the second or rather the first and second together upon the third, and so on ad infinitum? For what holds up the whole?—Wollaston. Religion of Nature, § 5. p. 67.

God has by an inseparable connexion, joind vertue and publick happiness together, and made the practice thereof necessary to the preservation of society, and visibly beneficial to all with whom the vertuous man has to do.

Locke. On Hum. Underst. b. i. c. 3.

Upon the foot of this construction, it is supposed, that Isaiah in prophetic dream or vision heard God speaking to him, (like as St. Peter heard a voice, and saw a vision, while he lay in a trance,) and that in idea he transacted all that God so ordered him to do.

Waterland. Works, vol. vi. p. 228.

And therefore the visional interpretation appears to be preferable to the other, if it be not itself clogged with other difficulties as great as those.—Id. Ib.

Char. Speak without fear, what did the vision shew?

Placid. A curtain drawn, presented to our view
A town besieged, and on the neighbouring plain Lay heaps of visionary soldiers slain.

Dryden. Tyrannick Love, Act i. sc. 1.

Here frequent, at the visionary hour,

Angelic harps are in full concert heard;
And voices chanting from the wood-crown'd hill,
The deepening dale, or inmost sylvan glade.

Thomson. Summer.

As for example, what would an eye (or the visive power) signifie, if there were not light prepared to render things visible thereto.—Barrow, vol. ii. Ser. 6.

The reader will have patience to enter but a little into the mathematical consideration of visible figure, which we shall call the geometry of visibles.

Reid. On the Mind, c. 6. § 8.

In his theory of vision, he [Berkley] seems indeed to allow that there is an external material world: but he believed that this external world is tangible only, and not visible; and that the visible world, the proper object of sight, is not external, but in the mind.—Id. Ib. § 11.

I know not whether the French did not derive their ideas of teaching things, instead of words, from some celebrated writers of our own country, who, with all their good sense and genius, were visionaries on the subject of education.

Knox. Remarks on Grammar Schools.

Among many remarkable particulars that attended his first perceptions and judgments on visual objects, Cheseelden tells us, that the first time the boy saw a black object, it gave him great uneasiness; and that some time after, upon accidentally seeing a negro woman, he was struck with great horror at the sight.

Spenser. Mother Hubbard's Tale.

After they had discharged bishops, they agreed to haue superintendents, commissioners, and visitors.

Holinshed. Historie of Scotland, an. 1583.

The institution of Chorepiscopi proves most evidently that the primitive bishops were diocesan, not parochial; for they were instituted to assist the bishop in part of his country-charge, and were visitors (as the council of Laodicea calls them).—Bp. Taylor. Episcopacy Asserted, § 43.

— Come you spirits,

Th' effect, and hit.—Shakespeare. Macbeth, Act i. sc. 5.

It [humming bird] is very quick in motion, and haunts about flowers and fruit, like a bee gathering hony, making many near addresses to its delightful objects, by visiting them on all sides, and yet still keeps in motion sometimes on one side, sometime on the other.

Dampier. Voyages, an. 1676.

But to return to the eunuch Mandarins, tho' they are bitter enemies to those whom they take aversion against, yet on the other hand, they are as kind to their favourites, and as complacent to their visitants, whether foreigners or others, feasting them often.—Id. Ib. an. 1688.

All hospitals built since the reformation, are visitabile by the king or lord chancellor.—Ayliffe. Parergon.

Some will have it, that an archdeacon does of common right execute this visitation power in his archdeaconry: but others say that an archdeacon has a visitation power only of common right per modum simplicis scrutinii, as being bishop's vicar.—Id. Ib.

He likewise played over some private notes, distinguishing the familiar friend or relation from the most modish visitor.

Tatler, No. 105.

For as inattention and neglect are expressed by shutting the eyes, or turning them from any one; so attention and regard, whether in order to punish, or to shew favour, are denoted by opening the eyes, and turning them towards him: which, in our translation, is often called visiting; a word originally of the same import with frequently looking upon, and contemplating.—Secker, vol. ii. That can or may live; pertaining to life; containing, aiding or assisting, needful, necessary to, life; lively, giving or bestowing life.

Yet it is to be considered, that continuall studye, without somme maner of exercise, shortly exhausteth the spirytes vytall, and hyndereth naturall decoction and dygestion.

Sir T. Elyot. The Governour, b. i. c. 16.

But all so soone as his enfeebled spright

As overcome with too exceeding might,
The life did flit away out of her nest,
And all his senses were with deadly fit opprest.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 7.

We like well enough of walking gently, and devising one with another upon the way, and maintaining pleasant discourses, wakening and reviving our vitall spirits, and blowing as it were the coales to kindle our natural heat.

Holland. Plutarch, p. 326.

As for the soul it is invisible, yea and imperceptible to all the natural senses, according as he [Plato] hath written in his book of laws: and therefore every one of us is corruptible; but the world shall never perish; for that in each of us that which is mortal and subject to dissolution, containeth within it the power which is vital.—Id. Ib. p. 835.

And as the world hath not known God himself therefore, whether that motion, vitality, and operation, were by incubation or how else, the manner is only known to God.

Raleigh. History of the World, b. i. c. 1.

In all which account of self, the same numerical substance is not consider'd as making the same self; but the same continu'd consciousness, in which several substances may have been united, and again separated from it, which, whilst they continu'd in a vital union with that, wherein this consciousness then resided, made part of the same self.

Locke. Hum. Underst. b. ii. c. 27.

But alas, the venome of the asp hath swoln into deadly tumors; and those seditious principles have shot their poysonous arrows into the vitals of the publick body.

Glanvill. Disc. Ser. 3.

It continues to be the same plant as long as it partakes of the same life, though that life be communicated to new particles of matter vitally united to the living plant, in a like continu'd organization conformable to that sort of plants.—Locke. Hum. Underst. b. ii. c. 27.

Let thy vitality impart
New spirits to his fainting heart;
Let him, like thee (from whom he sprung)]
Be ever active, ever young.

Rowe. The Ambitious Step-mother, Act iii.

Me then my courage prompted to approach
The monster with my glitt'ring falchion drawn
And to transfix him where the vitals wrap
The liver; but maturer thoughts forbade.

Pertaining to, similar or resembling, or having similar qualities to those of, glass; glassy.

This experiment doth very much explain the manner of vision; the hole answering to the pupil of the eye, the crystalline humor to the lenticular glass, the dark room to the cavity containing the vitreous humor, and the white paper to the tunica retina. — Ray. On the Creation, pt. ii. § 11.

Besides we see metals will vitrify; and perhaps some portion of the glass of metal vitrified, mixed in the pot of ordinary glass metal, will make the whole mass more tough. Bacon. Philosophical Remains.

We have glasses of divers kinds, and amongst them some of metals vitrified, and other materials, beside those of which you make glasse. — Id. New Atlantis.

And therefore vitrification maketh bodies brittle: as destroying the viscous humours which hinder the disruption of parts. — Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. ii. c. 5.

Vitrification is the last work of fire, and a fusion of the salt and earth; which are the fixed elements of the composition; wherein the fusible salt draws the earth and infusible part into one continuum. — Id. Ib. c. 1.

And without taking this vitrification upon the chymists' authority, it is manifest, that in glass made the common way, there is a great deal of borellia, sal alkali, or other lixiviate salt mixt with the sand. — Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 656.

Nor let it be objected that the retina cannot perform its office without an eye-ball consisting of cornea, uva, the three humours aqueous, chrySTALLINE and vitreous before it. Search. Light of Nature, vol. ii. pt. ii. c. 21.

The second way whereby bodies become black, is an atramentous condition or mixture, that is a vitriolate or copropose quality conjoining with a terrestrious and astrigent humidity. — Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. vi. c. 12.

But whether this denigrating quality in copperose proceedeth from an iron participation, or rather in iron from a vitriolous communication; or whether black tinctures from metallical bodies be not from vitriolous parts contained in their sulphur, since common sulphur containeth also much vitriol, may admit consideration. — Id. Ib.

I presently found it to be a vein, that lay at some depth under ground, and ran along (how far I knew not) like a vein of metalline ore, (and for such, upon that account, he mistook it) consisting of a black and heavy stuff, which, upon a few easy trials, I quickly found to be of a vitriolate nature. — Boyle. Works, vol. v. p. 43.

The earth about this place was a kind of white clay, had a sulphureous smell, and was soft and wet, the surface only excepted, over which was spread a thin dry crust, that had upon it some sulphur, and a vitriolic substance, tasting like alum. — Cook. Second Voyage, b. ii. c. 5.

VITUPERA'TION. } Fr. Vitupérer; It. }
VITUPERATIVE. } Vituperare, Sp. Vituperar; Lat. Vituperare; (quasi vitium parare, i.e. labem adspargere, (Vossius,) to find fault; to cast a stain upon;)

To find fault, to impute a fault, or crime, or offence; to blame, to condemn, to revile, to rail at.

When a man becomes untractable, and inaccessible, by fierceness and pride, then vituperation comes upon him, and privation of honour follows him.

Donne. Hist. of the Sept. (1633,) p. 155.

Our ancestors, who were not very delicate, nor, generally speaking, much overburthened with respect for the feelings of foreigners, had a number of vituperative appellations derived from their real or supposed ill-qualities, of many of which the precise import cannot be now ascertained. B. Jonson. Every Man in his Humour, Act iv. sc. 2. Note 7.

I cannot pretend in fact, to fix the precise sense of those vituperative appellations, of which the purport, perhaps, was as vague as the orthography.

Id. Every Man out of his Humour, Act v. sc. 3. Note 8.

The vituperative partition will easily be replenished with a most choice collection [of arguments,] entirely of the growth and manufacture of the present age.

VIVID.

VIVIDLY.

VIVIDNESS.

Fr. Vivace; It. Vivace, vivido; Sp. Vivaz, vivido; Lat. Vivax, vividus, lively. See VITAL.

Lively, spirited or sprightly, animated, quick, vigorous.

Vivary, — a place to keep animals or living creatures.

Vivacious is also used to denote — retentive of life.

He [Jaspar Coligni] by a vive [the 4th reads lively] and forcible persuasion moved him [Charles the 9th] to a war upon Flanders. — Bacon. On War with Spain.

We desire your Majesty to conceive that your Majesty doth not hear our opinions or senses, but the very groans and complaints themselves of your Commons more true & vively than by representation.

Id. Speech touching Surveyors.

If I see a thing vively represented on the stage.

B. Jonson. The Magnetic Lady, Act ii. sc. 1.

Such their fleetnesse, they will outrun many horses vivaciousnesse, they outlive most men; living in the ignorance of luxury. — Fuller. Worthies. Devonshire.

That swimming colledge, and free hospital
Of all mankind, that cage and vivary
Of fowls and beasts, in whose womb Destiny
Us and our latest nephews did install.

Donne. Progress of the Soul.

And although not in a distinct and indisputable way of vivency, or answering in all points the properties or affections of plants, yet, &c. — Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. ii. c. 1.

Here if the poet had not been vivacious, as well as stupid, he could not, in the warmth and hurry of nonsense, have been capable of forgetting that neither Prince Voltager, nor his grandfather, could strip a man of his doublet.

Spectator, No. 43.

He had great vivacity in his fancy, as may appear by his inclination to poetry, and the lively illustrations, and many tender strains in his contemplations. — Burnet. Life of Hale.

Wit indeed, as it implies a certain uncommon reach and vivacity of thought, is an excellent talent; very fit to be employed in the search of truth, and very capable of assisting us to discern and embrace it. — Atterbury, vol. i. Ser. 5.

Trace it a little farther, and you find the mind in sleep retir'd as it were from the senses, and out of the reach of those motions made on the organs of sense, which at other times produce very vivid and sensible ideas.

Locke. Hum. Underst. b. ii. c. 19.

He will not be so forward to engage himself upon such occasions, danger and mischief being so vividly pre-represented to his sight. — Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 13.

To examine the conjecture, that the durability of the light in the shining fish, in spite of the withdrawing the air, might proceed in great part from the vividness of it, and the beauty of the matter it resided in.

Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 165.

And when a store of ideas is at last accumulated, it [the mind] feels a spontaneous confidence founded on conscious merit; and shines at a mature age, with a lustre which it would never have displayed, if, instead of collecting ideas, it had been indulging its own pride in uttering vivacious nonsense. — Knox. Winter Evenings, Even. 25.

Their attitudes, their vivacity, their leaps out of the water, their frolics in it (which I have noticed a thousand times with equal attention and amusement), all conduce to show their excess of spirits, and are simply the effects of that excess. — Paley. Natural History, c. 31.

Though to a common eye, a bed of tulips presents only a glare of vivid colours, to a connoisseur it exhibits peculiar elegance as well as finery. — Knox. Winter Even. Even. 7.

To whom Eupithes' son, Antinous next
Much troubled spake: a black storm overcharg'd
His bosom, and his vivid eyes flash'd fire.

Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. iv.

The vividness of the impression occasion'd by the impetus of surprise, renders this sensation [joy] more vivid, diffuses its effects over the whole system, and occasions a delectable and ungovernable flow of spirits, which becomes conspicuous to every spectator. — Cogan. On the Passions, pt. ii. c. 1.

A variety of ideas afford us no notion of succession unless we perceive one come before the other; nor can it be imagined that their degrees of vividness or faintness will do the job, for let a man stand with a candle in his hand between two looking glasses he will see a number of flames in the glass before him each fainter than the others, yet the whole scene will appear quiescent nor exhibit any idea of succession. — Search. Light of Nature, vol. ii. pt. i. c. 13.

VIVIFY, v.

VIVIFY'CK.

VIVIFICANT.

VIVIFICATE, v.

VIVIFICATION.

VIVIFICATIVE.

VIVIFICATRIX.

Fr. Vivifier; It. Vivificare; Sp. Vivificar; Lat. of the Lower Ages, Vivificare, to cause, to give, life.

To animate, to enliven; to give or bestow life or animation, (met. and lit.) to restore to life, to its own body.

But as the same fleshe in Christ is united to the diuine nature, so is it, as Christ sayd (after Cyrilles exposition) spirite and life, not chaunged into the diuine nature of the spirite, but for the ineffable vnion in the person of Christ therunto, it is vivificatrix (as Cyrill sayd) and as the holy Ephesine council decreed.

Bp. Gardner. Explication, fol. 9.

It hath been observed by the ancients, that there is a worm that breedeth in old snow, and is of colour reddish, and dull of motion, and dieth soon after it commeth out of snow. Which should shew, that snow hath in it a secret warmth; for else it could hardly vivifie.

Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 696.

Some do send forth no seed at all; or lesse in quantity than is sufficient, or such in quality which hath no vivificant nor quickning power. — Holland. Plutarch, p. 685.

Every sense findeth benefit of fire as of a vivificant power and quickning vertue. — Id. Ib. p. 812.

His soul or spirit possessing and striking through a compendious collection of all kind of corporeal matter, and managing it with his understanding free to think of other things, even as God vivificates and actuates the whole world, being yet wholly free to contemplate himself.

More. Philosophical Cabbala, c. 1.

The nature of vivification is very worthy the enquiry; and as the nature of things is commonly better perceived, in small, than in great; and unperfect than in perfect; and in parts, than in whole: so the nature of vivification is best inquired in creatures bred of putrefaction.

Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 695.

That lower vivificative principle of his soul did grow strong, and did vigorously and with exultant sympathy and joy actuate his vehicle. — More. Philosophical Cabbala, c. 1.

[The sun] the very life of this inferiour world, without whose salutary and vivifick beams all motion, both animal, vital and natural, would speedily cease, and nothing be left here below but darkness and death.

Ray. On the Creation, pt. i.

Both these operations together (enlightning our minds, sanctifying our will and affections) do constitute and accomplish that work, which is stiled the regeneration, renovation, vivification, new-creation, resurrection of a man.

Barrow, vol. ii. Ser. 34.

But they do not explain to us the cause of this animation; or what is that vivifying principle, which so wonderfully changes the properties of the dead, insensible, inactive matter. — Cogan. On the Passions, pt. ii. c. 1.

VIVIPAROUS. Sp. Viviparo; Lat. of the Lower Ages, Viviparus, qui vivos foetus parit: opposed to oviparus, (qv.)

Bearing or producing its young alive.

So when we perceive that bats have teats, it is not unreasonable to infer they suckle their younglings with milk; but whereas no other flying animal hath these parts, we cannot from them expect a viviparous exclusion; but either a generation of eggs, or some vermiparous separation.

Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. iii. c. 21.

The usual distinction of animals, with respect to their manner of generation, has been into the oviparous and viviparous kinds; or, in other words, into those that bring an egg, which is afterwards hatched into life, and those that bring forth their young alive and perfect.

Goldsmith. Animated Nature, vol. i. pt. ii. c. 2.

It is not very easy to conceive a more evidently prospective contrivance than that which, in all viviparous animals, is found in the milk of the female parent.

Paley. Natural Theology, c. 14.

VIXEN. } i.e. Foxen, more anciently foxin,

VIXENLY. } the name of a she-fox. Applied to a woman whose nature and condition is compared to the she-fox, (Verstegan;) and Skinner thinks this etymology probable.

A sharp, snappish, bitter person; eager to quarrel or fight.

Hel. O when she's angry she is keene and shrewd,
She was a vixen when she went to schoole,
And though she be but little, she is fierce.

Shakespeare. Midsummer Night's Dream, Act iii. sc. 2.

So usually the best friends of mankind, those who most heartily wish the peace and prosperity of the world, and most earnestly to their power strive to promote them, have all the disturbances and disasters happening charged on them, by those fiery vixens, who (in pursuance of their base designs, or gratification of their wild passions) really do themselves embroil things, and raise miserable combustions in the world. — Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 17.

I hate a vixen, that her maid assails,
And scratches with her bodkin, or her nails;
While the poor girl in blood and tears must mourn,
And her heart curses, what her hands adorn.
Congreve. Ovid. Art of Love, b. iii.

No such matter, it was onely, which in such a vixenly pope was a great favour, a forbearance to quarrel with him, as not duely ordained; which any other bishop might have done.—Barrow. Of the Pope's Supremacy, p. 225.

VIZARD. } See VISOR.
VIZARDED. }

Put off your shameless vizards, O ye unbelieving Arrians: put off your angelical infidelitie, and walk as you be, O you deceivers of the people.
Strype. Eccles. Mem. Originals. Q. Mary, No. 48.

But who they be, that have of long time ietted so terribly vnder the lion's skinn, and onely with a painted vizarde, or emptie name of the churche, have feared al the cattel of the fiede, it is needeles to speake it.
Jewell. Defence of the Apologie, p. 4.

Taking a false name is a vizard, whereby men disguise themselves.—Fuller. Worthies General.

Masq. Have you recovered your voice to rail at me?
Plu. No, vizarded impudence.—B. Jonson. Love Restored.

The church is the place for all publick meetings, and all plays and pastimes are acted there also, therefore in the churches belonging to Indian towns they have all sorts of vizards, and strange antick dresses both for men and women, and abundance of musical hautboys and strumstrums.—*Dampier. Drayton. Poly-Oibion, s. 2.

Breathings hard drawne their ulcer'd palates teare
They ope their thirsty mouths, to drink nights aire
And wish such shoures, as all did lately drowne,
And the dry cloudes their lookes are fixt vpon.
May. Lucan Pharsalia, b. iv.

The dregs of vinegre must of necessitie be much more sharpe, biting, and ulcerative, than wine lees.
Holland. Plinie, b. xxiii. c. 2.

O, how I hate the monstrosousness of time.
Where every servile imitating spirit,
Plagued with an itching leprosy of wit,
In a mere hauling fury, strives to fling
His ulcerous body in the Thespian spring,
And straight laps forth a poet!
B. Jonson. Every Man out of his Humour. The Stage.

Honey, being applied to a sore or ulcerous place, at the first doth smart and sting; but it doth cleanse and mundifie withall, and otherwise is profitable, sweet, and pleasant.
Holland. Plutarch, p. 80.

An ulcer is a solution of continuity in a soft part, made by erosion with loss of substance, which loss is in this description presumed to be the effects of the erosion.
Wiseman. Surgery, b. ii. c. 1.

This is true, understanding the lungs only as an instrument of digestion, and abstracting from an acrid and purulent matter, that mixeth with the blood in such as have their lungs ulcerated.—Arbuthnot. Nature of Aliments, c. 2.

Where the part hath been long affected with ulceration, it is usually weak and out of temper, and is very difficult to cicatrize.—Wiseman. Surgery, c. 2.

As to his [Job's] impatience in bearing affliction, that symptom was altogether ambiguous, and might as likely denote want of fortitude as want of innocence, and proceed as well from the pain of an ulcerated body as the anguish of a distracted conscience.
Warburton. Rem. on Occasional Reflections, pt. i. § 4.

The only reason which can be assigned for this disfranchisement, has a tendency more deeply to ulcerate their minds than the act of exclusion itself.
Burke. Letter to Sir H. Langrish, M.P.

ULIGINOUS. Fr. Uligineux; It. Uliginoso;

Ultimate,—Furthest, most distant, or remote, the last; having nothing to follow.

For howsoever distillations do keep the body in cells, and cloysters, without going abroad, yet they give space unto bodies to turn into vapour; to return into liquour; and to separate one part from another: so as nature doth expatiate, although it hath not full liberty: whereby the true and ultime operations of heat are not attained.
Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 99.

The faithful and pious communicants receive the ultimate end of his presence, that is, spiritual blessings.
Bp. Taylor. Of the Real Presence, s. 1.

The constantest notion of concoction is, that it should signifie the degrees of alteration, of one body into another, from crudity to perfect concoction, which is the ultimty of that action, or process.—Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 838.

By reserving still a right of making ulterior demands, they reduced the Carthaginians at last to the necessity of abandoning their city, or of continuing the war after they had given up their arms, their machines, and their fleet, in hopes of peace.
Bolingbroke. On the Study and Use of History, Let. 8.

Every one of these doctrines has a natural tendency, and a direct and powerful influence, to reform men's lives, and correct their manners. This is the great end, and ultimate design, of all true religion.
Clarke. On the Evidences, Prop. 13.

Whence comes it [the mind] by that vast store which the busy and boundless fancy of man has painted on it, with an almost endless variety? whence has it all the materials of reason and knowledge? To this I answer, in one word, from experience; in that all our knowledg is founded, and from that it ultimately derives it self.
Locke. Hum. Underst. b. ii. c. 1.

No doubt would remain in our minds as to the utility or intention of these parts, although we should be unable to investigate the manner according to which, or the connexion by which, the ultimate effect depended upon their action or assistance.—Paley. Natural Theology, c. 1.

Of bodily pain, the principal observation, no doubt, is that which we have already made, and already dwelt upon, viz. that it is seldom the object of contrivance; that when it is so the contrivance rests ultimately in good.
Id. Ib. c. 26.

ULTRA-MARINE. Ultra-marinus.
Beyond the sea. Applied to colour,— Exceeding marine; a brilliant marine.

Ultramarine, or azure, is a very light and a very sweet colour.—Dryden. On Painting, § 354.

There are others, also, which notwithstanding that they are brown, yet cease not to be soft and faint, as the blue of ultramarine.—Id. Ib. § 332.

If the war is carried on in the colonies, he tells them that the loss of her ultramarine dominions lessens her expences, and ensures her remittances.
Burke. On the State of the Nation.

ULTRA-MONTANE. Beyond the mountains (montes).

And those that know any thing of the respects of conclaves, know that he is not papable: first, because he is an ultra-montane, of which sort there hath been none these fifty years.—Bacon. Observations on a Libel.

ULTRA-MUNDANE. Ultra-mundanus.
Beyond the world (mundus), beyond the habitable globe.

We need not fly to imaginary ultra-mundane spaces, to be convinced, that the effects of the power and the wisdom of God are worthy of their causes, and not near adequately understood by us.—Boyle. Works, vol. v. p. 140.

ULULATE, v. Fr. Ululement; It. Ululare;
Lat. Ululare; Gr. Ουλνλεειν.

For safety far within a deep recess
Umbrageous, whither oft the nymphs retir'd
For sport and for repose.—Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. xii.

Under this disposition, nothing could be more effectual to quicken his [the Roman magistrate] jealousy and resentment, than the charge of clandestine assemblies; of which, doubtless, the Romans were very jealous, as contrary to their fundamental laws, though not so extravagantly umbragious as our critic's hypothesis obliges him to suppose.

Warburton. Divine Legation, Pref. to Ed. of 1758.

The leaves of this tree [the fan palm] are also put to various uses, they thatch houses, and make baskets, cups, umbrellas, and tobacco-pipes.

Cook. First Voyage, b. iii. c. 9.

U'MPIRE, v. } genuity, but doubts the truth U'MPIRAGE. } of Minshew's etymology; from U'MPIRESHIP. } the Fr. Un-père,—

One who like a father composes strife, and conciliates peace.

Blackstone cites an authority for each of his conjectures.

He is no indifferente umpeere, that firste diuideth offices equally betweene twoo, and afterwarde alloteth bothe offices to one alone.—Jewel. Defence of the Apologie, p. 312.

Perhaps ye will referre the iudgement of doubtful maters, to the Holy Ghoste. We refuse not the arbitrement and umpiership of the Holy Ghoste.

Id. Ib. p. 63, (from Hardinge.)

But one thing I am persuaded of, that no king of Spain, nor bishop of Rome, shall umpire, or promote any beneficiary, or feudatory king, as they designed to do; even when the Scots queen lived, whom they pretended to cherish.—Bacon. Observations on a Libel.

I am appealed to by both; an unmeet judge, considering my so deep ingagements. But, if my umpirage may stand, I award an eternal silence to both parts.

Bp. Hall. Reconciler. To Mr. H. Cholmley.

Therefore sending for them [he] persuaded them to live quietly and peaceably, and to put their questions to reference or umpirage, and in it offer'd his own assistance; but the scholars laugh'd at his confident offer to be a moderator in things he understood no more than his spurs did.

Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. iii. c. 3.

Take no man's word before thine own sense, in what concerns thine own case and character, is an advise deserving our regard and practice; for a man in questions of this kind is able to be a skilful umpire between himself and others.—Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 12.

As to all matters of right, the subject stands upon the same ground with his prince, so as to be allowed legally to contest his right with him in his own courts, they being free and open; and judges appointed to umpire the matter in contest between them, and to decide where the right lies.
South, vol. vi. Ser. 2.

If they [the arbitrators] do not agree, it is usual to add, that another person be called in as umpire, [imperator or impar] to whose sole judgment it is then referred.
Blackstone. Commentaries, b. iii. c. 1.

UN. Goth. A. S. and Ger. Un; Dut. On. In A. S. it is also written On. In Lat. In, and in English both in and un.

An, en, in, on, mean one: to one, is—to unite, to join; and hence the augmenting force of en, in, or on (collective unus.) (See En.) But whence its negative force? This question, an attempt must be made to answer.

One (emphatically) means one, and no more.

Al-one, is—one being all; one—severed, separated, apart from other, one, or more, (numerically.) To one is, thus—to be, or cause to be, al-one, sole; to sever or separate from all other; to deprive, to disjoin, from all other. We have then thus—

One, separativè unus, (opposed to one, collectivè unus), denoting, in composition—a separation, a privation, a negation, of the positive meaning of the word to which it is prefixed.

This opposition is not confined to On, en, in; it is found in dis; in dis-sever,—dis, augments the force; in dis-unite,—dis, negatives or reverses the meaning. See also To TWIN.

UN-ABA'SHED. Having no feeling of abasement or debasement, disgrace or shame.

O charg'd with wine, in steadfastness of face,
Dog unabash'd, and yet at heart a deer

Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. i.

With eyes unmoved, and forehead unabash'd,
She dines from off the plate she lately wash'd.

Byron. A Sketch.

UN-ABA'TED. Without lowering, lessening, or diminution; undiminished.

Behold a princess (whose declining head
Like to a drooping lilly after storms
Bowes to thy feet) and playing here the slave,
To keep her husband's greatness unabated.
Beaum. & Fletch. Moral Representations.

This freedom of delight or perfect unabated election of evil, which is consequent to the evil manners of the world.
Bp. Taylor, vol. i. Ser. 10.

UNABI'LITY. } ABILITY.

Not having, being without—the force, power, or strength.

His nose of and his lypes both
He cutte, for he wolde him lothe
Unto the people, and make enable.—Gower. Con. A. b. vi.

And also I renounce the name, worshyp & regaly, and kyngely hyghnesse, clerelye, frelye, syngulerlye and hooli, in the moost best maner and fourme that I may, and with dede & worde I leaue of & resygne theym, goo frome theym for euermore, sauynge alway to my successouris, kynges of Englode, all the ryghtys, pryuylegys and appertenauncys to the sayde kyngedome and lordeshyppys abouesayde, belongynge and apperteynyng: for weale I wote, and knowlege, and deme myselfe to be and haue ben vnsuffyeyent and enable, and also vnproffytable.

Fabyan. Chronycle, an. 1399.

They, by aduyce of the nobles of the lande, consyderynge the vnableness of Hilderich the kyng, that he was vn-sufficient to rule so great a charge, dyuydid ye lond of Fraunce atwene them.—Id. Ib.

Least I mighte haue semed to seeke excuse of slouthfulness, or to refuse paines of wilfulness, rather than to defend my selfe by vnableness: I agreed to their aduice.

Goldinge. Caesar, Ep. Ded.

The harme that heretiques did, they did it vnto such who were enable to discerne betwene sound and deceitfull reasoning.—Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, b. iii. § 8.

Christ urg'd it as wherewith to justify himself, that he preach't in public; yet writing is more public than preaching; and more easy to refutation, if need be, there being so many whose business and profession meerly it is to be the champions of truth, which if they neglect, what can be imputed but their sloth or unability?

Milton. For the Liberty of Unlicens'd Printing.

UN-ABO'LISHED. } Not, without being—UNABO'LISHABLE. } destroyed, annulled or abrogated.

The sentences then were uttered in defence of unabolished orders and laws, against such as did of their own heads contrary thereunto.—Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, b. viii.

Hitherto the position undertaken hath been declar'd, and prov'd by a law of God, that law proved to be moral, and unabolishable, for many reasons, equal, honest, charitable, just, annex thereto.

Milton. Doct. & Dis. of Divorce, b. ii. c. 1.

UN-ABRIDGED. Not lessened or diminished or contracted.

— Yes, sagest Verulam,
'Twas thine to banish from the royal groves
Each childish vanity of crisped knot
And sculptur'd foliage; to the lawn restore
Its ample space, and bid it feast the sight
With verdure pure, unbroken, unabridg'd.
Mason. The English Garden, b. i.

UN-ABSO'LVED. i.e. unsolved, (qv.)

Sir, if my letter be well regarded, I [Wolsey] wrote that only conditionally, unless he be driven thereunto by distrust and diffidence; and so that doubt remaineth not unabsolved.—Styrye. Eccles. Mem. Hen. VIII. an. 1521.

UN-ABSU'RD. Not without reason or propriety.

What less than infinite makes un-absurd
Passions, which all on earth but more inflames?
Young. Complaint, Night 7.

UN-ACCENTED. Not accented; without the accent, or emphasis.

It being enough to make a syllable long, if it be accented; and short if it be unaccented.—Harris. Philolog. Inquiries.

UN-ACCE'PTABLE. Usually applied, when that which is or is to be, received, or the motive of the offerer, is not pleasing, agreeable, or approved of.

[There] were made several private acts, never printed, which may not be useless nor unacceptable to mention.
Styrye. Eccles. Mem. Edw. VI. an. 1549.

To the author and God of our nature, how shall any operation proceeding in naturall sort, be in that respect unacceptable?—Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, b. ii. § 4.

UNA

This disappointment of Pizarro, considering our great debility, was no unacceptable intelligence.

Anson. Voyages, b. ii. c. 4.

Restless I followed this obdurate maid
(Swift are the steps that love and anger tread);
By turns put on the suppliant and the lord;
Threaten'd this moment, and the next implor'd;
Offer'd again the unaccepted wreath,
And choice of happy love, or instant death.

Prior. Solomon, b. ii. Pleasure.

UN-ACCE/SSIBLE. } Now Inaccessible, UNACCE/SSIBLENESS. } (qv.)

That may not be gone or come to, reached, attained, or arrived at.

Guiana hath but one entrance by the sea (if it hath that) for any vessels of burden: so as whosoever shall first possess it, it shall be found unaccessible for any enemy, except he come in wherries.

Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 661.

As for Adiabene, environed it is partly with the river Tigris, and partly compassed with unaccessible steep mountains.—Holland. Plinie, b. vi. c. 9.

Let us adore an infinite spirit, dwelling in an unaccessible light, attended with millions of angels of light, and glorified spirits of his saints in a light unspeakable and glorious.

Bp. Hall. Ser. Whitsunday, 1640.

Many excellent things there are in nature, which were very well worth our knowledge, but yet, as hath been said, either by reason of their remoteness from us, unaccessibility to them, subtilty and imperceptibility to us, either are not at all suspected to me, or are not so much as within any of our faculties to apprehend or discover what they are.

Hale. Origin of Mankind, p. 18.

UN-ACCO'MMODATED. } Not suited,
UNACCO'MMODATING. } adapted, furnished, or provided.

Thou art the thing it self; unaccommodated man, is no more, but such a poore, bare, forked animal as thou art.

Shakespeare. Lear, Act iii. sc. 4.

I know you have fallen on that unaccommodating incapable race of mortals, who, whatever they either like not, or know not, or cannot do, are sure to reprehend in others.

Byron. Childe Harold, c. 4. Note 33.

UN-ACCO'MPANIED. Not followed, or attended, or associated; alone.

The travels and crosses wherewith prelacy is never unaccompanied, they which feel them know how heavy and how great they are.—Hooker. Ecclesiastical Politie, b. vii.

As I was single and unaccompanied, I was not permitted to enter the temple, and for that reason am a stranger to all the mysteries that were performed in it.—Tatler, No. 120.

When St. Peter says, The baptism, which saveth us, is not the washing away the filth of the flesh; he means it is not the mere outward act, unaccompanied by a suitable inward disposition.—Secker, vol. vi. Lect. 35.

UN-ACCO'MPLISHED. } Not fulfilled or UNACCO'MPLISHMENT. } completed; performed, executed, or finished.

Wylliam, my fayre sonne, I feare me ye wyll playe the fole; your wysshes and enterprises are more lyke to be unaccomplished than atchuyed.

Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. c. 114.

Custom being but a meer face, as echo is a meer voice, rests not in her unaccomplishment, until by secret inclination she accorporate her self with error, who being a blind and serpentine body without a head, willingly accepts what he wants, and supplies what her incompleatness went seeking.—Milton. To the Parliament of England.

The gods, dismay'd at his approach, withdrew,
Nor durst their unaccomplish'd crime pursue.

Dryden. Homer. Iliad, b. i.

Nor shall Achilles full performance give
To all his vaunts, but, if he some fulfil.
Shall others unaccomplish'd leave and vain.

Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. xx.

UN-ACCO'RDED. Not agreed upon or settled; not brought to harmony, unison, or concord.

The divines of both parts, in that amicable conference at Lipsick, professed their agreement in all the main and important points; leaving those parcels unaccorded, which are meet to be sent and confined to the schools.

Bp. Hall. The Peace-Maker, § 5.

UN-ACCO'UNTABLE. } Countless or un-UNACCO'UNTABLY. } countable, (qv.)
that cannot be reckoned, calculated, computed, solved, or explained.

Omission of some of these particulars is pretty strange, and unaccountable, and concludes our ignorance of the reasons and menages of Providence; but I suppose nothing else.—Glanvill, Ess. 6.

UNA

Shew him, by the help of glasses, still more and more of these fixt lights, and beget in him an apprehension of their unaccountable numbers.

Wollaston. Religion of Nature, s. 5.

The which are alleged, not with intent to imply that God ever acteth unaccountably, or without highest reason, but that sometimes his methods of acting are not fit subjects of our conception or discussion.—Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 23.

Our messenger soon returned with an account, that the order had been written some days, but by an unaccountable negligence not sent.—Cook. First Voyage, b. i. c. 2.

UN-A'CCURATE. } Now Inaccurate, (qv.)
UNA'CCURATENESS. } Without care; and, consequentially, without correctness.

The latter [Origen] has indeed, in an unaccurate work, or perhaps corrupted, mentioned the distinction.

Waterland. Works, vol. iii. p. 178.

There are unaccuratenesses in the measuring of cold by weather-glasses, which may be avoided, but are not.

Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 491.

UN-ACCU'RSED, i.e. Uncursed, (qv.)

Pure is thy reign; when, unaccurs'd by blood,
Nought, save the sweetness of indulgent showers,
Trickling distils into the vernal glebe.

Thomson. Britannia.

UN-ACCU'STOMED. Not wont, or used to; not habitual or common; unused, uncommon.

But when they saw it remoued and approaching nere the walles, abashed at the straunge and unaccustomed sight therof, they sent ambassadors to Cesar for peace.

Goldinge. Cæsar, fol. 63.

More unaccustomed and unlook'd for dearth,
New sorts of meteors gazing from the skies!

Drayton. The Barons' Wars, s. 41.

One of the greatest difficulties in the way of religion, is to begin: the first steps are roughest to those feet that have been unaccustomed to it.—Glanvill, Ser. 1.

Their mental appetite, like their corporeal, unaccustomed to niceties, learns to prefer coarse viands to the dainties of luxury.—Knox, Ess. No. 45.

UN-ACKNO'WLEDGED. Not owned, admitted, or confessed.

The fear and apprehension of what was to come, (which is one of the most unpleasant kinds of melancholy) from an unknown, at least an unacknowledged successor to the crown, clouded much of that prosperity then, which now shines with so much splendor, before our eyes in chronicle.

Clarendon. Civil Wars, vol. i. p. 75.

UN-ACQUA'INTED. } Not made known,
UNACQUA'INTEDNESS. } informed, apprised;
UNACQUA'INTANCE. } not associated or familiarised; not taught, not learned, not known.

Thither he brought these unacquainted guests;
To whom faire semblance, as he could, he shewed.

Id. ib. b. vi. c. 4.

Of this unacquaintance, secondly, arises a dangerous mesprison of mans selfe.

Bp. Hall. The Great Impostor, vol. i. p. 467.

But yet for the further proof of the saints' unacquaintedness with what is done here below, these reasons may be added over and above.—South, vol. xi. Ser. 9.

Your unacquaintance with the original has not proved more fatal to me, than the imperfect conceptions of my translators.—Pope. To Racine the Younger, (1742.)

It is no commendation of your discretion to revive the memory of a thing which can serve to no purpose, except it be to expose your unacquaintedness with antiquity.

Waterland. Works, vol. iii. p. 285.

I am equally unacquainted with their diversions; nothing having been seen that could give us an insight into either.

Cook. Third Voyage, b. iv. c. 11.

UN-ACQU'IED. Not sought, and consequently, not attained or obtained.

The work of God is left imperfect, and our persons ungracious, and our ends unacquired.

Bp. Taylor, vol. i. Ser. 12.

I have only discovered one of those channels by which the history of our Saviour might be conveyed pure and unadulterated, through those several ages that produced those pagan philosophers, whose testimonies I make use of
for the truth of our Saviour's History.
Addison. Of the Christian Religion, Sec. 5.

Sev'n talents I receiv'd of beaten gold,
A beaker, argent all, and after these
No fewer than twelve jars with wine replete,
High, unadult'rate, drink for gods.
Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. ix.

On the other hand the unadulterated state of their general language, and the similarity which still prevails in their customs and manners, seem to indicate that it could not have been at any very distant period.
Cook. Third Voyage, b. v. c. 7.

UN-AFFABLE. That may not be spoken

But a poor, cold, unspirited, unmanner'd,
Unhonest, unaffected, undone fool,
And most unheard of coward, a meer lump.
Beaum. & Fletch. Thierry & Theodoret, Act ii.

Not in a hypocritical way of ostentation, as the vain
Pharisees taxed by our Saviour: Matt. 6. 16. which disfigured their countenances, and did set a sour face upon a light heart, that they might appear unto men to fast; but in a wise, sober, seemly, unaffected deportment.
Bp. Hall. Ser. on Eccles. iii. 4.

Does not [it] signify deceitfully under this name [wife], an intolerable adversary, not a helpless, unaffectionate and sullen mass, whose very company represents the visible and exactest figure of loneliness it self.
Milton. Tetrachordon.

So unaffected, so compos'd a mind;
So firm, yet soft; so strong, yet so refin'd;
Heav'n, as its purest gold, by tortures try'd!
The saint sustain'd it, but the woman dy'd.
Pope. On Mrs. Corbet.

Yet she was unaffectedly concerned, he says; and often blush'd with anger and surprise.
Congreve. The Old Batchelor, Act v.

Christianity comprehends every consideration of nature and reason in the fullest manner; and as they are all insufficient, some too speculative and unaffectionate, some too disputable and uncertain; adds others of inestimable value, peculiar to himself.—Secker, vol. ii. Ser. 33.

The purpose of history is truth, and truth requires no more than to be fairly, openly, and unaffectedly exhibited.
Knox. Ess. No. 23.

UN-AFFLICTED. Not stricken, (sc.) with pain, sorrow, or calamity; not grieved or distressed.

And though it never stand my life in stead,
It is enough it gives myself delight,
The whilst my unafflicted mind doth feed
On no unholy thoughts for benefit.—Daniel. Musophilus.

No strength or loue bowe might
His herte, whiche is unaffled.
But at laste he was begiled.—Gower. Con. A. b. i.

UN-A'FRAID. Equivalent to unaffrighted, (qv.)

Here too brisk gales the rude wild common fand
An happy place; where free, and unafraid,
Amid the flowering brakes each coyer creature stray'd.
Thomson. Castle of Indolence, c. 2.

UN-AGREEABLE. } Not suiting, concur-
UNAGREE'ABLY. } ring, pleasing, or grate-UNAGREE'ABLENESS. } ful; not becoming or convenient.

Fortune cloudie, hath chaunged her deceuiable chere to mewlarde, myne vnpiuous life draweth along vnagreable dewlyngs.—Chaucer. Boecius, b. i.

Which thyng hath bene hytherto in all Englysh Chronicles, doubtfullie, vnagreablely, yea, and vntrulie treated.
Bale. English Votaries, pt. i. Pref.

If the emperor mislike not the matter, then shall it be well don, upon knowledge therof, to send an express man, not unagreable to any of both the parts.
Strype. Eccles. Mem. Edw. VI an 1547.

— Let us try
Adventrous work, yet to thy power and mine
Not unagreable, to found a path
Over this maine from hell to that new world Where Satan now prevails.—Milton. Par. Lost,

UNA

Therefore Caesar, thought now the summer well nigh ending, and the season unagreable to transport a warr, yet judg'd it would be great advantage, only to get entrance into the ile, knowledge of the men, the places, the ports, the accesses.—Milton. History of Britain, b. ii.

Papias, a holy man, and scholar of St. John, having delivered the millennium, men chose rather to admit a doctrine, whose unagreableness to the gospel oeconomy rendered it suspicious, than think an apostolick man could seduce them.—Decay of Christian Piety.

UN-AIDABLE. } See INAIDABLE. Not UNAI'DED. } helped, or assisted.

Who out of smallest things could without end
Have rais'd incessant armies to defeat
Thy folly; or with solitarie hand
Reaching beyond all limit at one blow
Unaided could have finisht thee, and whelmd Thy legions under darkness.—Milton. Par. Lost, b. vi.

The distance of the heavens is so vast, that our unaided senses can give us but extremely imperfect informations of that upper world.—Glanvill, Ess. 3.

Now, Hector! now, thou hast indeed resign'd
All care of thy allies, who, for thy sake,
Lost both to friends and country, on these plains
Perish, unaided and unmiss'd by thee.
Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. xvi.

UN-A'IMING. Directing the eye to, with a view to a mark or object.

Your charming daughter, who like love, born blind,
Un-aiming hits, with surest archery,
And innocently kills.—Dryden. King Arthur, Act i. sc. 1.

UN-A'IDED. Not exposed to the air.

Now I beseech ye, be not so improvident
To forget your travelling pace, 'tis a main posture,
And to all unayr'd gentlemen will betray you.
Beaum. & Fletch. Queen of Corinth, Act ii. sc. 4.

UN-A'KING. Having no continuance of pain;
not painful.

Corio. To brag vnto them, thus I did, and thus Shew them th' vnaking skarres, which I should hide
As if I had receiv'd them for the hyre
Of their breath onely.—Shakes. Coriolanus, Act ii. sc. 2.

UN-ALARMED. Not roused by appearance of danger; not disquieted, disturbed, or troubled.

Yes—thou may'st eat thy bread, and lick the hand
That feeds thee; thou mayst frolic on the floor
At ev'ning, and at night retire secure
To thy straw couch, and slumber unalarm'd.
Cowper. Task, b. iii.

UN-A'LIENABLE. } That can not or may UN'A'LIENABLY. } not be given, sold, or otherwise conveyed to another.

It was impossible for God to give his right away: for he has an unalienable right to dispose of all kingdoms; insomuch that when he leaves the people to choose for themselves, it is still God that appoints both the governor and government.—Waterland. Works, vol. vi. p. 138.

In this point, then, consists one grand excellence of the old classic education established by our forefathers, and bequeathed, as an unalienable possession, to our country.
Knox. Remarks on Grammar Schools.

— Man's mortality
Was, then, transferr'd to death; and Heaven's duration
Unalienably seal'd to this frail frame,
This child of dust.—Young. The Complaint, Night 4.

UNA'LIST. Opposed (by Knox) to pluralists in the church, or holders of more benefices than one.

I do not deny but there are pluralists of great ecclesiastical merit; but I do deny that in general pluralists have greater merit than unalists, or than many in orders who have no living at all; or that pluralists in general, become pluralists for their ecclesiastical merit.
Knox. Spirit of Despotism, § 33.

UN-ALLA'YED. } Not abated or diminished; UNALLO'YED. } not weakened, decayed, or corrupted, (by admixture or otherwise.)

Unallayed satisfactions are joys too heavenly to fall to many men's shares on the earth.—Boyle.

And whatever advantage it might have been, upon the whole, to inherit all the good dispositions, with which our first parents were framed, unallayed with the bad ones, which they have transmitted to us; we are no more intitled to those advantages, than to the possessions which our ancestors have forfeited.—Secker, vol. ii. Ser. 28.

UNA

Love between the sexes, commencing with predilection, and stealing into warm personal attachment, when reciprocal, and unalloyed by adventitious causes, inspires the mind with delight, connected with a satisfaction unknown to other delights.—Cogan. On the Passions, pt. ii. c. 3.

UN-ALLEVIATED. Not lightened, moderated, assuaged, mitigated.

Were not the world governed by infinite justice and goodness; every person, that would, might, in multitudes of cases, do any hurt to others with impunity: and all mischief of all kinds befall us, however innocent, singly or jointly, through the whole course of life, unalleviated by a prospect of recompence after death.—Secker, vol. v. Ser. 8.

UN-ALLIED. } Not bound or united, con-UNALLIABLE. } nected, joined or associated.

Narcissa, not unknown, not unallied,
By virtue or by blood, illustrious youth!
To thee, from blooming amaranthine bowers,
Where all the language harmony, descends
Uncall'd, and asks admittance for the Muse.
Young. The Complaint, Night 5.

I mean not the disgusting severity of a pompous or puritanical exterior; but that respectable appearance, which naturally results from sentiments uniformly great; a gravity unallied to dullness, a dignity unconnected with opulence.
Knox. Liberal Education, Conc.

We look upon you, as under an irreversible outlawry from our constitution—as perpetual and unalliable aliens.
Burke. Letter to Sir Henry Langrishe.

UN-ALLOWABLE. That cannot or may not be conceded, or permitted, or granted.

But to affect, or even permit, beyond what such reasons require, either friendships or familiarities with habitual transgressors of the laws of God, is on many accounts unallowable.—Secker, vol. i. Ser. 28.

UN-ALTERABLE. } That cannot or may UNALTERABLY. } not be, or be made,
UNALTERED. } otherwise or different;
that may or can not be changed.

This makes, that wisely you decline your life
Far from the maze of custom, error, strife,
And keep an even, and unalter'd gait;
Not looking by, or back, like those that wait Times and occasions, to start forth, and seem.
B. Jonson. The Forest.

The laws of nature are in many instances relative to certain states; and therefore in their instances and particulars are as alterable as the states themselves: but the reasons indeed on which they do rely (supposing the same or equal circumstances and the matter unchang'd) are eternal and unalterable as the constitution of nature.
Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. ii. c. 1.

To see such a man day after day sin against God, enter into all temptations, and fall under every one, and never think of his repentance, but unalterably resolve to venture for it, and for the acceptance of it at last.—Id. Ib. c. 3.

I have attempted, in a plainer and easier method, to establish the unalterable obligations of natural religion, and the truth and certainty of the Christian revelation.
Clarke. On the Evidences, Pref.

Now this necessity being absolute, and not depending upon any thing external, must be always unalterably the same; nothing being alterable, but what is capable of being affected by somewhat without itself.
Id. On the Attributes, Prop. 5

Then thus Achilles, matchless in the race:
Laertes' noble son, for wiles renown'd!
I must with plainness speak my fix'd resolve Unalterable. Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. ix.

Fix them [religious, virtuous, manly principles] deeply in your bosom, and let them go with you unloosened and unaltered to the grave.—Knox. Ess. No. 2.

UN-AMAZED. Not confused, perplexed, astonished, or surprised.

So glos'd the tempter, and his poem tun'd;
Into the heart of Eve his words made way,
Though at the voice much marveling; at length
Not unamaz'd she thus in answer spake.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ix.

UN-AMBIGUOUS. Not doubtful; direct, distinct, certain.

The passions are competent guides, and the more violent they are, the more unambiguous their directions.
Knox. Ess. No. 22.

UN-AMBITIOUS. Not seeking, soliciting for, aspiring to, desirous of obtaining, fame, honour, or power.

UNA

Whilst, alas! my timorous muse
Unambitious tracts pursues,
Does with weak unballast wings,
About the mossy brooks and springs,
And all inferior beauteous things,
Like the laborious bee,
For little drops of honey flee
And there with humble sweets contents her industry.
Cowley. The Praise of Pindar.

In the high thoughtless gaiety of game,
While sport alone their unambitious hearts
Possess'd; the sudden trumpet, sounding hoarse,
Bade silence o'er the bright assembly reign.
Thomson. Liberty.

UN-AMENDABLE. } That may or can not UNAMENDED. } be freed from deficiency or fault; that may not be repaired or corrected.

This is to moche done agaiſt all ryght and reason, and to the displeasure of all the noble men of Englande; this can nat longe endure enamended.
Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. c. 235.

So wryte I vnto you nowe beyng absent, not only to them, whiche euen at that tyme hadde offended, but also to all such, as are offenders, yf I fynde them enamended.
Udal. 2 Cor. c. 13.

He [Gay] is the same man; so is every one here that you know: mankind is unamendable.
Pope. Letter to Swift, Oct. 9, 1719.

UN-AMIALE. That can or may not be loved; that causes or excites not love or any pleasing sensation.

If love be away, and not assistant thereto, surely the act thereof remaineth altogether not expetible, dishonourable, without grace and unamiable.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 930.

These ladies of irresistible modesty are those, who make virtue unamiable; not that they can be said to be virtuous, but as they live without scandal.—Tatler, No. 217.

And to perplex ourselves with scruples about small matters of this kind, would be at once distrusting the goodness of God, instead of enjoying it properly; and making our lives uneasy to ourselves, and religion unamiable to others.—Secker, vol. iv. Ser. 17.

UN-AMUSED. Not soothed, gratified, cheered—by quiet, trifling, exertions of mind.

O ye Lorenzos of our age! who deem
One moment unamus'd, a misery
Not made for feeble man!—Young. Complaint, Night 2.

Like a sick man, who turns from side to side on his bed, in hope of that sleep which his fever denies, they fly to various scenes of public resort, in the midst of amusements, unamused.—Knox. Christian Philosophy.

UN-ANALOGICAL. Not according to analogy, or to modes observed in similar cases.

Shine is a [substantive] though not unanalogical, yet ungraceful and little used.—Johnson. In v. Shine.

UN-ANALYZED. Not solved, or dissolved, or separated—into its component parts.

Some large crystals of refined and unanalyzed nitre, appeared to have each of them six flat sides.—Boyle.

He would willingly, if his reader be so pleased, analyze the eternal reason into wisdom and power: but there he would stop: and leave the other side of the eternal reason, unanalyzed.
Warburton. On Bolingbroke's Philosophy, Let. 2.

UN-ANCHORED. Not hooked or held fast by hook or anchor.

A port there is, inclos'd, on either side,
Where ships may rest, unanchored, and unt'y'd.
Fill the glad mariners incline to sail,
And the sea whitens with the rising gale.
Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. ix.

UN-ANELED. Not oiled, rubbed or anointed with oil; not having received unction

Thus was I, sleeping, by a brother's hand,
Of life, of crowne, and queene at once dispatcht;
Cut off euen in the blossomes of my sinne,
Vnhouzzled, disappointed, vnaneid,
No reckoning made, but sent to my account
With all my imperfections on my head.
Shakespeare. Hamlet, Act i. sc. 5.

Ere his very thought could pray;
Unanel'd he pass'd away,
Without hope from mercy's aid—
To the last a renegade.
Byron. The Siege of Corinth, § 227.

UN-ANGULAR. Having no angles or corners.

UNA

Whoever compares his state of mind, on feeling, soft, smooth, unangular bodies, with that in which he finds himself, on the view of a beautiful object, will perceive a very striking analogy in the effects of both; and which may go a good way towards discovering their common cause.
Burke. On the Sublime & Beautiful, § 24.

UN-ANIMATED. Not inspirited, enlivened; not having life or spirit.

I am confident your lordship is by this time of my opinion; and that you will look on those half lines hereafter, as the imperfect products of a hasty muse: like the frogs and serpents in the Nile; part of them kindled into life, and part a lump of unform'd unanimated mudd.
Dryden. Virgil. Æneis, Ded.

UNA'NIMOUS. } Fr. Unanime; It. Unà- UNA'NIMOUSLY. } nime; Sp. Unanime; Lat.
UNANI'MITY. } Unanimis, (unus, animus),

having one mind.

Having one or the same mind or will, opinion or desire; consenting, according.

Unanimieth—is a coinage of Warner.

Set many wits withouten variance,
To one accord and vnanimitee.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 206.

The reports were no longer uncertain, but the universall and unanimous belief of all men carried it for certain truth, that a most invincible armada was rigged and prepared in Spain against England.
Camden. History of Q. Elizabeth, an. 1588.

Yet for all this he was by the unanimous consent of them all sharply reprehended as worthy of severe punishment, and adjudged to the tower.—Id. Ib. an. 1601.

The thing that these men dread, is, lest it be called bread and Christ's body too, as we affirm it unanimously to be.
Bp. Taylor. Of the Real Presenoe, § 3.

Sure I am I had peace and comfort at home, in that happy sense of that generall unanimity, and loving correspondence of my clergy, till the last year.
Bp. Hall. Specialties, &c. of his Life.

Till which grievances be remov'd, and religion set free from the monopoly of hirelings, I dare affirm, that no model whatsoever of a commonwealth will prove successful or undisturb'd; and so perswaded, implore Divine assistance on your pious counsels and proceedings to unanimity in this and all other truth.—Milton. Means to remove Hirelings.

With marriage, that preferreth vs
And staves vs in content
Unanimieth weale or woe
As either vs is sent.
Warner. Albion's England, b. ii. c. 68.

But whoever were the persons that first thought of the serenade, the authors of all countries are unanimous in ascribing the invention to Italy.—Tatler, No. 222.

All senses and faculties of man unanimously rejoice in those emblems of peace, order, harmony, and proportion.
Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 30.

This conduct obliged every one to observe the strictest caution in any affair of general concern, and it tended to keep up the exactest harmony and unanimity in the several churches.—Waterland. Works, vol. v. p. 226.

And his control the Taphian race, renown'd
For naval skill, unanimous obey.
Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. i.

They have proceeded from the beginning to this day with great unanimity in all their affairs.—Secker, vol. v. Ser. 6.

UN-ANNOYED. Not hurt or molested.

The double guard preserv'd him unannoy'd.
Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. xiv.

UN-ANSWERABLE. } That can or may UNANSWERABLY. } not be spoken in UNANSWERABLENESS. } return or opposition UNANSWERED. } to; that cannot be replied to or refuted.

But for nothyng that euer he can,
He might as than nought be herde
So that his claime is vnanswerde.—Gower. Con. A. b. ii.

But yet hadde ther almost one reason of hys passed me vware, which if I had lefte vntowched, Tindall would haue sayed I had dissimiled, and left vnanswered hys chiefe reason of all.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 499.

And in his unanswerable books [he] continues still to be so against the unquiet discipline of their schism, which now under other names carry on their design.
Dr. King. Let. to Mr. Walton.

I shall not omit to observe that the apostles did make use of the argument which I urg'd out of Solomon, that we are not to speak evil of the king; from whence the unlawfulness of resisting is unanswerably concluded.
Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. iii. c. 3.

Can there be here any danger of self-sacrificing with Seianus, and not rather the just danger of our shame and confusion in our selves? How can we but hate this unkind, and unjust unanswerableness.

Bp. Hall. A Sermon of Thanksgiving, Jan. 1625.

Had we not pretended to holiness and purity of religion even beyond others, the unkindness had been the less; now, our unanswerableness calls God to the highest protestation of his offence.—Id. Ser. Eph. iv. 30.

— But this gift

With which you have confirm'd it, is so far Beyond my hopes and means e'r to return,
That of necessity I must dye oblig'd
To your unanswer'd bounty.

Beaum. & Fletcher. The Queen of Corinth, Act i. sc. 3.

Nor [let] any reader surmise, that if I shall leave a book unanswered, I thereby acknowledge it to be unanswerable.

Boyle. Works, vol. v. p. 160.

I have transcribed this whole passage from Mr. Whiston, being full and clear to my purpose, unanswered, and unanswerable.—Waterland. Works, vol. ii. p. 400.

UN-ANTICIPATED. Not before taken note or notice of; unexpected, unforeseen.

This possibly might have recurred to his lordship, while he was boasting of his new and unanticipated objection.

Warburton. Divine Legation, b. v. App.

UN-ANXIOUS. Not carefully desirous or solicitous.

— When young, indeed,

In full content we, sometimes, nobly rest,
Unanxious for ourselves; and only wish,
As duteous sons, our fathers were more wise

Young. Complaint, Night 1.

UN-APOCHRYPHAL. Not hidden, or concealed, or secret; not included in the Apocrypha.

And yet God in that unapochryphal vision, said without exception, Rise Peter, kill and eat.

Milton. Of Unlicens'd Printing.

UN-APPALLED. Not drooping with fear; not dismayed, daunted, or afraid.

— Nor yet staid the terror there,
Infernal ghosts, and hellish furies, round
Environ'd there, some howl'd, some yell'd, some shriek'd,
Some beat at thee thir fiery darts, while thou Sat'st unappall'd in calm and sinless peace.

Milton. Paradise Regained, b. iv.

Yet here, ev'n here, into these black abodes
Of monsters unappall'd, from stooping Rome,
And guilty Cæsar, Liberty retir'd,
Her Cato following through Numidian wilds.

Thomson. Summer.

Even before that breaker of the ranks
Achilles, unappall'd would Ajax stand
In single combat, though less swift than he.

Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. xiii.

UN-APPAREL, v. To divest, to unclothe; (met.) to divest of the cloak of prejudice or ignorance.

Of goodness grown that I can study thee;
And by these meditations refin'd,
Can unapparel and enlarge my mind.

Donne. Obsequies on Lord Harrington.

In Peru, though they were unappareled people, according to the climate, & had some customs very barbarous, yet the government of the Incas had many parts of humanity and civility.—Bacon. Of an Holy War.

UN-APPARENT. Not being present, (sc.) to the sight or perception; not visible, not perspicuous.

Law cannot inable natural inability either of body, or mind, which gives the grievance; it cannot make equal those inequalities, it cannot make fit those unfitnesses; and where there is malice more than defect of nature, it cannot hinder ten thousand injuries, and bitter actions of despatch, too subtle and too unapparent for law to deal with.

Milton. Tetrachordon.

UN-APPEALABLE. That cannot or may not be appealed against; from whose doom no call can be made upon another tribunal for revision.

And then both to secure, and authorize their errors, they made their own reason, or rather humour (first surnaming it the Spirit) the infallible, unappealable Judge of all that was delivered in the written word.—South, vol. v. Ser. 3.

UN-APPEASABLE. } That cannot be UNAPPEAS'D. } pacified, or restored to peace, calmness, or quiet; that cannot be satisfied or contented.

Dal. I see thou art implacable, more deaf
To prayers than winds and seas, yet winds to seas
Are reconcil'd at length, and sea to shore:
Thy anger unappeasable, still rages,
Eternal tempest never to be calm'd.

Milton. Samson Agonistes.

Whereupon ensued, as in that case there needs must, every day quarrels and jars unappeasable amongst bishops.

Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, b. vii.

There was presented before his eyes in that fearefull houre Gods heaue indignation and wrath towards mankind as yet unappeased.—Id. Ib. b. v.

— If againe

Honour'd Achilles chance by thee be seiz'd, Keepe him still active, angry, un-appeas'd,
Sharpe and contemning lawes at him should aime
Be nought so 'bove him but his sword let claime.

B. Jonson. Horace. Art of Poetrie.

UN-APPERCEIVED. See APPERCEIVE. Not perceived.

And therupon so sleightly wrought,
That his purpose about he brought,
And went away unaperceued.—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

UN-APPLICABLE. } Now more usually UNAPPL'D. } written In-applicable
(qv.) That cannot be put near or close, in connexion or conjunction; that cannot be connected with, made subservient, relevant or referrible to.

And no time to be slack'd or unapplied, toward the end and purpose of the facultie intended.

Vives. Instruction of a Christian Woman.

So have they [the philosophers] sought to make men's minds too uniform and harmonical, by not breaking them sufficiently to contrary motions: the reason whereof I suppose to be, because they were men dedicated to a private-free, unapplied course of life.

Bacon. Advancement of Learning, b. ii.

Some inconveniences in the contrivance of them, make them unapplicable to some purposes, and less proper in others.—Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 485.

The art of finding proofs, and the admirable methods they have invented for the singling out, and laying in order those intermediate ideas, that demonstratively shew the equality or inequality of unapplicable quantities, is that which has carry'd them so far, and produc'd such wonderful and unexpected discoveries.—Locke. Hum. Underst. b. iv. c. 12.

Even the words of the Psalmist, if we are to adopt them, may frequently seem so unapplicable to the outward condition, or inward frame, of many in every congregation, that, if they attended to them, they cannot say them with truth.—Secker, vol. iii. Ser. 26.

UN-APPOINTED. Not fixed, settled, established.

But the operations of this engine of oppression, in the hands of an interested plebeian, unappointed, unauthorised, and unoffended, inflict the severest penalty, without judge, jury, witnesses, conscience or humanity.—Knox. Ess. No. 6.

UN-APPREHENDED. } Not taken,
UNAPPREHENSIBLE. } perceived or con-UNAPPREHENSIVE. } ceived; not understood. See INAPPREHENSIBLE.

They of whom God is altogether unapprehended, are but few in number, and for grossness of wit such, that they hardly and scarcely seeme to hold the place of humane being.—Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, b. v. § 2.

Which assertions, in spite of all qualifications of them, leave it unapprehensible what place can reasonably be left for addressing exhortations to the will.—South, vol. v. Ser. 5.

The same temper of mind makes a man unapprehensive and insensible of any misery suffered by others.—Id.

UN-APPRISED. Not taught or informed; not made acquainted with.

Besides this inconvenience, which the doctor seemed to be unapprised of; there is another which he was forced to run upon.—Waterland. Works, vol. ii. p. 327.

The fugitive prince, not unapprized of Henry's designs upon his country, threw himself at his feet, implored his protection, and promised to hold of him, as his feudatory, the sovereignty he should recover by his assistance.

Burke. Abridgment of English History, b. iii. c. 6.

UN-APPROACHABLE. } That cannot be UNAPPROACH'D. } come near to, or advanced towards.

[They] held and fortified that castle in the queen's name, led by Lidington's counsell, and presuming upon the unapproachable strength of the place, the munition and power for war in it, (for there the kings magazine was kept,) and the succours promised by the duke of Alva and the French king.

Camden. History of Q. Elizabeth, an. 1573.

On the one side invironed for a great part of it with a river, and on the other side unapproachable by reason of the soil's being always moorish and plashy.—Id. Ib. an. 1600.

— Since God is light,
And never but in unapproached light
Dwelt from eternity, dwelt then in thee,
Bright effluence of bright essence increate.

Milton. Paradise Lost, b. iii.

But the scripture tells us indeed, that the promulgators of the gospel declared to men the whole counsel of God (as far as was necessary for their salvation) but never says, that they disclosed to them the whole nature of God, who is said to inhabit an unapproachable light, which human speculations cannot penetrate.—Boyle. Works, vol. v. p. 131.

UN-APPROPRIATE. } Not properly or UNAPPROPRIATED. } especially belong-UNAPPROPRIATING. } ing or pertaining;
not allotted or assigned to any peculiar person or thing.

Should not those men rather be heard that come to plead against their own preferments, their worldly advantages, their own abundance; for honour and obedience to God's word, the conversion of souls, the christian peace of the land, and union of the reformed catholick church, the unappropriating and unmonopolizing the rewards of learning and industry, from the greasy clutch of ignorance, and high feeding.—Milton. Of Reformation in England, b. ii.

To whom [the rich] as to the stewards of his bounty and abundance, he hath intrusted, rather than given, the goods of this world: goods, which God, at first, created unappropriate; and Nature threw in common to all her children.

Warburton, vol. x. Ser. 31.

Ovid could not restrain the luxuriancy of his genius, on the same occasion, from wandering into an endless variety of flowery and unappropriated similitudes, and equally applicable to any other person or place.

Warton. Essay on Pope.

UN-APPROVED. Not tried, or received upon or after trial; not welcomed upon trial.

Evil into the mind of God or man

May come and go, so unapprov'd, and leave

To sit, although the churlish birds deny
To give us musick in this grove, where they Are prodigall to others: I'll strain my voyce
For a sad song.

Beaum. & Fletcher. The Honest Man's Fortune, Act iii.

— O, how much better his

Who nought assays vnaptly, or amiss?

B. Jonson. Horace. Art of Poetrie.

Yet oft it falles, that many a gentle mind
Dwels in deformed tabernacle drownd,
Either by chance, against the course of kind,
Or through vnaptnesse in the substance found.

Spenser. Hymne to Beautie.

— Corrupted faith had bred

An ill-inur'd obedience for command,
And languishing luxuriousness had spread Wayward vnaptness over all the land.

Daniel. Civil Wars, b. v.

The scorching heat of the sun in summer renders the greater part of the day vnapt either for labour or amusement.—Anson. Voyages, b. ii. c. 5.

The mind, by being engaged in a task beyond its strength, like the body, strained by lifting at a weight too heavy, has often its force broken, and thereby gets an vnaptness, or an aversion, to any vigorous attempt ever after.

Locke. Conduct of the Understanding, § 28.

Gods! either I shall prove of little force
Hereafter, and for manly feats vnapt,
Or I am yet too young, and have not strength
To quell th' aggressor's contumely.

Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. xxi.

UN-A'QUIT, i.e. unrequited, (qv.)

He was ayenewarde charitous,
And to pitee he was pitous.
For it was neuer knowe yet,
That charitee goth vnauquit.—Gower. Con. A. b. ii.

UN-ARA'CED. Not torn up by the roots, not torn away by force.

For if the things that I have concluded a lytell here before, ben kept hole and vnaraced, [inconvulsa] thou shalt wel know by the auctoryte of God, (of the whose reigne I speake) that certes the good folke be alway mightie, and shrewes ben alway outcaste and feble.

Chaucer. Boecius, b. iv.

UN-A'RGUED. Not made clear or evident; not shewn; not cleared, shewn, or proved—by reasoning; not tried by reasoning or argument.

No corner of truth hath lyen unsearcht, no plea unargued.
Bp. Hall. The Old Religion, Ep. Ded.

— As't might be thought,
He wrote with the same spirit that he fought,
Not that his work liv'd in the hands of foes,
Un-argued then, and yet hath fame from those.
B. Jonson. To Clement Edmonds.

UN-ARM, v. } To divest, to deprive — of UNA'RMED. } arms. See DISARM.

Unarmed,—not vested with or protected by arms; not bearing weapons or covering of offence and defence.

Some radde, that hii solde wende in at on hepe,
To habbe inome hom unarmed, & some abedde aslepe.
R. Gloucester, p. 547.

This knight is to his chambre ladde anon,
And is unarmed, and to the mete ysette.
Chaucer. The Squires Tale, v. 10,487.

— Thou red-ey'd god: who does best,
Reward with honor; who despair makes flee,
Unarm for ever, and brand with infamy.
Beaum. & Fletch. Bonduca, Act iii. sc. 1.

— Could it else have been
In nature, that a few fugitive Persians,
Unfriendly, and unarmed too, could have rob'd me.
Id. The Prophetess, Act iv. sc. 2.

My other man also was with me, who had done nothing all this while, having come out unarm'd.
Dampier. Voyages, an. 1699.

He seeks the fleet, and with his utmost speed
Achilles there: of whose arrival, now,
With whatsoever rage he may resent
This deed of Hector, I must yet despair.
For, can he face, unarm'd, the pow'rs of Troy?
Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. xvii.

UN-ARRA'IGNED. Not called to account; not put upon trial; not tried.

"Never shall this poor breath of mine consent,
That he, that two and twenty years hath reign'd
As lawful lord, and king by just descent,
Should here be judg'd, unheard, and unarraign'd."
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. iii.

UN-ARRA'YED. Not covered, clothed, dressed, or decked.

Vasq. Corn, wine and oil are wanting to this ground,
In which our countries fruitfully abound:
As if this infant-world, yet unarray'd,
Naked and bare, in nature's lap were laid.
Dryden. The Indian Emperour, Act i. sc. 1.

UN-ARRE'STED. Not stayed or stopped, retained, detained, or apprehended.

"Lede my hors to shipward, and take it to some man,
And I woll go on foot as pryvely as I can,
And assay yf I may in eny manere wise
Escape unarrested more in such manner wise."
Chaucer. The Marchantes Second Tale.

In the meane season by this pacifyers good deuyse, heretykes maye goe unarrested.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 1011.

UN-ARRIVED. Not come, not having yet reached or attained.

Monarchs of all elaps'd, or unarriv'd.

UN-A'RTFUL. } Without skill or science, UNA'RTFULLY. } or cunning; not skilled;
UNARTIFICIAL. } skillless, rude, simple; sin-UNARTIFICIALLY. } cere, natural.

Unarted,—so Feltham renders — "Sine arte mensa."

The stock of his piece is not made calleuer-wise, but with a plaine & straitte stocke (somewhat like a fouling piece) the barrel is rudely & unartificially made, very heauie, yet shooteth but a very small bullet.

Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 484.

But the material being only turf, and by the rude multitude unartificially built up without better direction, avall'd shem little.—Milton. History of Britain, b. iii.

A house thine own, and pleasant soyl,
No strife, small state, a mind at peace,
Free strength, and limbs free from disease,
Wise innocence, friends like and good,
Unarted meat, kind neighbourhood,
No drunken rest, from cares yet free.

Feltham, pt. i. Res. 99.

— I'm sure unartful truth lies open
In her mind, as crystal streams their sandy bottom shew.
Dryden. The Tempest, Act iii.

A cheerful sweetness in his looks he has,
And innocence unartful in his face.
Congreve. Juvenal, Sat. 11.

Their chiefs went to battle in chariots, not unartfully contrived, nor unskilfully managed.
Burke. An Abridgment of English History, b. i. c. 2.

They have levelled and crushed together all the orders which they found, even under the coarse unartificial arrangement of the monarchy.
Id. On the French Revolution.

UN-ASCERTAINED. Not being sure or certain; not assured; not made certainly known.

The space between this Noss [Shelatskoj] and Cape North, about eighty-two leagues, is therefore the only part of the Russian empire that now remains unascertained.
Cook. Third Voyage, b. vi. c. 4.

UN-ASE'RVED, i. e. unserved, (qv.)

"Graunt mercy, gentil sir," quod she, that ye unaservid.
Imputed to Chaucer.

UN-A'SKED. Not sought, not inquired or required, petitioned or solicited.

— All this villany
Did I: I Livia, I alone, untaught.
Mor. And I unask'd, forgive it.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Woman's Prize, Act v. sc. 1.

Then too we hurt ourselves, when to defend
A single verse, we quarrel with a friend;
Repeat unask'd; lament, the wit's too fine
For vulgar eyes, and point out ev'ry line.
Pope. Imitation of Horace, b. ii. Ep. 1.

Now swift she moves, and now advances slow,
To find her lord; and, finding, passes by,
Silent with fear, nor dares she meet his eye;
Lest that, unask'd, in speechless grief, disclose
The mournful secret of his inward woes.
Young. Force of Religion, b. i.

UN-ASKRI'ED. Not descried.

The kyng continually sent forth his light horses to seke the country and to se yf any apparaunce were, and they euer brought tidynes of such thyng as thei sawe, so that alwaies it was forsened that the kyng nor his people should be taken vnpurvyed, nor the Frenchemen shoulde not come on them sodainly unaskryed.
Hall. Chronicle. K. Hen. VIII. an. 5.

UN-ASPE'CTIVE. Not able to look; not looking at, viewing or regarding.

In which the Holy Ghost is not wholly unaspective to the custom that was used among men, since we find the triumphers in the revelation (as badges of victory) carried their palms in their hands.—Feltham, pt. ii. Res. 74.

UN-ASPI'RING. } Not eagerly seeking, de-UNA'SPIRATED. } siring, reaching, soaring;
not having the strong breathing.

To be modest and unaspiring, in honour preferring one another.—Rogers.

Lambin gives ορημα for the Æolic verb unaspirated.
Parr. On Combe's Horace.

UN-ASSA'ILABLE. } That may not or UNASSA'ULTABLE. } cannot be invaded or UNASSA'ULTED. } attacked.

It hath for the inner warde two strong castles situated on the top of two high craggies of a rocke, a bowe shoot distant the one from the other: the rocke is unassailable.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. p. 111.

Thereto, both his owne willie wit, she said,
And eke the fastnesse of his dwelling place,
Both unassailable, gaue him great ayde.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 9.

I see ye visibly, and now believe
That he, the Supreme God, t' whom all things ill
Are but as slavish officers of vengeance,
Would send a glist'ring guardian, if need were,
To keep my life and honour unassail'd.—Milton. Comus.

But the commanders who had lately seen an admiral shot for not having done what he had not power to do, durst not leave the place unassaulted.—Idler, No. 20.

UN-ASSA'YED. Not tried or proved, attempted, examined, endeavoured.

For alwaie to euerie man, there is in somewhat, that unassayed, he ne wotte noughte, or els he dredeth that he hath assayed.—Chaucer. Boecius, b. ii.

For although God is of his nature propense & readie to shew mercie vnto al creatures: yet doeth he many times make some delay of his beneficiall goodnesse, to ye entent he may the more sharpen our desires, and also to teache vs, that we ought to leaue nothing vnattempted, or unassayed, that we may bee deliuered from the diseases of the solle.
Udal. Luke, c. 5.

He hath leaft nothing unassayed, whereby they might be recouered and brought to a better mind & to emendment.
Id. John, c. 13.

Simier on the other side left no means unassayed to remove Leicester out of his place and favour with the queen, revealing to her his marriage with Essex his widow.
Camden. Hist. of Q. Elizabeth, an. 1579.

UN-ASSI'STED. } Not supported or sus-
UNASSI'STING. } tained, aided or succoured.

The doctrine which it teaches as matters of truth, are in the first place, though indeed many of them not discover-able by bare reason unassisted with revelation, yet, when discovered by revelation, apparently most agreeable to sound and unprejudiced reason.

Clarke. On the Attributes, Prop. 13.

They stretch their unassisting hands in vain,
But none will plunge into the raging main,
To save the sinking passenger from death.
Dryden. Love Triumphant, Act iv. sc. 1.

For should Achilles, though alone, assail
The unassisted Trojans, he would drive,
At once, to flight, their whole collected pow'r.
Couper. Homer. Iliad, b. xx.

UN-ASSU'MING. Not taking or claiming, (sc.) too much; not arrogating or pretending.

Ye vainly wise! ye blind presumptuous! now,
Confounded in the dust, adore that Power,
And Wisdom oft arraign'd: see now the cause,
Why unassuming Worth in secret liv'd,
And dy'd neglected.
Thomson. Winter.

But hear, still further, and in the same good strain, the great patron and advocate of amity with this accommodating, mild, and unassuming power, when he reports to you the law they give, and its immediate effects.

Burke. On a Regicide Peace, Let. 4.

UN-ASSURED. Not ascertained, not firm or steady; not to be relied upon.

The doubts, the dangers, the delays, the woes,
The fained friends, the unassured foes,
With thousands more then any tongue can tell,
Doe make a lousers life a wretches hell.
Spenser. An Hymne to Love.

As thick to view these varied wonders rose,
Shook all my soul with transport, unassur'd,
The vision broke.
Thomson. Liberty.

UN-ASTO'NISHED. Not stupefied, appalled, abashed, amazed, confounded.

— And there
Picks out (ô horrid act!) his fatall haire.
Seaz'd of her wicked prey; with her she bore
The guiltie spoyle; unlocks a posterne doore:
Then past the foe (bold by her merit made)
Unto the king not unastonish'd, said.
Sandys. Ovid. Metam. b. viii.

UN-ATCH'VEVED. Not brought to an end, not finished or accomplished.

The combate rema'ned unatchieved and unperfect, neither had it a certaine and doubtlesse conclusion, considering neither the one nor the other of the champions was slaine.
Holland. Plutarch, p. 651.

UN-ATONABLE. } That cannot be or be UNATO'NED. } restored to union, amity, favour or grace; that cannot be reconciled or propitiated.

He who sees not this argument how plainly it serves to divorce any untunable, or unatonable matrimony, sees little.
Milton. Teirachordon.

Who told him, that the big incumbent war
Would not, ere this, have roll'd his trembling ports
In smoky ruin? and his guilty stores,
Won by the ravage of a butcher'd world;
Yet unaton'd, sunk in the swallowing deep,
Or led the glittering prize into the Thames?
Thomson. Britannia.

Or can you recollect the various frauds you may have been guilty of, yet unatoned for by a fair restitution?
Gilpin, vol. iii. Ser. 7.

UN-ATTACHED. Not taken, seized, bound, fixed or fastened.

A cutpurse in a throng, when he hath committed the fact, will cry out, My masters, take heed of your purses: and he that is pursued, will cry, Stop thief, that by this means he may escape unattached.

Junius. Sin Stigmatized, p. 368.

True patriotism and true philosophy, unattached to names of particular men, or even to parties, consider the happiness of man as the first object of all rational governments.

Knox. Spirit of Despotism, § 34.

UN-ATTACKED. Not touched, (sc. forcibly, violently,) not assailed or assaulted.

However, as none of them wholly abandon that post, it will not be safe to leave it behind me unattacked.

Burke. Speech on the Acts of Uniformity.

UN-ATTAINABLE. } That cannot be UNATTAINABLENESS. } reached or come to;
UNATTAINED. } that cannot be gained or procured.

For the will being the power of directing our operative faculties to some action, for some end, cannot at any time be mov'd towards what is judg'd at that time unattainable.

Locke. Hum. Underst. b. ii. c. 21.

That men should be perfectly kept from error: that is more than human nature can by any means be advanced to; I aim at no such unattainable privilege.

Id. Conduct of the Underst. § 34.

Despair is the thought of the unattainableness of any good.

Id. Hum. Underst. b. ii. c. 20.

This therefore, added to the representations of Captain Gore, determined Captain Clerke not to lose more time in what he concluded to be an unattainable object.

Cook. Third Voyage, b. vi. c. 4.

Though the landing of our gentlemen proved the means of enriching my journal with the foregoing particulars, the principal object I had in view was, in a great measure, unattained.—Id. Ib. b. ii. c. 2.

UN-ATTEMPTED. } Not tried or put to UNATTEMPTING. } trial; not essayed, or undertaken, or ventured upon.

And the king of Portugall fearing least the emperor would have persevered in this his enterprise, gave him, to leave the matter unattempted, the summe of 350000 crownes.

Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 23.

Mean time the French king, sending thither Monsieur Viriac, left no way unattempted for supplanting the Regent before his authority were firmly settled.

Camden. Hist. of Q. Elizabeth, an. 1573.

Many have been too forward and enterprising in that way, which is an error in excess; and many also have been too cautious and unattempting, which is an error in defect.

Waterland. Works, vol. vi. p. 18.

UN-ATTENDED. } See INATTENTIVE.
UNATTENDING. } Not followed or accom-UNATTENTIVE. } panied, nor waited upon, or observed, or regarded, or heeded.

His breast shot through with sorrow's deadliest dart,
Car'd for of none, nor look'd on, unattended,
Sadly returning with a heavy heart.

Drayton. Barons' Wars, s. 24.

Lad. Nay gentle shepherd, ill is lost that praise
That is address'd to unattending ears.—Milton. Comus.

Night came, but unattended with repose,
Alone she came, no sleep their eyes to close,
Alone and black she came, no friendly stars arose.

Dryden. The Hind and the Panther.

The greater part of mankind are not only unattentive, and barely ignorant: but commonly they have also, through a careless and evil education, taken up early prejudices, and many vain and foolish notions.—Clarke. Evidences, Prop. 5.

By reiterating the same processes so often, it can scarce be doubted but that divers phænomena will offer themselves, even to an unattentive eye.—Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 444.

But the death of the righteous gives instruction unattended with horror: and the seriousness, which it inspires, is pleasing and peaceful.—Secker, vol. v. Ser. 3.

UN-ATTESTED. Not witnessed; without evidence.

Thus God has not left himself unattested, doing good, sending us from heaven rains and fruitful seasons, filling our hearts with food and gladness.—Barrow. On the Creed.

UN-ATTRACTED. Not drawn to or towards; not caused or made to approach or adhere.

VOL. II.

Her every motion clear discerning, he Adjusted to the mutual main, and taught
Why now the mighty mass of water swells
Resistless, heaving on the broken rocks,
And the full river turning: till again
The tide revertive, unattracted, leaves
A yellow waste of idle sands behind.

Thomson. On Sir Isaac Newton.

UN-AVAILABLE. } That can not or may UNAVAILABleness. } not be made strong or UNAVAILING. } efficacious; that can-UNAVAILINGLY. } not be brought to effect, or in action, in use, assistance, aid, or service.

Of like sorte doubtles shall the profession of faith, whiche consisteth only in worde and worketh nothyng in dede, bee unavayleable, but lyeth sluggish like as it were deade.

Udal. James, c. 2.

Their proofs are unavailable to shew that scripture affordeth no evidence for the inequality of pastors.

Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, b. vii. § 11.

Doubting the unavailableness of those former inconveniences.—Sir E. Sandys. State of Religion, (ed. 1605.)

Tancred, restrain thy tears, unsought by me,
And sorrow, unavailing now to thee;
Did ever man before, afflict his mind,
To see th' effect of what himself design'd.

Dryden. Sigismunda & Guiscardo.

Behoves me then to bear
Patient my destin'd fate, knowing how vain
To struggle with necessity's strong pow'r.
But to complain, or not complain, alike
Is unavailable.—Potter. Æschylus. Prometheus Chained.

Sentiments of dutiful submission spare us the pain of unavailing inward struggles, lessen every suffering, prepare us for every trial.—Secker, vol. iii. Ser. 11.

UN-AVENGED. Not punished (in retaliation or retribution). See UNREVENGED.

For God wyll not suffer any suche thing to be vnpunished nor unaduenged: this is the very intent & meanyng of these wordes.—Udal. John, c. 22.

They [Christian priests] were by him and his heathen neighbours cruelly butchered; yet not unaveng'd, for the governour enrag'd at such violence offerd to his strangers, sending armed men, slew all those inhabitants, and burnt their village.—Milton. History of Britain, b. iv.

Yet died he by a stranger's hand,
And stranger in his native land;
Yet died he as in arms he stood,
And unavenged, at least in blood.—Byron. The Giaour.

UN-AVISED, i. e. Unadvised, (qv.)

And when they sourden by freelte unavised sodenly, and sodenly withdraw again, al be they grevous sinnes, I gesse that they be not dedly.—Chaucer. The Persones Tale.

UN-AVOIDABLE. } Inevitable, or that UNAVOIDABLY. } can not or may not be UNAVOIDABLENESS. } freed or cleared, quitted, UNAVOIDED. } shunned, eschewed, or escaped; that cannot be divested of force or effect, annulled or abrogated.

With this mind hee mounted vpon the highest decke, where hee attended imminent death, and unavoidable.

Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 157.

By hellish Styx (by which the thund'rer swears)
By the fair mother's unavoided power,
By Hecat's names, by Proserpine's sad tears,
When she was rapt to the infernal bower.

Drayton. Idea 36.

Rare poems ask rare friends;
Yet satires, since the most of mankind be
Their unavoided subject, fewest see:
But none e'er took that pleasure in sin's sense;
But when they heard it tax'd, took more offence.

B. Jonson. To the C. of Bedford, with Donne's Satires.

The unavoydableness of which effects hath carried some of their casuists into an opinion of the unnecessariness of devotion in these holy businesses.

Bp. Hall. The Old Religion, § 3. c. 12.

In the laws of man ignorance is easier pleaded, and does more excuse, and does unavoidably happen to many men in very many cases.—Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. iii. c. 1.

For body cannot act on any thing, but by motion; motion cannot be receiv'd but by matter, the soul is altogether immaterial; and therefore, how shall we apprehend it to be subject to such impressions? and yet pain, and the unavoidableness of our sensations evidently prove, That it is subject to them.—Glanvill, Ess. 1.

The consequence; viz. that if the Supreme cause be a necessary agent, then nothing which is not, could possibly have been; and nothing which is, could possibly either not have been, or have been different from what 'tis: This, I say, is expressly owned by Spinoza, to be the unavoidable consequence of his own opinion.

Clarke. On the Attributes, Prop. 9.

2038

I had charged the Cartesians with being unavoidably reduced to the absurdity of making matter a necessarily existing being.—Clarke. Evidences, Pref.

An immoral being so full of imprudence and suffering as you have seen it is, many and severe reflections on their own mistaken choice, must unavoidably torture the minds of the vicious, from time to time, be they ever so industrious to banish them.—Secker, vol. ii. Ser. 19.

UN-AUSPICIOUS. Usually written inauspicious; unlucky, unfortunate, unhappy.

*Seo. Haste, and break off your unauspicious rites:
The instant dangers summon you away.*

Shakspeare is thought to have formed his play [Ant. and Cleop.] on this story from North's translation of Amyot's unauthentic French Plutarch.

Warton. English Poetry, vol. iii. p. 20.

Now in the first place, the instances themselves are unauthenticated by testimony; and, in theory, to say the least of them, open to great objections.

Paley. Natural Theology, c. 23.

UN-AUTHORISED. Not founded upon surety; not empowered, not accredited, not warranted.

O how in those dost thou instruct these times,
That rebels' actions are but valiant crimes.
And carried, though with shout and noise, confess!
A wild and an unauthoris'd wickedness!

B. Jonson. A Vision on the Muses of M. Drayton.

I beg the reader to compare these relations, taken from authentic papers, with the Doctor's unauthorized suggestions, that the missionaries told what stories they would, and the Society believed them, or wilfully neglected this part of their business.

Secker. Answer to Dr. Mayhew's Observations, &c.

UN-AWAKE. } Not upon watch; not roused UNAWAKENED. } from inaction, inertness, slumber, sleep.

The schools astonish'd stood; but found it vain
To combat still with demonstration strong,
And unawaken'd dream beneath the blaze
Of truth.

Thomson. On Sir Isaac Newton.

My heat! awake.
What can awake thee, unawak'd by this,
"Expend'd deity on human weal?"

Young. Complaint, Night 4.

Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. xix.

UN-A'WED. Not terrified, or afraid, or affrighted; not overpowered by feelings of the superiority of another.

Unforc'd by punishment, un-aw'd by fear,
His words were simple, and his soul sincere.
Dryden. Ovid. Metam. b. i.

But here he stopped; and, unaw'd by all besides, whether of divine or human, he did not dare to cast so much as one licentious trait against that venerable judicature.
Warburton. Divine Legation, b. iv. Ded.

UN-BA'CKED. Not moved back or backwards; not mounted on the back; not assisted, supported, upheld, encouraged.

First, he for whom thou dost this villany,
Though pleas'd therewith, will not avouch thy fact,
But let the weight of thine own infamy
Fall on thee unsupported, and unback'd.
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. iii.

As when a smith and 's man (lame Vulcan's fellowes)
Call'd from the anvil or the buffing bellows,
To clap a well-wrought shoe (for more than pay)

Fourteen or fifteen plantains or bananas, each of them six or seven inches long, and four or five round, and near a quart of the pounded bread-fruit, is as substantial as the thickest unbaked custard.—Cook. First Voyage, b. i. c. 17.

UN-BA/LANCED. Not weighed by equal proportions; not in equipoise; not having equal weight, force, power, authority.

Thus good or bad, to one extreme betray
Th' unbalance'd mind, and snatch the man away;
For virtue's self may too much zeal be had;
The worst of madmen is a saint run mad.
Pope. Imitation of Horace, b. i. Ep. 6.

Let earth unbalance'd from her orbit fly,
Planets and suns run lawless through the sky.
Id. Ess. on Man, Ess. 1.

And thou who never yet of human wrong
Lost the unbalanced scale, great Nemesis!
Byron. Child Harold, c. 4.

UN-BA'LLAST. } Not having a lading or UNBA'LLASTED. } loading to steady or give UNBA'LLASTING, n. } steadiness, (sc. to a vessel in the water) or to any thing in its motion or action;—not steadied.

To unballast—is to remove such lading.

And now on the sudden transported under another climate to be toss'd and turmoil'd with their unballasted wits in fathomless and unquiet deeps of controversy, do for the most part grow into hatred and contempt of learning, mock'd and deluded all this while with ragged notions and babblements.—Milton. Of Education.

He must needs be like a light unballasted vessell, that rises and falls with every wave, and depends onely on the mercy of wind and water.
Bp. Hall. Heaven upon Earth, § 25.

It is necessary time and pains that is given to the unballasting of a ship, casting out the earth and sand, when it is to be laden with spices. We must be emptied more, if we would have of that fulness and riches which we are longing for.—Leighton. Com. upon the First Epistle of Peter.

Whilst alas! my timorous muse
Unambitious tracts pursues;
Does with weak unballast wings,
About the mossy brooks and springs,
And all inferior beauteous things,
Like the laborious bee,
For little drops of honey flee,
And there with humble sweets contents her industry.
Cowley. The Praise of Pindar.

But as at sea th' unballast'd vessel rides,
Cast to and fro, the sport of winds and tides;
So in the bounding chariot toss'd on high,
The youth is hurry'd headlong through the sky.
Addison. Ovid. Metam. b. ii.

UNB

UN-BA'NDED. Not tied or fastened; not having a band, or fastening.

But I pardon you for that, for simply your having in beard, is a younger brother's reuennue, then your hose should be vngarter'd, your bonnet unbanded, your sleeue vnbutton'd, your shoo vntide, and euerie thing about you, demonstrating a careless desolation.
Shakespeare. As You Like It, Act iii. sc. 2.

UN-BAPTIZED. Not dipped or merged; not having received the rite of baptism.

And as for infantes dyeng unbaptized, in manye of these thynges that I haue rehersed by the way, many men wil peraduenture thynk otherwyse.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 1287.

He being but a child, in his clear bosom felt
The most undoubted truth, and yet unbaptiz'd long.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 24.

UN-BAR, v. To remove the bar or implement of defence, the guard or security.

Eftsoones himselfe in glitterand armes he dight,
And his well proued weapons to him bent;
So taking courteous conge he behight,
Those gates to be unbard, and forth he went.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 11.

It is vicious and faulty it self, spoileth and marreth clean the intemperate and incontinent person, by making no resistance to his appetites and demands, but letting all lie unfortified, unbarrd, and unlockt, yeelding easie accesse and entrance to those that will make assault and give the attempt.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 136.

For all my labours in so long a space,
Sure I may plead a title to your grace;
Enter the town: I then unbarr'd the gates,
When I remov'd their tutelary fates.
Dryden. Ovid. Metam. b. xiii.

UN-BARBED. Not sheared, shaven, or mown.

— For whom, when with his hounds
The labouring hunter tufts the thick unbarbed grounds
Where harbour'd is the hart; there often from his feed
The dogs of him do find.—Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 13.

Prythee now say you will, and goe about it.
Corio. Must I goe shew them my unbarb'd sconce?
Must I with my base tongue giue to my noble heart
A lye, that it must beare? well, I will doo't.
Shakespeare. Coriolanus, Act iii. sc. 2.

UN-BARK, v. To go out of a bark, i.e. a stout or strong vessel; to strip off the bark, i.e. the coat defending or protecting the tree.

This being past, the next day after our arriual in the sayd port, wee did unbarke our selues and went on lande vp to the citie or head towne of the great Canaria, where we remained 18. or 20. dayes.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 448.

It hath been observed, that a branch of a tree, being unbarked some space at the bottome, and so set into the ground, hath growen.—Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 654.

UN-BARRICA'DOED. Not barred; i. e. stopped or blocked up, obstructed, fortified.

Rather (let him) quietly take up with what he could find in the glutted markets, the unbarricaded streets, the drowsy Old Bailey judges, or, at worst, the airy, wholesome pillory of Old England.—Burke. Letter to William Elliot, Esq.

UN-BASE. Not low or mean, not degrading, or disgraceful.

How should we know thy soul had been secur'd,
In honest counsels, and in way unbase.
Daniel. To Henry Wriothesly.

UN-BA'SHED. } i.e. unabashed, (qv.)
UNBA'SHFUL. } Unbashful.—
Not filled or overflowing with, not feeling, shame.

The watch gave a quick alarm to the soldiers within, whom practice already having prepared, began each, with unbashed hearts, or at least countenances, to look to their charge or obedience which was allotted to them.
Sidney. Arcadia, b. iii.

For in my youth I neuer did apply
Hot, and rebellious liquors in my bloud,
Nor did not with unbashfull forehead woe
The meanes of weaknesse and debilitie.
Shakespeare. As You Like It, Act ii. sc. 3.

UN-BA'TED, i.e. unabated, (qv.)

Where is the horse that doth vntread againe
His tedious measures with the unbated fire,
That he did pace them first: all things that are,
Are with more spirit chaced then enioy'd.
Shakespeare. Merchant of Venice, Act ii. sc. 6.

UNB

— But my guards
Are you, great Powers, and the unbated strengths
Of a firm conscience, which shall arm each step Ta'en for the state; and teach me slack no pace
For fear of malice.—B. Jonson. Catiline, Act iii. sc. 4.

UN-BA'THED. Not wetted, washed, or moistened.

— Let her but shew me
A ruin'd cheek like mine, that holds his colour
And writes but sixteen years in spight of sorrows,
An unbathed body; smiles, that give but shaddows,
And wrinkle not the face.
Beaum. & Fletch. Love's Pilgrimage, Act iii. sc. 2.

Fierce Pasimond their passage to prevent,
Thrust full on Cymon's back in his descent,
The blade return'd unbath'd, and to the handle bent.
Dryden. Cymon & Iphigenia.

For whence, my guest! should thy beliefe arise,
That I deserve past other of my sex
The praise of wisdom, if unbath'd, unoil'd,
Ill-clad, thou sojourn here?
Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. xix.

UN-BAT'TERED. Not beaten or knocked, not struck or bruised.

I cannot strike at wretched kernes, whose armes
Are hyrd to beare their stauces; either thou Macbeth,
Or else my sword with an unbattered edge
I sheath againe vndeeded.
Shakespeare. Macbeth, Act v. sc. 7.

UN-BAY. To free from quiet, security or restraint.

I ought now to loose the reigns of my affections, to unbay
the current of my passions, and live on without boundary or measure.—Norris. Miscellanies.

UN-BE'ARDED. Having nothing for the cutter, parer, shaver, mower; nothing resembling the hair of the chin.

The people are of good stature, wel in body proportioned, with small slender hands and feet, with broad visages, and smal eyes, wide mouthes; the most part unbearded, great lips, and close toothed.—Hackluyt. Voyages, p. 104.

Th' unbearded youth, his guardian once being gone,
Loves dogges and horses; and is ever one
I' the open field.—B. Jonson. Horace. Art of Poetry.

As when a sudden storm of hail and rain
Beats to the ground the yet unbearded grain,
Think not the hopes of harvest are destroy'd
On the flat field, and on the naked void.
Dryden. Britannia Rediviva.

UN-BEA'RING. Not bringing forth or producing.

Unbearable is common in speech.

But either to the clasping vine
Does the supporting poplar wed,
Or with his pruning-hook disjoin
Unbearing branches from their head,
And grafts more happy in their stead.
Dryden. Horace, Ep. 2.

UN-BEAST, v. To divest of the form, or qualities of a beast.

Thus we the guiltie scourge! Thus thus we our Revenge advance! such, and so great our powre!
Let him unbeast the beast (as heretofore Phoronis) and her wanton shape restore.
Sandys. Ovid. Metam. b. ii.

UN-BE'ATEN. Not struck or hit; not struck down, levelled, trodden.

Howere his talke, his company pleas'd well;
His mare went truer than his chronicle;
And even for conscience sake, unspurr'd, unbeaten,
Brought us six miles, and turn'd taylor at Nuneaten.
Corbet. Iter Boreale.

Both Love's high-way, yet by Love's self unbeaten,
Most like the milky path which crosses heaven.
P. Fletcher. A Hymn at the Marriage of my Cousins.

Where hadst thou room, great author! where to roll
The mighty theme of an immortal soul?
Through paths unknown, unbeaten, whence were brought Thy proofs so strong for immaterial thought.
Young. Letter to Mr. Tickell.

UN-BEAU'TEOUS. } Not having those UNBEAU'TIFUL. } qualities that are agreeable or pleasing to the senses, in the material world; not having those intellectual or moral qualities which are pleasing or agreeable to the mind.

The sanctifying spirit that beautifies the soul, is an humbling spirit also, to make it unbeauteous in its own eyes.
Hammond, vol. iv. Ser. 8.

We stick in the shell and superficies of them, and seek no further; that makes them unbeautiful, and unsavory to us and that use of them turns into an empty custom.

Leighton. Com. on Peter, v. 21.

It is intended also for the ornament of the church: I say ornament: for I cannot persuade my self, that God ever designed his church for a rude, naked, unbeautiful lump: or to lay the foundations of purity in the ruins of decency.

South, vol. iii. Ser. 11.

UN-BECOMING. } Not convenient or con-UNBECOMINGNESS. } current; not fitting, decent, appropriate, or suitable.

Altho' he receives no addition of happiness by the return of glory from his creatures, yet it is a thing he values, his glory he will not give to another; and it is unbecoming the excellency of his majesty to be disappointed in his end.

Hale. Cont. Of Humility.

Let us learn from hence, to abstain from all such rash and horrid imprecations, which the ears of sober heathens would tingle at; but which are more unbecoming, and more heinous (as, I fear, they are more familiar) in the mouths of Christians.—Atterbury, vol. iii. Ser. 5.

Or, if words are sometimes to be used, they ought to be grave, kind and sober, representing the ill, or unbecomingness of the faults, rather than a hasty rating of the child for it.—Locke. Of Education, § 77.

Their dress has been mentioned already, particularly their large round head-dresses of feathers, which were far from being unbecoming.—Cook. First Voyage, b. ii. c. 6.

UN-BED, v. To move out of bed.

Eels unbed themselves, and stir at the noise of thunder.
Walton. Angler.

UN-BEEN. One of H. More's peculiars. Without having been, or existed.

— When they passed have
Their gloomy orb (false shades eas'ly deceive)
Not only they that visible bereave
Of life and being, but the hidden might
And root of motion unliv'd, unbeen'd, they leave
In their vain thoughts.
More. Song of the Soul, pt. ii. b. i. c. 1. st. 15.

UN-BEFITTING. Not suiting or becoming. See UNBECOMING.

These are things to no purpose; not only for the levity and theatrical gayeties and representations unbefitting the gravity and purity and spirituality of Christian religion . . .

Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. iii. c. 4.

This time, you know, calls for a discourse concerning the resurrection of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ; of this you hear no sound in the words, which I have read, and therefore you conclude it a text unbefitting the day.
Hales. Rem. Ser. Luke, xvi. 25.

UN-BEFO'OL, v. To restore from the state or condition of a fool; of one fooled or gulled.

A man's way out of error, lies thro' the paths of conviction; and he that recovers a fool must first unbefool him to that degree, as to persuade him of his folly.
South, vol. vii. Ser. 8.

UN-BEGE'T, v. Not gotten, or gained; not generated or produced.

Wherein the sonnes will that is yet unbegotten, can nothyng make nor marre.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 580.

I'll raise 'em to a regiment, and then command 'em,
When they turn disobedient, unbeget 'em;
Knock 'em o' th' head, and put in new.
Beaum. & Fletch. Humorous Lieutenant, Act iv. sc. 2.

— In thy power
It lies, yet ere conception to prevent
The race unblest, to being yet unbegot.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. x.

And to the intent thou live unbeguiled, I wyll tell the a secrete.—Golden Boke, c. 42.

Come, come away from wrong, from craft, from toil,
Possess thine own with right, with truth, with peace;
Break from these snares, thy judgment unbeguile,
Free thine own torment, and my grief release.
Daniel. Letter from Octavia to Marcus Antonius.

That he might unbeguile and win them, he designed to write a deliberate and sober treatise on the church's power to make canons for the use of ceremonies, and by law to impose an obedience to them, as upon her children.
Walton. Life of Hooker.

Blue-ey'd Minerva free preserves her heart,
A virgin unbeguile'd by Cupid's art;
In shining arms the martial maid delights,
O'er war presides, and well-disputed fights.
Congreve. Homer. Hymn to Venus.

UN-BEHO'VELY. Not meet, fitting, or agreeable.

Upon his wombe sterres thre,
And viii. vpon his taile hath he,
Whiche of his kynde is moist and colde,

And he did not many miracles there, for their *unbelefe*s sake.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

Jhesus answeride and seide, a thou generacioun unbeleful & weiward, how longe schal I be with you how longe schal I suffre you? bringe ye him hidur to me.
Wiclif. Matthew, c. 17.

He that bileueth in the sone, hath euerlastinge lyf: but he that is unbeleueful to the sone, schal not se euerlastinge lyf; but the wraththe of God dwellith in him.—Id. Jon, c. 3.

Wee saie also, that the minister doth execute the authoritie of binding and shutting, as often as he shutteth vp the gate of the kingdome of heauen against unbeleueing and stubborn persons, denouncing vnto them Gods vengeaunce, and euerlasting punishment.
Jewel. Replie vnto M. Hardinge, p. 14.

For here was made a foreshewe of the churche, that shoulde bee gathered together of the Gentiles, because the synagoge dyd throughe her unbeleife, repell the ghospell.
Udal. Marke, c. 3.

This to almighty God hath so been thought good, to thetēt that al creatures maie vnderstand, nothing to be so unbeleuable among mē, which the power of God is not able to bring to effecte, if it be his pleasure.—Id. Luke, c. 1.

And thoughte it semed to bee a thing unbeleuable that was promysed, yet bothe Abraham beleued, and God performed.
Id. Dedis, c. 7.

Doest thou beleue so, said the Sophie vnto me? Yea that I do, said I: Oh thou unbeleueuer, said he, we haue no neede to haue friendship with the unbeleueuers, and so willed me to depart.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 349.

— And I, as did Æneas,
Will on my back, spite of the Myrmidons,
Carry this warlike lady, and through seas
Unknown, and unbeliev'd, seek out a land,
Where like a race of noble Amazons
We'll root our selves, and to our endless glory
Live, and despise base men.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Woman's Prize, Act ii. sc. 2.

I made his valour stoop, and brought that name soar'd to so unbeliev'd a height, to fall beneath mine.
Id. A King and no King, Act ii.

Which unbeleueing man, that is not mov'd
To credit aught, if not by reason prov'd,
And tyes the over-working powre to doe
Nought otherwise than nature reacheth to,
Held as most fabulous.
Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b. ii. s. 4.

Many heare the bookes of God, and beleue them not. Howbeit, their unbeleefe in that case we may not impute vnto any weakness or vnsufficiency in the meanes which is vsed towards them, but to the wilfull bent of their obstinate hearts against it.—Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, b. v. § 22.

Religion did first take place in cities, and in that respect was a cause why the name of Pagans, which properly signifieth country people, came to be used in common speech for the same that infidels and unbeleueers were.—Id. Ib. § 80.

I scarce can think him such a worthless thing,
Unless he praise some monster of a king;
Or virtue, or religion turn to sport,
To please a lewd, or unbelieving court.
Pope. Imit. of Horace, b. ii. Ep. 1.

For the mind doth, by every degree of affected unbelief, contract more and more of a general indisposition towards believing.—Atterbury, vol. ii. Ser. 2.

And it was his settled opinion, that the advancement and increase of natural knowledge, would always be of service to the cause and interest of true religion, in opposition to atheists and unbelievers of all sorts.
Clarke. On the Attributes, Pref.

Him answer'd, then, the hero, toll-inur'd:
My friend! since, hopeless of thy lord's return,
Thou art thus resolute in unbelief,
I will not merely say, but I will swear
Most truly, that Ulysses comes again.
Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. xiv.

UN-BELO'VED. Not chosen, selected or preferred—as an object of desire, or gratification, grace or favour.

His tender parent could no longer bear;
But, interposing, sought to sooth his care.
Who er'e you are, not unbelov'd by Heav'n,
Since on our friendly shoar your ships are driv'n:
Have courage.
Dryden. Virgil. Æneis, b. i.

UN-BE'LTED. Ungirded.

They heard and rose, and tremulously brave
Rush where the sound invoked their aid to save;
They come with half-lit tapers in their hands,
And snatch'd in startled haste unbelted brands.
Byron. Lara, c. 1.

UN-BEND, v. To move from a curved, crooked or bowed line into a straight or direct one; to turn into a direct line.

Fuller. Worthies. Oxfordshire.

They clearly see that their highest perfection consists in the most even and unbiased conformity to the command of God.—Hale. Cont. Meditations upon the Lord's Prayer.

The barbarous affront she had been exposed to, for constancy to her religion, had not, among unbiased judges, lessened the high esteem her former life had justly given them of her vertue.—Boyle. Works, vol. v. p. 265.

Only he, that would thus give the mind its flight, and send abroad his inquiries into all parts after truth, must be sure to settle in his head determined ideas of all that he employs his thoughts about, and never fail to judge himself, and judge unbiasedly, of all that he receives from others, either in their writings or discourses.

Locke. Conduct of the Understanding, § 3.

But indeed the humble and unbiased minds of the illiterate are much better judges of truth, when proposed to them, than such as are blinded with prejudice, worldly interest, or sensual pleasures.—Secker, vol. ii. Ser. 10.

UN-BID. } A. S. Unbeden.

UNBI'DDEN. } Not asked, not required, not demanded, not commanded.

Volatil Hermes, and call up unbound
In various shapes old Proteus from the sea
Draind through a limbec to his native forme.

Milton. Paradise Lost, b. iii.

The next morning the cloath being rubb'd off, I unbound it, and found the worm broken off, and the hole quite healed up.—Dampier. Voyages, an. 1676.

This riband bind beneath thy breast,
Celestial texture. Thenceforth ev'ry fear
Of death dismiss, and, laying once thy hands
On the firm continent, unbind the zone,
Which thou shalt cast far distant from the shore
Into the deep.

Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. v.

UN-BI'SHOP, v. To be without, to divest of, the rank or character of bishop.

For, I must profess that I cannot look upon Titus as so far un-bishop'd yet, but that he still exhibits to us all the essentials of that jurisdiction, which to this day is claimed for Episcopal.—South, vol. i. Ser. 5.

UN-BITTED. Not withheld or restrained (as by the bit of a bridle). See UNBRIDLED.

But we haue reason to coole our raging motions, our carnall stings, or unbitted lusts: whereof I take this, that you call loue, to be a sect, or seyen [scion.]

Shakespeare. Othello, Act i. sc. 3.

UN-BLA'MED. } Not attacked or as-UNBLA'MEABLE. } sailed, (as to fame, cha-UNBLA'MEABLY. } racter or conduct;) not UNBLA'MEABLENESS. } infamed, defamed, or found fault with; not rebuked, chided, reprimanded, unfavourably censured.

And because there can be betwixte God and synners no peace, it hath pleased him frely to forgeue al the offences of your former life, to thentent he woulde in his sight make you holy, unblameable, and faultles.—Udal. Colossians, c. 1.

In which she shew'd, how that discourteous knight (Whom Tristram slew) them in that shadow found, Joyning together in unblam'd delight,
And him vnarm'd, as now he lay on ground,
Charg'd with his speare, and mortally did wound.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 2.

— They that durst to strike
At so examplous, and unblamed a life,
As that of the renowned Germanicus,
Will not sit down with that exploit alone:
He threatens many that hath injured one.

B. Jonson. Sejanus, Act ii. sc. 4.

Those their pure unblamable spirits, which live not only in heaven, but in their writings, they must attain with new attainures, which no Protestant ever before aspers'd them with.—Milton. Bucer. Of Divorce. To the Parliament.

For the whole religion of a Christian is to live unblameably; that is, in all holiness and purity of conversation.

Bp. Taylor, vol. iii. Ser. 3.

He lov'd his people, him they idoliz'd:
And thence proceeds my mortal hatred to him,
That thus unblameable to all besides
He err'd to me alone.

Dryden. Don Sebastian, Act i. sc. 1.

Unblameableness of life, an untainted pureness of manners, it defends the person and confirms the office: as cleanliness, it both refreshes, and, at the same time, also strengthens the body.—South, vol. vii. Ser. 4.

From that time forth I lived so very unblamably, that I was made president of a college of brachmans.
Spectator, No. 345.

He said, and this advice above the rest,
Which Absalom's mild nature suited best;
Unblam'd of life, (ambition set aside),
Not stain'd with cruelty, nor puffed with pride.
Dryden. Absalom & Achitophel.

UN-BLA'STED. Not struck as with a sudden gust; not withered or destroyed.

The unblasted bay, to conquests due,
The Persian peach, and fruitful quince,
And there the forward almond grew.
Peacham. Embl. (1612.)

UN-BLE'ACHING. Not whitening, or causing to be white or pale.

Albeit unworthy of the prey-bird's maw,
Let their bleach'd bones, and blood's unbleaching stain,
Long mark the battle-field with hideous awe.
Byron. Child Harold's Pilgrimage, c. 1.

UN-BLEED'ING. } Not shedding, pouring UNBLOO'DY. } forth or emitting blood:—
UNBLOO'DIED. } the red fluid in the veins of animals, so called.

Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 70.

That when war fails, peace must make war with words,
And b' arm'd unto destruction ev'n as strong,
As were in ages past our civil swords:
Making as deep, although unbleeding wounds;
That when as fury fails, wisdom confounds.
Daniel. To Sir T. Egerton.

— This hath brought Sweet peace to sit in that bright state she ought,
Unbloody, or untroubled.
B. Jonson. K. James's Entertainment.

Petilius Cerealis by appointment of Vespasian succeeding, had to doe with the populous Brigantes in many battails, and som of those, not unbloodie.
Milton. History of Britaine, b. ii.

Who finds the partridge in the puttocks nest,
But may imagine how the bird was dead,
Although the kyte soare with unbloudied beake?
Euen so suspicious is this tragedie.
Shakespeare. 2 Pt Hen. VI. Act iii, sc. 2.

But thus unlau'rel'd to descend in vain,
By all forgotten, save the lonely breast,
And mix unbleeding with the boasted slain,
While Glory crowns so many a meaner crest!
Byron. Child Harold's Pilgrimage, c. 1.

Soon, by righteous judgment, in the line
Of his descending progeny was found
The first artificer of death; the shrewd
Contriver, who first sweated at the forge
And forc'd the blunt, and yet unbloodied steel
To a keen edge, and made it bright for war.
Cowper. Task, b. v.

UN-BLE'MISHED. } Having no blame or UNBLE'MISHABLE. } cause of blame; no
UNBLE'MISHING. } stain or spot, to sully, taint or tarnish—the original soundness, fairness or purity.

The next day after, being the 4 of July, the LL. general caused the town of Cadiz to be set on fire, and rased and defaced so much as they could, the faire cathedral church, and the religious houses only being spared, and left unblemished.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. 1. p. 618.

Said Arthegall; what foule disgrace is this,
To so faire lady, as yee seeme in sight,
To blot your beauty, that unblemisht is,
With so foule blame, as breach of faith once plight,
Or change of loue for any world's delight?
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 11.

That undeflour'd and unblemishable simplicity of the gospel, not she her self, for that could never be, but a false-whited, a lawly resemblance of her, like that air-born Helena in the fables, made by the sorcery of prelates, instead of calling her disciples from the receipt of custom, is now turn'd publican herself.
Milton. Reason of Church Government, b. ii. c. 3.

From charcoales blown I know sparkes leap apace, but though straw-houses may enkindle by them; yet upon solid coverings they without danger dye; or if at most they leave a mote behind, it is but dead, and with the next fair wind unblemishing blowes away.—Feltham. Ser. on Luke, xiv. 20.

— With these, at eve,
They cheerful loaded to their tents repair;
Where, all day long in useful care employ'd,
Their kind unblemish'd wives the fire prepare.
Thomson. Winter.

But then every one understood this to be a mark of the unblemished integrity of that illustrious body, amidst a very general corruption.
Warburton. Divine Legation, (ed. 1742.)

UN-BLENCHED. Not blinked or blinded; not shunning or shrinking from the light, the view; not withdrawing from it.

Yea there, where every desolation dwells,
By grots, and caverns shagg'd with horrid shades,
She may pass on with unbleach'd majesty,
Be it not done in pride, or in presumption.
Milton. Comus.

UN-BLE'NDED. Not mixed or mingled.

Neither can any [element] boast of a knowledge, which is depurate from the defilement of a contrary, within this atmosphere of flesh; it dwells no where in unblended proportions on this side the Empyreum.
Glanvill. Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 7.

But the mistake of those who thus took offence at a weeping Saviour arose from considering him solely in the high character of his unblended divinity.
Knox, vol. iv. Ser. 27.

UN-BLE'SSED. } Having no bliss, happi-UNBLE'SSEDNESS. } ness, or felicity, no pleasure or prosperity, bestowed, proffered or promised;
having happiness or felicity withheld or denied.

Udal. John, c. 20.

So vp he rose, and thence amounted streight,
Which when the Carle beheld, and saw his guest
Would safe depart, for all his subtil sleight,
He chose an halter from among the rest,
And with it hung himselfe, vnbid, unblest.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 10.

— Or let me know,
Why mine own barber is unblest, with him
My poor chin too, for 'tis not cizard just
To such a favourite's glass.
Beaum. & Fletch. Two Noble Kinsmen, Act i. sc. 2.

What peace was that which fell to rob the French by sea, to the imbaring of all our merchants in that kingdom?
which brought forth that unblest expedition to the Isle of Rhee.—Milton. Answer to Eikon Basilike, § 9.

High on an oak which never leaf shall bear,
He breath'd his last, expos'd to open air,
And there his corps unblest'd, is hanging still,
To show the change of winds with his prophetick bill.
Dryden. The Hind and the Panther.

UN-BL'GHTEd. Not withered or destroyed; not struck with desolation.

In such a world, so thorny, and where none
Finds happiness unblighted, or, if found,
Without some thistly sorrow at it's side.
Cowper. Task, b. iv.

UN-BL'NDFOLD. Not having the sight stopped or obstructed (by any thing folded or wrapped over the eyes).

Which when as Cupid heard, he wexed wroth,
And doubting to be wronged, or beguiled,
He bade his eyes to be unblindfold both,
That he might see his men, and muster them by oth.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 7.

UN-BLOO'DY. See UNBLEEDING.

Then with an eye of mercy inform'd his judgment,
How yet unripe we were, unblown, unharden'd,
Unfitted for such fatal ends.
Beaum. & Fletch. Humorous Lieutenant, Act ii. sc. 4.

— No sir, I hold my beauty,
Wash but these sorrows from it, of a sparkle
As right and rich as hers, my means are equal,
My youth as much unblown.
Id. Love's Pilgrimage, Act iii. sc. 2.

UN-BLOWN. Not struck by wind, or air.

Prodigious lamps by night unwet,
And unblown out.—More. Life of the Soul, c. 2. § 118.

UN-BLUNTED. Not stopped, not dulled.

He lends him vain Goliath's sacred sword
(The fittest help just Fortune could afford);
A sword whose weight, without a blow might slay,
Able unblunted to cut hosts away.
Cowley. The Davideis, b. iil.

UN-BLU'SHING. } Not reddening, or bloom-UNBLU'SHINGLY. } ing with the redness—of shame or modesty.

To God and man, unworthy any trust,
Preaching unto that fortune that was new,
And with unblushing faces foremost thrust.
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. ii.

Then to adorn some warbling eunuch turn'd,
With Midas' ears they crowd; or to the buz
Of masquerade unblushing; or, to show
Their scorn of Nature, at the tragic scene
They mirthful sit, or prove the comic true.
Thomson. Liberty.

The most unblushing impudence could hardly go farther than to affix the name of its plunderer to the walls of the Acropolis.—Byron. Child Harold, c. 2. Note 6.

They now begin with a villa, as if it were as necessary as a warehouse; and end with bankruptcy as naturally, as unreluctantly, and as unblushingly as if it had been the honourable object of their mercantile pursuit.
Knox. Ess. No. 8.

UN-BOA'STFUL. Not magnifying, exaggerating, vaunting, or displaying ostentatiously.

Oft in humble station dwells
Unboastful worth, above fastidious pomp.
Thomson. Summer.

UN-BO'DIED. Freed, loosed, parted or departed—from body, or corporal, or material substance. Chaucer has the verb.

Emong all this, the fine of the ieopardie
Of Hector gan approchen wonder blive,
The fate would his soule should unbodie,
And shapen had a meane it out to drive.
Chaucer. Troil. & Cres. b. v.

These diseases mowen well by duresse of sorowe, make my life to unbodie, and so for to die.
Id. Testament of Loue, b. i.

I neuer founde among them al one reason yet, wherby me thought it püed otherwise, but y^t God may make the bodyly corporall water, able to worke vpon the unbodied incorporiall soule.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 387.

Herevpon followed a feuer through increasing of a flegmatike humor bred by long rest, that after 14 moneths space unbodied his ghost.—Holinshed. Hist. of Scotland. Cennall.

Death with most grim and griesly visage seene,
Yet is he nought but parting of the breath;
Ne ought to see, but like a shade to weene,
Unbodied, vnsoul'd, vnheard, vnseene.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vii. c. 8.

Thus all things are but alter'd, nothing dies;
And here and there th' unbodied spirit flies,
By time, or force, or sickness dispossess,
And lodges, where it lights, in man or beast.
Dryden. Of the Pythagorean Philosophy.

UN-BO'ILED. Not seethed, not heated in water, (sc. to a degree called boiling heat.)

Barley in the boyling swelleth not much; wheat swelleth more; rice extreemly; insomuch as a quarter of a pint (unboyled,) will arise to a pint boyled.
Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 857.

UN-BOLT, v. To remove or withdraw the fastening or security; that by which any thing is fastened or secured.

As thei that wend to be lore
Of thinge, whiche than was unborne.—Id. Ib. b. vi.

Deare image of my selfe, she said, that is,
The wretched sonne of wretched mother borne,
Is this thine high advancement? or is this
Th' immortal name, with which thee yet unborne
Thy grandsire Nereus promist to adorne.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 4.

Many a father repents him of his fruitfulness, and hath such sons as he wishes unborn; but to have so gracious and happy a son, as the angel foretold, could not be less comfort than honour to the age of Zecharie.
Bp. Hall. Cont. The Angel & Zichary.

Behold the hand that wrought a nations cure,
Stretch'd to relieve the idiot and the poor,
Proud vice to brand, or injur'd worth adorn,
And stretch the ray to ages yet unborn.
Pope. Imit. of Horace, b. ii. Ep. 1.

UN-BO'RROWED. Not taken or received (upon security) from another; not drawn, derived, or deduced.

Know this, my lord, nobility of blood
Is but a glitt'ring, and fallacious good:
The nobleman is he whose noble mind
Is fill'd with inborn worth, unborrow'd from his kind.
Dryden. The Wife of Bath's Tale.

Yet oft before his infant eyes would run
Such forms as glitter in the muses ray
With orient hues unborrowed of the sun.
Gray. The Progress of Poesy.

fold, to pour forth, to disclose—the contents of the bosom; to divulge, to reveal—the feelings or passions, the affections, the desires of the heart.
See UNBREAST.

I, before all the daughters of my tribe
And of my nation, chose thee from among
My enemies, lov'd thee, as too well thou knew'st,
Too well, unbosom'd all my secrets to thee.
Milton. Samson Agonistes.

Or should I thence, hurried on viewless wing,
Take up a weeping on the mountains wild,
The gentle neighbourhood of grove and spring
Would soon unbosom all her echoes mild.
Id. On the Passion of Christ.

— For who would not refuse
Grief's company, a dull and raw-bon'd spright,
That lanks the cheeks, and pales the freshest sight,
Unbosoming the cheerful breast of all delight?
G. Fletcher. Christ's Victory & Triumph.

— Or rose-buds bright,
Unbosoming their breasts against the light.
Id. Christ's Triumph on Earth.

Along these blushing borders, bright with dew,
And in yon mingled wilderness of flowers,
Fair handed Spring unbosoms every grace,
Throws out the snow-drop, and the crocus first;
The daisy, primrose, violet darkly blue,
And polyanthus of unnumber'd dyes.—Thomson. Spring.

I have hid my vexation from all mankind; but have now taken pen, ink, and paper, and am resolved to un- bosom myself to you, and lay before you what grieves me and all the sex.—Spectator, No. 528.

Could I embody, and unbosom now,
That which is most within me,—could I wreak
My thoughts upon expression.
Byron. Childe Harold's Pilgrimage, c. 3.

UN-BO'TTOMED. Having nothing to stand or rest upon; no foundation; loosed from the foundation.

— Who shall tempt with wandring feet
The dark unbottom'd infinite abyss,
And through the palpable obscure find out
His uncouth way. Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ii.

You are your own deceivers in it; gladly gulled with shadows of faith and repentance, false touches of sorrow, and false flashes of joy, and are not careful to have your souls really unbottomed from themselves, and built upon Christ; to have him your treasure, your righteousness, your all, and to have him your answer unto God your Father.—Leighton. Com. on 1 Peter, c. 3.

UN-BOUGHT. Not procured, acquired, obtained—by payment or purchase.

If she in pens his flock will fold,

Hakewill. Apologie, b. i. c. 3.

UN-BRACE, v. To free from hold, bond, or fastening; from that which tightens, strengthens, confines, restrains.

To loosen, to relax, to remit.

Than gan I there mine armes to unbrace,
Up lifyng my handes full mournfully.
Chaucer. The Lamentation of Mary Magdalen.

Stole syllye to my cabin all unbrac'd,
Took me in his arms, and kiss'd me twentv times,
Yet still I slept.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Sea-Voyage Act ii.

And when from sight or from the judgment-seat,
The virtuous Scipio and wise Lælius met,
Unbraced, with him in all light sports they shared,
Till their most frugal suppers were prepared.
B. Jonson. The Poetaster, Act v. sc. 1.

He doth sit like an unbraced drum, with one of his heads beaten out.—Id. The Induction. The Stage.

Laughter, while it lasts, slackens and unbraces the mind, weakens the faculties, and causes a kind of remissness and dissolution in all the powers of the soul.—Spectator, No. 249.

UN-BRA'IDED. Not knitted, plighted, wreathed.

Clo. Beleeue mee, thou talkest of an admirable conceited fellow, has he any unbraided wares?
Ser. Hee hath ribbons of all the colours i' th' rainebow.
Shakespeare. Winter's Tale, Act iv. sc. 3.

He found her in a white cymar of silk lined with furs,
her little feet unstocking'd and hastily thrust into slippers;
her unbraided hair escaping from under her midnight coil, with little array but her own loveliness.
Scott. Kenilworth, c. 7.

UN-BRA'INED. Not deprived of brains.
To brain is also so used.

— Hast thou ever hope
To come i' the same roome where lovers are;
And 'scape unbrain'd with one of their velvet slippers?
Beaum. & Fletch. Wit at several Weapons, Act iv.

UN-BRA'NDED. Not stamped or marked,
(in token of degradation or debasement.)

Against a persisting stubbornness, or the fear of a reprobate sense, [will be required] a timely separation from the flock by that interdictive sentence, lest his conversation un-prohibited, or unbranded, might breathe a pestilential murrain into the other sheep.
Milton. Animad. upon the Remonst. Defence.

UN-BREAST, v. Equivalent to unbosom, (qv.)

Whose sharpest steel the bone and marrow parts,
And with his keenest point unbreast the naked hearts.
P. Fletcher. The Purple Island, c. 12.

Couldst thou unmask their pomp, unbreast their heart,
How would'st thou laugh at this rich beggerie!
And learn to hate such happy miserie!
Id. Pisc. Eclogues, Ecl. 4.

Swift without motion, to whose open eye
The hearts of wicked men unbreasted lie;
At once absent, and present to them, far, and nigh.
G. Fletcher. Christ's Triumph after Death.

UN-BRE'ATHED. } To breathe a horse, is UNBRE'ATHING. } to give him such exercise as may put his lungs in wholesome breathing;

breathed is—

Not exercised, not exerted, not used or employed.

Unbreathing,—not emitting breath or air.

Ege. Hard handed men, that worke in Athens heere,
Which neuer labour'd in their mindes till now;
And now haue toyled their unbreathed memories
With this same play, against your nuptiall.
Shakespeare. Midsummer Night's Dream, Act v. sc. 1.

Buck. No, so God helpe me, they spake not a word,
But like dumbe statues, or [un] breathing stones,
Star'd each on other, and look'd deadly pale.
Id. Rich. III. Act iii. sc. 7.

UN-BRED. Not well bred, well trained, well educated, (sc.) in good society.

They [children] frequently learn from unbred or debauched servants such language, untowardly tricks and vices, as otherwise they possibly would be ignorant of all their lives.
Locke. Of Education, § 68.

My nephew's a little unbred, you'll pardon him, madam.
Congreve. The Way of the World, Act iii.

UN-BREE'CHED. Not having the breech clothed or covered; not wearing the covering on that part of the body called the breech, i. e. the part where the body breaks or separates: generally, the hinder part; and hence, to unbreech a cannon is to free the breech of it from its fastenings.

— Looking on the lynes
Of my boyes face, me thoughts I did requoyle
Twentie three yeeres, and saw my selfe un-breech'd,
In my greene veluet coat.
Shakespeare. The Winter's Tale, Act i. sc. 2.

Gun. Let the worst come,
I can unbreech a cannon, and without much help
Turn her into the heel.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Double Marriage, Act ii.

UNB

UN-BRE/WED. Not having undergone the process of brewing; i. e. boiling, seething, fermenting various ingredients.

They graze the turf untill'd; they drink the stream
Unbrew'd, and ever full, and unembitter'd
With doubts, fears, fruitless hopes, regrets, despairs;
Mankind's peculiar! reason's precious dower!
Young. Complaint, Night 7.

UN-BRI/BED. } Not having received a gift,
UNBRI/BABLE. } a fee, a perquisite—for partial purposes; not hired or purchased.

Have I not here enough to thank heaven for?
The free air uncorrupted with new flattery,
The water that I touch, unbri'd with odours
To make me sweet to others.
Beaum. & Fletch. Moral Representations.

And though it be cry'd up for impartial and unbribeable, yet I do not see but in many 'tis erroneous, mutable, and uncertain.—Feltham, pt. ii. Res. 83.

All head to counsel, and all heart to act:
The common-weal inspiring every tongue
With fervent eloquence, unbri'd, and bold.
Thomson. Liberty.

UN-BRI/DLED. } Not held in, or withheld;
UNBRI/DLEDNESS. } not restrained, or moderated, or tempered.

Unbridledness,—the licentiousness, the ungovernableness.

Seeing the manifold inconvenience
Falling by unbridled prosperitie,
Which is not tempered with mortal prudence.
Imputed to Chaucer. Prol. to the Rem. of Love.

After that they had sung, danced, and turned 3 times, they fell on running like unbridled horses, through the midst of the thickest woods.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 315.

In sober silence now our quiet lips we close;
And with unbridled tongues forthwith our secret hearts disclose.—Surrey. Paraphrase on Ecclesiastes, c. 3.

What speedy way of wing my plaints should they lay on,
To 'scape the stormy blast that threaten'd is to me?
Rein those unbridled tongues! break that conjured league!
For I decipher'd have amid our town the strife.
Id. Paraphrase on Psalm 55.

Forth was I led, not as I wont afore,
When choice I had to chuse my wandering way;
But whither lucke and loues unbridled lore
Would lead me forth on Fancies bit to play.
Spenser. The Shepheard's Calender. December.

But the event tells us that these remedies [in Sparta, the ephori; in Rome, the tribunes of the people] either little avail the people, or brought them to such a licentious and unbridled democracy, as in fine ruin'd themselves with their own excessive power.
Milton. Way to Establish a Free Commonweath.

The presumption and unbridledness of youth requires the pressing and binding on of this rule: and it is of undeniable equity, even written in nature, due to aged persons.
Leighton. Com. on 1 Peter, c. 5.

UN-BRO/ACHED. Not broken into, not opened.

What greater evil can I wish my foe,
Than his full draught of pleasure, from a cask
Unbroach'd by just authority, ungaug'd
By temperance, by reason unrefin'd?
Young. Complaint, Night 8.

UN-BROID, or Unbraided, (qv.)

— With her salte teres,
Her breast and face ibathed was full wete,
Her mightie tresses of her sonnish heres
Unbroiden, hangen all aboute her eares.
Chaucer. Troil. & Cres. b. iv.

UN-BROILED. Not burned or scorched.

— Do not look to find
A limb in his right place, a bone unbroke,
Nor so much flesh unbroil'd of all that mountain,
As a worm might sup on.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Maid in the Mill, Act iv. sc. 2.

UN-BROKE. } Not parted or disparted,
UNBROKEN. } severed or divided; not interrupted, not infringed. Met.—not having the wildness, the courage, the vigour broken, or crushed, subdued, subjected to the governance or guidance.

And unbrought forth to plead his guiltless cause;
Barring th' anointed liberty of laws.
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. iii.

UN-BRU/ISED. Not beaten or struck together, so as to destroy the continuity of parts; not hurt by beating.

Our cannons malice vainly shall be spent
Against th' invulnerable clouds of heauen,
And with a blessed and vn-vent retyre,
With vnhack'd swords, and helmets all unbruise'd,
We will beare home that lustie blood againe.
Shakespeare. K. John, Act ii. sc. 1.

Corio. Fare ye well:
Thou hast yeares vpon thee, and thou art too full
Of the warres sursets, to go roue with one That's yet unbruise'd.—Id. Coriolanus, Act iv. sc. 1.

Animals which feed upon grass, have their tongues covered with a perforated skin, so as to admit the dissolved food to the papillæ underneath, which, in the mean time, remain defended from the rough action of the unbruised spiculæ.—Paley. Natural Theology, c. 9.

UN-BU/CKLE, v. } To loose the buckle, the UNBU/CKLED. } (bending,) fastening; (so called from bug-an, to bend.)

He unboked his boteles, and bothe he a tamed
With wyn and with oile.
Piers Plouhman, p. 324.

Our hoste lough and swore, "So mote I gon,
This goth aright; unboked is the male;
Let see now who shal tell another tale:
For trewely this game is wel begonne."
Chaucer. The Milleres Prol. v. 3117.

I (whom ye al beleue to be some great high man of price) am vnwoorthy to unbuckle the latchet of his shoes.
Udal. Luke, c. 3.

And why do you wear a sword then? Come unbuckle.
Bes. My lord.
Bac. Unbuckle I say, and give it me.
Beaum. & Fletch. A King & No King, Act iii.

UN-BUILD, v. To destroy the buildings, the established dwelling-places and other structures.
Unbuilt,—not reared or constructed, or raised on foundations; not established or well founded.

If not, I know my strength, and will unbuild
This goodly town; be speedy, and be wise, in a reply.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Maid's Tragedy, Act v.

Tuisco, Gomer's son, from unbuilt Babel brought His people to that place, with most high knowledge fraught,
And under wholesome laws establish'd their abode.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 4.

When bare and unbuilt conclusions are put into their minds, they finding not themselves to haue thereof any great certaintie, imagine that this proceedeth onely from lacke of faith, and that the Spirit of God doth not worke in them, as it doeth in true beleeuers.
Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, b. ii. § 7.

UN-BU/RIED. Not defended, protected, covered by—interment; not interred.

And so gret manqualyn, that mony on unburyed lay.

Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 806.

— Aske that lady
Why is she fair, and why her eyes command me
Stay here to love her. And if she say traytor,
I'm a villain fit to lye unburied.
Beaum. & Fletch. Two Noble Kinsmen, Act iii. sc. 7.

UNC

The gentleman that behaved himself in a very disobedient manner at his late trial in Sheer-lane on the twentieth instant, and was carried off dead upon taking away of his snuff-box, remains still unburied.—Tatler, No. 113.

UN-BU/RNED. } Not fired, or destroyed or UNBU/RNING. } consumed by fire.

The which Anchises in his hand
Bare tho the gods of the land,
Thilke that unbrenned were.
Chaucer. House of Fame, b. i.

We see also burnt wine is more hard and astringent, than wine unburnt.—Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 898.

But Creon, old and impious, who commands
The Theban city, and usurps the lands, Denies the rites of fun'ral fires to those Whose breathless bodies yet he calls his foes.
Unburn'd, unbury'd, on a heap they lie.
Dryden. The Knight's Tale.

What we have said of the unburning fire (which we call light) streaming from the flame of a candle, may easily be apply'd to all other lights depriv'd of sensible heats.
Digby. Of Bodies, c. 7.

UN-BU/RTHEN, v. To remove, to free from the weight or load borne; to deliver or relieve from any weight or pressure.

Moreouer it is not possible that so great course of floods and current, so high swelling tides with continuance of so deepe waters, can be digested here without unburdening themselves into some open sea beyond this place, which argueth the more likelihood of the passage to be hereabouts.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 81.

He [Allen] required to talk with one of the council, saying, if he were unburthen'd of that, which he would then say, he cared not what came of him.
Styrpe. Eccles. Mem. Edw. VI. an. 1548.

For when a man hath done a wicked part,
How doth he strive t' excuse, to make the best,
To shift the fault, t' unburthen his charg'd heart.
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. iii.

Sharpe Buckingham unburthens with his tongue,
The enuious load that lyes vpon his heart.

Both unbuzom and bolde.—Piers Plouhman, p. 28.

For ich formest & ferst, to fader & to moder
Have ybe unboxome.—Id. p. 88.

For if that thou unbuzome bee
To loue, I not in what degree
Thou shalte thy good worde acheue.—Gower. Con. A. b. i.

And if them lacketh, that thei wolde,
Anone thei falle in suche a peine,
That euer unbuzomly thei pleine
Upon fortune, and curse and crie,
That thei woll not her hertes plie
To suffre, tyll it better fall.—Id. Ib.

The nere this hil was vpon chance
To take his deliuerance,
The more unboxomly he criede.—Id. Ib. b. vi.

And though I make no semblaunt,
Myn herte is all disobeisant
And in this wise I me confesse
Of that ye clepe unbuzomnes.—Id. Ib. b. i.

UN-CA/BLED. Not fastened or secured by a cable; i. e. the rope by which the ship's anchor is held.

— There is a certain port
Sacred to Phœreys, ancient of the deep,
Form'd by converging shores, abrupt alike
And prominent, which from the spacious bay
Exclude all boist'rous winds; within it ships,
The port once gain'd, uncabled ride secure.
Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. xlii.

UN-CA'GED. Not shut in, fastened, or confined.

The uncaged soul flew through the air.
Fanshew. Poems, (ed. 1676,) p. 299.

A saline substance, subtler than sal ammoniac, carried up with it uncalcined gold in the form of subtle exhalations.
Boyle.

UN-CALLED. Not named, not invoked, or appealed to; not invoked, or summoned, or cited; not proclaimed.

And to declare more playnely his intente, he [J. Cæsar] made an edict or degree, that noo man shulde prease to come to him uncalled, and that they shuld haue good awaite, that they spake not in such familiar faciō to him, as they before had ben accustomed.—Sir T. Elyot. The Governour, b. ii. c. 5.

The Spirit led thee; thine invincible strength did not animate thee into this combat, uncalled.
Bp. Hall. Cont. Christ Tempted.

But he, uncall'd, his pation to controul,
Divulg'd the secret whispers of his soul:
Stood forth th' accusing Sathan of his crimes,
And offer'd to the Moloch of the times.
Dryden. The Hind & the Panther.

These he will endeavour to render habitual so as that they may start up to the thought uncalled and gather strength enough to over-power others he wishes to eradicate.
Search. Light of Nature, vol. i. pt. ii. c. 27.

UN-CALM, v. To disturb, or disquiet,—the calm, gentleness, or tranquillity.

What strange disquiet has uncalm'd your breast,
Inhuman fair, to rob the dead of rest?—Dryden.

UN-CAMP, v. To remove, drive away, or expel—from the field of battle, from the lodgement on the field of battle.

The Britons dispatching messengers round about, to how few the Romans were reduc'd, what hope of prise and booty, and now if ever of freeing themselves from the fear of like invasion hereafter, by making these an example, if they could but now uncamp their enemies.
Milton. History of England, b. ii.

UN-CANCELLED. Not crossed, defaced, effaced, or erased; not annulled or made void.

The breach of it may in such consideration be pardoned yet hardly defended as long as it standeth in force uncancelled.
Hooker. Answers to Travers, § 18.

Their conscience is their accuser, and their accusation is great, and their bills uncancelled, and they have no title to the cross of Christ, no advocate, no excuse.
Bp. Taylor, vol. i. Ser. 8.

UN-CANDID. Not pure, fair, sincere, open, free from design or guile.

This, I conceive, was in resentment of the insincerity of these uncandid adversaries.—Bp. Horsley, vol. i. Ser. 11.

But do I mean to satirise the clergy, it will be asked, and to encourage a disposition to depreciate them and their services? It will be unjust and uncandid to suspect that I can have any such intention.
Knox. Winter Evenings, Even. 69.

UN-CANONICAL. } Not according, con-
UNCANONICALNESS. } forming or agreeing UNCANONIZED. } with rule or law, (sc.)
laid down for the government (of the church).

Uncanonized (in Atterbury),—not by law enrolled among the saints and martyrs.

To these particulars add this, that bishops alone were punished if ordinations were uncanonical, which were most unreasonable if Presbyters did joyn in them, and were causes in conjunction.—Bp. Taylor. Episcopacy Asserted, § 32.

Here was another uncanonicalness, which was particularly in Chads ordination, that he intruded into a see, into which another had been elected.
Bp. Lloyd. Church Government in Britain, b. i. s. 4.

The members of it boast very much of mighty signs and wonders wrought by some canonized, and some uncanonized saints; their legends, their sermons are full of them.
Atterbury, vol. iii. Ser. 1.

UN-CA'NOPIED. Having no veil or covering; not covered or protected.

As if she in her kinde (unhurting elfe)
Did bid me take such lodging as herselfe:
Gladly I took the place the sheepe had given,
Uncanopy'd of any thing but Heaven.
Brown. Britannia's Pastorals, b. i. s. 4.

UN-CA'PABLE. Now more usually written Incapable, (qv.)

Touching them for whom we craue that mercie which is not to be obtained, let vs not thinke that our Sauior did misinstruct his disciples, willing them to pay for the peace euen of such as should be uncapable of so great a blessing.
Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, b. v. § 49.

Wretch that I am, uncapable of all comfort,
And therefore I entreat my friends and kinsfolk;
And you my lord, for some space to forbear
Your courteous visitations.
Beaum. & Fletch. Custom of the Country, Act ii.

Worldly and carnal men, as they have hard hearts, so they have dry eyes; dry, as a pumice-stone, uncapable of tears.—Bp. Hall. Ser. on Philipians, iii. 18, 19.

— And they wrong
The Neapolitans in their report,
That say they are fiery spirits, uncapable
Of the least injury, dangerous to be talk'd with
After a loss.—Massinger. A Very Woman, Act i. sc. 1.

Philosophy, which is nothing but the true knowledge of things, was thought unfit, or uncapable to be brought into well-bred company, and polite conversation.
Locke. Hum. Underst. Ep. Ded.

UN-CAPTIOUS. Not ready, or prompt,—to catch or take offence, to take objection.

Among uncaptious and candid natures, plainness and freedom are the preserves of amity.—Feltham, pt. ii. Res. 43.

UN-CA'RED. Not heeded, minded, regarded.

Their kings (some few excepted) to better their worldly estate (as they thought) left their owne, and their peoples ghostly condition uncared for.
Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, b. v. § 1.

UN-CAR'NATE. Brown seems to aim at some distinction between un and incarnate, (qv.)

Nor need we be afraid to ascribe that to the incarnate Son, which sometimes is attributed to the uncarnate Father.
Brown. Vulgar Errors.

UN-CASE, v. } To remove or strip off the UNCA'SING, n. } enclosure, the investment—that which holds, contains—the hide, the skin;
to flay.

Now, when these counterfeits were thus uncased
Out of the fore-side of their forgery,
And in the sight of all men cleane disgraced,
All gan to jest and gibe full merily
At the remembrance of their knauery.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 3.

The foxe, first author of that treacherie,
He did uncase, and then abroad let flie.
Id. Mother Hubbard's Tale.

Dio. I know that glory
Is like Alcides shirt, if it stay on us
Till pride hath mixt it with our blood; nor can we Part with it at pleasure: when we would uncase,
It brings along with it both flesh and sinews,
And leaves us living monsters.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Propheess, Act v. sc. 6.

So when he was possessed, but not interested in the same, he uncased the crooked conditions which he had couertlie concealed.—Holinshed. Hist. of England, b. v. c. 1.

Commit securely to true wisdom the vanquishing and uncasing of craft and subtlety, which are but her two runnagates: join your invincible might to do worthy and god-like deeds; and then he that seeks to break your union, a cleaving curse be his inheritance to all generations.
Milton. Of Reformation in England, b. ii.

— He, gloomy-brow'd as night,
With uncas'd bow and arrow on the string Peer'd terrible from side to side, as one Euen in date to shoot.—Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. xi.

UN-CAST. Not thrown, tossed, or hurled.

But soon another sort stept in their stead;
No stone unthrown, nor yet no dart uncast.
Surrey. Virgile. Æneis, b. ii.

UN-CA'STELLED. Devoid, deprived of the appearances or appurtenances (e.g. towers, walls, &c.) which distinguish a castel, (qv.)

The first of these [Kirbie's castle] is so uncastelled, the glory of the second so obscured, that very few know (and it were needlesse to tell them) where these houses were fixed.
Fuller. Worthies London.

UN-CA'TECHISED. Not orally, taught instructed, examined, questioned.

If to prevent sects and schisms, who is so unread or so uncatechis'd in story, that hath not heard of many sects refusing books as a hindrance, and preserving their doctrine unmix'd for many ages, only by unwritten traditions?
Milton. Speech for Unlicens'd Printing.

UN-CA'USED. Having no antecedent or prior agent, or active power which produced, or effected.

Let them turn it which way they please, the absurdity still recurs, till they please to allow, (what is both sense and truth,) that the first cause is absolutely uncaused, and that it is nonsense to talk of any ground or cause of that substance which is itself the ground and cause of all things.
Waterland. Works, vol. iv. p. 75.

What less than wonders, from the wonderful;
What less than miracles, from God, can flow?
Admit a God—that mystery supreme!
That cause uncaus'd! all other wonders cease.
Young. Complaint, Night 8.

Thus, God is necessary;—the mind cannot think of him at all without thinking of him as existent. The very notion and name of an event excludes this necessity, which belongs only to things uncaused.—Bp. Horsley, vol. ii. Ser. 19.

UN-CA'UTELOUS. } i.e. incautious; not UNCA'UTIOUS. } wary, provident, con-
UNCA'UTIOUSLY. } siderate, advised.

Who thought there could be no greater disparagement unto them, then to seem to be ignorant of any thing, and under pretence of interpreting obscure places laid gins to entrap the uncautelous.—Hales. Rem. Ser. 2 Pet. iii. 16.

If you take advantage of every obscure or uncautious expression, you will make him as heterodox in respect of the real divinity of the Father, as you suppose him to be with regard to the Son.—Waterland. Works, vol. iii. p. 116.

It is very uncautiously and unaccurately said, that King Charles I. patronized the subscribing the same Articles either in contradictory or different senses.
Id. Ib. vol. ii. p. 313.

UN-CE'ASING. Not quitting, leaving, ending, stopping, staying, desisting, or discontinuing.

Flowynge in her feestis with delices doynge lecherie with you, and han igen ful of auoutrie and uncesyng trespassse, disseyynge unsidefast soulis and han the herte exercisid to couetise.—Wiclif. 2 Pet. c. 2.

And, whilst ye flutter round that sacred head,
Breathe in her ear in softest notes of woe,
That with her favour all my joys are fled;
Her frowns have bid unceasing tears to flow.
P. Fletcher. Piscatory Eclogues, Ecl. 3.

A covert, which nor rough winds blowing moist
Could penetrate, nor could the noon-day sun
Smite through it, or unceasing show'rs pervade,
So thick a roof the ample branches form'd,
Close interwoven.
Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. v.

UN-CE'LEBRATED. Not proclaimed, famed, or renowned; not treated as worthy of honour; not solemnized.

— Thus was the first day Ev'n and Morn:
Nor past uncelebrated, nor unsung
By the celestial quires, when orient light
Exhaling first from darkness they beheld.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. vii.

It cannot surely be denied, that the quality which pervades every part of human life, and tends immediately to render it secure, comfortable, and honourable, is itself one of the most honourable which can be possessed by a human creature; and such is that uncelebrated virtue, plain, unassuming, moral, honesty.—Knox. Ess. No. 66.

UN-CELE'STIAL. Not heavenly; not having the qualities of the heavens, or the inhabitants of heaven.

It [envy] sours the countenance, gives the lips a trembling; the eyes an uncelestial and declining look, and all the face a meager wasting paleness.—Feltham, pt. ii. Res. 56.

'Tis Nature's structure, broke by common will,
Breeds all that uncelestial discord there.
Young. Complaint, Night 9.

UN-CENSURED. Not deemed or doomed, or judged; not condemned, blamed.

But as they conquer'd and enlarg'd their bound,
That wider walls embrac'd their city round,
And they uncensur'd might at feasts and plays Steep the glad genius in the wine whole days,
Both in their tunes the license greater grew,
And in their numbers.—B. Jonson. Horace. Art of Poetry

That, which Haman meant as an humble suppliant, is interpreted as from a presumptuous, offender. How oft might he have done so, and more, while he was in favour, uncensured!—Bp. Hall. Cont. Haman hanged.

The man, who for the most part is the author, not the mere accomplice of the woman's guilt, and for that reason is the greater delinquent, is left unpunished and uncensured.
Bp. Horsley, vol. iii. Ser. 43.

UN-CEREMONIOUS. Not having or observing, or regarding any settled form or manner, any respectful form or manner.

"No warning given! unceremonious fate!
A sudden rush from life's meridian joy!"

Young. Complaint, Night 3.

UN-CERTAIN. Also written Incertain, UNCE'RTAINED. } (qv.) Not firmly or steadily fixed; not firm, steady, UNCE'RTAINLY. } secure, determined, settled or established. UNCE'RTAINTY. }

Who may now in Rome haf any sikernesse,
That ther is hiest dome, & git uncerteyn es?

R. Brunne, p. 324.

Sir Eymmer had enowe, that horsid him ageyn,
Roberte's men thei slowe, the nambre uncerteyn.

Id. p. 334.

For tho thingis that ben withouten the soule ghyueth voicis, eithir pipe eithir harpe, but tho ghyuen distinceioun of sownyngis hou schal it be knowun that is sungun eithir that that is trumpid? for if a trumpe ghyue an uncerteyn sown, who schal make hymself redi to bateil?

Wiclif. 1 Cor. c. 14.

Moreouer, when thynges wythout lyfe geue sounde: whether it be a pipe, or an harpe: except they make a distinction in the soundes: howe shall it be known what is pyppid or harped? and also yf the trompe geue an uncertayne voyce, who shall prepare hymself to biteil?

Bible, 1551. Ib.

Therefore I renne so, not as into an uncerteyn thing, thus I fighte not as betynge the eyr.—Wiclif. 1 Cor. c. 9.

I therefore so runne, not as at an uncertayne thiſ. So fight I not as one that beateth the ayer.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

Comaunde thou to the riche men of this world, that thei undirstonde not highli, neithir that thei hope in uncerteintee of richessis but in the lyuyng God that ghyueth to us all thingis plenteuousli to us: to do wel.—Wiclif. 1 Tymo. c. 6.

Charge them that are ryche in thys worlde, that they be not exceeding wise, and yf they trust not in y^e uncertayne ryches, but in the liuyng God, which geueth vs abundantly all thynges to enioye theym, & that they do good.

Bible, 1551. Ib.

These seruauites, because they be uncertayne of their lordes returning home, do stil endeuyre them selues to do theyr office and duetie.—Udal. Marke, c. 13.

Therefore the prieste iudginge that, y^t he cannot know, muste needes wander uncertainly, and be a very doubtful iudge.—Jewel. Defence of the Apologie, p. 152.

The which being aduisedly considered of, hauing regard vnto the shortnesse of time, by reason of our long abode in this place, and the uncertainty of the weather to fauour vs, it was generally holden for the best and securest way to meete with my Lorde.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. p. 176.

2 Court. You may speak on.

1 Court. Uncertain as the sea, sir,

Proud and deceitful as his sins great master.

Beaum. & Fletch. Moral Representations.

It being manifest, that the diversity of seasons, the winters, and summers, more hot and cold, are not so uncertain by the sun and moon alone, who always keep one and the same course; but that the stars have also their working therein.—Raleigh. History of the World, b. i. c. 1.

If men can be ignorant or doubtful of what is innate, innate principles are insisted on and urg'd to no purpose. Truth and certainty (the things pretended) are not at all secur'd by them; but men are in the same uncertain floating estate with, or without them.

Locke. Hum. Underst. b. i. c. 3.

All which together seldom or never fail to produce that various and doubtful signification in the names of substances, which causes such uncertainty, disputes, or mistakes, when we come to a philosophical use of them.—Id. Ib. b. iii. c. 9.

Our Indians were greatly agitated in this state of uncertainty, and urg'd their fellows to come alongside of the ship, both by their voice and gestures, with the utmost eagerness and impatience.—Cook. First Voyage, b. ii. c. 2.

UNCES, i. e. Ounces.

What shuld I tellen eche proportion
Of thinges, whiche that we werven upon,
As on five or six unces, may wel be,
Of silver, or som other quantitee?

Chaucer. The Chanones Yemannes Tale, v. 16, 223.

VOL. II.

UN-CE'SSANT. } Now more usually written UNCE'SSANTLY. } Incessant. Not leaving, quitting, ending, stopping, staying, desisting or discontinuing.

Christe was his soonne, and came down from heauen, and taught those thinges which he sawe aboute with his Father, as one hauing within hymselfe a perpetuall uncessant saunte power to dooe whatsoever his wil is.

Udal. Luke, c. 24.

But the Jewes euen at this daie keping silence of the glorie of Christ whiche thei haue enuie at, the stones uncessantely erie it out, beeing nowe become the children of Abraham.—Id. Ib. c. 19.

And this [triumphing as it were in spirit] he joyfully imparted to Hacket; who, by his counterfeit holiness, his uncessant praying extempore, &c.

Camden. Hist. of Q. Elizabeth, (1591.)

Our third rule must be to redouble our strokes uncessantly, unweariably, not giving breath to the beast, not fainting for want of our owne.—Bp. Hall. St. Paul's Combat.

UN-CHAIN, v. To remove, to loose, the chain or the fastening, binding, confinement, of any kind.

And so inflame the gods of those bound seas
They would unchaine their virgin passages,
And teach our mariners from day to day,
To bring us jewels by a nearer way.

Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b. ii. s. 3.

Come, my Prometheus, from that pointed rock
Of false ambition if unchain'd, we'll mount.

Young. Complaint, Night 9.

And many deem'd her heart was won;
For sought by numbers, given to none,
Had young Francesca's hand remain'd
Still by the church's bonds unchain'd.

Byron. The Siege of Corinth, s. 8.

UN-CHANGEABLE. } That cannot be UNCHA'NGEABLENESS. } altered, varied, or UNCHA'NGEABLY. } diversified; made or UNCHA'NGED. } caused to be other-UNCHA'NGING. } wise or different from what it is;—different in place, form, or colour, in any mode or manner; immutable.

Thou louest unchanged hem that seruen thee.

Imputed to Chaucer. A Ballade in Com. of our Lady.

The great unchangeable Christen countrees kept their faith in one constant fashion deriued fro the begynnynge.

Sir T. More. Workes, p. 183.

There was a like strange thing inuented by another concerning the sympathy or conioining of this ile: namely, that it followeth the departure of that huge lumpe, whereof it is a part, so narrowly, & so swiftly, that a man by no diligence can obserue it, by reason of the unchangeable ne-cessitie of following.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 564.

But sayeth that he shoulde rather haue kept still the worde presbyteros unchanged, because that word is it that signifyeth authoritie with the Grekes, where seniores in Latine signifyeth but theyr age, and all were not olde as appeared by Timothe.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 426.

By this is seen who lives by faith and certain knowledge, and who by credulity and the prevailing opinion of the age;
whose virtue is of an unchangeable grain, and whose of a slight wash.—Milton. Reason. of Church Govern. b. i. c. 7.

If the authoritie of the maker doe proue unchangeableness in the lawes which God hath made; then must all laws which he hath made be necessarily for euer permanent, though they be but of circumstance onely and not of substance.—Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, b. iii.

Under Moses they were tied upon the conscience by God himself, and therefore unchangeably during that whole period; but now they are left to a temporary transient use and ministry, to do good, or to promote order, or to combine government.—Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. iii. c. 1.

Mar. Alberto (peace dwell upon his ashes) still the husband

Of my remembrance and unchanging voves,
Has, by his death, left to his heir possession
Of fair reueneue, which this young man claimes
As his inheritance.

Beaum. & Fletch. The Fair Maid of the Inn, Act iii.

More safe I sing with mortal voice, unchang'd
To hoarse or mute, though fall'n on evil dayes,
On evil dayes though fall'n, and evil tongues.

Milton. Paradise Lost, b. vii.

Either there has always existed some one unchangeable and independent being, from which all other beings have received their original; or else there has been an infinite succession of changeable and dependent beings, produced one from another in an endless progression, without any original curse at all.—Clarke. On the Attributes, Prop. 2.

When my resolution appeared unchangeable, I was suffered to live as I pleased, with the character of an odd but in-offensive man.—Knox. Ess. No. 168.

These therefore are unchangeably what they are; and all we have to do, is to submit to them.—Secker, vol. ii. Ser. 28.

The stomach of the camel is well known to retain large quantities of water, and to retain it unchanged for a considerable length of time.—Paley. Natural Theology, c. 13.

UN-CHARGE, v. To remove the cargo, the burthen, the load or lading; the crime or accusation, laid or imposed;—to withdraw, or retract it.

And whanne we apperiden to Cipre we leften it at the lefthalf and sailiden into Cirie and camen to Tire, for there the schip schulde be uncharged.—Wiclif. Dedis, c. 21.

And for his death no winde of blame shall breath,
And euen his mother shall uncharge the practice,
And call it accident.—Shakespeare. Hamlet, Act iv. sc. 7.

UN-CHARITY. } Want of feeling, sym-UNCHA'RITABLE. } pathy, compassion, for UNCHA'RITABLY. } the feelings, passions, UNCHA'RITABLENESS. } sufferings of others;
want of kindness, good-will, benevolence or beneficence.

And if he reprove him uncharitably of sinne, as, thou holour, thou dronkelewe harlot, and so forth.

Chaucer. The Persones Tale.

Compare that sobre & milde countenance of Jesus, with his face puffed vp with pride, with his grim forehead, with his frowning browes, with his stately looke, with hys contencious or uncharitable mouth.—Udal. Marke, c. 11.

His religion was naught, yet his act was good; the priests and Levites religion good, their uncharitie ill.

Bp. Hall. Cont. The Poole of Bethesda.

But as stone-hearted men, uncharitable, Passe careless by the poore, when men lesse able,
Hold not the needie's helpe in long suspence,
But in their hands poure their benevolence.

Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b. i. s. 4.

I hope, my dealing was manifest to the consciences of all indifferent hearers of me that day, to haue bene according to peace, and without any *uncharitable*nesse.

Hooker. Wal. Travers his Suppl. to the Councell.

Charity covers many sins, because it is so noble and so excellent a virtue: what virtue then, beyond this, can there be found, of value sufficient to cover the sin of uncharitable- ness?—Atterbury, vol. i. Ser. 2.

And whoever determines either his own state towards God, or that of any one else, to be a bad one, for want of such tokens of its being a good one, contradicts the rule of holy writ. Every one, that does righteousness, is born of him, and unwisely dejects himself, or uncharitably condemns his brother.—Secker, vol. iii. Ser. 17.

When it is evident, that men only put on a pretence of wishing well to Christianity, or the teachers of it; and, whilst they affect to charge us with *uncharitable*ness for questioning their sincerity, would despise us for believing them: there we must be allowed to see what plainly appears; and to speak of them, both as adversaries, and unfair ones.

Id. Charge Deliv. to the Clergy of Oxford & Canterbury.

UN-CHARM, v. To remove, loose, free from charm or enchantment; from rapturous delight;
from rapture, from delight.

Jul. Stay, I am uncharm'd, Farewel thou cursed house, from this hour be
More hated of me than a leprosie.

Beaum. & Fletch. The Captain, Act iii. sc. 4.

—Conscience, conscience would not let him rest:

I mean, not till possess'd of her he lov'd,

And old, uncharming Catherine was remov'd.

Dryden. The Hind and the Panther.

UN-CHARNEL, v. To remove a fleshy substance, a carcase, or a body interred, from its place of interment.

Nem. Whom would'st thou

Uncharnel?

Mam. One without a tomb—call up

Astarte.

Byron. Manfred, Act ii. sc. 4.

UN-CHARY. Not careful, cautious, or wary.

Ol. I haue said too much vnto a hart of stone,

And laid mine honour too unchary on't.

Shakespeare. Twelfth-Night, Act iii. sc. 4.

UN-CHASTE. } Not pure; not free from UNCHA'STELY. } spot or blemish; from cor-UNCHA'STENESS. } ruption, pollution, contami-UNCHA'STEN, v. } nation; from licentiousness, UNCHA'STITY. } from vice; not conforming to, or consistent with, purity, pure models, (sc. in matters of taste.)

And lest eftsoone whanne I come God make me lough amentis ghou, and I biweile manye of hem that bifore synnyden, and didnen not penaunce on the unclennesse and fornyacioun and unchastite that thei han doen.

Wiclif. 2 Cor. c. 12.

In ye which thing certes the lord Jesus shewed and gaue to the teachers of the gospel, an example of sobre behaueour and getilnesse, who doeth so litel disdeigne to talke with a sinful woman, & one y^t had naughtely & unchastely misused hir bodie with diuerse, that also by the meanes of his being with hir alone, he did prouide for the bashfulnesse of ye unchast woman.—Udal. John, c. 4.

The yong women correcte louinglye, as systers; and behaue thy selfe so with all men, as thou runne into no sinister suspicio eyther couetousnes or of unchastenes, eyther of flatterie or of crueltie.—Id. Timothy, c. 5.

For as we fynde in the Englyshe chronycles, they haue in confessions, made kinges wiues and daughters, to make vowes of unchastite vnto them.—Bale. Apology, fol. 142.

—Let other men

Set up their bloods to sale, mine shall be ever Fair as the soul it carries, and unchast never.

Beaum. & Fletcher. The Faithful Shepherdess, Act i.

A sin of that sudden activity, as to be already committed when no more is done, but only look'd unchastly.

Milton. The Doctrine of Divorce, b. ii. c. 18.

And hath made them admire a sort of formal outside men prelatically addicted, whose unchasten'd and unwrought minds were never yet initiated or subdu'd under the true lore of religion or moral virtue.

Id. Reason. of Church Government, b. ii. c. 3.

Every act of sorrow for unchastity is an act of chastity; and if this sorrow be great and lasting, permanent and habitual, it will be productive of much good.

Bp. Taylor. Of Repentance, c. 5. § 5.

UN-CHASTISED. } Not purified, cor-UNCHASTISABLE. } rected; (not corrected by punishment, not punished.)

I neuer lefte ylnesse unchastised, nor goodnes without reward.—Golden Boke, c. 47.

When I bethought me well, under the restless sun
By folk of power what cruel works unchastised were done.
Surrey. Paraphrase on Ecclesiastes, c. 4.

The guiltless therefore were not depriv'd their needful redresses, and the hard hearts of others unchastisable in those judicial courts, were so remitted there, as bound over to the higher session of conscience.—Milton. Tetrachordon.

Hor. What liberty has vain presumptuous youth,
That thou should'st dare provoke me unchastis'd?
Rowe. Fair Penitent, Act ii.

UN-CHE'CKED. Not stopped, (perhaps, as the king at chess;) not repressed, moderated, restrained, withheld, curbed.

Yet, why is now my thought turn'd toward death,
Whom fates have let go on, so far in breath,
Uncheck'd or unreprieved?
B. Jonson. Sejanus, Act v. sc. 4.

Thus (she pursu'd) I discipline a son
Whose uncheck'd fury to revenge wou'd run:
He champs the bit, impatient of his loss,
And starts aside, and flounders at the cross.
Dryden. The Hind and the Panther.

Sinful thoughts unchecked quickly form themselves into sinful actions.—Gilpin. vol. ii. Ser. 38.

UN-CHEERFUL. } Not having the coun-UNCHEERFULNESS. } tenance or look (the spi-UNCHEERFUL. } rits), enlivened, brightened, gladdened, animated, exhilarated.

But by the change of her unchearefull looke,
They might perceiue she was not well in plight;
Or that some pensiuensse to hart she tooke.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 7.

Wheresoeuer mere nature is, she is still improvident of future good, sensible of present evil, inconstant in good purposes: unable, through unacquaintance, and unwilling to speak for herself; niggardly in her grants, and uncheerful.—Bp. Hall. Cont. Of the Plagues of Egypt.

Now, if it be such obedience as ought to arise from a special kind of love, then the wife would remember this, that it must not be constrained, uncheerful obedience.

Leighton. Com. on 1 Pet. c. 3.

Art thou a Christian, or art thou none? if thou be what thou professest, away with this dull and senselesse worldliness; away with this earthly uncheerfulness.
Bp. Hall. The Art of Divine Meditation, c. 29.

Are the sad accidents of life, and the uncheery hours which perpetually overtake us, are they not enough; but we must sally forth in quest of them?—Sterne, vol. i. Ser. 2.

UN-CHE'WED. Not crushed, not grinded by the jaws, (chaws;) by the teeth.

Not weigh'd, or winnow'd by the multitude;
But swallow'd in the mass, unchew'd and crude.
Dryden. Absalom & Achitophel.

He grins, and opens wide his greedy jaws,
The prey lyes panting underneath his paws:
He fills his famish'd maw, his mouth runs o're
With unchew'd morsels, while he churns the gore.
Id. Virgil. Aeneis, b. x.

And why wo'ud'st thou these mighty morsels chuse,
Of words unchaw'd and fit to choak the muse?
Id. Persius, Sat. 5.

UN-CHILD, v. To deprive of, a child; to divest of the character of a child or children.

—Though in this city hee

Hath widdowed and unchilded many a one,
Which to this houre bewaile the iniury,
Yet he shall haue a noble memory.
Shakespeare. Coriolanus, Act v. sc. 5.

Whosoever now dispose of themselves without their parents, they do wilfully unchild themselves, and change natural affection for violent.

Bp. Hall. Cont. Samson's Marriage.

He hath unchilded me of many a son,
All valiant youths, whom he hath slain or sold
To distant isles.
Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. xxii.

UN-CHILLED. Not cooled, or destitute, or deprived, of warmth or heat.

His queen, the garden queen, his rose,
Unbent by winds, unchill'd by snows,
Far from the winters of the west,
By every breeze and season blest,
Returns the sweets by nature given
In softest incense back to heaven.—Byron. The Giaour.

UN-CHIRO'TONIZE, v. Greek. Chirotonia, from χείρ, the hand, and τείν-ειν, to stretch, (says Harrington, who coined this word for his own special purposes,) "is popular suffrage, whether given, as when they speak of Athens, by holding up of hands, or, as when they speak of Rome and other commonwealths (whose suffrage was not given with this ceremony) without holding up of hands."—Oceana, p. 307. And see Potter, b. i. c. 17.

As if Josephus upon that of Samuel,—they have not rejected thee, but they have rejected me that I should not reign over them,—had not said of the people that they unchirotoniz'd or unvoted God of the kingdom. Now if they unchirotoniz'd or unvoted God of the kingdom, then they had chirotoniz'd or voted him to the kingdom; and so not only the doctrine that God was king in Israel by compact or covenant, but the use of the word chirotonia also in the sense I understand it, is more antient than Mr. Hobbs.
Harrington. Oceana, p. 259.

UN-CHO'SEN. } Not elected, or selected, UNCHO'SING. } or preferred; not by voluntary act or desire, taken or received.

And that euery man is either chosen or unchosen. And if we be of the chosen sorte, none euill dede can damne vs. And yf we bee of the unchosen sorte, no good dede can auail vs.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 273.

Or like a lamb, whose dam away is fet,
(Stoln from her young by thieves unchosing haste.)
Sidney. Arcadia, b. i.

To be born, was a thing wholly involuntary and unchosen, and therefore it could in no sence be chosen, that we were born so, that is, born guilty of Adam's sin, which we knew not of, which was done so many thousand years before we were born.—Bp. Taylor. Of Repentance, c. 6. § 1.

UN-CHRISTEN, v. } To Unchristen is,— UNCHRISTIAN, v. } to be or cause to be UNCHRISTIAN, adj. } without, to withhold,
UNCHRISTIANLY, adj. } to deprive of, the cere-UNCHRISTIANLY, ad. } mony or rite of baptism; to deprive of, to divest of, the character or characteristic qualities of a Christian, i. e. faith, charity, &c. See the quotation from Hale in v. Unchurch.

For cristene and uncristene cleyment it echeone.
Piers Plouhman, p. 17.

Ich Trojanus a trywe knyght. ich take witness of pope
How ich was ded and dampned. to dwellen in helle
For an uncristene creature.
Id. p. 205.

For cause is there none, why the christian man or christian woman should feare, leste by familiar conuersaciō of the one had with the other that is unchristened, eyther of both myght be defiled.—Udal. 1 Cor. c. 7.

To which I answered, be you well assured, that we are not indeede all good Christians, for there are in the ship some that hold very unchristian opinions.

Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. p. 152.

As they behaued themselves most unchristianly toward their brethren, so and much more vngodly (which I should haue put in the first place) did they towards God.
Id. Ib. p. 309.

Take al in good part, I hartily beseech you. Construe nothing uncristently; and become again my good lord.
Styrpe. Eccles. Mem. Bp. of Salisbury to Crumwel.

The most part of England in the raigne of king Ethelbird was christened, Kent onely except, which remained long after in misbeliefe, and unchristened.
Spenser. Shepheard's Calender, Gloss.

To constrain him further were to unchristen him, to un-man him, to throw the mountain of Sinai upon him, with the weight of the whole law to boot.

Milton. The Doctrine & Discip. of Divorce, b. ii. c. 22.

But this king, not content with that which, although in a thing holy, is no holy theft, to attribute to his own making other men's whole prayers, hath as it were unhallow'd and unchristen'd the very duty of prayer it self, by borrowing to a christian use prayers offer'd to a heathen god.
Id. An Answer to Eikon Basilike, § 1.

For either the hatred of her religion, and her hatred to our religion, will work powerfully against the love of her society, or the love of that will by degrees flatter out all our zealous hatred and forsaking, and soon ensnare us to unchristianly compliances.—Id. Tetrachordon.

Boisterous edicts tyrannizing the blessed ordinance of marriage into the quality of a most unnatural and unchristianly yoke, have given the flesh this advantage to hate it, and turn aside, oftentimes unwillingly, to all dissolute uncleanness, even till punishment itself is weary of and overcome by the incredible frequency of trading lust and uncontroll'd adulteries.
Id. The Doctrine & Discip. of Divorce, b. ii. c. 20.

UN-CHURCH, v. To deprive of, to withhold, to remove from, deny the possession of, the church; i. e. the house of the Lord.

Otherwise there would appear very little and inconsiderable reason, upon trifling or small reasons, to separate and divide from others, and to unchurch and unchristian them that are not of their company or society.

Hale. Cont. A Discourse of Religion, c. 1.

You say—we hereby unchurch the reformed churches abroad.—We answer that this principle of the invalidity of lay baptism, which several of them hold as well as we, does not unchurch them, if their want of episcopal ordination doth not, which is a distinct question.

Waterland. Works, vol. x. p. 8.

For this reason [the Greeks] stand utterly unchurched by the church of Rome, as erring in a prime and fundamental point of faith.—South, vol. viii. Ser. 14.

UN'NCIAL. Applied to letters of a particular form and size. Cotgrave says—that Lettres onciales are huge letters, great letters; from oncial, weighing an ounce.

If a manuscript is entirely in uncials, it may very well be supposed prior to the close of the ninth century.
Astle. Orig. and Progress of Writing, c. 5.

UN-CINCTURED. Not girded, or wearing a girdle.

—Sarpedon, when he saw
Such havoc made of his uncinctur'd friends
By Menætiades, with sharp rebuke
His band of godlike Lycians loud address'd.
Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. xvi.

UN-CIRCUMCISED. } Not having under-UNCIRCUMCISED. } gone the operation, the ceremonious rite of circumcision; — applied, (met.)—

To the faith or covenant to which this rite introduced the patient.

With hard noll and uncircumcidid hertis and eeris ghe withstoden euermore the Hooli Goost, and as ghoure fadris so ghe.—Wiclif. Dedis, c. 7.

Ye stiffnecked and of uncircumcised heartes and eares: ye haue alwayes resisted the Holye Ghoost: as youre fathers dyd, so doe ye.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

Nowe then, thy circumcision is tourned into uncircumcision, excepte thou therwith kepe other rules of the lawe, whiche make to good manners.—Udal. Rom. c. 2.

Now it is possible a man may have a saving faith, before baptisme: Abraham first beleaved to justification; then after receiued the signe of circumcision, as a seal of the righteousness of that faith, which he had when he was uncircumcised: Therefore some dying before their baptisme, may, yea, must be saved.
Bp. Hall. Works, Dec. 5. Ep. 4.

How vain then, and how preposterous must it needs be to exact a circumcision of the flesh from an infant unto an outward sign of purity, and to dispense an uncircumcision in the soul of a grown man to an inward and real impurity. Milton. The Doctrine & Discip. of Divorce, c. 6.

UN-CIRCUMSCRIBED. Having no inclosing bounds or boundary; no limits or confines. See INCIRCUMSCRIPTIBLE.

Thou one, two, and three, eterne on live,
That rainest aie in thre, two, and one,
*Uncircumscrip*t, and all maist circumscribe.
Chaucer. Troil. & Cres. b. v.

Though I uncircumscrib'd my self retire,
And put not forth my goodness, which is free
To act or not, necessitie and chance Approach not mee, and what I will is fate.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. vii.

But for the supreme he is sacred and immured, just as the utmost orbs of heaven are uncircumscrib'd; not that they are positively infinite, but because there is nothing beyond them: so is the supreme magistrate, nothing is above him but God.

Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. iii. c. 3.

"As yet uncircumscrib'd the regal power,
And wild and vague prerogative remain'd,
A wide voracious gulf, where swallow'd oft
The helpless subject lay."
Thomson. Liberty.

UN-CIRCUMSPECT. } See INCIRCUMSPECT.
UNCIRCUMSPECTLY. } Not looking, seeking, or searching, or having looked, or searched around; not provident, watchful, vigilant, wary.

And many thynges flowe in on euerie side, that are hable to withdrawe uncircumspect men from the synceritie of Christian doctrine.—Udal. Ephesians, c. 5.

Erasmus in that place chiefly doth not seme so syncerely to speak, as he doth in many other places, which very uncircumspectly interpreteth that house the primacy of the church of Rome.—Strype. (From Sampson's Oration.) Eccles. Mem. Hen. VIII. an. 1533.

For when they had ones uncircumspectly graunted hym to execute iustyce vpon the prestes wyues, it turned in the ende to their rebuke and shame.
Bale. English Votaries, pt. ii.

Could he not beware, could he not bethink him, was he so uncircumspect, as not to foresee, that no sooner would that word Mime be set eye on in the paper, but it would bring to mind that wretched pilgrimage over Minshew's dictionary call'd Mundus alter et idem, the idlest and the paltriest mime that ever mounted upon bank.
Milton. Apology for Smectymnuus.

UN-CIRCUMSTANTIAL. Not consequential, or mainly connected.

Surely were it [the tree] not requisite to have been concealed, it had not passed unspecified; nor the tree revealed which concealed their nakednesse, and that concealed which revealed it; for in the same chapter mention is made of fig-leaves. And the like particulars, although they seem uncircumstantial, are oft set down in holy scripture.

Brown. Vulgar Errors b. vii. c. 1.

UN-CIVIL. } The noun is written Incivilly.
UNCIVILLY. } civility. See INCIVIL.
UNCIVILIZE, v. } Not having the habits, or manners, or dispositions, acquired by living together in the same city, or state; not courteous, mannerly, polite; urbane; not retrieved, or reclaimed from rudeness, from barbarism.

This naciō for al their uncivil and rude maner, coude not escape to be subdued wt the same force of fortune that others were.—Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 23.

At last, he came vnto a gloomie glade,
Couer'd with boughes & shrubs from heauens light,
Whereas he sitting found, in secret shade,
An uncouth, salvage, and unciuill wight,
Of griesly hew, and foule ill-fauour'd sight.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 7.

With this provok'd, all rose, and in a rout
Run to the gate, strove who should first get out,
Bad me begone; and then (in terms uncivil)
Did call me counterfait, witch.
Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b. i. s. 4.

Neither was it reasonable to talk of honest and conscientious liberty among them, who had abused legal and civil liberty to uncivil license.—Milton. Tetrachordon.

That he should raise his miter'd crest on high,
And clap his wings, and call his family
To sacred rites; and vex th' ethereal powers
With midnight mattins, at uncivil hours.
Dryden. The Hind and the Panther.

—— I follow'd him too close;
And to say truth, somewhat uncivilly, upon a rout.
Id. K. Arthur, Act i. sc. 1.

These unciviliz'd people caring for little else than what is barely necessary, they spend the greatest part of their time in diverting themselves, after their several fashions.
Dampier. Voyages, an. 1681.

They shew as much ingenuity, both in invention and execution, as any uncivilized nations under similar circumstances. For, without the use of any metal tools, they make every thing by which they procure their subsistence, clothing, and warlike weapons, with a degree of neatness, strength, and convenience for accomplishing their several purposes.—Cook. Third Voyage, b. i. c. 8.

UN-CLAD. Not clothed; stripped, divested of clothes.

Enquiring for the house of Titus, at the laste he came to it, but beholdinge it so beauteous, large, and pryncely, he was ashamed to approche nygh to it, beyng in so symple astate and unklad, but standeth by, that in case Titus came forth out of his howse, he moughte presente hym selfe to hym.—Sir T. Elyot. The Governour, b. ii.

UN-CLAIMED. Not called for, or demanded.

Has Heav'n reserv'd, in pity to the poor,
No pathless waste, or undiscover'd shore?
No secret island in the boundless main?
No peaceful desert yet unclaim'd by Spain?
Johnson. London.

To defray the expense of the armament, Mr. Pitt proposed various temporary taxes, which would discharge the incumbrance in four years—with the assistance of 500,000*l.*, which he had it in contemplation to take from the unclaimed dividends lying in the bank of England.
Belsham. Geo. III. an. 1790.

UN-CLARIFIED. Not clear, or made clear, or pure; not purified.

One ounce of whey unclarified; one ounce of oil of vitriol, make no apparent alteration.
Bacon. Physiological Remains.

UN-CLASP, v. To loose, to remove, that which clips, or clasps, embraces, holds fast, or fastens; to set or throw open.

Alcides then about his short ribbs cast
His conquering armes, and grip'd his yeilding wast,
Then tripping vp his leggs he fairely layes
His foe stretch'd out vpon the sand; earth stayes
His sweat, and fills with fresh blood euery vaine,
His armes grow brawny, his ioynts stiffe againe,
And his fresh limmes *unclasp*e the others hands.
May. Lucan. Pharsalia, b. iv.

Here I unclasp the book of my charg'd soul,
Where I have cast th' accounts of all my care;
Here have I summ'd my sighs; here I enroll
How they were spent for thee: look what they are.
Daniel. Sonnet to Delia, Son. 1.

Mit. So, sir, and what follows?
Cor. Faith, a whole volume of humour, and worthy the *unclasp*ing.
B. Jonson. Every Man out of his Humour, Act ii. sc. 2.

UN-CLA'SSIC. Not pertaining or belonging or according to the first or most eminent class; to authors, writers of the first class or rank. Applied, more especially, to Greek and Roman authors of a particular period: to the times when they flourished: also to the most approved authors of other countries, and the times when they flourished.

Angel of dulness, sent to scatter round
Her magick charms o'er all unclassick ground.
Pope. Dunciad, b. iii.

But Milton censures him severely for the use of the word Persona in a sense unclassical.
Knox. Winter Evenings, Even. 66.

I am inclined to attribute much of the levity of the present age, to a preference which has been given by those whose example is seducing, to an education totally unclassical.—Id. Liberal Education, § 7.

UNCLE. Fr. Oncle; Lat. Avunculus, quasi alter, seu exiguus Avus, (Vossius.) Correlative in sex to Aunt, (qv.)

The erl wende to emperour, & set a doun on kne:
"Sire," he seide, "al thi wille thou hast thou mygt y se
"Of the kyng, that ys myn uncle, he ys at thi wille.
Haue merci of hym ich bidde."
R. Gloucester, p. 58.

But first he came craftely to his neuy to be cōfedered with him as an uncle to take the tuicion faynedly of his neuye.
Joye. Exposition of Daniel, c. 11.

What times forego Richard the Second's reign;
The fatal causes of this civil war:
His uncle's pride; his greedy minions gain:
Gloc'ster's revolt, and death, deliver'd are.
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. i.

UN-CLEAN, adj. } A. S. Un-clæne, un-UNCLE'ANLY, adj. } clænsian.
UNCLE'ANLINESS. } Not pure or purified UNCLE'ANNESS. } or purged; not free from UNCLE'ANSED. } dirt or filth, from stain or tinge, mark or trace of dirt, filth or pollution;
from the foulness of sinfulness.

Vor prestes, myd uncleane honde & myd lechor's mode
Al soyled, sacryeth Gode's fless & hys blod.
R. Gloucester, p. 351.

"Madame," he seyde, "vor Gode's loue, ys thys wel y do,
"That thou thys uncleane lymes handlest & cust so?"
Id. p. 435.

Vor me ne mygte hyre neuere yse uncleanesse do ene.
Id. p. 434.

And in the synagoge of hem was a man in an uncleane spirit, and he criede out, and seide, what to us and to thee thou Jhesus of Nazareth?—Wiclif. Mark, c. 1.

And there was in their sinagoge a man vexed with an uncleane spirite, yt cried saying: let be, what haue we to do with the thou Jesus of Nazareth?—Bible, 1551. Ib.

But as ghe han ghounn ghoure membris to serue to uncleanesse and to wickidnesse into wickidnesse, so now ghyve ghe ghoure membris to serue to rightwynnesse into hooley-nesse.—Wiclif. Romayns, c. 6.

As ye haue geuen youre members seruauntes to uncleanes & to iniquitie, from iniquity vnto iniquitye: euē so now geue youre mēbers seruauntes vnto ryghtenes, yt ye may be sanctified.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

For God clepide not us into uncleanesse, but into hooley-nesse. therefore he that dispisith these thingis dispisith not man but God.—Wiclif. 1 Tessal. c. 4.

For God hath not called vs vnto uncleanes: but vnto holy-nesse. He therefore that despyseth, despiseth not man, but God.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

For who so will his handes lime,
Thei must be the more uncleane.—Gower. Con. A. b. ii.

Whan an uncleane spirite (q. he) goeth out frō a man, beyng banished frō his olde hospitall, he walketh in drye & baren places, seking rest and fyndeth none.
Udal. Mathew, c. 12.

And princes on the other parte flatter the people, exhibitynge vnto them shewes to gase vpon, and uncleanty playes.
Id. Actes of the Apostles, c. 12.

I woulde not fall into any uncleanlines, which were the greatest shame that can be for him that should be a teacher of chastitie.
Vives. Instruction of a Christian Woman; Pref.

Herkē O ye Leuites & Prestes: be ye sãctified and make cleane the house of the Lorde the God of your fathers, and put awaie all uncleanes from the sanctuarie &c. I prai you what could he speke more imperiously.
Bp. Gardner. Of True Obedience, fol. 29.

He without reuerence, and with an uncleansed conscience presumed to come vnto so great a misterie, without due consideration had, with howe great reuerence the body of the Lorde ought to be receyued.—Udal. 1 Corinth. c. 12.

Diuers of those that couētd to professe such clannesse and puritie of life as passed their powers to obserue, might happilie fall into most horrible uncleannesse.
Holinshed. Chron. Hen. I. an. 1102.

I have sometimes wondred how it came to pass, that some of the ancients, men wise and modest, chaste and of sober spirits, have faln into a fond liberty of declamation against uncleanes, using such words as bring that sin upon the stage of fancy, and offend sober and chaste ears.
Bp. Taylor, vol. i. Ser. 22.

It must be owned that Theophrastus appears not to have been possessed of any great delicacy. He pursues his subject so far, as frequently to lead his readers to uncleanly scenes.—Knox. Winter Evenings, Even. 50.

UN-CLEAR. Not free from gloom, obscurity, darkness; from that which overshadows, obstructs, blocks up, incumbers.

Ryght mysty storyes, doughtfull and uncleare,
Of names of tymes, and of the duraunt yere.
Fabyan. Prol. to Chronicles.

In unclear and doubtful things, be not pertinacious, as the weakest minds are readiest to be, upon seeming reason, which, tried, will possibly fall to nothing; yet they are most assured, and cannot suffer a different thought in any from their own.—Leighton. Com. on 1 Peter, c. 3.

Among the insects, which were not numerous, there was neither gnat nor musquito, nor any other species that was either hurtful or troublesome, which perhaps is more than can be said of any other uncleared country.
Cook. First Voyage, b. i. c. 5.

UNC

UN-CLENCH, v. To bend back, to open the closed or compressed fingers.

The hero so his enterprize recalls;
His fist unclenches, and the weapon falls.
Garth. Dispensary, c. 5.

UN-CLERICAL. } Not pertaining, accord-UNCLE'RLIKE. } ing with, or suiting a clergyman; not like a man well educated; un-learned, illiterate.

Binius and Baronius pretend the text to be corrupted, and go to mend it by such an emendation as is a plain contradiction to the sense, and that so un-clerk-like, viz. by putting in two words, and leaving out one.

Bp. Taylor. Liberty of Prophecy, § 6.

I have no doubt but that it is one reason why many clergymen are seen to take delight in unclerical occupations, that they are selected for a learned profession, without any propensity to learning, and perhaps because they were supposed to be dull of apprehension, and unfit for any thing else.—Knox. Winter Evenings, Even. 13.

UN-CLEW, v. To revolve or evolve, to unfold, to disclose.

Tim. A meere society of commendations,
If I should pay you for't as 'tis extol'd,
It would unclew me quite.
Shakespeare. Timon of Athens, Act i. sc. 1.

They can the cabinets of kings unscree,
And hardest intricacies of state unclue.
Howell. Letters, Pref.

UN-CLING, v. To loose or release from cleaving or adhering, entwining or embracing, or enfolding.

This I admire how possibly it should inhabit so long in the sense of so many disputing theologians, unless it be the lowest lees of a canonical infection liver-grown to their sides; which perhaps will never uncling, without the strong abstergive of some heroic magistrate, whose mind, equal to his high office, dares lead him both to know and do without their frivolous case-putting.—Milton. Tetrachordon.

UN-CLIPPED. Not sheared or cut.

Clip'd and unclip'd money will always buy an equal quantity of any thing else, as long as they will without scruple change one for another.—Locke. Considerations on Money.

UN-CLOG, v. To remove, to free from—burthen, hinderance, obstruction, impediment, encumbrance.

I would the gods had nothing else to do,
But to confirme my curses. Could I meete 'em
But once a day, it would unclogge my heart
Of what lyes heavy too't.
Shakespeare. Coriolanus, Act iv. sc. 2.

Fire first with wings expanded mounts on high,
Pure, void of weight, and dwells in upper sky;
Then air, because unclogg'd in empty space
Flies after fire, and claims the second place.
Dryden. Ovid. Metam. b. xv.

"O, who can speak the vigorous joy of health!
Unclogg'd the body, unobscur'd the mind:
The morning rises gay, with pleasing stealth,
The temperate evening falls serene and kind."
Thomson. Castle of Indolence.

UN-CLOISTERED. Freed from closure or enclosure, from confinement.

Why did I not, uncloister'd from the womb,
Take my next lodging in a tomb?
Norris.

UN-CLOSE, v. To remove, to free from—conjunction or union; to open; to be or cause to be free from any fixed surrounding limits or boundaries.

Till hym liked and luste. to unclose the fynger
And profrede hit forth as with the paume.
Piers Ploughman, p. 32.

Her chere is plainly spred in the brightness
Of the sunne, for there it woll enclose.
Chaucer. Prologue to the Legende of Good Women.

And a thre leages in ye way there stode the towne of Mardyke, a great vyllage on the see syde enclosed.
Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 430.

As he was enclosing it, he demaunded of Polidamus what the king intended to doe: you shall knowe that (quod he)
by the contentes of your letters.

Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 177.

Where the mind and person pleases aptly, there some unaccomplishment of the body's delight may be better born with, than when the mind hangs off in an enclosing disportion, though the body be as it ought.
Milton. Doctrine of Divorce, b. i. c. 2.

UNC

At length awaking, Iphigene the fair
(So was the beauty call'd who caus'd his care)
Unclos'd her eyes, and double day reveal'd,
While those of all her slaves in sleep were seal'd.
Dryden. Cymon & Iphigenia.

His breast with wounds unnumber'd riven,
His back to earth, his face to heaven,
Fall'n Hassan lies—his unclosed eye
Yet lowering on his enemy.
Byron. Giaour.

UN-CLOTHE, v. To remove, to strip, to divest of clothes, of covering; to bare, or lay bare or naked.

Thanne knyghtis of the justise token Jhesus in the moot halle and gaderiden to him al the company of knyghtis, and *unclothe*den him and diden aboute him a reed mantel.
Wiclif. Matthew, c. 27.

And with that word thei kystend both,
And for thei shulde hem unclothe.—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

In winter's just return, when Boreas gan his reign,
And every tree unclothed fast, as nature taught them
plain:

In misty morning dark, as sheep are then in hold,
I hied me fast, it sat me on, my sheep for to unfold.
Surrey. Repents his Rashness, &c.

Such are professed jesters, people that play the fool for money, whose employment and study is to uncloath themselves of the covers of reason, or modesty, that they may be laugh'd at.—Bp. Taylor, vol. i. Ser. 23.

UN-CLOUD, v. } To remove, to free from,
UNCLO'UDEDNESS. } cover, or veil; shade,
UNCLO'UDY. } gloom, obscurity, darkness.

Darke is the day, whē Phœbus face is shrowded,
And weaker sights may wander soone astray:
But whē they see his glorious raies uncloved,
With steddly steps they keepe the perfect way.
G. W. On Spenser's Sonnets.

—'Tis the king
Will have it so, whose breath can still the winds,
Unclo'd the sun, charm down the swelling sea,
And stop the fouds of heaven: speak, can it not?
Beaum. & Fletch. Philaster, Act iv.

Phil. Why that's well: call up
Thy senses, and unclo'd thy cover'd spirits.
Id. Love's Pilgrimage, Act iv. sc. 1.

"Strip thou their meretricious seemliness,
And tinfold glitt'ring, bare to ev'ry sight,
That we may loath their inward ugliness;
Or else unclo'd the soul, whose shady light Adds a fair lustre to false earthly bliss."
P. Fletcher. The Purple Island, c. 8.

Now for their demeanor within the church, how have they disfigur'd and defac'd that, more than angelic brightness, the uncloved serenity of Christian religion, with the dark overcasting of superstitious copes and flaminical vestures.
Milton. Reason. of Church Government, b. ii. c. 2.

So angels, who, of all created beings, enjoy the uncloved'st light, and the most clear knowledge of their Maker, do love him with a constancy so fixed, that in five thousand and some odd centuries of years (effluxed since the creation) they could never see any thing, either in God, or out of him, capable to seduce them to a change.
Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 264.

And certainly, the love I would persuade, is of a nature, that makes nothing more conducive to it than the greatest unclovedness of the eye, and the perfectest illustration of the object; which is such, that the clearest reason is the most advantageous light it can desire to be seen by.
Id. Ib. p. 251.

Now night in silent state begins to rise,
And twinkling orbs bestow th' unclo'd skies;
Her borrow'd lustre growing Cynthia lends,
And on the main a glittering path extends.
Gay. Rural Sports, c. 1.

Slow sinks, more lovely ere his rage begun,
Along Morea's hills the setting sun;
Not, as in Northern climes, obscurely bright,
But one unclo'd blaze of living light!
Byron. The Corsair, c. 3.

UN-CLOVEN. Not split.

Ant. Let's turn back then;
My skull's uncloven yet, let me but kill.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Chances, Act ii. sc. 1.

UN-CLUTCH, v. To remove, to free from,
to loose—the seizure, the grasp, or gripe.

If the terrors of the Lord could not melt his bowels, un-clutch his griping hand, or disseize him of his prey; yet sure it must discourage him from grasping of heaven too.
Decay of Christian Piety.

UN-CO'ACHED. Separated, loosed from the coach.

These (here arriv'd) the mules uncoacht, and draue
Vp to the gulphie riuers shore, that gaue
Sweet grasse to them.—Chapman. Homer. Odyssey, b. vi.

UNC

UN-COA'CTED. Not driven together, compelled, constrained, forced.

All homogeneous, simple, single, pure, previous, un-knotted, uncoacted, nothing existing but those eight uni-versall orders.
More. Song of the Soul, (1642.) To the Reader.

UN-COFFINED. Free from, destitute of, not placed in—a coffin; i.e. the chest or box constructed for the reception of the dead.

— Upon the watery plain
The wrecks are all thy deed, nor doth remain
A shadow of man's ravage, save his own,
When, for a moment, like a drop of rain,
He sinks into thy depths with bubbling groan,
Without a grave, unknell'd, uncoffin'd, and unknown.
Byron. Childe Harold, c. 4.

Seemed all on fire that chapel proud,
Where Roslin's chiefs uncoffined lie,
Each baron, for a sable shroud,
Sheathed in his iron panoply.
Scott. Lay of the Last Minstrel, c. 6.

UN-CO'GITABLE. See INCOGITANT. That cannot be thought of.

But [they] haue in themselves a farre more excellent sight, hearyng, deliuerne, & speche, by meanes uncogitable to man, then any man can haue liuing there on earth.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 338.

UN-COIF, v. To remove, to take off or divest of—the coif, (a covering for the head.)

Lorenzo! thou, her majesty's renown'd,
Though uncoif'd counsel, learned in the world!
Who think'st thyself a Murray, with disdain May'st look on me.—Young. Complaint, Night 8.

UN-COIL, v. To loose, to free from—the wreaths or folds; usually applied to circular or spiral folds.

Between which [great fibres] may be seen the spiral air-vessels (like threads of cob-web) a little uncoiled.
Derham. Physico-Theology, b. x.

UN-COINED. Not minted, forged, fabricated (from the lump or mass, into pieces for current use); not invented.

And while thou liu'st, deare Kate, take a fellow of plaine and uncoyned constancie, for he perforce must do thee right, because he hath not the gift to wooe in other places.
Shakespeare. Hen. V. Act v. sc. 2.

For when the coin, is as it should be, according to the standard (let the standard be what it will) weighty and unclipp'd, it is impossible that the value of coin'd silver should be less than the value or price of uncoined; because, as I have shewn, the value and quantity of silver are the same.—Locke. Farther Considerations on Money.

UN-COLLE'CTED. Not gathered or brought together; not having the thoughts or faculties brought together in presence, for present or immediate use; not composed.

Amint. What a wild beast is uncollected man!
The thing that we call honour, bears us all Headlong unto sin, and yet it self is nothing.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Maid's Tragedy, Act v.

The swaine perceiving by her words ill sorted,
That she was wholly from herself transported,
And fearing lest those often idle fits Might cleane expel her uncollected wits:
"Faire nymph," said he, "the powers above deny So faire a beautie should so quickly dy."
Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b. i. a. 1.

UN-CO'LOURED. Not having any tinge, die, or stain; not tinged, died, or stained.

Whether to deck with clouds the uncoloured skie,
Or wet the thirstie earth with falling showers,
Rising or falling still advance his praise.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. v.

When you look through a red glass, the whole heavens seem bloody, but through pure uncoloured glass, you receive the clear light, that is so refreshing and comfortable to behold.—Leighton. Com. on 1 Peter, i. 22.

UN-COMBED. Not separated, disentangled, decked by a comb, (used for hair, wool, &c.)

His careless locks, uncombed and vnshorne,
Hung long adowne, and beard all ouer-growne,
That well he seemd to be some wight forlorne.
Spenser. Daphnaida.

Tisiphone each where doth shake and shiuer
Her flaming fier brond, encountering me,
Whose lockes uncombed cruell adders be.
Id. Virgil. Gnat.

His black uncombed locks dishevell'd fell
About his face; through which, as brands of hell, Sunk in his skull, his staring eyes did glow.
G. Fletcher. Christ's Triumph on Earth.

Her shining hair, uncomb'd, was loosely spread,
A crown of mastless oak adorn'd her head.
Dryden. The Knight's Tale, b. iii.

UN-COMBINE, v. To loose, sever or separate, the coupling, connexion, union, coalescence.

Then when out-breaking vengeance uncombines
The ill-join'd plots, so fairly over-cast;
Turns up those huge pretended heaps of shows,
And all these weak illusions overthrows.

Daniel. Civil Wars, b. iii.

His purposes untwist as easily as the rude conjuncture of uncombining cables in the violence of a northern tempest.

Bp. Taylor, vol. ii. Ser. 2.

UN-COMEA'TABLE. That cannot be come at: a vulgarism.

This Divito is the most skillful of all politicians; he has a perfect art in being unintelligible in discourse, and uncomeatable in business.—Tatler, No. 12.

UN-COMELY, adj. } Not becoming or UNCO'MELY, ad. } convenient, not fit, UNCO'MELINESS. } suitable, agreeable, graceful.

And we se, that ther of slownesse is takē, and the childrens personages do waxe uncomly, and growe lesse in stature.—Sir T. Elyot. The Governour, b. i. c. 11.

But, why, oh why, my Ligurine,
Flow my thin teares, downe these pale cheeks of mine?
Or why, my well-grac'd words among,
With an uncomely silence failes my tongue?

B. Jonson. Horace, b. iv.

The first troupe was a monstrous rabblement
Of foule misshapen wights, of which some were Headed like owles, with beakes uncomely bent.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 11.

Venutius with other forces, and the help of her own subjects, who detested the example of so foul a fact, and with all the uncomliness of their subjection to the monarchie of a woman, a peece of manhood not every day to be found among Britans, though shee had got by subtle train his brother with many of his kindred into her hands, brought her soon below the confidence of beeing able to resist longer.

Milton. Hist. of England, b. ii.

Christians indeed are not so watchful and accurate in all their ways as becomes them; but stain their holy profession either with pride or covetousness, or contentions, or some other such like uncomeliness.

Leighton. Com. on 1 Peter, ii. 12.

For how uncomely a sight is a man in a rage? a man fretting, and fuming, and suffering his passion to ride his reason; indeed so uncomely is it, that there is no man living who allows it in himself, but will condemn and despise it in another.—South, vol. x. Ser. 4.

We generally form such ideas of people at first sight,
as we are hardly ever persuaded to lay aside afterwards:
for this reason, a man could wish to have nothing disagreeable or uncomely in his approaches, to be able to enter a room with a good grace.—Spectator, No. 67.

As for the Pictish damsel, we have an easy chair prepared at the upper end of the table; which we doubt not but she will grace with a very hideous aspect, and better become the seat in the native and unaffected uncomeliness of her person, than with all the superficial arts of the pencil.

Id. No. 52.

UN-COMFORTABLE. } Not strength-UNCO'MFORTABLY. } ened, confirmed, UNCO'MFORTABLENESS. } heartened, encour-UNCO'MFORTED. } aged, recreated, solaced, consoled, cheered: in a state of gratifying ease. Cotgrave, in v. Inconsolable:—Uncomfortable,—not to be comforted.

Forsaking this bay and uncomfortable coast (nothing appearing vnto vs but hideous rockes and mountaines, bare of trees, and voide of any greene herbe) we followed the coast to the south, with weather faire and cleare.

Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 149.

Am. If a memory remain
Of my departed mother; if the purity
Of her unblemish'd faith deserve to live
In your remembrance, let me yet by these Awake your love to my uncomforted brother.

Beaum. & Fletch. The Laws of Candy, Act iii.

Thus in my closet being left alone,
Upon the floor uncomfortably lying,
The fact committed, and the murtherer gone.

Drayton. Legend of Matilda.

Should we be driven on shore, we had the uncomfortable prospect of ending our days on some desolate coast, without any reasonable hope of ever getting off again.

Anson. Voyages, b. i. c. 10.

But mankind must and will have some religion; and if they forsake a good one, sooner or later the uncomfortable-ness of unbelief, and the terrors of conscience after a wicked life, will drive most of them to a worse.

Secker, vol. iii. Ser. 34.

UN-COMMANDED. } Not ordered, go-UNCOMMAN'DERLIKE. } verned, directed or controlled.

I wondre of what beleue your sayd chaplaine is, yt he cō-sydereth not nowe, these darke figures & shadowes, all ful-fylled and fynyshe in Christ, but wil make of them a newe uncommaunded religyon.—Bale. Apology, fol. 18.

Vpon al these matters afore rehearsed, I thus cōclude, that these uncomaunded vowes are such ydele, mockynge & blasphemouse promyses, as of necessite ought to be brokē.

Id. Ib. fol. 25.

No trumpetts sound: piles uncommanded fly:

Mischeife's oft done as they their lauelins try.

May. Lucan. Pharsalia, b. vi.

But for a judge, but for a magistrate, the shepherd of his people, to surrender up his approbation against law and his own judgment, to the obstinacy of his herd, what more un-judge-like, more un-magistrate-like, and in war more un-commander-like?

Millon. Doct. & Disc. of Divorce, b. i. c. 11.

But supposing these to be real, yet they were, I say, uncommanded instances of virtue; not possible, or, if possible, not fit to be practiced by the far greater part of Christians.

Atterbury, vol. i. Ser. 10.

UN-COMME'NDABLE. } That cannot be UNCOMME'NDED. } spoken well or favourably of; praised, approved.

It is uncommendable throughe wayne arrogancye to take vpon vs that we haue not.—Udal. Luke, Pref.

He [Martial] had a wit worthy of a better resolution, nor is there any thing to excuse him but the un-commendable licitousnesse of poetrie.—Feltham. On Eccles. ii. 11.

Tell her that's young,
And shuns to have her graces spy'd,
That hadst thou sprung
In deserts, where no men abide,
Thou must have uncommended dy'd.—Waller. A Song.

UN-COMME'NSURATE. More usually In.
Not measured by one and the same measure; not of the same measure or dimensions; not adequate, or co-equal.

I observ'd before that our senses are short, imperfect, and uncommensurate to the vastness and profundity of things, and therefore cannot receive the just images of them.

Glanvill, Ess. 1.

UN-COMME'RCIAL. Not according to, or consistent with the principles or rules of trade.

You did not think it uncommercial to tax the whole mass of your manufactures, and, let me add, your agriculture too.

Burke. On American Taxation.

UN-COMMI'SSIONED. Not appointed or empowered; having no power committed or consigned.

But even more refined Mercuries, who have the advantages of an improved reason to disabuse them, are yet frequently captivated to these deceiving prepossessions:
appealing to a judicature both uncommissioned and unjust.

Glanvill. Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 8.

For as we should never hastily run after uncommissioned guides, so above all things we should beware of artful or self-sufficient, of rash and impetuous ones.

Secker, vol. i. Ser. 1.

UN-COMMITTED. Not consigned or delivered; not effected, performed or accomplished;
not done.

For office uncommitted oft annoyeth.

Chaucer. The Assemblie of Fowles.

Because he hath no company to debauch, no strength to maintain, no injury to provoke the uncommitted sin.

Hammond. Works, vol. iv. p. 511.

'Twas hardly midnight when that fray begun,
For Conrad's plans matured, at once were done;
And Havoc loathes so much the waste of time,
She scarce had left an uncommitted crime.

Byron. The Corsair, c. 2.

UN-COM'MON. } Not belonging or per-UNCO'MMONLY. } taining to many; not fre-UNCO'MMONNESS. } quently seen, or known;
rare, scarce, seldom met with.

I mene not that my father is none other than I: but that betwene vs two is no vnlikenes, or any thyng uncommon as touching our higher and our diuine nature.

Udal. John, c. 14.

I know not why it may not be conjectured, that the kindness they [spirits] have for us, and the appetite of foretelling strange things, and the putting the word upon expectation, which we find is very grateful to our own natures, may not encline them also to give us some general notice of those uncommon events which they foresee.

Glanvill, Ess. 6.

They are all called by the English subtle jacks, because of this uncommon way of building.

Dampier. Voyages, an. 1676.

But if there be a beauty or uncommonness joined with this grandeur, as in a troubled ocean, a heaven adorned with stars and meteors, or a spacious landscape cut out into rivers, woods, rocks, and meadows, the pleasure still grows upon us, as it arises from more than a single principle.

Spectator, No. 412.

They were reported to be gentlemen sent abroad to make observations and discoveries, and were uncommonly qualified for that purpose.—Cook. First Voyage, b. i. c. 2.

The land every where about Queen Charlotte's Sound is uncommonly mountainous, rising immediately from the sea into large hills with blunted tops.

Id. Third Voyage, b. i. c. 8.

That I have not more diligently sought them, and laboured to introduce more serious discourse into my ordinary visits to you, I am sensible is a fault, which neither the uncommonness of such conversation, nor the fear of disgusting persons by it, are sufficient to excuse.

Secker, vol. v. Ser. 9.

UN-COMMU'NICATED. } See INCOMMU-UNCOMMU'NICATING. } NICABLE. Not UNCOMMU'NICABLE. } made common to UNCOMMU'NICATIVE. } others; not bestowed, conferred, imparted, revealed, disclosed to; shared or participated with.

I have seen original letters of protection (a perfect and uncommunicable power royal) by that great prince Richard earl of Poitiers and Cornwall, brother to Hen. 3. sent to the sheriff of Rutland, for and in behalf of a nunnery about Standford.—Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 13. Selden. Illust.

There are sicknesses that walk in darkness, and there are exterminating angels that fly wrapt up in the curtains of immateriality and an uncommunicating nature.

Bp. Taylor, vol. iii. Ser. 8.

Supreme power, whether communicated or uncommunicated, is supreme power: and if the Son has it communicated, then certainly he has it; which is sufficient to our purpose.—Waterland, vol. ii. Ser. 6.

[The British Parliament] were now frightened back again, and made an universal surrender of all that had been thought the peculiar, reserved, uncommunicable rights of England.—Burke. Speech at Bristol.

It is a striking characteristic of deep sorrow that it is of a tacit and uncommunicative nature.

Cogan. On the Passions, pt. i. c. 2.

UN - COMPA'CTED. See INCOMPA'CTED.
Not put, set or fixed together; not firm or settled.

He catches at that which is not yet in his reach; which seems to unfold an uncompact mind, that is not so wise as to subsist well with what it hath in present.

Feltham, pt. ii. Res. 23.

This, I think, is a plain demonstration, that these rivers were not as they are usually represented; so many streams of running matter; for how could a liquid, that lay hardening by degrees, settle in such a furrow'd, uncompact surface?

Addison. Italy. Vesuvio.

UN-COM'PANIED, i.e. unaccompanied, (qv.)

And still, her thought, that she was left alone

Uncompanied, great voyages to wend

In desert land, her Tyrian folk to seek.

Surrey. Virgile. Æneis, b. iv

Hermes! (for thou art herald of our will

At all times) to yon beauteous nymph convey

Our fix'd resolve, that brave Ulysses thence Depart, uncompanied by God or man.

Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. v.

UN - COMPA'SSIONATE. Not having, having no, fellow-feeling or sympathy; pity or commiseration.

Altho' there be nothing in the plain words of this law, that seems to regard the afflictions of a wife, how great soever; yet expositors determine, rightly, that God was not uncompassionate of them also in the framing of this law.

Milton. Tetrachordon.

Be not unlike all others, not austere

As thou art strong, inflexible as steel.

If thou in strength all mortals dost exceed,

In uncompassionate anger do not so.

Id. Samson. Agonistes.

UN-COMPE'LLABLE. } That cannot be UNCOMPE'LLED. } moved, or caused to move, or driven together; that cannot be constrained, obliged, forced.

They that are ledde and ordered by the spirite of Christ, runne uncompelled, and doe more than al the whole law requireth.—Udal. 1 Tim. c. 1.

If I receive for desert, that which is done to me is paid, not given. But a noble courtesie falling like rain in due season, enslaves a man more than a market sale among Moors: for it conquers the uncompellable mind, and dis-interests man of himself.—Feltham. On Luke, xiv. 20.

— But why o' th' sudden now does the fit take ye, Unoffer'd, or uncompell'd? why these sweet courtesies?
Beaum. & Fletch. The Maid in the Mill, Act v. sc. 2.

— Have we, Clarinda,
Since thy father's wrack, sought liberty,
To lose it un-compell'd? Id. The Sea Voyage, Act ii.

In every commonwealth, when it decays, corruption makes two main steps; first, when men cease to do according to the inward and uncompell'd actions of virtue, caring only to live by the outward constraint of law, and turn the simplicity of real good into the craft of seeming so by law.
Milton. Tetrachordon.

Where love gives law, beauty the sceptre sways,
And, uncompell'd, the happy world obeys.
Waller. Triple Combat.

UN-COMPE/NSATED. Having no equal weight or value given or returned; no equivalent, no remuneration paid.

To join together the restraints of an universal internal and external taxation, is an unnatural union; perfect uncompensated slavery.—Burke. On American Taxation.

UN-COMPLA/INING. Not uttering grief, discontent, lamentation.

But let not on thy hook the tortur'd worm,
Convulsive, twist in agonizing folds;
Which, by rapacious hunger swallow'd deep,
Gives, as you tear it from the bleeding breast
Of the weak, helpless uncomplaining wretch,
Harsh pain, and horror to the tender hand.
Thomson. Spring.

UN-COMPLAISA/NT. } Not pleasing or UNCOMPLAISA/NTLY. } endeavouring to please; not gratifying or agreeable.

It is hard to speak of these false fair ones, without saying something uncomplaisant.—Spectator, No. 41.

Thus sons shall be admitted before daughters; or, as our male law givers have somewhat uncomplaisantly expressed it, the worthiest of blood shall be preferred.
Blackstone. Commentaries, b. ii. c. 14.

UN-COMPLE/TE. } Commonly written In.
UNCOMPLE/TED. } Not fulfilled or accomplished; not performed or perfected.

Marriage is creation's perfectness, barren virginity is but uncompleted man.—Feltham. On Luke, xiv. 20.

These various incidents, being thus united, do not make different actions and fables, but are only the uncomplete and unfinished parts of the same action and fable.
Pope. View of the Epic Poem, § 4.

UN-COMPLY/ING. Not bending, inclining, yielding, conceding, assenting.

He shall find himself bound fast to an uncomplying discord of nature, or, as it oft happens, to an image of earth and fleam, with whom he lookt to be the copartner of a sweet and glad-some society, and sees withal that his bondage is now inevitable.—Milton. Doct. and Dis. of Divorce, b. i. c. 5.

For the uncomplying Jews were not satisfied with rejecting Christianity themselves; but made it their business to render it odious, suspected, and contemptible to the heathens also.—Atterbury, vol. i. Ser. 3.

He said; nor Hector uncomplying heard
His brother's voice, but with an instant leap,
All-arm'd, alighting, shook his glitt'ring spear,
And flying through his host, from side to side
Fir'd all their hearts to dreadful fight again.
Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. vi.

UN-COMPO/UNDED. } Not put, placed, UNCOMPO/UNDEDLY. } or set together—in UNCOMPO/UNDEDNESS. } union, conjunction, or combination; not combined, mixed, or mingled;
simple.

— For spirits when they please
Can either sex assume, or both; so soft
And uncompounded is their essence pure,
Not ty'd or manac'd with joynt or limb.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. i.

He is all these abstractedly, uncompoundedly, really, infinitely.—Bp. Hall. Remedy of Prophaneness, b. i. § 3.

[And] might by the help of a fast vow now stricken, and, with the blessing of God, practiced every hour of our lives after, come home to our father's house, old honest Jacob's plain tent, with peace and simplicity, cleanness, uncompoundedness of spirit.—Hammond, vol. iv. Ser. 5.

There is nothing can be plainer to a man, than the clear and distinct perception he has of those simple ideas: which being each in it self uncompounded, contains in it nothing but one uniform appearance, or conception in the mind, and is not distinguishable into different ideas.
Locke. Hum. Underst. b. ii. c. 2.

They are barely names that men give to various manifestations of the infinite wisdom of one simple uncompounded Being.—Warburton. Bolingbroke's Philosophy, Let. 2.

UN-COMPREHE/ND, v. } Now more usually UNCOMPREHE/NSIBLE. } Incomprehensible;
UNCOMPREHE/NSIVE. } i. e.—

That cannot be taken or held within, (sc. any bounds or limits;) that cannot be received or conceived, (met.) understood or imagined.

Further Theophylacte saith, the body of Christe is eaten: but the Godheade is not eaten: because it is untouchable, and uncomprehensible vnto our senses.
Jewell. Defence of the Apologie, p. 239.

That virtue must be out of countenance,
Of this gross spir't, or that weak shallow brain,
Or this nice wit, or that distemperance;
Neglect, distaste, uncomprehend, disdain.
Daniel. Musophilus.

The providence that's in a watchful state,
Knowes almost euery graine of Plutoes gold;
Findes bottome in th' uncomprehensiv deepes;
Keepes place with thought; and almost like the gods,
Doe thoughts vnuale in their dumbe cradles.
Shakespeare. Troyl. & Cress. Act iii. sc. 3.

Such old fashion'd principles and creeds, as tye up the minds of some narrow-spirited, uncomprehensive zealots, who know not the world, nor understand that he only is the truly wise man, who gets as much as he can.
South, vol. ii. Ser. 1.

UN-COMPRESSED. Not pushed, squeezed, thrust, closed fast, or strained together.

I shall premise an experiment, wherein uncompressed air is made by its own bare spring to break the solid body itself it is shut up in.—Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 195.

UN-COMPR/SED. Equivalent to uncomprehended, (qv.)

Nor came I hither by some poor event,
But by th' eternal destinies consent;
Whose uncomprised wisdom did foresee,
That you in marriage should be link'd to me.
Drayton. Owen Tudor to Q. Catherine.

UN-CONCE/IVABLE. } Now more usu-UNCONCE/IVABLY. } ally Inconceivable, UNCONCE/IVABLENESS. } i. e.— UNCONCE/IVED. } That cannot be UNCONCE/IVING. } taken or held within;
that cannot be contained or comprehended, understood or imagined.

And in the unconceiving vulgar sort,
Such an impression of his goodness gave,
As sainted him, and rais'd a strange report
Of miracles effected on his grave.—Daniel. Civil Wars, b. i.

And, if there be so much perfection in one, how unconceivable is the concurrent lustre and glory of many!
Bp. Hall. The Women's Vail.

But what of all this, now the power of godliness is denied by wicked men, how then? what is their case? surely inexplicably, unconceivably fearful.—Id. The Hypocrite.

The knowledge thereof [the notion of God] be much prejudiced by the confoundedness and stupidity of either superstitious or profane men, that please themselves in their large rhetorications concerning the unconceivableness and utter incomprehensibleness of the deity.
More. Immortality of the Soul, b. i. c. 4.

But if another denies the conversion of Aaron's rod into a serpent, upon the same account, of the unconceivableness of the manner how it was done; this cannot indeed be defended the former way.—Glanvill, Ess. 5.

Vast is my theme, yet unconceiv'd, and brings Untoward words, scarce loosen'd yet from things.—Creech.

We shall afterwards when this moment is passed over, and our short day's work dispatched, receive from God's bountiful hand an unconceivable affluence of good things, an eternal permanence of life.—Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 20.

It may be now fit to consider what these sensible bodies are made of, and that is of unconceivably small bodies or atoms, out of whose various combinations bigger molecules are made.—Locke. Elements of Natural Philosophy, c. 12.

UN-CONCE/RN. } The noun denotes,— UNCONCE/RNED. } the absence of a feeling UNCONCE/RNEDLY. } that any thing touches, UNCONCE/RNEDNESS. } affects, imports, or is UNCONCE/RNING. } important, or of conse-UNCONCE/RNMENT. } quence; appertains or belongs to, regards or respects, is a matter of any interest.

For the king now kept himself unconcerned from the quarrels of each prince, and carried a fair face to both.
Strype. Eccles. Mem. Edw. VI. an. 1552.

— For see the morn,
All unconcern'd with our unrest, begins
Her rosie progress smiling, let us forth.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. xi.

But for the present, lest such an unconcerning trifle be forgotten, I desire him to consider that he hath little reason to concern himself in the just number of seven Sacraments.
Bp. Taylor. Dissuasive from Popery, pt. i. b. ii.

And his unconcernment another time was as sottish, when he past on, and would not help or take notice of his friend Anaxarchus, when he was fallen into a ditch; which was brutish stupidity, rather than philosophical indifference.
Glanvill, Ess. 2.

— Whence, deeply rankling, grows
The partial thought, a listless unconcern,
Cold, and averting from our neighbour's good,
Thomson. Spring.

'Tis part therefore of this duty incumbent on us, to take notice of diligently, and carefully to consider, the divine benefits; not to let them pass undiscerned and unregarded by us, as persons either wofully blind, or stupidly drowsy, or totally unconcerned.—Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 8.

Let us shew our faith by our works; let us live, as if we did believe it; industriously indeed, warily, wisely; because by these we are to entitle ourselves to the protection of God; but withal, unconcernedly, cheerfully, resignedly, as knowing, that we are secure of his protection when we stand in need of it.—Atterbury, vol. iv. Ser. 10.

But though the living can seldom be praised with decency, yet the dead certainly often may; especially such of the dead, as had a very unusual degree of indifference and unconcernedness for what was said to their advantage, while they were living.—Id. vol. i. Ser. 6.

Some persons, as well philosophers as physicians, have either faultily, or at least indiscreetly, given many men occasion to think, that those, that being speculatively studious of nature's mysteries, depart, as I often do, from the vulgar peripatetick philosophy, and especially if they seem to favour that, which explicates the phenomena of nature by atoms, are inclined to atheism, or at least to an unconcernedness for any particular religion.
Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 253.

So spake Antinous, whom Ulysses' son Heard unconcern'd.—Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. xx.

UN-CONCLU/DENT. } Now more usually UNCONCLU/DINGNESS. } Inconclusive, (qv.) UNCONCLU/DIBLE. } Not closing, or UNCONCLU/SIVE. } bringing together to the same point or end; not ending, finishing, terminating, or determining; deciding.

All our arguments touching them [eternity and infinity] are inevident and unconcludent, because our understanding being but a finite power is capable only of finite objects.
Hale. Origin. of Mankind, p. 116.

He makes his understanding only the warehouse of other men's false and unconcluding reasonings, rather than a repository of truth for his own use.—Locke.

Yet they that lived immediately after it, that observed all the circumstances of the thing, and the disabilities of the persons and the uncertainty of the truth of its decrees, by reason of the unconcludingness of the arguments brought to attest it, were of another mind.
Bp. Taylor. Liberty of Prophesying, § 6.

By endeavouring more magisterially and determinately to comprehend and conclude that which is unconcludible, and incomprehensible to the understanding of man, we work ourselves into anxiety and subtle distemper.
More. Song of the Soul, Notes.

To which suggestions 'twere enough to say, that 'tis sufficient if the thing be well prov'd, though the design be not known: and to argue negatively à fine, is very unconclusive in such matters.—Glanvill, Ess. 6.

UN-CONCO/CTED. Not boiled; not dissolved into a state of nourishment; raw, crude; (met.) not digested, or matured, or ripened. See INCONCOCT.

Thus also we swallow cherry-stones, but void them unconcocted, and we usually say they preserve us from surfeit.
Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. iii. c. 22.

The heathen rhetorician could tell us, that by this so speedy entring upon action, and so timely venting our crude and unconcocted studies, a thing which in all cases is most pernicious, presumption is greater than strength.
Hales. Rem. Ser. 2 Pet. iii. 16.

He [Baxter] could not otherwise by any means begin a treatise, unless these hugely beloved relations did kindly usher the following very uneven, unconcocted, roving, often repeated and medley stuff.—Wood. Athenæ Oxon, vol. ii.

UN-CONDE/MNED. Not deemed, judged, or adjudged, (sc.) to deserve or suffer punishment; not blamed.

For all that thei pretende religiousnesse of very feare, lest the iudge should forthwith haue punished them, because thei would haue kylled an harmlesse and an uncondemned persone.—Udal. John. c. 18.

For say a man did abolish laws, and yet withall leave behind unrepealed and uncondemned the doctrines and books of Parmenides, Socrates, Heraclitus, and Plato, we should be far for all that from devouring one another, or living a savage life.—Holland. Plutarch. p. 919.

UN-CONDIT'ED. Not so mixed, as to savour or season; not preserved in a savoury state.

While he estimates the secrets of religion by such measures, they must needs seem as insipid as cork, or the uncondit'ed mushroom.—Bp. Taylor. vol. iii. Ser. 6.

UN-CONDITIONAL. } Not having, not UNCONDITIONALLY. } subject to condi-UNCONDITIONATE. } tions, i. e. to any circumstances, preliminary or antecedent, under or in consequence of, which any thing is done or required to be done; is agreed, or covenanted, bargained or stipulated to be done: not limited, not restricted; not subject to terms, stipulations, or agreements.

Not to swell and puff up our fancies any longer, with an opinion, that we are the special favorites to whom those promises are unconditionally consign'd, but to engage and oblige our souls to that universal cleansing that may really instate us in those promises, either of deliverance here or salvation eternally.—Hammond. vol. iv. Ser. 6.

When he talks of being infallible, if the notion be applied to his church, then he means an infallibility, antecedent, absolute, unconditionate, such as will not permit the church ever to erre.—Bp. Taylor. Dis. from Popery. pt. ii. Intro.

"O pass not Lord, an absolute decree,
Or bind thy sentence unconditional;
But in thy sentence our remorse foresee,
And in that foresight this thy doom recal."

Dryden. Annus Mirabilis.

If they are subjected to the obligation of an immediate and unconditional payment of such bank notes as soon as presented, there trade may, with safety to the public, be rendered in all other respects perfectly free.

Smith. Wealth of Nations. b. ii. c. 2.

UN-CONDU'CING. } Not leading, draw-UNCONDU'CTED. } ing, guiding; not sub-serving or contributing.

The affairs of the world in many instances are so entangled, so unconducting to the affairs of the spirit, so stubborn that they are hardly to be manag'd by a meek person.—Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience. b. i. c. 4.

He that can seriously ascribe all this to an undisciplined and unconducted troop of atoms rambling up and down confusedly through the field of infinite space; what might he not as easily assert, or admit?—Barrow. vol. ii. Ser. 6.

UN-CONFERR'ED. Not brought together in common; not communed, conversed, or discoursed.

[He] hath not forborn to scandalize him, unconferr'd with, unadmonish'd, undealt with by any pastorly or brotherly conviction, in the most open and invidious manner, and at the most bitter opportunity that drift or set design could have invented.—Milton. Tetrachordon.

UN-CONFESSING. Not declaring or revealing; not acknowledging or admitting.

Or because he may not as a judge sit out the wrangling noise of litigious courts to shrieve the purses of unconfessing and unmortify'd sinners, and not their souls.

Milton. Animad. upon the Rem. Defence.

UN-CONF'NED. } Not ended, terminated, UNCONF'NEDLY. } or determined; not UNCONF'NABLE. } bounded or limited; not enclosed or inscribed, restrained, shut or fastened in; within bounds, limit, or restraint.

Had we not knowing souls, at first infus'd
To teach a difference, 'twixt extremes and goods?
Were we not made our selves, free, unconf'n'd
Commanders of our own affections?

Beaum. & Fletch. The Woman Hater. Act iii. sc. 1.

You stand vpon your honor: why, (thou unconf'nable baseness,) it is as much as I can doe to keepe the termes of my honour precise.

Shakespeare. Merry Wiues of Windsor. Act ii. sc. 1.

No puny pow'r, but he whose high command
Is unconf'n'd, who rules the seas and land;
And tempers thunder in his awful hand.

Dryden. Ovid. Metam. b. i.

Prove any church oppos'd to this our head,
So one, so pure, so unconf'n'dly spread,
Under one chief of the spiritual state,
The members all combin'd, and all subordinate.

Id. The Hind and the Panther.

He stints it not to such as serve him, or oblige him, or please him; whom some private interest ties, or some particular affection endears him to: but scatters it indifferently and unconfinedly toward all men that need it.

Barrow. vol. i. Ser. 31.

UN-CONFIRMED. Not supported, maintained, strengthened, assured, or secured, or ascertained.

Anon after Anselme intreated for hys dysgraded abbottes and unconfirmed prelates, whyche was graunted forthwith, and they restored to their dygnytees.

Bale. English Votaries. pt. ii.

The swift approach, and unexpected speed,
The king had made upon this new-raisd force,
In th' unconfirmed troops much fear did breed,
Untimely hind'ring their intended course.

Daniel. Civil Wars. b. iv.

— But him the Baptist soon
Descri'd, divinely warn'd, and witness bore
As to his worthier, and would have resign'd
To him his Heavenly office, nor was long
His witness unconfirm'd.—Milton. Paradise Regained. b. i.

Eur. Brav'd by a boy!—a boy!—the nurse's milk
Yet moist upon his lip,—feeble in infancy,
Essaying the first rudiments of manhood,
With strength unpractis'd yet, and unconfirm'd.

Rowe. Ulysses. Act iv.

Their [French] recent histories are destitute of dignity both of diction and sentiment, and unconfirmed by authorities.—Knox. Liberal Education. Conc.

UN-CONFORM, adj. } See INCONFORMITY.
UNCONFORMABLE. } To conform is to be UNCONFORMITY. } or cause to be of one or the same form; to be or cause to be like, similar, in unison. And Unconform, adj. is, consequentially,—

Not like or similar or in unison, or correspondent.

Unconformable (used actively),—not being or acting in unison or agreement; not agreeing, or complying.

From hence, no cloud, or, to obstruct his sight,
Starr interpos'd, however small he sees,
Not unconform to other shining globes,
Earth and the gard'n of God, with cedars crown'd
Above all hills.

Milton. Paradise Lost. b. v.

It is the particular order established in the Church of England, which thereby they did intend to alter, as beeing not commanded by God; whereas vnto those general rules they know, we do not defend that we may hold any thing unconformable.—Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie. b. iii. § 7.

Neither are they to be pressed with the rigour of such ancient canons as were framed for other times, much less so odiously to be upbraided with unconformity unto the pattern of our Lord and Saviour's estate, in such circumstances as himself did never mind to require that the rest of the world should of necessity be like him.—Id. Ib. b. vii.

Now, because this particular concerns servants, let them reflect upon their own carriage and examine it by this rule; and truly the greatest part of them will be found very unconformable to it, being either closely fraudulent and deceitful, or grossly stubborn and disobedient, abusing the lenity and mildness of their masters, or murmuring at their just severity.—Leighton. Com. on 1 Pet. ii. 18—20.

UN-CONFO'UND, v. Not to mix, mingle or blend or involve. To free from mixture.

And against their own discipline, which they boast to be the throne of Christ, [they] absolve him, unconfound him, though unconverted, unrepentant, unsensible of all their precious saints and martyrs whose blood they have so oft laid upon his head.

Milton. The Tenure of Kings & Magistrates.

God, therefore, in his infinite wisdom brought them into Egypt, and kept them there during this period; the only place where they could remain, for so long a time, safe and unconfounded with the natives.

Warburton. Divine Legation. b. iv. § 6.

UN-CONFU'SED. } Not mixed, mingled or UNCONFU'SEDLY. } blended; not involved, perplexed, intricate; distinct, determinate.

Intellective memory is more distinct and unconfused than the sensitive memory.—Hale. Origin. of Mankind. p. 56.

If in having our ideas in the memory ready at hand, consists quickness of parts; in this of having them unconfused, and being able nicely to distinguish one thing from another, where there is but the least difference, consists in a great measure the exactness of judgement.

Locke. Hum. Underst. b. ii. c. 11.

Every one finds that he knows, when any idea is in his understanding, and that when more than one are there, he knows them, distinctly and unconfusedly from one another

Locke. Hum. Underst. b. ii. c. 11.

Having an unconfused, though incomplete, conception of goodness, of equity, of universal providence, rejoicing in its protection, satisfied with its proceedings, earnest to perform laudable actions, going through our duties with taste and pleasure: these I take to be the seasons of grace.

Search. Light of Nature.

UN-CONFU'TED. } Not abated or wea-UNCONFU'TABLE. } kened (sc. by argument or evidence); not proved to be fallacious; not convicted or convinced of error.

If this shall be the course, that what was wont to be a chief commendation, and the ground of other men's confidence in an author, his diligence, his learning, his elocution whether by right or by ill meaning granted him, shall be turn'd now to a disadvantage and suspicion against him, that what he writes though unconfuted, must therefore be mistrusted.—Milton. Tetrachordon.

One political argument they boasted of as unconfutable, that from the marriages of ecclesiasticks, would ensue poverty in many of the children, and thence a disgrace and burden to the church.—Sprat. Ser.

UN-CONGE/ALED. Not frozen, or chilled from a fluid to a solid substance; not concreted, or coagulated.

Upon this ground Paracelsus in his Archidoxis, extracteth the magistry of wine, after four moneths digestion in horse-dung, exposing it unto the extremity of cold, whereby the aqueous parts will freeze, but the spirit retire and be found uncongealed in the center.

Brown. Vulgar Errors. b. ii. c. 1.

— Those tears unshed
But flow back to the fountain head,
And resting in their spring more pure,
For ever in its depth endure,
Unseen, unwept, but uncongeal'd,
And cherish'd most where least reveal'd.

Byron. Parisina.

UN-CONGE/NIAL. Not pertaining to the same kind; not suiting, adapting, according.

But even in England, a cold northern country, where I imagine its growth is impeded by an uncongenial climate, the plane [tree] appears with a degree of beauty which seems to justify the admiration of the ancients.

Knox. Winter Evenings. Even. 30.

UN-CONJUGAL. Not pertaining or belonging, or according to (the yoke of) marriage; not consistent with it; not connubial or matrimonial.

And what greater nakedness or unfitness of mind than that which hinders ever the solace and peaceful society of the married couple; and what hinders that more than the unfitness and defectiveness of an unconjugal mind.

Milton. Doctrine & Discip. of Divorce. b. i. c. 1.

My name perhaps among the circumcis'd
In Dan, in Judah, and the bordering tribes,
To all posterity may stand defam'd,
With malediction mention'd, and the blot
Of falshood most unconjugal traduct.

Id. Samson Agonistes.

UN-CONJUNCTIVE. Not able to conjoin, unite, connect, combine.

Neither can it be said properly that such twain were ever divorce'd, but only parted from each other, as two persons unconjunctive are unmarriageable together.

Milton. Doctrine & Discip. of Divorce. b. i. c. 15.

UN-CONNE'CTED. } Not knit, joined,
UNCONNE'CTEDLY. } united, linked, fastened together; not adhering or cohering, or depending.
See INCONNECT.

If we come to them soured and disgusted, though perhaps it be owing to somewhat entirely unconnected with them, we shall be apt to judge unfavourably.

Secker. vol. ii. Ser. 20.

We do not usually question the credit of a writer, by reason of an opinion he may have delivered upon subjects unconnected with his evidence.

Paley. Evidences of Christianity. pt. iii. c. 2.

I beg the reader's attention to this circumstance, that no other part of this prayer has any relation to a bodily want. This petition therefore comes in very abruptly and unconnectedly.—Knox. Cons. on the Lord's Supper.

UN-CONN'VING. Not winking at; not permitting to pass unnoticed; not witnessing without notice.

Yet to that hideous place not so confin'd
By rigour unconquering, but that oft Leaving my dolorous prison I enjoy
Large liberty to round this globe of earth.

Milton. Paradise Regained, b. i.

UN-CONQUERABLE. } That cannot be

UNCONQUERABLY. } acquired or gained

UNCONQUERED. } by force; that cannot be taken by force; vanquished, subdued, overpowered: subjected, subverted.

A mynde that is vnbroken and unconquered agaynst al wanton enticemētes, agaynst all injuries, sheweth a man to be a Christian.—Udal. John, c. 2.

All is not lost; the unconquerable will,
And study of revenge, immortal hate,
And courage never to submit or yield:
And what is else not to be overcome?

Milton. Paradise Lost, b. i.

"Such was the slaughter these three champions made;
But most Eneates, whose unconquer'd hands
Sent thousand foes down to th' infernal shade."

P. Fletcher. The Purple Island, c. 11.

To him alone the beateous prize he yields,
Whose arms should ravish from Phylacian fields
The herds of Iphycus, detain'd in wrong;
Wild, furious herds, unconquerably strong.

Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. xi.

But to subdue th' unconquerable mind,
To make one reason have the same effect Upon all apprehension; to force this
Or this man just to think as thou and I do;
Impossible.

Rowe. Tamerlane, Act iii.

They vow the youthful monarch's fate to share,
Above distress, unconquer'd by despair,
Still to defend the town, and animate the war.

Id. On the Successes of Q. Anna.

But me renouncing, he performs the will
Of Thetis now; she, suppliant, kiss'd his knees,
And, by his beard, implor'd him to exalt
Achilles, her unconquerable son.

Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. viii.

Unconquer'd daughter of imperial Jove!
Alas! what see we? Shall Achaia's sons, Borne o'er the billowy flood, regain at last
Their native shores by flight?—Id. Ib. b. ii.

UN-CONSCIONABLE. } See INCONSCION-

UNCONSCIONABLY. } ABLE. Having no

UNCONSCIONABLENESS. } conscience, no knowledge, no sense or feeling of right or wrong, no reason, no discretion, no moderation, or restriction.

Whereupon, the captaine waying their unconscionable request, wrote to them a letter, that they dealt too rigorously with him.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 512.

It is oft found likewise, that diuerse unconscionable dealers haue one measure to sell by, & another to buie withall, the like is also in weights and yet all sealed and bronded.—Holinshed. Description of England, b. ii. c. 18.

Chor. His giantship is gone somewhat crest-fall'n,
Stalking with less unconsc'nable strides,
And lower looks, but in a sultrie chafe.

Milton. Samson Agonistes.

When need meets with unconscionableness, all conditions are easily swallowed of unlawful entrances, of wicked executions.—Bp. Hall. Cont. Micah's Idolatry.

Woe to these corrupted sonnes of Heli, which through their insufficiency and unconscionableness, have poured contempt on their owne faces.

Id. The Impresse of God, pt. ii.

This is a common vice; tho' all things here
Are sold, and sold unconscionably dear.

Dryden. Juvenal, Sat. 3.

UN-CONSCIOUS. } See INCONSCIOUS. Not

UNCONSCIOUSNESS. } knowing, not feeling

(within ourselves); not sensitive or animate.

Yet we these wondrous functions ne'er perceive,
Functions by which we move, by which we live;
Unconscious we these motions never heed
Whether they err or by just laws proceed.

Blackmore. Creation.

— Die the race!

May none escape us! Neither he who flies,
Nor ev'n the infant in his mother's womb Unconscious.

Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. vi.

Can any distinction be assigned between the two cases; between the producing watch, and the producing plant: both passive, unconscious substances; both by the organization which was given to them, producing their like, without understanding or design; both, that is, instruments?

Paley. Natural Theology, c. 4.

We perceive also in Clement a total unconsciousness of doubt, whether these were the real words of Christ, which are read as such in the gospels.

Id. Evidences of Christianity, pt. i. c. 9.

UN-CONSECRATE, adj. } Not dedicated

UNCONSECRATE, v. } or devoted to UNCONSECRATED. } sacred purposes;

not hallowed; not set apart for the service or honour of.

To unconsecrate,—to strip, deprive or divest of its sacred functions, or character.

And diuers times she was houseled in sight of y^e people
w^t an host unconsecrate, & al the peple looking vpō.

Sir T. More. Workes, p. 134.

They fear religion with such a fear as loves not, and think the purity of the gospel too pure for them, and that any uncleanness is more suitable to their unconsecrated estate.—Milton. The Reason. of Church Government, b. ii.

Should any boisterous, unclean, unqualified invader break in on those sacred mansions, commit such riots, such burglary upon heaven:—Heaven must be unconsecrated by such violence, cease to be the palace of God, a place of purity, or of bliss.—Hammond. Works, vol. iv. Ser. 6.

Of this, I could give such an instance from something wrote by a certain prelate of theirs, cardinal and archbishop of Beneventum, as were enough, not only to astonish all pious ears, but almost to unconsecrate the very church I speak in.—South, vol. ii. Ser. 11.

A chapel was erected, well-pewed, well-warmed, dedicated,
un-endowed, un-consecrated.—Pennant. London, p. 169.

UN-CONSENTED. } Not thinking or feel-

UNCONSENTING. } ing as others think or feel; not according or agreeing, concurring, conceding.

All our infirmities are the effects of the sin of Adam, and part of that which we call original sin, therefore all these our infirmities which Christ felt, as in him they were for ever without sin, so as long as they are natural, and uncon- *sent*ed to, must be in us without sin.

Bp. Taylor. Of Repentance, c. 7. § 5.

— When thus begun

To Nestor's heir Ulysses' godlike son:

"Let not Pisistratus in vain be prest,

Nor unconsenting hear his friend's request."

Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. xv.

UN-CONSEQUENTIAL. Usually Inconse- quential.

Not following or ensuing; as an effect, inference,
deduction.

Some applications may be thought too remote and uncon- sequential; as in the verses on the Lady Dancing.

Johnson. Life of Waller.

UN-CONSIDERATE. } Now usually In-

UNCONSIDERATENESS. } considerate;—

UNCONSIDERED. } Not viewing with care or attention; not caring, heeding, attending, regarding, minding.

Thus much beguiled have

Poor unconsiderate wights,

These momentary pleasures, fugitive delights.

Daniel. Chorus to Cleopatra.

And hence it is that we see divers times men otherwise of life and reputation pure and unblameable, upon conceit and unconsiderateness by a secret judgement of God to fall upon extremes no less fearful then are the issues of open profaneness and impiety.—Hales. Rem. Ser. Matt. xxvi. 75.

— You did begin

As if you met decades of many kinds:

Perceive you none, that do arouse your pity

But th' unconsider'd soldier?

Beaum. & Fletch. The Two Noble Kinsmen, Act i. sc. 2.

UNCONSONANT. See INCONSONANT. Not in unison (of sound); not harmonizing, according, agreeing.

It seemeth a thing unconsonant, that the world should honour any other as the Saviour, but him whom it honoureth as the Creatour of the world.

Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, b. v. § 51.

UN-CONSPIRINGNESS. The absence of combination; concert, complot, confederacy.

[It is as high, as pious a satisfaction] to find in writers severed by so many ages, and regions, a harmony, whose dissonances serve but to manifest the sincerity and uncon- spiringness of the writers.—Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 276.

UN-CONSTANT. } More usually Incon-

UNCONSTANCY. } stant. (qv.)

UNCONSTANTLY. } Not standing together, firmly, fixed, stably or steadily; not firm, fixed,

stable or steady.

So unconstante is the common people, and so sone enclyned to euill.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 1396.

And partlye [they] were such as through unconstancy & lightnes of minde, desired thaliteration of the state.

Goldinge. Cesar, fol. 44.

Let the poore mā haue the true fear of God, let him not say unconstantly I know not what to do, least God answer him, nether know I what to do w^t thee.

Caluin. Fovre Godlye Sermons, Ser. 1.

O cruel causer of undeserved change,
By great desire unconstantly to range,
Is this your way for proof of steadfastness?
Perdie! you know, the thing was not so strange.

Wyat. The Lover Bemoaneth.

Without which nor his greatness, nor his wits,
Could ward him from the king's unconstant fits.

Daniel. Civil Wars, b. viii.

She lives to tell thee thou art more unconstant,
Than all ill women ever were together.

Beaum. & Fletch. A King & No King, Act iv.

His friends put all on the account, not of his unconstancy, but prudence.—Fuller. Worthies. Huntingtonshire.

Consider the power of those deceptions of the sense, mentioned chap. 2. sect. 10. and also how unconstantly names have been settled, and how subject they are to equivocation.

Hobbs. Human Nature, c. 5.

We had very uncertain and unconstant winds.

Dampier. Voyages, an. 1687.

UN-CONSTITUTIONAL. (Applied politically.) Not according or agreeable to the body or whole established state or condition of the laws.

He was probably the more ardent, as his uncle Hampden had been particularly engaged in the dispute, and, by a sentence which seems generally to be thought unconstitutional, particularly injured.—Johnson. Life of Waller.

They discountenanced, and, it is hoped, for ever abolished the dangerous and unconstitutional practice of removing military officers for their votes in parliament.

Burke. Account of a late Administration, (1766.)

UN-CONSTRAINED. } Not pressed or

UNCONSTRAINEDLY. } compressed, con-

UNCONSTRAINT. } tracted, closed or forced together; not forced, compelled, obliged, confined, narrowed, straightened.

And of hire owen vertue unconstrained,
She hath hireself ful often silke yfeined,

For that she wolde fleeen the compaignie,

Wher likely was to tretten of folie.

Chaucer. The Doctoures Tale, v. 11,994.

The luste to reuenge was so greate, that unconstrained they adiudged themselves to perpetuall bondage, that they myghte thereby vtterlye extynguyshes Jesus, the authoure of libertee.—Udal. John, c. 19.

You may shew much mercy, you may win a soul: yet the law both of God and man leaves it freely to him; for God loves not to plow upon the hearts of our endeavours with over-hard and sad tasks. God delights not to make a drudge of virtue, whose actions must be all elective and uncon- strained.—Milton. Doct. & Disc. of Divorce, b. ii. c. 20.

What occasion had giuen them to thinke (to their great obduration in euill) that through a froward or wanton desire of innouation, wee did unconstrainedly those things, for which conscience was pretended?

Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, b. iv. § 7.

An unaffected behaviour is, without question, a very great charm; but under the notion of being unconstrained and disengaged, people take upon them to be unconcerned in any duty of life.—Spectator, No. 284.

At present therefore an unconstrained carriage, and a certain openness of behaviour, are the height of good-breeding.

Id. No. 119.

Mr. Dryden writ more like a scholar; and though the greatest master of poetry, he wanted that easiness, that air of freedom and unconstraint, which is more sensibly to be perceived than described.—Felton. On the Classics.

Whatever the merits of that extirpation might have been,
it was on the footsteps of a neglected people, it was on the fund of unconstrained poverty, it was on the acquisitions of unregulated industry, that any thing which deserves the name of a colony in that province, has been formed.

Burke. On Economical Reform.

UN-CONSULTED. } Not advised with; not

UNCONSULTING. } asked; not minded or heeded.

It was the fair Zelmane, Plexirtus's daughter, whom unconsulting affection, unfortunately born to mewards, had made borrow so much of her natural modesty, as to leave her more decent rayments.—Sidney. Arcadia, b. ii.

Which is one cause of a suspicion that in setting forth this pamphlet the remonstrant was not unconsulted with.

Milton. Apology for Smectymnus.

UN-CONSUMED. Not devoured, wasted or destroyed, reduced to nothing.

The bones half-burnt, not yett dissol'd hee takes,
Stil full of nerues, and unconsumed marrow.
May. Lucan. Pharsalia, b. viii.

— At last appeer
Hell bounds high reaching to the horrid roof
And thrice threefold the gates; three folds were brass,
Three iron, three of adamant rock,
Impenetrable, impal'd with circling fire
Yet unconsumed.—Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ii.

Our knowledg of this truth amounts to no more but this,
that fixedness, or a power to remain in the fire unconsum'd, is an idea that always accompanies and is join'd with that particular sort of yellowness, weight, fusibility, malleableness, and solubility in aq. regia, which make our complex idea, signify'd by the word gold.

Locke. Hum. Underst. b. iv. c. 1.

And mine's the guilt, and mine the hell,
This bosom's desolation dooming;
And I have earn'd those tortures well,
Which unconsumed are still consuming.
Byron. Herod's Lamentation for Mariamne.

UN-CONSUMMATE. Not fulfilled, completed, or accomplished.

From Coritus came Acron to the fight,
Who left his spouse betroth'd and unconsummate night.
Dryden. Virgil. Aeneis, b. x.

UN-CONTAMINATED. Not defiled or polluted.

Gay, though licentious in his writings, is said to have been uncontaminated by the vices of the world.
Knox. Ess. No. 30.

UN-CONTEMNED. Not spurned, disdained, despised, neglected.

Suf. Which of the peeres
Haue uncontemn'd gone by him, or at least Strangely neglected?
Shakespeare. Hen. VIII. Act iii. sc. 2.

Shee is so true a friend, her husband may to her communicate even his ambitions, and if successe crowne not expectation, remaine nevertheless uncontemn'd.
Habington. Castara, pt. ii.

UN-CONTENDED. Not striven for; not disputed, debated, litigated.

If none my matchless valour dares oppose,
How long shall Dares wait his dastard foes?
Permit me, chief, permit without delay,
To lead this uncontended gift away.
Dryden. Virgil. Aeneis, b. v.

UN-CONTENTED. } Not satisfied; not UNCONTE'NTEDNESS. } having enough or suffi-UNCONTE'NTINGNESS. } cient to satisfy; having still a wish or desire for something more or different.

To you, most hopeful prince, not as you are,
But as you may be, do I give these lines:
That when your judgment shall arrive so far,
As t' overlook th' intricate designs
Of uncontended man; you may behold
With what encounters greatest fortunes close.
Daniel. Philotas, Ded.

Contentedness is most eminently one of these specialties, and that both as it is opposed to ambition, covetousness, injustice, uncontentedness, (each of which is a most unchristian sin) and also as it is the maintaining and establishing of propriety in the world.—Hammond. Works, vol. i. p. 478.

And by this you may, Lindamor, in some degree imagine the unimagheable suavity, that the fixing of one's love on God is able to bless the soul with; since, by so indulgent a father, and competent a judge as God himself, the decreed uncontentingness of all other goods is thought richly repaired by its being but an aptness to prove a rise to our love's settling there.—Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 261.

UN-CONTESTED. } See INCONTESTABLE.
UNCONTE'STABLE. } That cannot be contended, debated, disputed, litigated.

Thou thy own works didst try
By known, and uncontested rules of poetry,
And gav'st thy sentence still impartially.
Oldham. On the Works of B. Jonson.

It is an uncontested maxim, that they who approve an action, would certainly do it if they could; that is, if some reason of self-love did not hinder them.
Spectator, No. 451.

The Mahometan religion was founded by a vicious person, proposes ridiculous and trifling doctrines to be believed, was propagated merely by violence and force of arms, was confirmed by no publick and uncontestable miracles, promises vain and sensual rewards to its professors, and in every way incompassed with numberless such absurdities and inconsistencies.—Clarke. On the Evidences, Prop. 8.

It is an uncontestable maxim, that the value of a sacrifice can never rise higher than the value of the sacrificers.

Waterland. Works, vol. viii. p. 177.

Eusebius states the four gospels, and the Acts of the Apostles, as uncontradicted, uncontested, and acknowledged by all.—Paley. Evidences of Christianity, pt. i. Prop. 1. c. 9.

UN-CONTINENT, i. e. Incontinent, (qv.)

But wite thou this thing, that in the laste daies perilouse tymes schulen neighe, and men schulen be louynge hemsillf, coueitouse, high of berynge, proude, blasphemers; not obedient to fadir and modir, unkynde, cursid, withouten affeccioun, withouten pees; false blameris, uncontynent, unmylde, &c.—Wiclif. 2 Tymo. c. 3.

UN-CONTRADICTED. Not spoken against, not denied, or gainsaid; not asserted or affirmed to be otherwise.

He that will not give faith upon current testimonies, and uncontradicted by antiquity is a mad-man.

Bp. Taylor. Episcopacy Asserted, § 13.

Although it consists of probabilities, yet so many, so unquestion'd, so confess'd, so reasonable, so uncontradicted pass into an argument of as much certainty, as humane nature without a miracle is capable of; as many sands heap'd together make a bank strong enough to resist the impetuosity of the raging sea.

Id. Dissuasive from Popery, Intro.

The first passage [in Eusebius's Ecclesiastical History] opens with these words:—"Let us observe the writings of the apostle John which are uncontradicted; and first of all must be mentioned, as acknowledged of all, the Gospel according to him, well known to all the churches under heaven."—Paley. Evidences of Christianity, pt. i. Prop. 1. c. 9.

UN-CONTRITE. Not bruised, crushed, subdued in spirit; and, consequentially, not penitent or repentant.

[The priest] by absolving an uncontrite sinner, cannot make him contrite, either in reality, or in God's acceptation of him; because he hath not promised to accept any but the broken and contrite, and therefore not any thing else in stead of contrition.—Hammond. Works, vol. i. p. 20.

bated, confuted, or refuted.

If a bishop have said, that our liturgie hath been so wisely and charitably framed, as that the devotion of it yieldeth no cause of offence to a very popes ear, as onely aiming at an uncontroversory piety; I see not what hainous fault can herein be imputed to the speech or the author.

Bp. Hall. Def. of the Humble Remonstrance, § 2.

Now all the books of the New Testament were either written by the apostles; or, which is the very same thing, approved and authorised by them. Most of the books were uncontrovertedly written by the apostles themselves.

Clarke. Evidences of Religion, Prop. 14.

Nothing hath been more uncontroverted, either in antient or modern times, than that the notion of the unity, amongst the pagans, arose from their philosophers.

Warburton. Rem. on Hume's Natural Religion.

It is uncontrovertably certain, that the commons never intended to leave electors the liberty of returning them an expelled member.—Johnson. The False Alarm.

and true resurrection.

Bp. Hall. Cont. Of the Knowledge of Christ Crucified.

So it is in the soul; so in the state: vices, which are the sicknesses of both, when they grow inveterate, have a strong plea for their abode and uncontroableness.

Id. Ib. The Bloody Issue Healed.

Happy indeed, said Colin, I him hold,
That may that blessed presence still enjoy,
Of fortune and of enuy uncontrold,
Which still are wont most happy states t' annoy.
Spenser. Colin Clouts come home again.

King. Do not I know the uncontroled thoughts
That youth brings with him, when his blood is high With expectations and desires of that He long hath waited for.

Beaum. & Fletch. Maid's Tragedy, Act iii.

I sing the just and uncontrold descent
Of dame Venetia Digby, styled the fair.
B. Jonson. Eupheme, § 2.

The will itself, how absolute and uncontroable soever it may be thought, never fails in its obedience to the dictates of the understanding.—Locke. Conduct of the Underst. § 1.

It is finally the will of him, who is uncontroably power-full; whose will therefore must prevail one way or other; either with our will, or against it, either so as to bow and satisfy us, or so as to break and plague us; for my counsel, saith he, shall stand,—and I will do all my pleasure.

Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 4.

Nor doth God himself glory in the absoluteness of his power, and uncontroableness of his sovereign will, as he doth in the displays of his goodness.

Glanvill. Ess. Ep. Ded.

Mankind avert killing, and being killed; but when the phantasm honour has once possessed the mind, no reluctance of humanity is able to make head against it; but it commands uncontroledly.—Decay of Christian Piety.

Though it be certain God may uncontroably and lawfully deal with his creatures as he pleases, yet can we find no reason in any conceptions we can form of him, to believe he will please to deal with them arbitrarily, or partially.
Search. Light of Nature, vol. ii. pt. iii. c. 27.

UN-CONVE'NIENT. } Now written Incon-UNCONVE'NIENTLY. } venient, (qv.)
Not becoming, suiting, fitting, commodious.

Agayne, it was unconuenient to vse the Jewyshe customes in the foren nacyns, whych abhorred them.

Bale. Apologie, fol. 131.

Therefore yf the prayer of any man be grounded vpon the pyller of humilitie, & be exhibited vnto God, for his owne comfort, relief and necessitie, and require nothyng hurtfull or unconuenient for hym selfe, let hym proceede and go forward in the name of our Lorde God.

Fisher. A Godlie Treatise. On Prayer.

Pilate now by reason of his iudiciall garment plainly seen iudgemente place, the accused persone, to the entent, that euen by the sight of him, and by his facion, it might appeare howe unconueniently the cryme of any cruell autoritee that he should bee undesyrouse of, for hys priuate commoditee, was laied against him.—Udal. John, c. 19.

How vain therefore is it, and how preposterous in the canon law, to have made such careful provision against the impediment of carnal performance, and to have had no care about the unconversing inability of mind, so defective to the purest and most sacred end of matrimony.

Milton. Doct. & Disc. of Divorce, b. i. c. 3.

In what a miserable state shall we be, when every member of our society shall be of the same unconversable temper with ourselves, and we shall find none that will comply with, or endeavour to sooth and mollify our obstinacy.

Scott. Christian Life, pt. i. c. 3.

It may require many instances and much discoursing to make this out to persons who are happily unconversant in disquisitions of this kind.—Madox. Exchequer, Pref.

UN-CONVERTED. } See INCONVERTED.
UNCONVE'RTIBLE. } Not turned or changed —to a way of thinking or believing; to the faith.

For the natural man St. Paul speaks of, is one unconverted to Christianity, the Gentile philosophers, who relied upon such principles of nature as they understood; but studied not the Prophets, knew not of the miracles of Christ and his apostles, nor of those excellent verifications of the things of the Spirit.—Bp. Taylor. Of Repentance, c. 8.

What, is he gone, and in contempt of science? ill stars

To heap such unconvincing citations as these in religion, whereof the scripture only is our rule, argues not much learning nor judgment, but the lost labour of much unprofitable reading.

Milton. Cons. touching the Removal of Hirelings

If they have, and remain still unconvinced with regard to a few particular difficulties, they must at least have found, in their inquiries, such a number of difficulties dissolved, that if they have any candour, they must suppose, those which remain are not indissoluble.

Gilpin. Ser. Hint. vol. i. § 31

He will seeke to amend himselfe, if he be not all together uncorrigible.—Outred. Tr. of Cope on Proverbs, (1580.)

The best apology I can make for it, and the truest, is only this: that you have since that time received with applause as bad and as uncorrect plays from other men.

Dryden. Pref. to the Wild Gallant.

The faulty passages, which may be met with in it, will perhaps be charged upon those, that suffered them to pass uncorrected, when they had so absolute a power to expunge or reform them.—Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 244.

For thei seiyng that hemself weren wise thei weren maad foolis & thei chaungiden the glorie of God uncorruptible into the liknesse of an ymage of a deedli man and of briddis and of four footid beestis and of serpentis.—Id. Ib. c. 1.

Above al thinges shew thy selfe an ensample of good workes with uncorrupt doctrine, with honestie, and wyth the wholesome word whych cannot be rebuked.

Bible, 1551. Titus, c. 2.

Men as through promptnesse of beleuing, and through uncorrupte affection haue violetly brast in for to come to the lord, wer thei neuer so secular, wer thei neuer so much defiled with sinfulness: haue been receiued to the fellowship and brotherhood of the kingdome of heauen.

Udal. Luke, c. 7.

And therefore I shall declare uncorruptly the sayings whiche the eldest of those embassadours dyd speak after this manner.—Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 198.

Mont. I have found you still as uncorrupted as I left you first.

Continue so; and I will serve you with
As much devotion as my word, my hand
Or purse can show you.

Beaum. & Fletch. The Honest Man's Fortune, Act i.

How shall the licensers themselves be confided in, unless we can confer upon them, or they assume to themselves above all others in the land, the grace of infallibility and uncorruptedness?—Milton. Areopagitica.

And changed the glory of the uncorruptible God, into an image made like to corruptible man and to birds, and four-footed beasts, and creeping things.

Bible, 1640. Romanes, i. 23.

In all things shewing thy self a patern of good works: in doctrine shewing uncorruptnes, gravity, sincerity.

Id. Tit. ii. 7.

Could we see a deist, who with reverence and modesty, with sincerity and impartiality, with a true and hearty desire of finding out and submitting to reason and truth, would inquire into the foundations of our belief, and examine thoroughly the pretensions which pure and uncorrupt Christianity has to be received as a Divine revelation; I think we could not doubt to affirm of such a person, as our Saviour did of the young man in the gospel, that he was not far from the kingdom of God; and that, being willing to do his will, he should know of the doctrine, whether it was of God.—Clarke. Evidences of Religion, Intro.

If we had come into the world, saith he [Cicero], in such circumstances, as that we could clearly and distinctly have discerned Nature her self, and have been able in the course of our lives to follow her true and uncorrupted directions; this alone might have been sufficient, and there would have been little need of teaching and instruction.

Id. Ib. Prop. 5.

Though by the wise direction of God, Moses prohibited the admission of idolaters amongst the people; yet by the same direction he enjoined the utmost humanity and tenderness to all, that preserved the religion of the children of Noah or of nature, in any tolerable degree uncorrupted.

Secker, vol. iii. Ser. 16.

UN-CO/STLY. Not highly priced or valued; not expensive.

A man's spirit is naturally careless of baser and uncostly materials; but if a man be to work in gold, then he will save the filings of his dust, and suffer not a grain to perish.

Bp. Taylor, vol. ii. Ser. 15.

Thou puttyng forth these thingis to britheren schalt be a good mynystre of Crist Iesu norischid with wordis of feith and good doctryne which thou hast gete, but eschewe thou uncouenable fablis, and elde wymmens fablis.

Wiclif. 1 Tim. c. 4.

For perauenture, the nature of some man is so ouerthrowyng to euell, and so uncouenable that the nedy pouertie of his housholde, might rather agreue hym to doon felonies.

Chaucer. Boecius, b. iv.

I say not that honestee in clothing of man or woman is uncouenable, but certes the superfluitee or disordinat scarcitee of clothing is reprevable.—Id. The Persones Tale.

UN-CO/VENANTED. Not under or subject to, or granted under, covenant, contract, or agreement.

I will hope against hope; I will cast me on his free uncovenanted mercy; I will trust to the fervour of my own prayers to obtain what seems to be denied to the intercession of his followers.—Bp. Horsley, vol. iii. Ser. 38.

By this each person has at once divested himself of the first fundamental right of uncovenanted man, that is, to judge for himself, and to assert his own cause.

Burke. On the French Revolution, (1790.)

UN-CO/VER, v. Not to overlay, hide, protect; to remove that which overlays, hides, cloaks, conceals, shelters or protects.

The cup was uncoverid, the swerd was out ybrayid,
The mantell was unfold, the cloth along ylayid.

Chaucer. The Marchantes Second Tale.

Bycause they saw the penthouses of our turrets burned downe, and that oure men could not with ease go uncovered to saue them.—Goldinge. Caesar, fol. 192.

The teares yet distilling downe his cheekes, [he] uncovered his face, & holding vp his handes to heaue said: O you gods that I doe worship, I requyre you chiefly to establishe this kingdome vnto my selfe.

Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 82.

pendent, and of it self eternal.

Clarke. On the Attributes, Prop. 3.

He has no possible way of reconciling the seeming contradiction contained in his comment, but by making a distinction between derived uncreatedness, and undervied uncreatedness: which would have appeared so odd and fanciful, that he chose not to mention it in terms, but only to hint it in generals.—Waterland. Works, vol. ii. p. 326.

Now then, will you please to answer me: Do you understand the supremacy in a sense which you believe consistent with the points which I maintain, viz. the Son's necessary existence, uncreatedness, &c. ?—Id. Ib. p. 20.

I may possibly suffer much more than Mr. Reeves, (I not sown or planted, (for future cropping, cutting, &c.)

If thou be'st yet a fresh uncropped flower
Choose thou thy husband and I'll pay thy dower.

Shakespeare. All's Well that Ends Well, Act v. sc. 3.

And now I do believe it, if I keep My virgin flower uncropt, pure, chaste, and fair,
No goblin, wood-god, fairy, elfe, or fiend,
Satyr or other power that haunts the groves,
Shall hurt my body, or by vain illusion
Draw me to wander after idle fires.

Beaum. & Fletcher. The Faithful Shepherdess, Act i.

— And this delicious place
For us too large, where thy abundance wants Partakers, and uncropt falls to the ground.

Milton. Paradise Lost, b. iv.

UN-CROSSED. Not moved or passed, not struck, athwart, transversely; not struck out,
(as an account paid.)

Such gaine the cap of him, that makes him fine,
Yet keeps his bookes uncrossed.

Shakespeare. Cymbeline, Act iii. sc. 3.

UN-CROWDED. Not pressed or closed together, for want of room.

An amphitheatre's amazing height
Here fills my eye with terror and delight,
That on its publick shows unpeopled Rome,
And held uncrowded nations in its womb.

Addison. A Letter from Italy.

UN-CROWN, v. Not to put on, to remove, a crown or honorary cover of the head; not to honour or dignify as worthy of a crown.

Hit by cometh for clerkus. Crist for to seruen
And knaues uncrowned to cart and to worcke.

Piers Ploukman, p. 78.

Cas. Let it work,
Were Demetrius dead, we easily might uncrown
This swoln impostor.

Beaum. & Fletcher. The Coronation, Act v.

Oh acceptable perseverance; it is no marvel if that chiding end in favour; be it to thee even as thou wilt; never did such grace goe away uncrowned.

Bp. Hall. Cont. The Faithful Canaanite.

UNCTION.

UNCTIOUS.

UNCTUOUS.

UNCTUOUSNESS.

UNCTUOSITY.

Fr. Onction, onctueux, onc-tuosité; It. Unzione, untuoso, untuosità; Sp. Uncio; Lat.
Unctio, from unctum, past part. of ungere, in unum agere, because in unguents different substances are united, or beaten into one substance.

A rubbing or smearing with oil, or any oily, greasy substance; (met.) any thing, melting, softening or soothing.

And then if wee be not onely simple as doves, but also prudent and wise as serpentes, his inwarde unction wyl worke with our diligence.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 763.

Because of the ranke pasture, whose moysture is better digested in the hearbe or grasse, by continuall and temperate heate of the sunne, whereby being made more fat and unctious, it is of better and more stedfast nourishment.

Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 54.

Or if there be no coles, there may a mine of some other unctuous matter be set on fire.

Holinshed. Description of Britaine, c. 24.

Neither shall I use the help of any such sorceries or enchantments, as unctions to make our skins impenetrable.

B. Jonson. Every Man Out of his Humour, Act iv. sc. 4.

The same also in the bruising will grow blacke and be uncteous or fattie, and such lightly is hollow in manner of a sponge.—Holland. Plinie, b. xxxiv. c. 12.

Being cut down green, it burneth (a peculiar priviledge of this wood) clear and bright, as if the sappe therof had a fire-feeding unctiousness therein.

Fuller. Worthies. Warwickshire.

For that one corps (say they) helpeth to burn and consume the rest: by reason that a woman's flesh containeth in it I wot not what unctuosity or oilyous matter, which quickly taketh fire, and will burn as light as a torch.

Holland. Plinie, p. 564.

Or whether sulphur, catching fire, feeds on its unctuous parts, till all the matter gone

The flames no more ascend.—Dryden. Ovid. Metam. b. xv.

That oil, that is a body so mollifying and slippery, and whose unctuosity makes its moisture so much more difficult to be wasted or destroyed, than that of water, wine, or other not tenacious liquors, should be one of the two or three main ingredients, and the only moist one of a hard and durable cement, is that, which probably you would very little expect from it.—Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 483.

This done the damsel mounted, but receiv'd,
For unction of herself and of her maids,
From the queen's hand a golden cruise of oil,
Ere yet she went.—Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. vi.

And Pallas rear'd him; her own unctuous fane
She made his habitation, where with bulls
The youth of Athens, and with slaughter'd lambs,
Her annual worship celebrate.—Id. Ib. Iliad, b. ii.

UN-CUCKOLDED. Not cuckolded, or having sustained a violation of the marriage bed.

For, as it is a heart-breaking to see a handsome man loose-wiu'd, so it is a deadly sorrow, to beholde a foule knaue uncuckolded.

Shakespeare. Anthony & Cleopatra, Act iv. sc. 2.

UN-CULLED. Not selected, picked, chosen, taken.

— Thither anon

A sweaty reaper from his tillage brought
First fruits, the green eare, and the yellow sheaf Uncull'd, as came to hand.—Milton. Paradise Lost, b. xi.

UN-CULPABLE. Now usually written In-culpable, (qv.)

That cannot or may not be blamed, reproved, condemned.

But Jesus being the euerlasting trueth which cā no skille of flatreing (because the saied truth oneli is faultlesse & inculpable, and yet neuer chideth but to amend that is a misse,) answered vnto ye lawier.—Udal. Luke, c. 11.

Those canons doe binde as they are edicts of nature, which the Jewes obseruing as yet vnwritten, and thereby framing such church-orders as in their law were not prescribed, are notwithstanding in that respect inculpable.

Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, b. iii. § 7.

UN-CULTURE. } See INCULT.

UNCULTIVATED. } Not improved by labour or tillage; not tilled, ploughed, manured: generally—not improved.

Idleness, ill-husbandry, in mistiming, neglect of meethelps, unculture, ill choice of seeds.

Bp. Hall. Ser. Ps. cvii. 34.

The art [dancing] is esteemed only as an amusing trifle; it lies altogether uncultivated, and is unhappily fallen under the imputation of illiterate and mechanic.

Spectator, No. 334.

Thus blind ignorance was succeeded by a twilight of sense; this brightened by degrees; at last the sun as it were rose upon some parts of the commonwealth of learning, and cleared up many things; and I believe many more will in time be cleared, which, whatever men think, are yet in their dark and uncultivated state.

Wollaston. Religion of Nature, s. 3.

There is the appearance of but little cultivation; the greater part of the land is wholly uncultivated, and very little care and labour seem to have been bestowed upon the rest.—Cook. First Voyage, b. I. c. 2.

UN-CUMBERED. Not overloaded; not oppressed with load or burthen; not embarrassed.

But a seruant of my Lorde of Warwick, called Nicholas Conger a good footman, and encombred with any furniture, hauing only a dagger at his backe, ouertooke one of them.

Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 64.

For inasmuch as the enemy was at hande, Cesar (as his custome was to do) ledde six legions alwayes in a readinesse uncombred wyth the cariage of any thing; after theym he placed the stuffe of all the host.—Goldinge. Cesar, fol. 55.

Promoting concord, and composing strife,
Lord of your self, uncumber'd with a wife;
Where, for a year, a month, perhaps a night,
Long penitence succeeds a short delight.

Dryden. To his honour'd Kinsman.

UN-CU'NNING, or } Not knowing; not UNCO'NNING. } skilful, practised or UNCU'NNINGLY. } experienced, or wise;
UNCU'NNINGNESS. } ignorant.

UN-CU'RABLE. } Now more usually UNCU'RABLY. } written Incurable. That UNCU'RED. } cannot or may not be cured or healed, recovered, or restored—to a sound or healthy state; that cannot be remedied.

This wo and anguish is intollerable,
If I bide here life can I not sustaine,
If I go hence my paines be encurable.

Chaucer. Lament. of Mary Magdalen.

The phycysions and surgions of France iuged his malady to be a dropsy, and encurable.

Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 245.

Wheras themselves wer euen for this verai poynt encurably wicked enemies of God, that they stode in their owne conceytes vpon a false and a counte feict title of holinesse.

Udal. Luke, c. 5.

For many times it falleth out, that a man being fallen sick of a dangerous disease, howbeit not uncurable, yet through his intemperance and disorder afterwards, suffereth his body to grow into greater weakness and decay, untill at last he dyeth.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 456.

Count F. O worthy gentlemen, I am ashamed
That my extreme affection to my son Should give my honour so uncured a maim.

B. Jonson. The Case is Altered, Act v. sc. 4.

Uncured by his misfortunes of a loose generosity, that flowed indiscriminately on all, he [Robert] mortgaged every branch of his revenue, and almost his whole domain.

Burke. Abridg. of English History, b. iii. c. 4.

UN-CU'RBBABLE. } That cannot or may UNCU'RRED. } not be bent or bowed;
(met.) to the will; made obedient, checked, con-trouled.

Anth. So much encurable, her garboiles, [Cæsar]
Made out of her impatience; (which not wanted Shrodenesse of policie to) [too]: I greeving grant,
Did you too much disquiet.

Shakespeare. Anthony & Cleopatra, Act ii. sc. 2.

— Who, when he sees
All shores oreflowne, and th' encurb'd ocean rise
Ore mountaines topps, the firmament and sunn
Fall downe to earth, in such confusion
Could feare his owne estate?—May. Lucan, b. vii.

UN-CU'RIOUS. Now more usually In-curious.

Having no care, anxiety; no desire or wish (sc.) to learn, know, or understand.

Whereas it dwells free in the open plain Uncurious, gentle, easy of access:
Certain unto itself; of equal vein;
One face, one colour, one assuredness.

Daniel. To Sir T. Egerton.

I have waited his arrival in Holland, before I would let my correspondent know that I have not been so uncurious
a spectator, as not to have seen Prince Eugene.

Spectator, No. 340.

He added very many particulars not uncurious concerning the manner of taking an audience, and laying wait not only for their superficial applause, but also for insinuating into their affections and passions, by the artful management of the look, voice, and gesture of the speaker.—Id. No. 546.

UN-CURL, v. To be or cause to be free from, to remove curls, i. e. bendings, turnings, or writhings (of the hair) rings or ringlets; not to bend, or turn.

And his faire locks, that wont with oymntment sweet
To be embaulm'd, and sweet out dainty deaw,
He led to growe, and griesly to concrew,
Vncomb'd, uncurl'd, and carelessly vnshed.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 7.

Cling to my neck and wrists, my loving worms,
And cast you round in soft and amorous folds,
Till I do bid uncurl.

B. Jonson. Cynthia's Revels. The Poetaster.

Onely to me two home-bred youths belong,
Unskill'd in any but their mother-tongue;
Alike in feature both, and garb appear,
With honest faces, tho' with uncurl'd hair.

Congreve. Juvenal, Sat. 11.

— The uncurling floods, diffus'd
In glassy breadth, seem through delusive lapse Forgetful of their course.—Thomson. Spring.

UN-CU'RRENT. Not running; not moving, flowing or passing.

I swear he smiles upon me, and forsworn too,
Thou crackt, uncurrent lord: I'll tell ye all, Sir.

Beaum. & Fletch. The Loyal Subject, Act ii. sc. 5.

I cannot set so light by all the invention, the art, the wit, the grave and solid judgment which is in England, as that it can be comprehended in any twenty capacities how good soever, much less that it should not pass except their superintendence be over it, except it be sifted and strain'd with their strainers, that it should be uncurrent without their manual stamp.—Milton. Areopagitica.

UN-CU'RRIED. Not having the hide (corium) rubbed, dressed.

Out upon you, you uncurried colts.

Beaum. & Fletch. Thierry & Theodoret, Act v.

UN-CURSE, v. } To be or cause to be free UNCU'RSED. } from; to remove a curse, or doom to punishment, torment or torture.

Scroope. Sweet Loue [I see] changing his propertie, Turnes to the sowrest, and most deadly hate:
Againe encurse their soules; their peace is made
With heads, and not with hands.

Shakespeare. Rich. II. Act iii. sc. 2.

2052

Heaven sure has kept this spot of earth uncurst,
To show how all things were created first.

Waller. Battle of the Summer Islands, c. 1.

UN-CUT. Not sheared, not severed (by a sharp instrument).

Therefore the souldiers thought good that it should be kept whole uncut, and that some one of them should haue the wholle iaquet, to whose lotte it should chauce.

Udal. John, c. 19.

Nor should their stand any great, cumbersom, un-cut-up pies, at the nether end fill'd with moss and stones, partly to make a shew with and partly to keep the lower mess from eating.—Beaum. & Fletch. The Woman Hater, Act i. sc. 2.

If now thy beauty be of such esteem,
Which all of so rare excellency deem;
What would it be, and prized at what rate,
Were it adorned with a kingly state?
Which being now but in so mean a bed,
Is like an uncut diamond in lead.

Drayton. Edw. IV. to Jane Shore

UN-DAM. To be or cause to be, free from or without, to remove—a stop, obstruction, hinder-ance, confinement.

Then when the fiery suns too fiercely play,
And shrivell'd herbs on with'ring stems decay,
The wary ploughman, on the mountain's brow,
Undams his watry store, huge torrents flow;
And, rattling down the rocks, large moisture yield,
Temp'ring the thirsty fever of the field.

Dryden. Virgil. Georgics, b. i.

UN-DAMAGED. Not injured, hurt, or harmd.

Thou'lt find that plants will frequent changes try,
Undamag'd, and their marriageable arms
Conjoin with others.

J. Philips. Cider, b. i.

UN-DAMPED. Not cooled or chilled; not dispirited, disheartened, or discouraged.

Great moral teacher! wisest of mankind!
Solon the next, who built his common-weal
On equity's wide base; by tender laws
A lively people curbing, yet undamp'd.

Thomson. Winter.

Undamp't by doubt, undarken'd by despair,
Philander, thus, augustly rears his head,
At that black hour, which general horror sheds
On the low level of th' inglorious throng.

Young. Complaint, Night 3.

UN-DAMPNED, i. e. uncondemned, (qv.)

And Poul seide to hem, thei senten us men of Rome into prisoun that weren betun openli and undampned, and now priueili thei bryngen us out.—Wiclif. Dedis, c. 16.

UN-DANG'ERED. } Free from, free from UNDA'NGEROUS. } the risk or hazard of—pain, hurt, ill, mischief.

For had ye dwellid within your shippis, and nat go them among,
Then had ye been undaungerid.

Chaucer. The Marchantes Second Tale.

Then cherish this, this unexpensive power,
Undangerous to the public, ever prompt,
By lavish Nature thrust into your hand.

Thomson. Britannia.

UN-DA'SHED. Not struck; (met.) not struck with astonishment, shame, or fear; not daunted.

Yet stands he stiff, undash'd, unterrify'd;
His mind the same, although his fortune worse:
Virtue in greatest dangers b'ing best shown.

Daniel. Civil Wars, b. vi.

UN-DA'TED. Not having (the time, a fixed time) given, noted, or remarked.

For, when the tribute unto nature due,
Was paid, they did receive new life from you;
Which shall not be undated, since thy breath
Is able to immortal, after death.

Diggs. Elegy on B. Jonson.

UN-DA'UNTABLE. } That cannot be UNDA'UNTED. } daunted or tamed (Fr.
UNDA'UNTEDLY. } Indomptable), sub-UNDA'UNTEDNESS. } jected, subdued, overcome; brought under, or in subjection; afraid or affrighted.

On this side, lo! the Getule town behold!
A people bold, unvanquish'd in war.
Eke the undaunted Numides compass thee:
Also the Sirtes unfriendly harbrough.

Surrey. Virgile. Æneis, b. iv.

UND

The whilst the king did all his courage bend Against those four which now before him were,
Doubting not who behind him doth attend;
And plies his hands undaunted, unafraid,
And with good heart, and life for life he stirr'd.
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. iii.

A good conscience will make a man undauntedly confident, and dare put him upon any trial: where his own heart strikes him not, it bids him challenge all the world, and take up all comers.
Bp. Hall. Cont. Samuel's Contestation.

Such a series there was of successive undauntedness in that noble family.—Fuller. Worthies. Warwickshire.

But [he] proceeded on in the performance of all his duty, and prosecution of his great designs with undaunted courage, with unwearied industry, with undisturbed tranquillity and satisfaction of mind.—Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 4.

But Hoper then, undauntedly (indurato animo, say the Acts) refused to return.
Strype. Eccles. Mem. 1 Mary, an. 1554.

But let not our undauntedness appear the effect of sullenness, or fierceness, or of meer resolvedness; but let it be so calm and charitable, that we may not be suspected to be the martyrs, rather of our glory, or our courage, than of our religion.—Boyle. Works, vol. v. p. 303.

Walking on towards the place for execution with a calmness and undauntedness, that could scarce have proceeded from a resolution not strengthened by faith.—Id. Ib. p. 306.

He ended, and each gnaw'd his lip, aghast
At his undaunted hardness of speech.
Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. i.

We are meek where we might meet with opposition, but feel ourselves undauntedly bold where we are sure of no effectual resistance.—Knox. Ess. No. 17.

UN-DA'WNING. Not showing or exhibiting light; not becoming light.

Winter:—Thou hold'st the sun
A prisoner in the yet undawning east.
Short'ning his journey between morn and noon
And hurrying turn, impatient of his stay,
Down to the rosy west.
Cowper. Task, b. iv.

UN-DA'ZZLED. Not dazed, confused, perplexed, by excess of light.

Whereas the ways and counsels of the light
So sort with valour and with manliness,
As that they carry things assuredly,
Undazzling of their own or others sight.
Daniel. To Lord Howard.

Methinks I see her as an eagle muing her mighty youth, and kindling her undazzl'd eyes at the ful mid-day beam;
purging and unscaling her long-abused sight at the fountain
it self of heavenly radiance.—Milton. Areopagitica.

A sight, whose glory made them look on fading beauties with as undazzled and untroubled eyes, as eagles can be supposed to cast on glow-worms, when they have been newly gazing on the sun.—Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 251.

UN-DEAD. } Not decayed, wasted, de-
UNDE'ADLY. } stroyed, killed; not mortal.
UNDE'ADLINESS. } Undeadly and undeadliness, —incorruptibilis, immortalitas.

And to the king of worldis undeedly and invisible God aloone be onour and glorie into worldis amen.
Wiclif. 1 Tymo. c. 1.

That thou kepe the commaundement without wemme
without reproof into the comyng of oure Lord Jesu Crist whom the blessid and aloone myghti kyng of kyngis and lord of lordis schal schewe in hise tymes, which aloone hath undeedlynesse.—Id. Ib. c. 6.

For wheras all men did eate therof, thei neuerthelesse dyed, neither did any one of so great a noubre remain undead.—Udal. John, c. 6.

UN-DEAF, v. Not to remove the sense of hearing; to restore it.

Though Richard my liues counsell would not heare,
My deaths sad tale, may yet undeafe his eare.
Shakespeare. Rich. II. Act ii. sc. 1.

UN-DEALT. Not treated, or transacted with.

[He] hath not forborn to scandalize him, unconferr'd with, unadmonish'd, undealt with by any pastorly or brotherly convincement, in the most open and invective manner, and at the most bitter opportunity that drift or set design could have inyented.—Milton. Tetrachordon.

UN-DEBA'RRED. Not obstructed, guarded against, prevented, hindered.

For wareless insolence (whilst undebarr'd
Of bounding awe) runs on to such excess,
That following lust and spoil, and blood so hard,
Sees not how they procure their own distress.
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. vi.

UND

UN-DEBA'UCHED. Not corrupted, vitiated, seduced, allured, to profligacy.

He sends us for the determination of decency to the judgement of our right reason, undebauched nature, and approved custom.—Bp. Hall. Remains.

For when the world was bucksom, fresh, and young,
Her sons were undebauch'd, and therefore strong.
Dryden. Juvenal, Sat. 6.

They would be, were not madness in the head,
And folly in the heart; were England now
What England was, plain, hospitable, kind,
And undebauch'd.
Cowper. Task, b. iii.

UN-DECA'YING. } Not falling away; UNDECA'YED. } not waning, wasting, withering.

"Would God our times had had some sacred wight, Whose words as happy as our swords had been,
To have prepar'd for us trophies aright
Of undecaying frames t' have rested in."
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. v.

For these lines are the veins, the arteries,
And undecaying life-strings of those hearts,
That still shall pant.
Id. Musophilus.

—Themselves alone,
With inborn valour force their fortune on?
How fierce in fight, with courage undecay'd;
Judge if such warriors want immortal aid.
Dryden. Virgil. Aeneis, b. x.

Eternal, boundless, undecay'd,
A thought unseen, but seeing all,
All, all in earth, or skies display'd,
Shall it survey, shall it recall.
Byron. Hebrew Melodies.

UN-DECE'IVE, v. } To free from fraud or UNDECE'IVABLE. } guile, or the effects of fraud or guile, (from error, mistake, delusion.)

Now semeth it to some men, that it may well peradventure happen, that the good men wel beleuing & undecieved, be those that beleue the worship of ymages & praying to sautes to be ydolatrie.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 186.

Then shall we receive of him whose iudgements are sure,
and undecieveable, rewardes, according to our desertes.
Udal. 1 Cor. c. 4.

Thus much be said in general to his prayers, and in special to that Arcadian prayer us'd in his captivity; enough to undecieve us what esteem we are to set upon the rest.
Milton. Answer to Eikon Basilike.

Hold fast, then my dear friend, this sure anchor of our undecieveable hope; and spit in the face of men or devils, that shall go about to slacken your hand.
Bp. Hall. Let. concerning falling away from Grace.

No body, saith Cicero, shall ever drive me from the hope of immortality: and, if this my opinion concerning the immortality of the soul should at last prove an error; yet,
'tis a very delightful error; and I will never suffer myself to be undecieved in so pleasing an opinion, as long as I live.
Clarke. Evidences, Prop. 4.

This confirmed me in my opinion, and I was just going to leave him, when one of the natives, an intelligent youth, undertook to undecieve me.—Cook. Second Voyage, b. ii. c. 2.

UN-DE'CENT. } Now usually written In- UNDE'CENTY. } decent, (qv.)
UNDE'CENTLY. } Not fit, becoming, comely, suitable, seemly, proper, or appropriate.

Bart. You, madam, at an hour so far undecent?
Death, O my soul! this is a foul fault in ye.
Beaumont & Fletcher. Women Pleas'd, Act ii. sc. 3.

If I found in the story afterward, any of them by word or deed, breaking that oath, I judg'd it the same fault of the poet, as that which is attributed to Homer, to have written undecent things of the gods.
Milton. Apology for Smectymnus.

When S. Gregory had sent Augustin the monk to convert the Saxons, he gave him advice not to press them at first too passionately to quit their undecent marriages, which by their long customs and the interest of their families they would be too apt to hold too pertinaciously, and with inconvenience, but afterwards it would be done.
Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. ii. c. 2.

The consent of nations, that is, public fame amongst all or the wisest nations is a great signification of decency or undecency, and a probable indication of the law of nature.
Id. Ib. c. 1.

See that none, youth or other, be suffered to go in boots and spurs, or to wear their hair undecently long.
Laud. Rem. Hist. of his Ch. of Oxford, p. 61.

It is very undecent for a master to jest or play with his scholars; but not only undecent, but very dangerous too, in such a way to play upon them.—South, vol. v. Ser. 1.

Ozym. I cast it from me, like a garment torn,
Ragged, and too undecent to be worn.
Dryden. Conquest of Granada, Act i. sc. 1.

UND

UN-DECIDE, v. } See INDECISIVE.
UNDECIDABLE. } Not to be, that cannot UNDECIDED. } or may not be, determined, concluded, adjudged.

To undecide (Daniel),—to reverse, or act contrary to a decision.

I must referre it to them that be priue, and of counsel with the ports: and so leaving this also undecided, holde on the way, wherein I am entred.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 19.

And thrust them on to use the present tide
And flow of this occasion, to regain
Th' enthralled monarch, and to undecide
The late concluded act they held for vain.
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. vii.

For one thing which we haue left to the order of the church, they had twenty which were undecided by the expresse word of God.—Hooker. Eccles. Politie, b. iii. c. 10.

Amongst which said difficulties perhaps there is hardly a greater, and more undecideable problem in natural theology, and which has not only exercised but even crucified the greatest wits of all ages, than the reconciling of the immutable certainty of God's fore-knowledge with the freedom and contingency of all human acts, both good and evil, so fore-known by him.—South, vol. iii. Ser. 6.

—The ruffled brine
Roars stormy, they together dash the clouds,
Leuying their equal force with utmost rage;
Long undecided lasts the airy strife.—J. Philips. Blenheim.
So doubted he, and undecided yet
Stood drawing forth his falchion huge; when lo!
Down sent by Juno, to whom both alike
Were dear, and who alike watch'd over both,
Pallas descended.
Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. i.

UN-DECIPHERED. Not made known, explained, or interpreted.

For [as the poet] sings they "—steal to Nature's closet, and from thence bring nought but undecipher'd characters;"
characters that will inform them no more of God's natural, than they do of his moral, government.
Warburton. Works, vol. x. Dis. 29.

UN-DECK, v. } To be or cause to be with-UNDECKED. } out, to remove or strip off, the cover or array, dress or ornament.

For I haue giuen here my soules consent
T' undeck the pompous body of a king.
Shakespeare. Rich. II. Act iv. sc. 1.

Can England see the best that she can boast Lie thus ungrac'd, undeck'd, and almost lost.
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. v.

UN-DECLA'RED. Not clearly shown, not plainly, manifestly, shown, explained, pronounced.

Thus whiche kynde of electes hymselfe meaneth, Tyndalle leaueth undeclared, and will we shall geasse at hys mynde.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 577.

UN-DECRE'ED. Freed from, released from, judgment, order, or ordainment.

—As if eternal doom
Cou'd be revers'd, and undecreed for me.
Dryden. K. Arthur, Act iii.

UN-DE'ICATED. Not appropriated or apportioned; without an appropriate writing or inscription.

I should let this book come forth undedicated, were it not that the motives, that induced me to address it to you, are of such a nature, &c.—Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 247.

UN-DE'EDED. Not having performed any deeds or actions; not signalized by actions.

I cannot strike at wretched kernes, whose armes
Are hyr'd to beare their stauies; either thou Macbeth,
Or else my sword with an vn battered edge
I sheath againe undeeded.
Shakespeare. Macbeth, Act v. sc. 7.

UN-DEFA'CED. Not having the face or appearance injured, not deformed or disfigured.

And forasmuch as the abbot hath not received of his in ready money but xli. or xx ma. more, his church and house is remaining as yet undefaced.
Strype. Eccles. Mem. Hen. VIII. an. 1536.

I say—be proud of your country and your appellation; for in them is involved the character of men, who, amidst the unspeakable corruptions of surrounding nations, preserve, more than all others that it has been my lot to hear or read of, the divine image undefaced.—Knox, vol. vi. Ser. 26.

UN-DEFA'TIGABLE. i. e. Indefatigable
(qv.)
That cannot be wearied or tired, worn out or exhausted.

UND

Mean while the lord deputy with undefatigable pains prosecuteth Mac Hugh: and at length the rebels being put to flight on all sides, and many of them slain: Colonel Milburn took him as he was flying out of breath to his lurking hole.—Camden. Hist. of Q. Elizabeth, an. 1596.

UN-DEFEASIBLE. Also In. That cannot be annulled, abrogated, avoided or made void.

And the said victorie consisteth in the undefeasable scripture of the olde and newe testamente.—Udal. Luke, c. 22.

Cease not then, O my soul, till by a sure and undefeasible application, thou hast brought all these home to thy self.
Bp. Hall. The Soul's Farewel to Earth, § 8.

UN-DEFENCED. See INDEFENSIBLE, and UNDEFENDED.

That they might have collated strength and grace,
On her weak side: which (scorn'd and maliced)
Lay open undefenc'd, apt to b' undone
By proud usurping pow'r, when he was gone.
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. viii.

UN-DEFENDED. Not guarded, secured, fortified, upheld, supported, maintained, protected.

We rest our selfe, and suffren euery hond
To slee each other, as thing undefended,
So stant the war, and peace is not amended.
Imputed to Chaucer. A Ballade to K. Hen. IV.

If a sober man shall stand alone unarm'd, undefended, or unprovided, and shall tell that he will make the sun stand still, or remove a mountain, or reduce Xerxes his army to the scantling of a single troop, he that believes he will and can do this, must believe he does it by a higher power than he can yet perceive.
Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. i. c. 4.

The joyless morning late arose, and found
A dreadful desolation reign around,
Some buried in the snow, some frozen to the ground:
The rest were struggling still with death, and lay
The crows and ravens' rights, an undefended prey.
Dryden. The Hind and the Panther.

All other opinions, under the name of prejudices, must fall along with it; and property, left undefended by principles, become a repository of spoils to tempt cupidity, and not a magazine to furnish arms for defence.
Burke. Let. to Wm. Elliot, Esq.

UN-DEFIED. Not proclaimed or pronounced—to be an enemy, an antagonist; not called or challenged to a conflict or strife.

False traitor, miscreant, thou broken hast
The law of armes to strike foe undefied:
But thou thy treason's fruit, I hope, shalt taste
Right sowre, and feel the law, the which thou hast defast.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 8.

When Tarifa (I saw him ride apart)
Chang'd his blunt cane for a steel pointed dart;
And meeting Ozmyr next,
Who wanted time for treason to provide,
He basely threw it at him, undefied.
Dryden. 1 Pt. Conquest of Granada, Act i.

UN-DEFILED. } Not dirtied, polluted,
UNDEFILEDLY. } corrupted, contaminated,
UNDEFILED. } vitiated.

Men loue ghe ghoure wyues as Crist louyde the chirche, and ghaf hymself for it to make it hooli and clenside it with the waisschyng of watir in the word of lyf to ghyue the chyrche glorious to hymself that it hadde no wem ne ryuel-ing or any such thing, but that it be hooli and undefouled.
Wiclif. Effesies, c. 5.

If that thilke thing that thou haddest for more precious, in al thy riches of fortune, be kept to thee, yet by the grace of God, vnwemmed and undefouled: maiest thou than plaine rightfully, vpon the mischief of fortune, sithen thou hast yet thy best thinges?—Chaucer. Boecius, b. ii.

But whan he knewe, that they were of noble lignage,
sente theym undefyled to theyr parentes and kynne folke.
Sir T. Elyot. The Governour, b. iii. c. 17.

But I wil haue matrimony obserued more holyly & undefyledly among them that professe the newe lawe.
Udal. Matthew, c. 5.

Though now their acts be no where to be found,
As that renowned poet them compiled,
With warlike numbers, and heroick sound,
Dan Chaucer (well of English undefiled)
On fames eternall bead-roll worthy to be filed.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 2.

— Merciful great defender!
Preserve thine holy altars undefil'd.
Protect this land from bloody men and idols,
Save my poor people from the yoke of Rome,
And take thy painful servant to thy mercy.
Rowe. Lady Jane Gray, Act ii.

UND

UN-DEFINABLE. } See INDEFINITE. That UNDEFINED. } cannot be bounded, limited, determined, restricted; comprised in words or terms of explanation.

Names of simple ideas undefinable.
Locke. Hum. Underst. b. iii. c. 4.

Though we should strike off all the unmerited pensions, while the power of the crown remains unlimited, the very same undeserving persons might afterwards return to the very same list: or if they did not, other persons meriting as little as they do, might be put upon it to an undefinable amount.—Burke. On Economical Reform.

The field around Mont St. Jean and Hougomont appears to want little but a better cause, and that undefinable but impressive halo which the lapse of ages throws around a celebrated spot, to vie in interest with any or all of these [Platea].—Byron. Childe Harold, c. 3. Note 7.

It consists in a perfect exemption from every uneasiness, corporeal or mental; and in a general undefined perception of comfort.—Cogan. Ethical Treat. Dis. 3. c. 1.

It struck even the besieger's ear
With something ominous and drear,
An undefined and sudden thrill,
Which makes the heart a moment still,
Then beat with quicker pulse, ashamed
Of that strange sense its silence framed.
Byron. The Siege of Corinth, s. 11.

UN-DEFLOWERED. Not stript or robbed of the flower, the bloom, the grace, the beauty;
not vitiated, defiled, polluted.

They leaue no cattaille vnslain, no gardeigne vnrobbed, no wylde beaste vnchased, nor no maide undeflowered, and yet whiche is worse, they eat without payment, and they will not serue without paiement, nor no man can conuerse and endure among them.—Golden Boke, Let. 2.

Much more may a king enjoy his rights and prerogatives undeflower'd, untouch'd, and be as absolute and compleat a king, as all his royalties and revenues can make him.
Milton. Of Reformation in England, b. ii.

UN-DEFORMED. Not stripped or spoiled of the form, shape, or figure; not defaced or disfigured.

The sight of so many gallant fellows, with all the pomp and glare of war, yet undeformed by battles, may possibly invite your curiosity.—Pope.

UN-DEGRADED. Not dejected, or de-based, or dishonoured.

The intention of a founder, in preserving grammar studies undegraded, ought to be held sacred.
Knox. Rem. on Grammar Schools.

UN-DEJECTED. Not cast down, humbled, or depressed.

We shall, indeed, often fall; but let us rise undejected.
Our failings will be great, but great also may be our virtues.
Knox. Ess. No. 22.

UN-DEIFIED. Not ranked or classed among the gods; not treated as a god or goddess; stripped of imputed divinity.

That original and fiery virtue given him by fate all on a sudden goes out, and leaves him undeified and despoil'd of all his force, till finding Anteros at last, he kindles and repairs the almost faded ammunition of his deity by the reflection of a coequal and homogeneal fire.
Milton. Doct. & Disc. of Divorce, b. i. c. 6.

An idol may be undeified by many accidental causes.
Marriage in particular is a kind of counter-apotheosis, or a deification inverted.—Spectator, No. 74.

UN-DELA'YING. } Not putting off or post-UNDELA'YEDLY. } poning; not prolonging UNDELA'YABLE. } or retarding.

Petre than declaryng in hymself an exauple of a good shepeheard, came to them undelayedly.—Udal. Actes, c. 9.

But yf that be feruent [hartie desyre] (although there be no sounde of any one worde harde) it doth most easylye penetrate, and obtayneth undelayedlye a through and gracious audience, at the hande of God.
Fisher. A Godlie Treatise, c. 1.

With what undelayable heat does the lime-twig'd lover court a deserving beauty.—Feltham, pt. i. Res. 22.

— His command at once
Achilles issu'd to his warriors bold,
That all should gird their armour, and the steeds
Join to the chariots; undelaying each Complied, and in bright arms stood soon array'd.
Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. xxiii.

UN-DELEGATED. Not assigned, committed to the charge, deputed.

2054

UND

This we have never commissioned you to do; and it is one instance among many indeed, of your assumption of undelagated power.—Burke. On the French Revolution.

UN-DELIBERATE. Not advised, considered, reflected.

But the strange manner of the prince's coming and unde-liberate throwing himself and the king's hopes into that sudden engagement, transported him with passion and despair.—Clarendon. Civil War, vol. ii. p. 510.

UN-DELIGHTED. } Not greatly pleased, UNDELIGHTFUL. } or gratified; not filled with highly pleasing sensations; not without pleasure.

— But wide remote

From this Assyrian garden, where the fiend
Saw undelightful all delight, all kind
Of living creatures new to sight and strange:
Two of fair nobler shape erect and tall,
Godlike erect, with native honour clad
In naked majestic seem'd lords of all.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. iv.

Wretched mankind! wherefore hath Nature made
The lawful undelightful, th' unjust shame?
As if our pleasure only were forbad,
But to give fire to lust, t' add greater flame.
Daniel. Let. from Octavia to Marcus Antonius.

And where love cannot be, there can be left of wedlock nothing but the empty husk of an outside matrimony, as undelightful and unpleasing to God, as any other kind of hypocrisy.—Milton. Doct. & Dis. of Divorce, b. i. c. 6.

Nor undelightful by the boundless spring
Are the broad monsters of the foaming deep:
From the deep ooze and gelid cavern rous'd,
They flounce and tumble in unwieldy joy.
Thomson. Spring.

Resounds the living surface of the ground:
Nor undelightful is the ceaseless hum,
To him who muses through the woods at noon.
Id. Summer.

UN-DELIVERED. Not liberated, or freed; not released, given up or over, (sc.) into the possession of.

Thus both stood silent, and confused so,
Their eyes relating how their hearts did mourn:
Both big with sorrow, and both great with woe,
In labour with what was not to be born;
This mighty burthen wherewithal they go,
Dies undeliver'd, perishes unborn.
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. ii.

It is a deed of highest charity to help undeceive the people, and a work worthiest your authority, in all things else authors, assertors, and now recoverers of our liberty, to deliver us, the only people of all protestants left still undeliver'd from the oppressions of a simonious decimating clergy.—Milton. Cons. touching the Removal of Hirelings.

He had protracted the time by all the means he could devise, and did as much as possible he might to see them undelivered; and intended still so to order and moderate the delivery, to be done at sundry times, that thereby the easier the friends of such as should be delivered, might find remedy for their redemption and enlargement.
Strype. Eccles. Mem. Q. Mary, an. 1556.

UN-DELUDED. Not deceived or beguiled.

There disencumber'd from her chains, the ties
Of toys terrestrial, she [the soul] can rove at large;
There freely can respire, dilate, extend,
In full proportion let loose all her powers;
And undeluded, grasp at something great.
Young. Complaint, Night 9.

What she had made the pupil of her art,
None know—but that high soul secured the heart,
And panted for the truth it could not hear,
With longing breast and undeluded ear.
Byron. A Sketch.

UN-DELUGED. Not overflown, overwhelmed; soaked or saturated (with or as with wet or moisture).

Peace, O ye men of Ithaca! while yet
The field remains undelug'd with your blood.
Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. xxiv.

UN-DEMO'ISHED. Not destroyed or ruined, dashed or broken to pieces; not devoured.

Mer. Ay, now the spheres are in their tunes again
What place is this so bright that doth remain Yet undemolish'd?—B. Jonson. Prince Henry's Barriers.
Then also, though to foreign yoke submiss
She undemolish'd stood, and ev'n till now
Perhaps had stood.
J. Phillips. Cider, b. i.

UN-DEMONSTRABLE. That cannot or may not be shewn, presented to the mind, proved by argument.

UND

Out of the precepts of the law of nature, as out of certain, common, and undemonstrable principles, man's reason doth necessarily proceed unto certain more particular determinations: which particular determinations being found out according unto the reason of man, they have the names of human laws.—Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, b. v. § 9.

UN-DENIABLE. That cannot be contradicted, refused or disowned.

If there be either undeniable appearance that so it doth, or reason such as cannot deceive, then scripture-proofs (no doubt) in strength and value exceedeth all.

Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, b. ii. § 7.

What is not undeniably evil, love will turn to all the ways of viewing it, till it find the best and most favourable.

Leighton. Com. on 1 Peter, v. 8.

For it would be very strange, that a man should allow it for an undeniable truth, that two angles of a figure, which he measures by lines and angles of a diagram, should be bigger one than the other; and yet doubt of the existence of those lines and angles, which by looking on, he makes use of to measure that by.—Locke. Hum. Underst. b. iv. c. 11.

For we see and feel, and observe daily in ourselves and others, such powers and operations and perceptions, as undeniably evince themselves either to be the properties of immaterial substances; or else it will follow, that matter is something, of whose essential powers, (as well as of its substance itself,) we have altogether as little idea, as we have of immaterial beings.

Clarke. On the Attributes, Prop. 10.

Thus (says he) it must be undeniably plain—Thus, that is, grant him his premisses, and the conclusion follows. Without doubt.—Warburton. Divine Legation, b. iv. § 6.

UN-DEPARTABLE. That cannot be separated or severed.

And sithe it is thus, that good men ne failen neuer more of hir mede, certes no man ne may doute of the undepartable [inseparabili pœna] paine of shrewes, that is to saine, that the paine of shrewes departeth not from hem selfe neuer mo.—Chaucer. Boecius, b. iv.

UN-DEPE'NDING. Not hanging from; not resting or relying upon; not sustained.

And we may confidently conclude, it never will be otherwise while they are thus upheld undepending on the church, on which alone they anciently depended.

Milton. Cons. touching the Removal of Hirelings.

UN-DEPHLE/GMATED. Not cleared or purified from phlegm; from pituitous, aqueous, or watery parts.

Though common and undephlegmated aqua fortis will not perform the same thing well, yet that which is made exceeding strong, by being carefully dephlegmed, will do it pretty well, though not so well as oil of vitriol.

Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 763.

UN-DEPLO'ED. Not wept for, bewailed, bemoaned, mourned, lamented.

Rise wretched widow, rise, nor undeplo'ed
Permit my ghost to pass the Stygian ford:
But rise, prepar'd in black, to mount thy perish'd lord.

Dryden. Ovid. Metam. b. x.

But wherefore speak I thus? still undeplo'ed, Unburied in my fleet Patroclus lies.

Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. xxii.

UN-DEPRA'VED. Not vitiated, corrupted, degraded.

Wheras knowledge dwelt in our undepaved natures, as light in the sun, in as great plenty and purity; it is now hidden in us like sparks in a flint, both in scarcity and obscurity.—Glanvill. Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 3.

Of what kind is the music that delights those who are stigmatised by the name of vulgar, but who possess all the faculties of perception in a state undepaved by artificial refinement.—Knox. Ess. No. 70.

UN-DEPRE'SSED. Not dejected, or sunk.

Tis he indeed—disarm'd but undeprest,
His sole regret the life he still possest.

Byron. The Corsair, s. 8.

UN-DEPRIV'ED. Not bereaved, or despoiled.

He join'd not in their choice, because he knew Worse might, and often did from change ensue.
Much to himself he thought; but little spoke:
And undepri'ed, his benefice forsook.

Dryden. The Character of a Good Parson.

UNDER. Dut. Onder; Ger. Under, unter; Sw. Under; A. S. Under. Tooke resolves it into on, neder. (See NETHER, and BENEATH.) Wachter thinks the Ger. may be Nider, (inferior, transposed.) Wilkins, in his Diagram, places it in direct opposition to upon.

Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. vii.

UNDER-ACTION. } Action or agent, sub-UNDERA'GENT. } ordinate to the chief action or agent.

The action of it [the Heroick Poem] is always one, entire and great. The least and most trivial episodes, or under- actions, which are interwoven in it, are parts either necessary, or convenient to carry on the main design.
Dryden. Virgil. Æneis, Ded.

UNDER-CHAPS. Lower chaps.

The fulness produced by this attempt, of course stretched the skin which lies between the under-chaps, as being the most yielding part of the mouth.
Paley. Natural Theology, c. 23.

UNDER-CO'NDUCTS. Lower conducts.

Some Italians do prescribe, that when they have chosen the floor, or plot, and laid out the limits of the work, we should first of all dig wells and cisterns, and other under- conducts and conveyances, for the suillage, of the house, whence may arise a double benefit.
Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 19.

UNDER-CROFT. See the quotation.

It was supported by three rows of massy clustered pillars, with ribs diverging from them to support the solemn roof.
This was the parish church. This under-croft, as buildings of this sort were called, had in it several chauntries and monuments.—Pennant. London, p. 496.

UNDER-CRY, v. So Wiclif renders the Lat.
Inclamare.

And eftsoone Pilat spak to hem: and wolde delyuere Jhesus. And thei undircrieden [inclamabant] and seiden, crucifie crucifye him.—Wiclif. Luk, c. 23.

UNDER-DA'WBBER. A lower, inferior, subordinate dawber.

Cast down this new mud-wall, thrown into a dirty heap by M. W. and his under-dawber M. S. who with great pleasure behold and wonder at their own work, and call it a marble building.

Bp. Taylor. Dissuasive from Popery, pt. ii. b. i.

UNDER-DEA'LING, i. e. dealing under, (sc.)
cloak or cover of secresy; clandestine.

But he offer'd to go himself in person upon that expedition; and reckons up many surmises why he thinks they would not suffer him. But mentions not his under-dealing to debauch armies here at home.
Milton. Answer to Eikon Basilike.

UNDER-DO'LVEN. Delved or dug, below.

Wer ghe witen not what the scripture seith in Elie? hou
he preieth God aghens Israel, Lord thei han slayn thi profetis, thei han undurdoluen thine auteris, and I am left aloone and thei seken my lyf.—Wiclif. Romayns, c. 11.

UNDER-FELLOW. Lower fellow.

They carried him to a house of a principal officer of that country, who with no more civility (though with much more business than those underfellows had shewed,) began in captious manner to put interrogatories unto him.
Sidney. Arcadia, b. ii.

UNDER-FILLING. The lower filling; the filling below or beneath.

Therefore that we may found our habitation firmly, we must examine the bed of earth (as I may term it) upon which we will build; and then the underfillings, or obstruction, as the ancients did call it.—Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 17.

UND

UNDER-FLAME. A flame below, inferior.

Those anthems (almost second psalms) he writ,
To make us know the cross, and value it,
(Although we owe that reverence to that name,
We should not need warmth from an under-flame.)
Elegy upon Dr. Donne.

UNDER-FO'NGEN, v. To fong is to take.
See FONG and FANG.

To underfong,—to undertake, (qv.)

Vortiger, the luther mon, tho hys sone ded was Underfong ageyn to hym the kyngdam, alas!

This false tonged Perseus
The regiment hath underfonge.—Gower. Con. A. b. ii.

And he, whiche wisdom hath purueid,
Of all that to reason belongeth,
With gentill herte it underfongeth.—Id. Ib. b. iv.

His name is hight Pollente, rightly so
For that he is so puissant and strong,
That with his powre he all doth ouer-go,
And makes them subiect to his mighty wrong;
And some by sleight he eke doth underfong.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 2.

And if thou algate lust light vielayes,
And looser songs of loue to underfong;
Who but thy self deserues like poets praise.
Id. Shepheard's Calender. November.

UNDER-FOOT, adj. } i. e. under the foot;
U'NDERFOOT, ad. } below.
Debased, dejected, degraded; abject.

For alle that he has said he don underfote
Tille this werld be, it git no tyme to mote.
R. Brunne, p. 270.

For ther n'ys pore ne riche, ne what state he be,
That he n'ys undirfote for his iniquite.
Imputed to Chaucer. Marchantes Second Tale.

But deadly werre hath his couine
Of pestilence, and of famine,
Of pouertee, and of all wo;
Wherof this worlde we blamen so,
Whiche nowe the werre hath underfoote
Till God him selfe therof do boote.—Gower. Con. A. b. iii.

They shall remain in that plight for ever, the basest, the lowermost, the most dejected, most underfoot, and down trodden vassals of perdition.
Milton. Of Reformation in England, b. ii.

What a stupidity then is it, that in marriage which is the nearest resemblance of our union with Christ, we should deject ourselves to such a sluggish and underfoot philosophy, as to esteem the validity of marriage meerly by the flesh, though never so broken and disjointed from love and peace.
Id. Tetrachordon.

Lysitheus mounting upon the boord, laied him along on the floor, and there under-foot dispatched him.
Holland. Plutarch, p. 998.

UNDER-FU'RNISH, v. To supply, to furnish, below, lower, or less than, (sc.) is needful or appropriate.

Can we suppose God would underfurnish man for the state he designed him, and not afford him a soul large enough to pursue his happiness?—Collier. On Kindness.

UNDER-GET, v. To get under; to understand.

And londes abouten vs habbeth wel under gite.
R. Gloucester, p. 101.

Id. p. 109.

UNDER-GIRD, v. To bind, or fasten together below.

And we came vnto an yle named Claudia, & had much worke to come by a bote, which they toke vp and vsed helpe. undergerdyng the ship, fearynge leste we shoulde haue fallen into Syrtes.—Bible, 1551. Actes, c. 27.

UND

UNDER-GO, v. To go, move under, or below;
to bear, to carry, to sustain, to support, to suffer, to be subject to. See UNDERWENT.

— So th' Aegæan wind
With the Tyrrhene: so with th' Ionian
The Adriatike met. How oft in vaine
That day the sea seem'd mountaine's topps t' oreflow,
And yeilding earth that deluge t' undergoe.
May. Lucan. Pharsalia, b. v.

And in the same city, tyrants were to undergo legal sentence by the laws of Solon.
Milton. An Answer to Eikon Basilike.

The fruit is gathered just before it is perfectly ripe, and being laid in heaps, is closely covered with leaves; in this state it undergoes a fermentation, and becomes disagreeably sweet.—Cook. First Voyage, b. i. c. 17.

But here what needed words to blow the fire,
In flame already, and enkindl'd so,
As when it was proclaim'd they might retire,
Who found unwillingness to undergo
That vent'rous work? Daniel. Civil Wars, b. viii.

And such they were, who might presume t' have done
Much for the king, and honour of the state;
Having the chiefest actions undergone Both foreign and domestical of late. Id. Ib. b. iv.

— Thou didst smile,
Infused with a fortitude from heauen,
When I haue deck'd the sea with drops full salt,
Vnder my burthen groan'd, which rais'd in me
An undergoing stomacke, to bear vp Against what should ensue.
Shakespeare. The Tempest, Act i. sc. 1.

Esc. If any in Vienna be of worth
To undergoe such ample grace, and honour,
It is Lord Angelo.—Id. Measure for Measure, Act i. sc. 1.

Cassi. Now know you, Caska, I haue mou'd already
Some certaine of the noblest minded Romans
To under-go, with me, an enterprize,
Of honorable dangerous consequence.
Id. Julius Caesar, Act i. sc. 3.

UNDER-GROUND; i. e. under the ground;
subterraneous.

The feet of the mole are made for digging; the neck, nose, eyes, ears, and skin, are peculiarly adapted to an under-ground life; and this is what I call relation.
Paley. Natural Theology, c. 15.

It is known that the sacred images of the Capitol were not destroyed when injured by time or accident, but were put into certain underground depositaries called favissæ.
Byron. Childe Harold, c. 4. Note 46.

UNDER-GROW. } Grown, risen, below,
U'NDERGROWTH. } (sc.) the usual height.
Under-growth, — the lower growth; plants growing low, or below others.

Hire mouth ful smale, and thereto soft and red,
But sikerly she hadde a fayre forehed.
It was almost a spanne brode I trowe;
For hardily she was not undergroue.
Chaucer. Prol. to the Canterbury Tales, v. 154.

Satan had journed on, pensive and slow;
But further way found none, so thick entwined,
As one continu'd brake, the undergrowth
Of shrubs and tangling bushes had perplexed
All path of man or beast that past that way.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. iv.

UNDER-HAND. Under cover of the hand; covered, concealed, secret, sinister, clandestine.

At whose departure hence out of the land,
How did the open multitude reveal
The wondrous love they bare him under-hand!
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. i.

Seeing only such stand ever base and low,
That strike the dead, or mutter under-hand:
And as dogs bark at those they do not know,
So they at such they do not understand.
Id. Funeral Poem.

I had my selfe notice of my brothers purpose heerein, and haue by under-hand means laboured to dissuade him from it; but he is resolute.
Shakespeare. As You Like It, Act i. sc. 1.

And having an impertinent dream at this time, that he has been making the fortune of the family, by an underhand marriage with the daughter of a man who will crush us all to powder for it.—Vanburgh. The Mistake, Act iii. sc. 1.

Under-hand and oblique ways would be studied. The science of evasion, already tolerably understood, would then be brought to the greatest perfection.
Burke. On the Present Discontent.

UNDER-HANG, v. To suspend.

He cometh out otherwhiles with this saying of Antis-thenes, for which he commendeth him, namely, that a man is to be provided either of wit to understand, or else of a with to under-hang himself.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 871.

UND

UNDER-HO'NEST. Honest below, (sc.) what a man ought to be.

If you return, we think him over proud,
And under-honest.—Dryden. Troil. & Cres. Act iii. sc. 1.

UNDER-JAW. The lower jaw.

The retired under-jaw of a swine works in the ground, after the protruding snout, like a prong or ploughshare, has made its way to the roots upon which it feeds.
Paley. Natural Theology, c. 12.

UN-DERIVED. Not flowed, descended, drawn, deduced; not having a source or origin;
not originated.

Nor will the doctor's distinction of a derived and underived eternity help him in this matter: for the sense of the word eternity has nothing to do with that distinction, being but one, and importing neither more nor less than begin-ningless and endless duration.
Waterland. Works, vol. ii. p. 327.

There is no instance in any miracle in scripture, which to an ordinary spectator would necessarily imply the immediate operation of original, absolute, and underived power.
Clarke. On the Evidences, Prop. 14.

Our being is derived from this command; and therefore depends on it still: but he is underived; and therefore in-dependant absolutely.—Secker, vol. vi. Lect. 6.

UNDER-KEEP, v. } To have or hold, under UNDERKEE'PER. } or below, down.

Hurling his sword away, he lightly leapt
Vpon the beast, that with great cruelty
Rored, and raged to be under-kept:
Yet he perforce him held, and strokes vpon him hept.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 7.

And so much favour he obtained from the under-keeper, that sometimes by removing a board he allowed them to dine and sup together, and to cheer one another in the Lord, with such simple fare, as papist charity would allow them.—Strype. Eccles. Mem. Hen. VIII. an. 1535.

UNDER-KIND. A lower kind.

I would use thee like an under-kind of chymist, to blow the coals.—Dryden. An Evening's Love, Act 1. sc. 1.

UNDER-LA'BOURER. An inferior labourer or workman.

It is ambition enough to be employed as an under-labourer in clearing the ground a little, and removing some of the rubbish that lies in the way to knowledge.
Locke. Hum. Underst. Ep. to the Reader.

UNDER-LAY, v. } A. S. Under-leggan, UNDERLIE. } under-licgan; Dut. Onder-legghen, onder-ligghen.

To lay or lie, put or place or cause to be, below, beneath; to support, to sustain.

James earle of Dowglas, James lord Hammilton, the earles of Murrey and Ormont, the lord of Baluay, and manie other of that faction, were by publike proclamation made by an herald, commanded to appear by a day to underlie the law.
Holinshed. Historie of Scotland, an. 1452.

That man's faith is well underlaid, that upholds itselfe by the omnipotency of God: thus the father of the faithfull built his assurance upon the power of the Almighty.
Bp. Hall. Cont. Jonathan's Victory.

Pach. Mendoza, come,
Our souls have trode awry in all men's sight,
We'll underlay 'em, till they go upright.

Thence they beheld an underlying vale
Where Flora set her rarest flowres at sale.
Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b. ii. s. 2.

In a triangle the base doth differ from the sides thereof, and yet one and the self same line is both a base and also a side; a side simply, a base if it chance to be the bottom and underlie the rest.
Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, b. viii.

Upon the report of this adventure, the country people soon came with lights to the sepulchre, and discovered that the statue, which was made of brass, was nothing more than a piece of clock-work; that the floor of the vault was all loose, and underlaid with several springs, which upon any man's entering, naturally produced that which had happened.—Spectator, No. 379.

UNDER-LINED. In Strype,—to have a line drawn, scored below. In Wotton, (met.)— to direct, or have the mind directed to, as the eye by lines scored under particular words.

Towards evening, by a meer chance, in appearance, though under-lined with a providence, they had a full sight of the Queen Infanta, and of the Princess Henrietta Maria.
Reliquiæ Wottoniæ, p. 215.

There is also another memorial of the charge committed by the king to the said ambassador, dated September 24, [1552], with lines drawn under many of the words and sentences, and a note of Secretary Cecyl's hand, that what was so underlined was to be put in cypher.

Strype. Eccles. Mem. Edw. VI. an. 1552.

UNDERLING. An inferior, one subservient, or depending upon.

Thauh he be here thyn underling, in hevne paraunter
He worth rather receyved. Piers Plouhman, p. 130.

I wote wel, that there is degree above degree, as reson is, and skill is, that men do hir devoir, ther as it is due: but certes, extortion, and despit of your underlinges, is dampnable.—Chaucer. The Persones Tale.

That thyng, through which he wend haue stonde,
First him exiled out of londe,
Which was his owne, and from a kyng
Made him to be an underlyng.—Gower. Con. A. b. vi.

And so they had halfe dysdayne at Jesu, that he, who not long before was taken for an underlyng and a persone of no reputacyon, was now sodaynly exalted to highe estymacion and authoritie.—Udal. Marke, c. 6.

Albeit the husbnde be the wiues gouernour, yet is he underlyng and subject to Christe his lorde and maister.

Id. 1 Corinthians, c. 11.

And also [he] presumed to assigne a dale within the which he should reforme those things which he misliked in him, as if he were his subject and underling.

Holinshed. Chron. of England. Edw. II. an. 1324.

UNDER-MASTED. Masted or sailed, inadequately, insufficiently.

Some of them say, that she was bigger then the Madre de Dios, and some, that she was lesse: but she was much undermasted, and vnderailed, yet she went well for a ship that was so foule.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. p. 201.

UNDER-MEAL. See UNDERN. Mr. Tyrwhitt explains,—1. The dinner of our ancestors. 2. Upon further consideration, that it is the time after the meal of dinner.

For ther as wont to walken was an elf,
Ther walketh now the limitour himself
In undermeles in morweninges.

Chaucer. The Wif of Bathes Tale, v. 6457.

Cokes. I think I am furnish'd for cather'ne pears, for one under-meal.—B. Jonson. Bartholomew Fair, Act iii. sc. 1.

UNDER-MINE, v. } To draw or lead under UNDERMINER. } or below, (sc.) a way or UNDERMINING, n. } passage under or below, a subterraneous way or passage; and hence, to remove, to destroy the foundation, the steadfastness, the security; to ruin.

To the entent that they might come to the walles, to fight hande to hande with them of the towne, and to undermyne the walles, thinkyng therby to coquere it.

Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 436.

That erst we reared up, we undermine again;
And shred the sprays whose growth sometime we laboured with pain.—Surrey. Paraphrase on Eccles. c. 3.

And of that lust possess'd himself he findeth
That hath and doth reverse, and clean turn out
Kings from kingdoms, and cities undermineth.

Wyat. Prol. to Penitential Psalms.

These [shapes and spirites] wander vp and downe in caues and underminings, and seeme to besturre themselves in all kinde of labor; as, to digge after the veine, to carrie together the oare, &c.

Warton. On Milton. Comus. From Olaus Magnus, 1572.

For people living of plains have commonly all commodities in such plenty, that they are subject to surfeiting and luxury, the greatest enemy and underminer of all intellectual operations.—Fuller. Worthies. General.

When I perceiv'd all set on enmity,
As on my enemies, where ever chanc'd,
I us'd hostility, and took the spoil
To pay my underminers in their coin.

Milton. Samson Agonistes.

Well then, to obviate any such method of undermining Christian practice, it will be necessary to be a little more particular than barely to lay down in brief to love God and one's neighbour: we must add, the true God, the God of Jews and Christians, that very God and none else: and as to neighbour, we must insist upon it that it means, not this or that sect, tribe, party, &c. but all mankind.

Waterland. Works, vol. iv. p. 310.

The meaning and design of those words was Christ's clearing himself from the common imputation that the Scribes and Pharisees loaded him with, of being an underminer of the law of Moses.—South, vol. vii. Ser. 5.

It is the wind, or rather the waves raised by the wind, that brings down the bulk of these enormous masses, by grinding one piece against another, and by undermining and washing away those parts that lie exposed to the surge of the sea.—Cook. Third Voyage, b. iv. c. 9.

VOL. II.

UNDER-MINISTERED. } So Wiclif
UNDERMINISTRING, n. } renders the Vul-UNDERMINISTRY. } gate subminis- tratum, subministratio. See SUBMINISTER.

And I woot that this thing schal come to me into heelte bi ghoure preier and the [subministratio] undirmynstryng of the spyryt of Jesus Crist.—Wiclif. Filipensis, c. 1.

No man disseyue ghou willynge to teche in mekenesse and religioun of aungellis tho thingis whiche he hath not seen, walkyng veynli bolned with witt of his fleisch, and not holdyng the heed of which al the bodi bi boondis and loynyngis togidre undirmynstryd [subministratum] and maad, wexith into encressyng of God.—Id. Colocensis, c. 2.

It became necessary by new introduc'd necessities that there should be rules and measures, given in things relating to the church, concerning which God himself had given no commandment; as concerning order in synods and conventions ecclesiastical, the division of ecclesiastical charges, the appointment of under-ministeries in the church, &c.

Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. iii. c. 4.

UNDER-MONIED. Fuller means by this quaint word—

Taken by corrupt means of money.

Next day he took the two forts of Rise-bank and Newnam-bridge (wherein the strength of the city consisted); but whether they were undermined or undermonied it is not decided, and the last left most suspicious.

Fuller. Worthies. Suffolk.

UNDERN. } In Goth. Undaurni-mat, is UNDERMEAL. } (Junius) prandium; and underen
UNDERTIME. } is in some northern dialects, prandere, (Kilian.) Undern and underntid (Wachter), the third hour of the day, with us the ninth. Somner says (from Bede) that three times were allowed for drinking, (ad potandum, on undern, on mid-dæg, on non;) and adds, that both Chaucer's interpreters and Verstegan are to be corrected, who by undern and underntide understand—afternoon. Undern-sang (he says) is nine o'clock service—nonam ante meridiem. Skinner adopts the same opinion as Verstegan. Under is used in A. S. in composition with various words denoting food, a dish or messe, dinner, supper, repast, (Somner;) whence it may be inferred, that undern (or underen) is formed upon under, and used elliptically, or with a subaudition of some noun, e.g. tide or time, meal, &c.

In the Promptorium Parvulorum (says Gifford) under-mele is Latinized by post meridiem, and he calls it an afternoon's meal, a slight repast after dinner.

Mr. Tyrwhitt says he never met with any etymology of this word undern; but the following passage (he thinks) may lead one to suspect that it had some reference to undernoon. In the town-book belonging to the corporation of Stanford, 28 Edw. IV. it is ordeyned that no person opyn ther sack, or set ther corn to sale afore hour of ten of the bell, or els the undernone bell be ronyng.—Peck. Desid. Car. vol. i. b. vi. p. 36.

The seuent day of Juny, Whitson euen that tyme, Died that lady, bituex underon & prime.—R. Brunne, p. 243.

Bituex underon & noen was the feld alle wonnen.
Id. p. 18.

And in a bedde of wortes stille he lay,
Till it was passed undern of the day,
Waiting his time on chaunteclere to falle.
Chaucer. Nonnes Preestes Tale, v. 15,229.

For Hercules hede of them toke,
Till it was underne high and more.—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

The maydenes durst hur not awake,
But bysyde hur mery they can hem make
And lete hur slepe tyl after none,
That the undertide was gone.—Sir Orpheo. Ritson, vol. ii.

Tymely as the day can dawne
He led her thorow a feyre schawe
In wodes waste and wyld:
Eryn at undurne lyghtyd he.
Le Bone Florence. Id. vol. iii.

UNDER-NEATH. i. e. On neder, neath; and as neder and nether are the same word, the force of the meaning may be augmented by the composition.

Gif he haue undernethen whiit, thanne he aboue wereth
Black that betokeneth bale, for oure synne.
Piers Plouhman, p. 2.

At Boughton under blee us gan atake
A man that clothed was in clothes blake
And undernelhe he wered a white surplis.
Chaucer. Prol. to Chanones Yemannes Tale, v. 16,025.

Underneath him my father, bare of wealth,
Into his band young, and near of his blood,
In my prime years unto the wars me sent.
Surrey. Virgile. Æneis, b. ii.

He [justices of peace] (if he be there) deliuereth vp the examination which he tooke of him, and underneath the names of those who he hath bound to giue evidence.
Smith. Commonwealth, b. ii. c. 26.

— I thought my tongue
Bore thunder underneath, as much as his.
Beaum. & Fletcher. Philaster, Act i.

When underneath my power my foes have truckl'd
To be a prince, who would not be a cuckold?
Dryden. Tempest, Act iii.

That covert neither rough winds blowing moist
Could penetrate, nor could the noonday sun
Smite through it, or fast falling show'rs pervade,
So thick it was, and underneath, the ground
With litter of dry foliage strew'd profuse.
Couper. Homer. Odyssey, b. xix.

UNDER-NYMETH. A. S. Under-niman, suscipere, to undertake. (See NUM.) And further—subferre, subicere, to bring or place, to subject, (sc.) to law, to censure, to judgment.

Whiche eretiks ioon in the begynnyng of his gospel undirnymeth and seith, in the bigynnyng was the sone: and in this book whanne he seith, I am alpha and oo, that is the bigynnyng and the ende.—Wiclif. Prol. to the Apocalips.

But whanne Petir was comen to Antioche I aghenstood him in the face, for he was worthi to be undirnomun.
Id. Galathies, c. 2.

Why underneme ye not your brethren for their trespasses after the law of the gospel, sith that underneming is the best that may be?—Imputed to Chaucer. Jack Upland.

UN-DEROGATORY. Not taking away or detracting, not diminishing, degrading.

You see the apostle gives it a negative description; and to create in us apprehensions underogatory from what we shall possess, not only removes our thoughts from all we do enjoy, but exalts them above all that we can fancy.
Boyce. Works, vol. i. p. 233.

UNDER-PART. A part under the main part; subject, or subordinate, or subservient to it.

I have observ'd that the English will not bear a thorough tragedy, but are pleas'd that it shoud be lightned with underparts of mirth.—Dryden. Don Sebastian, Pref.

In the famous pastoral of Guarini, called H Pastor Fido, Corsica and the Satyr are the underparts; yet we may observe, that Corsica is brought into the body of the plot, and made subservient to it.—Id. Juvenal, Pref.

UNDER-PEEP, v. To look under.

— The flame o' th' taper
Bowes toward her, and would under-peepe her lids,
To see th' inclosed lights, now canopied
Vnder these windowes.
Shakespeare. Cymbeline, Act ii. sc. 2.

Id. Romaines, c. 5.

UNDER-PLAIN. The plains under or below.

O! had she [thirsty] such entreaty made
At some high rocke, proud of his evening shade,
He would have burst in two, and from his veynes
(For her avail) upon the under plains
A hundred springs, a hundred wayes should swimme,
To show her tears inforced floods from him.
Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b. ii.

UNDER-PLOT. A plot under the main plot; subject, subordinate or subservient to it.

Particularly, the action is so much one, that it is the only of the kind without episode, or under-plot; every scene in the tragedy conducing to the main design, and every act concluding with a turn of it.—Dryden. All for Love, Pref.

An under-plot may bear such a near relation to the principal design, as to contribute towards the completion of it, and be concluded by the same catastrophe.

Spectator, No. 40.

UNDER-POSSESSOR. Lower, inferior possessor.

The disposing them into portions of inheritance, the assignation of charges and governments, stipends and rewards, annuities and greater donatives are the reserves of the superior right, and not to be invaded by the under-possessors.—Bp. Taylor, vol. i. Ser. 17.

UNDER-PRAISE, v. To praise, below, insufficiently.

In underpraising thy deserts,
Here find the first deficiency of our tongue.—Dryden.

UNDER-PRIZE, v. To prize or set a price or value—below, inferior to; to set an inadequate price or value.

— Yet looke how farre
The substance of my praise doth wrong this shadow
In underprising it, so farre this shadow
Doth limpe behinde the substance.

Shakespeare. Merchant of Venice, Act iii. sc. 2

— Then, if I mistake not,
He scorns to have his worth so underprised,
That it should need an adjunct in exchange
Of an equal fortune.

B. Jonson. The Case is Altered, Act iii. sc. 3.

UNDER-PROP, v. } To set or place below—
UNDERPROPPER. } a stay, a support; to support, to sustain.

And therefore, while he doth but tel vs and proue it not,
and so under-proppeth his assercion w^t it self.

Sir T. More. Workes, p. 473.

But he were no prope underpropper of a lie, that would minish hys credence w^t affirming all the first & setting a lowder lye therto.—Id. Ib. p. 126.

— For this assembling all the peers,
Whose counsels now must underprop their throne
Against the foe, which not a man but fears.

Drayton. The Battle of Agincourt.

In underpropping vines, the forkes would not bee set opposite against that wind to hinder the blast thereof; a point that is to be observed in regard of the north wind onely.—Holland. Plinie, b. xvii. c. 2.

UNDER-PROPORTIONED. Not in equal or adequate proportions.

To be haughty and to make scanty and underproportioned returns of civility, plainly tells people, they must be very mannerly.—Collier. On Pride.

UNDER-PUT, v. To place, to set—below, down; to submit, to subject.

Greete ghe Prisca and Aquila myne helpers in Crist Jesu whiche undirputtiden her neckis for my lyf.

Wiclif. Romayns, c. 16.

I haue great nouryshyng of thin heale, and that is the sothe sentence of gouernance of the world, that thou bileuest that the gouerning of it is not subiecte ne underput to the folie of these happes aduenturous, but to the reason of God.—Chaucer. Boecius, b. i.

And so I saie, though thou bee put to serue thilke iewell, duryng thy life, yet is that no seruage of underputyng, but a maner of trauailing plesance, to conquere and get that thou haste not.—Id. Testament of Loue, b. i.

And as a caldron, underput with stone of fire, and wrought
With boyling of a well-fed brawne, up leapes his wave aloft.—Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. xxi.

UNDER-RATE, v. } To rate, adjudge, es-UNDERRATE, n. } teem, estimate, value, below, too low.

And bring not down the prizes of the mind,
With under-rating of yourselves so base;
You that the mightie's doors do crouching find,
To sell yourselves to buy a little grace.

Daniel. Musophilus.

Thy beauties therefore wrong will take
If thou shouldst any bargain make;
To give all, will befit thee well;
But not at underrates to sell.—Cowley. The Given Love.

If you'll confess he brought home noble prize,
As you must needs, for you all clapt your hands,
And cry'd inestimable: why do you now
So under-rate the value of your purchase?

Dryden. Troil. & Cres. Act ii. sc. 1.

During the time of her bloom and beauty [she] was so great a tyrant to her lovers, so over-valued herself and under-rated all her pretenders, that they have deserted her to a man.—Spectator, No. 372.

But though the common fault is under-rating the value of those who are near and ought to be dear to us, yet present grief on losing them may possibly overdo it.

Secker, vol. iii. Ser. 9.

UNDER-RECKON, v. To reckon or calculate below, too low.

So Suidas under-reckons it by seven yeares.

Bp. Hall. Ser. to Lords of Parliament, Feb. 18, 1634.

UNDER-RECOMPENSED. Not equivalently compensated, paid, rewarded.

In point of pecuniary gain, all things considered, they [honourable professions] are generally under-recompensed, as I shall endeavour to shew by and by.

Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. i. c. 10.

UNDER-SAIL. So Wiclif renders sub-navi- gare. And see UNDER-MASTED.

And whanne we remoueden fro thenns we undirsailiden sum or price.

Such now the emulation betwixt these owners to undersell
one another, that the commodity is fallen to thirteen pound the ton.—Fuller. Worthies. Yorkshire.

Corporation laws enable the inhabitants of towns to raise their prices, without fearing to be undersold by the free competition of their own countrymen.

Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. i. c. 10.

UNDER-SERVANT. An inferior, a lower servant; under another servant.

About this time also was Edward Squier arraigned for treason, a man of inferior quality, having been first a pettifogging clerk, afterwards an under-servant in the queen's stable.—Camden. Hist. of Q. Elizabeth, an. 1598.

UNDER-SET, v. } To put or place under,
UNDERSE'TTER. } (sc.) as a prop, or stay, UNDERSE'TTING, n. } or support; to support,
to sustain.

agent, or deputy of, the sheriff.

The officers of this town be very diligent with us, and the undersheriffe.—Strype. Eccles. Mem. 1 Mary, an. 1558.

The cardinals of Rome, which are Theologues, and friars, and schoole-men, haue a phrase of notable contempt and scorne towards ciuill businesse: for they call all temporall businesse, of warres, embassages, judicature, and other employments, shirrerie, which is under-sheriffries; as if they were but matters for under-sheriffes and catchpoles;
though many times, those under-sheriffries doe more good than their high speculations.—Bacon. Ess. Of Praise.

UNDER-SHOT. Shot, thrown, driven by something passing under.

And so the imprisoned water payeth the ransome of dryuing an undershotte wheele for his enlargement.

Carew. Suruey of Cornwall, fol. 26.

UNDER-SIDE. The lower side; the side under or beneath.

Which last description is remarkable in the bones of the fingers, these being hollowed out, on the underside, like a scoop, and with such a concavity, that the finger may be cut across to the bone, without hurting the artery which runs along it.—Paley. Natural Theology, c. 10.

UNDER-SIZED. Sized or of a size, or cinere, (Somner.)

"To sing after or lower than another, to follow another in singing."

So ended she; and all the rest around

To her redoubled that her undersong,

Which said, their bridale day should not be long.

Spenser. Prothalamion.

But you O Muses! by soft Chamus sitting,

Your dainty songs unto his murmurs fitting,

Which bears the under-song unto your cheerful dittyng.

P. Fletcher. Purple Island, c. 1.

For time will under-song us; and our voice

Woll woxen weake [underfong?]

Browne. Yonge Willie & Old Wernock.

UNDER-SPHERES. Lower, inferior spheres.

He conquer'd rebel passions, rul'd them so,

As under-spheres by the first mover go;

Banish'd so far their working, that we can

But know he had some; for we knew him man.

Elegy upon Dr. Donne.

UNDER-STAND, v. } A. S. Under-standan, UNDERSTA'NDABLE. } sub-stare, sub-sistere,

or understanding may iudge.

Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 21.

But whom? attentive auditors,
Such as will join their profit with their pleasure,
And come to feed their understanding parts.

B. Jonson. Every Man out of his Humour. The Stage.

The men that were aboard the same ships were of some farre countrie, for their language was vnkowne, and not understandable to any man that could be brought to talke with them.

Holinshed. Chron. of England. Hen. III. an. 1254.

Mar. My sight was a little dim i' th' dark indeed,
So was my feeling cozen'd; yet I'm content;
I am the better understander now.

Beaum. & Fletch. Maid in the Mill, Act v.

It is therefore a great ability in a man, out of the words, contexture, and other circumstances of language, to deliver himself from equivocation, and to find out the true meaning of what is said: and this is it we call understanding.

Hobbs. Human Nature, c. 5.

Laz. Your grace doth apprehend me very rightly.

Count. Your grace shall find him in your further conference

Grave, wise, courtly, and scholar like, understandingly

Sundays also and every evening may be now understandingly spent in the highest matters of theology, and church history antient and modern.—Milton. Of Education.

Were it not for two or three instances in White-Hall, and in the town, the poets of this age would find so little incouragement for their labours, and so few understanders, that they might have leisure to turn pamphleteers.

Dryden. The Kind Keeper, Epis. Ded.

Since it is the understanding that sets man above the rest of sensible beings, and gives him all the advantage and dominion, which he has over them; it is certainly a subject, even for its nobleness, worth our labour to inquire into.

Locke. On Hum. Underst. b. i. c. 1.

He [Leonard Digges] was esteemed by those that knew him in Univ. Coll. a great master of the English language, a perfect understander of the French and Spanish, a good by the best bishops of the Church, as having the fathers agreeing to scripture truly urged, and understandingly interpreted therein.—Id. Ib. vol. i.

So very disgusting is this kind of enquiry to the generality, that I have often thought it was for mankind a lucky mistake (for it was a mistake) which Mr. Locke made when he called his book, an Essay on human Understanding.—Tooke. Letter to Dunning.

UNDER-STATED. Stated, estated—below, having too low or small an estate.

Sir Henry, though heir to his brother Richard after his death, yet perceiving himself over-titled, or rather understated, for so high an honour (the undoubted right whereof rested in him) declined the assuming thereof.

Fuller. Worthies. Bedfordshire.

UNDER-STOCKED. Stocked too low, below what is wanted; supplied, furnished, stored insufficiently.

A new colony must always, for some time be more under-stocked in proportion to the extent of its territory, and more under-peopled in proportion to the extent of its stock, than the greater part of other countries.

Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. i. c. 9.

Nor hold from suite of his avowed quest,
Which he had undertane to Gloriane.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 8.

Yet t' introduce a better government
Instead thereof, if we t' example look,
The undertakers have been overtook.

Daniel. Civil Wars, b. iii.

And yet the undertakers, nay, performers,
Of such a brave and glorious enterprize,
Are yet unknown.

Beaum. & Fletch. The Double Marriage, Act v.

But [I] have shewed that by forgetting himself, and retracting most of the principal grounds he builds upon, he hath saved me the labour of a confutation: which yet I have not in any place found any such labour or difficulty, but that it was undertakable by a man of very mean, that is, of my abilities.

Chillingworth. Religion of Protestants, Ep. Ded.

I find you are a general undertaker, and have, by your correspondents, or self, an insight into most things; which makes me apply myself to you at present in the sorest calamity that ever befel man.—Spectator, No. 432.

His very mirth is an antidote to all gaiety, and his appearance has a stronger effect on my spirits than an undertaker's shop.—Goldsmith. The Good Natur'd Man, Act i.

These critics, by their very imperfect knowledge of the Hebrew language, which in their time had been a dead language among the Jews themselves for many ages, and by their prejudices against our Saviour, were but ill qualified for their arduous undertaking.—Bp. Horsley, vol. ii. Ser. 26.

UNDER-TENANT. A tenant below a tenant.

Settle and secure the under-tenants; to the end there may be a repose and establishment of every subject's estate, lord and tenant.—Davies. Hist. of Ireland.

UNDER-THING. Lower, inferior thing.

— My woman's strength
Is so orchard'd with danger like to grow
About my marriage, that these under-things
Dare not abide in such a troubled sea.

UNDER-VALUE, v. } To estimate or rate
UNDERVA'LUE, n. } the worth, or price, UNDERVALUA'TION. } below, too low; to UNDERVA'LUER. } set too low—a price, UNDERVA'LUNG, n. } estimation; to esteem too little.

Zab. They are for you, sir;
And under-value not the worth you carry,
You are that worthy man.

Beaum. & Fletch. Custom of the Country, Act iii. sc. 2.

What conceit soever I have of the price of life, their undervaluation of it hath been such, that they have parted with it for nothing; they have run to meet that death which I flee from as formidable and ugly?

Bp. Hall. Christian Moderation, b. i. § 14.

And such men they were, as by the kingdom were sent to advise him, not sent to be cavill'd at, because elected, or to be entertain'd by him with an undervalue and misprison of their temper, judgment, or affection.

Milton. Answer to Eikon Basilike.

My next and last example shall be that under-valuer of money, the late provost of Eton [Sir Henry Wotton].

Walton. Angler, pt. i. c. 1.

And as it is a particular disesteem of every knowing person alive, and most injurious to the written labours and monuments of the dead, so to me it seems an undervaluing and vilifying of the whole nation.—Milton. Areopagitica.

By the means of which we can now crucify the flesh, with the affections and lusts; mortify and subdue all our irregular passions, undervalue pleasures, rejoice in afflictions, and walk even as he walked, in humility and patience, in purity and holiness.—Atterbury, vol. iii. Ser. 6.

For if men can pervert their judgments so, as to look upon some deviations from the law of God, the great rule of life, as no sins, taking sin strictly and properly, they will proceed to a general undervaluation of the nature of sin.

South, vol. vii. Ser. 5.

Men know but little of each other's real character and merit, and frequently err by undervaluing and overvaluing them.—Knox. Winter Evenings, Even. 45.

UNDER-VERSE. The lower, the second verse.

Perigot maketh all his song in praise of his loue, to whom Willy answereth euery underverse.

Spenser. Shepherd's Calender. August.

UNDER-WATER. See SUB-AQUEOUS.

Some from the rocke, some from the shore oppose.
Vulteus found this under-water traine
(The master of the ship) who all in vaine
Striving to cut the chaines, did them desire Without all hope, to fight.—May. Lucan. Pharsalia, b. iv.

UNDER-WENT. Went, from A. S. Wend-an, ire, to go, is used instead of the past tense go-ed, go-en. Literally in Chapman,—

Went under, passed under, (met.) suffered, sustained.

The festival though in some parts of it, as in the general sentence and the beads, it underwent some corrections, yet
I think it was not laid aside wholly till the reign of king Edward.—Strype. Eccles. Mem. Hen. VIII. an. 1532.

For some remembrance of the Book of Public and Common Prayer, which about this time underwent a diligent inspection and reformation, by some of the bishops, take these short hints of it.—Id. Ib. Edw. VI. an. 1550.

The sufferings and torments, which the first Christians underwent so willingly and bravely, were a strong evidence of the truth of that doctrine, which could inspire its followers with so much courage, constancy, and patience.

Atterbury, vol. i. Ser. 3.

Besides this, he [our Saviour] underwent the many inconveniences of a low and unsettled condition.

Secker, vol. vi. Lect. 9.

UNDER-WOOD. Wood growing under or below, (sc.) the higher, loftier wood or trees.

Provided, that all woods, and under-woods, growing upon any of the said lands so demised, be unto the king's majesty reserved.—Strype. Eccles. Mem. Edw. VI. an. 1551.

The place was ouergrowne with underwoods, as thornes and brambles.

Holinshed. Chron. History of England, b. v. c. 21.

'Tis only for that thou dost naturally produce
More under-wood and brake, than oak for greater use.

Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 28.

As the multitude call timber-trees, promiscuously growing, a wood or forest: so am I bold to entitle these lesser poems, of later growth, by this of underwood, out of the analogie they hold to the forest in my former booke.

B. Jonson. Underwoods. To the Reader.

It consists of groves of bread-fruit and cocoa-nuts, without underwood, which are intersected, in all directions, by the paths that lead from one house to the other.

Cook. First Voyage, b. i. c. 17.

UNDER-WORK, v. } To work under or UNDERWO'RK, n. } below; below what is UNDERWO'RKER. } needful, insufficiently; UNDERWO'RKING, n. } lower or at a lower price than others; consequentially, it is equivalent to—
To undermine; to work under the foundation, unseen, secretly, clandestinely.

There dost thou struggle with thine own distrust,
And others jealousies their counterplot, Against some underworking pride, that must Supplanted be, or else thou standest not.

Daniel. Chorus to Philotas.

'He raiseth in private a new instrument, one Sertorius Macro, and by him underworketh, discovers the other's counsels, his means, his ends, &c.

B. Jonson. Sejanus. The Argument.

Notwithstanding all which, Adonijah, backed by the strength of a Joab, and the gravity of an Abiathar, will underwork Solomon, and jostle into the not yet vacant seat of his father David.—Bp. Hall. Cont. Adonijah Defeated.

Drawing us, by insensible degrees, to sacrifice the public welfare to our own advantage, and to underwork and cross the better counsels of more faithful patriots.

Id. Ib. Mysterie of Godliness, Ep.

What shall I need to suggest unto you the dangerous under-working of other sects? secretly endeavouring to spring their hidden mines, to the overthrow, both of the one government and the other.—Id. Ib. A Modest Offer.

Those that are proper for war, fill up the laborious part of life, and carry on the underwork of the nation.—Addison.

But here indeed Athanasius guards against the notion of the Son's being an underworker, in the low Arian sense: for otherwise he admits that the Father wrought by and in the Son.—Waterland. Works, vol. iii. p. 320.

UNDER-WORLD. Lower, inferior world; sublunary world.

— And whence

The glory of that mightiness doth spring,
That over-spreads (with such a reverence)
This under-world Daniel. Civil Wars, b. viii.

The gods of Rome fight for ye; loud Fame calls ye, Pitch'd on the topless Apenine, and blows
To all the under-world.

Beaum. & Fletch. Bonduca, Act iii. sc. 2.

UNDER-WRITE. } A. S. Under-writ-an, UNDERWRI'TER. } subscribe;

To subscribe, to write below. An underwriter,—a subscriber to certain terms of agreement, to a policy of insurance.

She spoke, or at least writ, English very well, as appears by her letter under-written.

Strype. Eccles. Mem. Edw. VI. an. 1552.

Pitz. I have enough on't: for an hundred pieces!
Yes, for two hundred, under-write me, do.
Your man will take my bond?

B. Jonson. The Divelle is an Asse, Act iii. sc. 1.

But I shall not be troubled with this any more; save that I shall observe that one White, of the Roman persuasion, quoting part of these words, which Bellarmine, and from him the under-writers object; of these words in particular affirms that without all controversie they are apocryphal.

Bp. Taylor. Of the Real Presence, § 12.

UN-DESCRIBED. Not traced out, delineated, depicted, defined.

Consequently the undescribed coast from the latitude of 69° to the mouth of the river Kovyma, must uniformly trend more or less to the westward.

Cook. Third Voyage, b. vi. c. 4.

Let these describe the undescribable.

Byron. Child Harold, c. 4. s. 53.

UN-DESCRIED. Not espied, discovered, discerned.

"But this is yet the outward, fairest side
Of our design.—Within rests more of fear,
More dread of sad event yet undescried,
Than (my most worthy lords) I would there were.

Daniel. Civil Wars, b. iii.

Many there are reclaimed, as Peter; many, as Judas, known well enough, and yet tolerated, many which must remain undescribed till the day of his appearance, by whom the secret corners of darkness shall be brought into open light.—Hooker. Ecclesiastical Politie, b. vi.

And since these new truths, and the numerous descendants, that may spring from their loins, may be used still in the same manner, and be as it were the seed of more truth, who can tell at what undescribed fields of knowledge even man may at length arrive?

Wollaston. Religion of Nature, s. 3.

This heard, to Damian straight a sign she made,
To haste before; the gentle squire obeyed:
Secret and undescried, he took his way
And ambush'd close behind an arbour lay.

Pope. January & May.

UN-DESERVED. } Not earned by service;
UNDESERVEDLY. } not merited or worthy UNDESERVEDNESS. } (sc.) as a reward; not UNDESERVER. } merited, not worthy, not UNDESERVING. } entitled to.

He yeueth his graces undeserved
And fro that man, whiche hath him serued,
Full ofte he taketh away his fees,
As he that plaieyth at the dies.—Gower. Con. A. b. i.

For as he liueth yet at Excester & there liueth vpō such as he had before, without that new hepe of benefice giue hym by the captaynes of hys kingdome for killing of Richard Hunē, or thanke either saue onely of God for his long paciēce in hys undeserved trouble.

Sir T. More. Workes, p. 298.

And full of a certayne vnfeyned confidēce, that where you suffre suche thynges undeservedly, you shall, by the will of God, haboundauntly receyue a great fruyte of your fayth.

Udal. 1 Peter, c. 1.

Therefore he yt hath through flatterie preferred the undeserving rich man before the deservuig pore man, forasmuche as he hathe in thys behalfe broken the lawe of loue: he is cousen germain to all naughtyness, that is commonly done againste the loue of the neyghbor.—Id. James, c. 2.

Who seeing his sad plight, her tender hart
With deare compassion deeply did emmoue,
That she gan mone his undeserved smart,
And with her dolefull accent, beare with him a part.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 8.

I'm as equally jealous, and as feareful,
That any undeserved stain might fall
Upon her sanctified whiteness, as of the sin
That comes by wilfulness.

Beaum. & Fletch. The Nice Valour, Act i.

I call it the famous Parliament, tho' not the harmless, since none well-effected, but will confess, they have deserved much more of these nations, than they have undeserved.

Milton. Ruptures of the Commonwealth.

— Come they deservedly,
They are no wrongs then, but his punishments:
If undeservedly, and he not guilty,
The doer of them, first, should blush, not he.

B. Jonson. The New Inn, Act iv. sc. 3.

In his commonwealth some he suffered to be undeservedly rich, others to be undeservedly poor.—Milton. Tetrachordon.

Say I have an undeserver to my husband:
That's ne'er the worse for him.

Beaum. & Fletch. The Nice Valour, Act i.

All passages that may seem indirect,
Are stop't up now; and there is no access
By gross corruption: bribes cannot effect
For th' undeserving any offices.

Daniel. A Panegyric Congratulatory.

I pray to that Almighty Being, upon whom depends the existence of the world, and by whose providence I have been preserved to this moment, and injoy'd many undeserved advantages, that He would graciously accept my grateful sense and acknowledgments of all His beneficence toward me.—Wollaston. Religion of Nature, s. 5.

Science distinguishes a man of honour from one of those athletic brutes whom undeservedly we call heroes.

Dryden. Palamon & Arcite, Ded.

But the reverence of the man, or undeservedness of his wrongs, moved so the affections of the members of this university, that they directed to the king a petitionary epistle in Latin, no less eloquent and pithy, than circum-spect and wary, wherein they much pleaded for his liberty.

Wood. Athenæ Oxon. vol. i.

Nor will I borrow merit from the dead,
Myself an undeserver.—Rowe. Tamerlane, Act iii.

If old age were attended only with the deprivation of amiable qualities, the loss of sensibility might often be esteem'd a happiness to the individual, as it would prevent him from feeling one of the greatest of natural and undeserved calamities.—Knox. Ess. No. 39.

UN-DESIGNED. } Not noted by any sign; UNDESIGNEDLY. } not marked (in the UNDESIGNEDNESS. } mind); not planned, UNDESIGNING. } schemed, purposed, projected.

But the things of earth seem to be distributed by a kind of blind lottery, and to justify the conclusion of the atheist, that the moral world (as he supposeth of the natural) is rul'd by a fortuitous range of undesigned events.

Glanvill, Disc 6.

Those who undesignedly pervert scripture should have something better to plead than their retaining the words of scripture.—Waterland. Works, vol. v. p. 151.

But now, when Christianity first appeared, how weak and defenceless was it, how artless and undesigning! how utterly unsupported either by the secular arm, or secular wisdom!—Atterbury, vol. i. Ser. 3.

And this might be noticed as an example of undesigned coincidence in the two evangelists.

Paley. Evidences of Christianity, pt. iii. c. 6.

In examining ancient records; or indeed any species of testimony, it is, in my opinion, of the greatest importance to attend to the information or grounds of argument which are casually and undesignedly disclosed: forasmuch as this species of proof is, of all others, the least liable to be corrupted by fraud or misrepresentation.—Id. Ib. Prop. 1. c. 3.

The undesignedness of the agreements (which undesignedness is gathered from their latency, their minuteness, their obliquity, the suitableness of the circumstances in which they consist, to the places in which those circumstances occur, and the circuitous references by which they are traced out) demonstrates that they have not been produced by meditation, or by any fraudulent contrivance.

Id. Ib. pt. iii. c. 7.

UN-DESI'RED. } Not wished for, not UNDESI'RING. } coveted, not longed for, UNDESI'RABLE. } sought, asked, entreated,
UNDESI'ROUS. } required.

Sone after Augustus gaue to Cinna the dignitie of consull undesired, blaming him, that he durste nat aske it, wherby he hadde hym moste assured and loyall.

Sir T. Elyot. The Governour, b. ii. c. 7.

"When lo! I joy'd my lover, not my love
And felt the hand of lust most undesir'd; Enforc'd th' unproved bitter sweet to prove,
Which yields no natural pleasure when 't is hir'd."

Daniel. Complaint of Rosamond.

The baits of gifts, and money to despise,
And look on wealth with undesiring eyes?
When thou canst truly call these virtues thine,
Be wise and free, by Heav'n's consent and mine.

Dryden. Persius, Sat. 5.

— Therefore hard
I clench'd the boughs, till she disgorg'd again
Both keel and mast. Not undesir'd by me
They came, though late.

Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. xii.

Nay, truly, according to modern modes of thinking, he might have frankly owned the whole: treated the adultery as a trifle, especially in a person of any rank; and perhaps the murder too, as an undesirable consequence indeed, but an unavoidable one, of Uriah's absurd behaviour.

Secker, vol. i. Ser. 26.

It will provoke the better part of their inferiors to think ill of them, which is a very undesirable thing.

Id. vol. i. Ser. 5.

I believe it will be difficult to find a single instance of a human creature possessing the use of his faculties, and at the same time undesirous of distinction.

Knox. Winter Evenings, Even. 55.

UN-DESPA'IRING. Not without hope, not hopeless.

— 'Twas there,
Perils and conflicts inexpressible,
Anson, with steady undesparing breast,
Endur'd, when o'er the various globe he chas'd
His country's foes.

Dyer. The Fleece, b. iv.

UN-DESTROYABLE. } Not to be pulled UNDESTROY'ED. } down, ruined, or demolished; not to be quelled or killed.

How can that beauty yet be undestroy'd,
That years have wasted?

Drayton. Countess of Salisbury to the Black Prince.

I will here subjoin one instance of a body which must have sustained an exceeding vehement fire, and is looked upon by most of the chemists as more undestroyable than gold itself.—Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 283.

UN-DETE'RMINABLE. } See INDETERMI-UNDETE'RMINATE. } NABLE. That can-UNDETE'RMINATENESS. } not be bounded UNDETERMINA'TION. } or limited, defined UNDETE'RMINED. } or ended; that cannot be concluded, decided or revolved.

I cannot but expect that God in his justice should enlarge the bounds of the Turkish empire, or some other way punish Christians, by reason of their pertinacious disputing about things unnecessary, undeterminable and unprofitable, and for their hating and persecuting their brethren.

Bp. Taylor. Liberty of Prophesying, Ep. Ded.

It doth all one as if it sent back the matter undeterminable at law, and intractable by rough dealing, to have instructions and admonitions bestow'd about it by them whose spiritual office is to abjure and to denounce, and so left to the conscience.—Milton. Doct. & Dis. of Divorce, b. ii. c. 21.

Thus would not he admit, or leave any thing, as far forth as possibly might otherwise be, infinite and undeterminate: but adorn nature with proportion, measure, and number.
Holland. Plutarch, p. 630.

The idea of a free agent is undeterminateness to one part, before he has made choice.—More. Divine Dialogues.

So that he is not left barely to the undetermination, incertainty, and unsteadiness of the operation of his faculties, without a certain secret and gentle predisposition of them to what is right, decent, and convenient.
Hale. Origin of Mankind, p. 61.

D. Gomarus with good modesty answered that indeed he did say so, but he protested it was not out of any evil meaning, but only to shew as other churches, so the church of England had left that undetermined.
Hales. Balcanqual from the Synod of Dort.

In duration we consider it, as if this line of number were extended both ways to an unconceivable, undeterminate, and infinite length.—Locke. Hum. Underst. b. ii. c. 17.

Our translators have left a latitude in their version of a place, not taking upon them to determine the sense where the generality of the expression in the original had left it undetermined.—Waterland. Works, vol. viii. p. 449.

All the little good, which a lie, that will scarce be credited, hath any chance for doing, may commonly with prudence be done without it, either by avoiding to answer, or by general and undetermined answers, which are very different things from untruths.—Secker, vol. iii. Ser. 7.

UN-DETE/STING. Not loathing, abhorring, hating.

[Who can, unshock'd, behold] the false fair seeming patriot's hollow boast?

A race, resolv'd on bondage, fierce for chains,
My sacred rights a merchandize alone
Esteeming, and to work their feeders will
By deeds, a horror to mankind, prepar'd,
As were the dregs of Romulus of old?
Who these indeed can undetesting see?

Thomson. Liberty, pt. v.

UN-DE/VIATING. Not going out of the way (via), not erring, straying, wandering.

But I contend, that the perfect undeviating rectitude of intention, and the perfect justice of administration, of which the psalmist speaks, cannot be ascribed, without impiety, to any earthly monarch.—Bp. Horsley, vol. i. Ser. 7.

He from the stack carves out th' accustom'd load,
Deep plunging, and again deep-plunging oft,
His broad keen knife into the solid mass:
Smooth as a wall the upright remnant stands,
With such undeviating and even force
He severs it away.

Cowper. Task, b. v.

— Should God again,
At once in Gibeon, interrupt the race
Of the undeviating and punctual sun,
How would the world admire!

Id. Ib. b. vi.

UN-DEVO/UT. } Not pledged, or promised,
UNDEVO/TED. } or dedicated, (sc.) to god-UNDEVO/TELY. } liness, piety, or religion; UNDEVO/TION. } not godly, pious, or religious.

Goure masse and goure matynes. and meny of goure heures
Aren don undevotlich.

Piers Plouhman, p. 7.

Than cometh undevotion, thurgh which a man is so blont, as sayth Seint Bernard, and hath swiche langour in his soule, that he may neyther rede ne sing in holy chirche, ne here ne thinke of no devotion, ne travaille with his hondes in no good werke, that it n'is to him unsavory and all apalled.—Chaucer. The Persones Tale.

From that tyme hytherwarde, was there neuer so undeowle
a kinge, that durst that sacred place violate.

Sir T. More. Workes, p. 46.

So it is to be perceiued of us, that we bee not as undeout in keping and fulfilling the gospel, as we be superstitious and scrupulous obseruers of the rites and ceremonies.

Udal. John. Pref. of Erasmus.

He confesseth, that in the primitiue church was no priuate masse, which, as he saith, came in afterwarde by the negligence and undeoution of the people.

Jewel. Replie unto M. Hardinge, p. 14.

But amongst the English nobility, the lords Say and Brook (two popular men, and most undevoted to the church, and, in truth, to the whole government) positively refused in the king's own presence to make any such protestation.

Clarendon. Civil War, vol. i. p. 117.

Devotion, when lukewarm, is undevout;
But when it glows, its heat is struck to heaven.

Young. Complaint, Night 4.

UN-DIA/PHANOUS. Not transparent.

There would settle all about it swarms of little metalline and undiaphanous bodies, shining in the water like the scales of small fishes.—Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 57.

UN-DIGE/STED. } Not separated, divided, UNDIGE/STIBLE. } distributed, (sc. by the action of the stomach, and passed into the different parts of the body.) Used met.

Now must my muse afford a straine to Riot,
Who, almost kil'd with his luxurious diet,
Lay eating grasse (as dogges) within a wood,
So to disgorge the undigested food.

Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b. i. s. 5.

The undigested and immethodical bulk of his book did not protect him.—Milton. Def. of the People of England.

He was besieged with continual and undigestible incentives of the clergy with traitorous confidence striking at his crown, and in such sort, as humanity must have exceeded itself, to have indured it with any mixture of patience.

Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 17. Selden. Illust.

Some hasty and undigested thoughts on a subject I had never before considered, which I set down against our next meeting, gave the first entrance into this discourse.

Locke. Hum. Underst. Ep. to the Reader.

It [proposition for the relief of Ireland] appeared to me extremely raw and undigested.—Burke. Works, vol. ix. p. 239.

UN-DIGHT. Not prepared, procured, provided, appointed, furnished.

From her faire head her fillet shee vn-dight
And laid her stole aside.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 3.

So also did that great Oetean knight
For his lounes sake his lions skin vn-dight.

Id. Ib. b. v. c. 8.

Weary of trauell in his former fight,
He there in shade himselfe had laid to rest,
Hauing his armes and warlike things vn-dight,
Fearelesse of foes that mote his peace molest.

Id. Ib. b. vi. c. 7.

UN-DIGNIFIED. Without dignity or sense of worthiness or merit, of rank or distinction;
not consistent with such sense or feeling.

A sensible father, who is not himself a convert to the effeminacy of the times, had rather see a son forming himself as a scholar and a man, on the example of an old Roman or Athenian, than imitating, in his writings and actions, the undignified vivacity of nations which have been taught by their philosophy to degrade human nature.

Knox. Ess. No. 3.

UN-DILIGENT. } Not careful or anxious;
UNDILIGENTLY. } not assiduous, persevering, industrious.

Why wear you out the day of grace and those precious seasons still? as uncertain of Christ, yea, as undiligent after him, as you were long ago? as you love your souls, be more serious in their business.

Leighton. Com. on 1 Pet. v. 19.

Cameron a late writer much applauded, commenting this place not undiligently, affirms that the Greek preposition κατα translated unusually (for) hath a force in it implying the suddenness of those Pharisaic divorces.

Milton. Tetrachordon.

UN-DILU/TED. Not thinned (by the mixture of liquid), not weakened.

When thus the Cyclops had with human flesh
Fill'd his capacious belly, and had quaff'd
Much undiluted milk, among his flocks
Outstretch'd immense, he press'd his cavern-floor.

Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. ix.

UN-DIM/NISHABLE. } That cannot be, UNDIM/NISHED. } or become, less, or lessened, or decreased.

The earth strictly and philosophically considered is neither the lowest of the creation, nor immovable; but this metaphysical earth is both, as is manifest at first sight, it being the lowest degree and shadow of being; and not only immoveable, but undiminshable and unimpairable.

More. Philosophic Cabbala, App.

And while he keeps them about him undiminish'd and unshorn, he may with the jaw-bone of an ass, that is, with the word of his meanest officers, suppress and put to confusion thousands of those that rise against his just power.

Milton. The Reason. of Church Government, b. ii.

Cethegus, tho' a traytor to the state,
And tortur'd, scap'd his ignominious fate:
And Sergius, who a bad cause bravely try'd,
All of a piece, and undiminish'd dy'd.

Dryden. Juvenal, Sat. 10.

There is no sacrifice, consistent with innocence, which a good man would not make to hand down the blessings derived from his fathers undiminished to his children.
Knox. Ess. No. 6.

UN-DINTED. Not hollowed or bent, or impressed by blows.

— Then, to send

Measures of wheate to Rome: this greed vpon,
To part with vnhackt edges, and beare backe
Our targes vn-dinted.

Shakespeare. Anthony & Cleopatra, Act ii. sc. 6.

UN-DIOCESED. Not possessed of, or preferred to a diocese, or episcopal rank.

But he that would mould a modern bishop into a primitive, must yield him to be elected by the popular voice, undiocest, unrevenu'd, unlorded, and leave him nothing but brotherly equality, matchless temperance, frequent fasting, incessant prayer and preaching, continual watchings and labours in his ministry.

Milton. Of Reformation in England, b. i.

UN-DIPPED. Not sunk, or immersed.

What are to him the sculptures of the shield,
Heav'n's planets, earth, and ocean's watry field?
The Pleiads, Hyads; less, and greater bear, Undipp'd in seas.—Dryden. Ovid. Metam. b. xiii.

I think thee still as honest as thou could'st;
Impenetrably good; but like Achilles,
Thou had'st a soft Egyptian heel undipt,
And that has made thee mortal.—Id. Cleomenes, Act iv.

UN-DIRE/CTED. } Not ruled or ordered, UNDIRE/CTLY. } guided, regulated, or conducted.

Nevertheless thorough the most wise and valiant handling of that right noble Lord [Grey], it got not the head which the former evils found; for in them the realme was left like a ship in a storm, amidst all the raging surges, unruled, undirected of any: for they to whom she was committed, either fainted in their labour, or forsooke their charge.—Spenser. View of the State of Ireland.

That neither of both parties shal give any help, succor or aid, or favor, against the other, directly or undirectly, secretly or openly, to the invasor.

Strype. Eccles. Mem. Originals. Hen. VIII. No. 64.

In the same month of September there was a letter undirected, but I suppose to the aforesaid personages, authorizing them to call before them such expert, skilful men, as they should think fit.—Id. Ib. Edw. VI. an. 1551.

If such escape contagion, and emerge
Pure from so foul a pool to shine abroad,
And give the world their talents and themselves,
Small thanks to those, whose negligence or sloth
Expos'd their inexperience to the snare,
And left them to an undirected choice.

Cowper. Task, b. ii.

UN-DISBA/NDED. Not freed from bond or obligation; not discharged from (military) duty.

Nevertheless there were 8000 Irish papists which he refus'd to disband, though intreated by both houses, first, for reasons best known to himself, next under pretence of lending them to the Spaniard; and so kept them undisbanded till very near the month wherein that rebellion broke forth.—Milton. Eikonoklastes, § 10.

UN-DISCE/RNED. } Not seen or perceived UNDISCE/RNEDLY. } distinctly or clearly;
UNDISCE/RNIBLE. } not distinguished or UNDISCE/RNIBLENESS. } discriminated accu-UNDISCE/RNIBLY. } rately or carefully; not UNDISCE/RNING. } espied, observed, regarded, remarked, noticed.

Now suppose than first, that of saintes & of reliques, some were trewe & some were false, yet the worship that ye would we should do to them al, should be bycause (that standinge as they do vnknown and undiscerned) ye rekened thē al trewe & all for God's well beloned seruantes.

Sir T. More. Workes, p. 190.

— Bring me to a place

Where undiscerned of herself I may Feed my desiring eyes but half an hour.

Beaum. & Fletch. The Captain, Act iv. sc. 4.

And farewell all hope of true reformation in the state, while such an evil as this lies undiscern'd or unregarded in the house.

Milton. Doct. & Disc. of Divorce. To the Parliament.

The most excellent things, while their worth is undiscerned and unknown, affect us not: Now, faith is the proper seeing faculty of the soul, in relation to Christ; that inward light must be infused from above, to make Christ visible to us: without it, though he is beautiful, yet we are blind, and therefore cannot love him for that beauty.

Leighton. Com. on 1 Peter, vv. 7, 8.

UND

I doe not meane that body mysticall, whereof Christ is onely the head, that building undiscernable by mortall eyes, wherein Christ is the chiefe corner stone; but I speake of the visible church.—Hooker. Disc. Of Justification, § 23.

And that things of this nature are undiscernable secrets, we may learn by the experience of those men who have in cases not unlike vainly laboured to tell us, how the material fire of hell should torment an immaterial soul, and how baptismal water should cleanse the spirit, and how a sacrament should nourish a body, and make it sure of the resurrection.—Bp. Taylor. Of the Real Presence, § 1.

While one habit lessens, another may undiscernibly increase, and it may be a degree of covetousness may expel a degree of prodigality.—Id. Of Repentance, c. 5. § 5.

If they for lucre use to creep into the church undiscernably, the more wisdom will it be so to provide, that no revenue there may exceed the golden mean.

Milton. Apology for Smectymnus.

I know not how, but wrongfully I know
Hath undiscerning custom plac'd our kind Under desert, and set us far below
The reputation to our sex assign'd.

Daniel. Letter from Octavia to Marcus Antonius.

I will venture to affirm, that all true prayer is private; and the true seat of it being in the mind, toward the interesting of whose powers all the circumstances of worship are mainly designed to contribute, it may be said upon that account to be always made in the most retired and undiscerned of all retreats.—Wollaston. Religion of Nature, s. 5.

By setting themselves such tasks, as required and employed the whole man, death has undiscernedly stolen upon them, and unawares intruded into their studies, where their restless ambition to enrich the mind never left them the leisure to prepare it to leave the body.

Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 447.

Because of their remoteness, subtilty, and undiscernibleness, it cannot know them adequately, or in the whole.

Ellis. Knowledge of Divine Things, p. 84.

Umbratilis, therefore, has no more to do but repeat the thoughts of Urbanus in a positive manner, and appear to the undiscerning a wiser man than the person from whom he borrows.—Tatler, No. 244.

I might feel some scorplings in my youthfull days when it would have been imprudent to quench them, and while the object of desire lay at an undiscernible distance.

Search. Light of Nature, vol. i. pt. i. c. 6.

In short it is by the exercise of this power [discernment] that the mind is preserved from that confusion and embarrassment which is experienced by the inattentive and undiscerning, when a general mass of knowledge lies before them.—Cogan. Ethical Treatise, Dis. 2. c. 1.

UN-DISCHARGED. Not relieved, freed, released or dismissed.

— Your guards

Are seven cohorts, you say?

Lac. Yes.

Hold still in readiness and undischarged.

B. Jonson. Sejanus, Act v. sc. 3.

UN-DISCIPLINED. } Not taught or edu-UNDISCIPLINABLE. } cated; not trained in order or method; not exercised, directed, corrected.

For, howsoever it [gentle blood] may grow mis-shap't
(Like this wyld-man, being undisciplin'd)
That to all vertue it may seeme vnapt,
Yet will it shewe some sparks of gentle mind,
And at the last breake forth in his owne proper kind.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 5.

As we see boys in a free school, such as are undisciplinable, are, after some years of probation, sent away to mechanical employment.—Hale. Cont. Of Self-Denial.

These were raw and undisciplined men, for they were just raised, and had scarcely any thing more of the soldier than their regimentals, none of them having been so far trained, as to be permitted to fire.

Anson. Voyages, b. i. c. 1.

An armed, disciplined body is, in its essence, dangerous to liberty; undisciplined it is ruinous to society.

Burke. Subs. of Speech on Army Estimates, (1790.)

UN-DISCLOSE, v. } To keep still close or UNDISCLOSED. } shut up, covered or concealed; not revealed, or opened, or exposed.

Look, Delia, how w' esteem the half blown rose,
The image of thy blush, and summer's honour!
Whilst yet her tender bud doth undisclose
That full of beauty, Time bestows upon her.

Daniel. son. 36.

— Luxurious, others make

The meads their choice, and visit every flower,
And every latent herb: for the sweet task,
To propagate their kinds, and where to wrap.
In what soft beds, their young yet undisclos'd,
Employs their tender care.

Thomson. Summer.

Whate'er there be between you undisclosed,
This is no time nor fitting place to mar
The mirthful meeting with a wordy war.

Byron. Lara, c. 1.

UN-DISCO'NFITED. Not dispersed or routed; not disconcerted.

And so helde themselfe undiscomfited the space of ii. houres.—Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 249.

UN-DISCO'RDING. Not disagreeing or dissonant; not in disunion.

That we on earth with undiscording voice
May rightly answer that melodious noise;
As once we did, till disproportion'd sin
Jarr'd against nature's chime, and with harsh din Broke the fair music that all creatures made
To their great Lord.

Milton. Ode on Music.

UN-DISCO'VERED. } Not detected, dis-UNDISCO'VEABLE. } closed, exposed to UNDISCO'VEABLY. } view, revealed,

Open the doors too of the several prisons,
And give all free entrance into this room.
Undiscover'd I can here mark all.

Beaum. & Fletch. Sea-Voyage, Act v.

He permitted not divorce by law as an evil, for that was impossible to divine law, but permitted by accident the evil of them who divorce'd against the laws' intention undiscoverably.—Milton. Tetrachordon.

The great enemy of my salvation, and his retinue, is continually about me, and watch for my halting, secretly and undiscoverably soliciting my soul to sin against thee.

Hale. Cont. Meditations upon the Lord's Prayer.

With all these advantages, this place is so far removed from the Spanish frontier, and so little known to the Spaniards themselves, that there is reason to suppose, that by proper precautions a ship might continue here undiscovered a long time.—Anson. Voyages, b. ii. c. 3.

[Our life] may possibly, from surprises undiscoverable, be very near to its period.—Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 14.

This sagacity, in many instances, surpassing the contrivance of man and discerning things undiscoverable by human reason, is usually stiled instinct.

Search. Light of Nature, vol. i. pt. i. c. 12.

UN-DISCO'URAGED. Not disheartened, dispirited, dismayed.

The danger, difficulty, and inconvenience that attend long voyages are very different in idea and experience; Mr. Banks however returned, undiscouraged by his first expedition.

Cook. First Voyage, Intro.

UNDISCRE'TELY. } or prudent; cautious or UNDISCRE'TION. } considerate. See INDISCRETE.

O stormy peple, unsad and ever untrewé,
And undiscrete, and changing as a fane,
Delighting ever in rombel that is newé,
For like the mone waxen ye and wane.

Chaucer. The Clerkes Tale, v. 8873.

Through undiscreet and hasty greedinesse,
Out of measure the water so they drinke,
That they fell dead euen vpon the brinke.

Lidgate. Story of Thebes, pt. iii.

Your selfe to drowne in torment and in wo,
For losse of thing and ye list to see,
That in no wise may recured bee,
In great folly and undiscretion.

Id. Ib.

The cōmons of ye cytie were so ferre out of rule, by ensensynge of ryotous persones, that in assemblies and courtes that then were kept at Guyldhalle or other places, symple and undiscrete parsones shuld haue the voyce and ye worshipfull men lytell or no thynge regarded.

Fabyan. Chronycle, an. 1262.

For in the murmuring vulgar usually
This public course of yours compassion draws;
Especially in cases of the great,
Which work much pity in the undiscreet.

Daniel. Civil Wars, b. 1.

Phi. Take it freely; for I know,
Though what thou didst were undiscreetly done,
'Twas meant well.—Beaum. & Fletch. Philaster, Act v.

UN-DISCRIMINATING. See INDISCRIMINATE. Not distinguishing, discerning or making a difference.

Hear now, my friends! my counsel. Hurl the spear
At once with undiscriminating aim Against them all; since now they seek to crown
Their other crimes with slaughter of ourselves.

Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. xxii.

Bp. Hall. Christ Transfigured, pt. ii.

UN-DISGRA'CED. Not dishonoured, degraded, or brought to shame.

So may our country's name be undisgraced,
So may'st thou prosper where thy youth was rear'd,
By every honest joy of love and life endear'd.

Byron. Child Harold, c. 2.

UN-DISGUI'SED. Not cloaked by an assumed, false, or deceptive guise, or dress; not concealed or covered.

And in plaine English undisguised,
Them shewed hole his journey,
And of their counsell gan them prey.—Chaucer. Dreame.

Before his eyes Jove's beauteous daughter stood,
In form and dress, a huntress of the wood;
For had he seen the goddess undisguis'd,
The youth with awe and fear had been surpris'd.

Congreve. Homer. Hymn to Venus.

Quite fatigued and satiated with this dull variety, you are infinitely refreshed when you return to the sphere of his proper splendour, and behold your amiable sovereign in his true, simple, undisguised, native character of majesty.

Burke. Speech on Economic Reform, (1780.)

UN-DISHO'NOURED. Not disgraced; not brought to disgrace, shame, ignominy, infamy.

— Then you were

So noble, that I durst have trusted your Embraces in an opportunity
Silent enough to serve a ravisher,
And yet come from you—undishonor'd; how You think me altered, that you promise your Attempt success I know not.

Beaum. & Fletch. Honest Man's Fortune, Act i.

UN-DISJO'INED. Not disunited, separated, or parted.

— While yet the planks sustain
This tempest undisjoin'd, I will abide
A sufferer on the raft; but when the waves
Shall once have shatter'd it, I will essay
This girdle then—my sole expedient left.

Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. v.

UN-DISMA'YED. } Not deprived, or divested
UNDISMA'YABLE. } of might, strength, fortitude; not daunted, dispirited, disheartened, or discouraged.

But neither could danger be dreadful to Amphialus his undismayable courage, nor yet seem ugly to him, whose truly affected mind did still paint it over with the beauty of Philoclea.—Sidney. Arcadia, b. iii.

My cause, ye gods, would bid me to meet them undismaid, and to say with holy David, Though an hoste should encamp against me, my heart shall not fear.

Bp. Hall. Defence of the Hum. Rem. § 1.

Promise for promise, equally afford,
But once a contract made, keep well your word.
For she for any act of hell is fit,
And undismay'd, may sacrilege commit.

Congreve. Ovid. Art of Love, b. iii.

Re-echo'd shout for shout, all undismay'd,
And waiting firm the bravest of their foes.

Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. xiii.

UN-DISMISSED. Not sent away, not discharged.

— The Greeks

On all sides to their sev'ral ships repair'd,
All save the Myrmidons; their valiant band
Still undismiss'd, Achilles thus bespake.

Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. xxiii.

UN-DISOBLI'GING. Not withholding a kindness or service; not offending or displeasing.

All this he would have expatiated upon, with connexions of the discourses, and the most easy, undisobliging trans-itions.—Broome.

UN-DISPAT'CHED. Not expedited, or sent expeditiously; not sent away.

Which [bill] was read thrice in two days in the parliament, and agreed to, and sent up to the lords' house, where it lay undispatched, by reason that sessions ended within two or three days after it came before them.

Strype. Eccles. Mem. Edw. VI. an. 1548.

UN-DISPENSABLE. } See INDISPENSABLE.
UNDISPENSING. } That cannot be set aside or apart; that cannot be spared, exempted, or excused.

In sundry cases they easily dispensed therewith, which I suppose they would never have done had they esteemed them as things whereunto everlasting, immutable undispensible observation did belong.

Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, b. vii.

If at pleasure he can dispense with golden poetic ages of such pleasing licence, as in the fabled reign of old Saturn, and this perhaps before the law might have some covert, but under such an undispensing covenant as Moses made with them, and not to tell us why and wherefore, indulgence cannot give quiet to the breast of an intelligent man?

Milton. Doct. & Disc. of Divorce, b. ii. c. 5.

UN-DISPERSED. See INDISPERSED.
Not scattered, spread or dissipated.

We have all the redolence of the perfumes we burn upon his altars; the smoke doth vanish ere it can reach the sky; and whilst it is undispersed, it but clouds it.—Boyle.

UN-DISPITEOUS. See DISPITIOUS.

For saue onely a looke piteous,
Of womanhead undispiteous,
That she showed in countenance.—Chaucer. Dreame.

UN-DISPLEA'HOOK. Not offended, angered, vexed, or grieved.

That of his Godhead and his grace
He would forgyue all old trespass,
And undispleased be of time past.—Chaucer. Dreame.

UN-DISPO'SED. See INDISPOSED.
Not set apart, not appropriated, not suited, inclined or adapted, (or parted with.)

Onely we cannot so farre yeeld as to iudge it conuenient, that the holy desire of a competent number should be vn-satisfied, because the greater part is careless and undisposed to ioyne with them.—Hooker. Eccles. Politie, b. v. § 68.

One of them, I observed, was bestowed upon the king's brother; and one remained undisposed of, which, I judged, was for the king himself, as it was a choice bit.

Cook. Third Voyage, b. ii. c. 7.

UN-DISPU'TABLE. } See INDISPUTABLE.
UNDISPU'TED. } That cannot be debated, contended, contested, opposed, controverted.

Duke. Seek me out grooms.
Men more insensible of reputation,
Less curious and precise in terms of honor,
That if my anger chance let fall a stroak,
As we are all subject to impetuous passions,
Yet it may pass unremark'd, undisputed,
And not with braver fury prosecuted.

Beaum. & Fletch. Passionate Madman, Act iv.

— All powerful harmony!
Wise Nature owns thy undisputed sway
Her wond'rous works resigning to thy care.

Congreve. Hymn to Harmony.

There were several satires and panegyrics handed about in acrostic, by which means some of the most arrant undisputable blockheads about the town began to entertain ambitious thoughts, and to set up for polite authors.

Spectator, No. 58.

Paris and Menelaus theirs [spear] direct
Against each other, and the cong'r's love
Shall henceforth, undisputed, all be thine.

Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. iii.

UN-DISQUIETED. Not discomposed, disturbed, harassed.

If you, O Parthians, undisquieted
I euer left, when I pursu'd the fled Vnquiet Alans to the Caspian strait,
And forc'd you not for safety to retreat
To Babylon.

May. Lucan. Pharsalia, b. viii.

UN-DISSEMBLED. Not divested of like, or invested with unlike, appearances or qualities; not feigned, or pretended, or guilefully assumed.

What day did she pass without a large task of private devotion, whence she would still come forth with a countenance of undissembled mortification.

Bp. Hall. Specialties, &c.

Ease, and content, and undissembled love,
Shine in each face; the thoughts of labour past Increase their joy.

J. Philips. Cider, b. ii.

But the attentions paid them at their fire-side, the smiles which exhilarated their own table, were the genuine result of undissembled love, and home was the only secure haven in the tempestuous voyage of life.—Knox. Ess. No. 40.

UN-DISSIPATED. Not cast away, dispersed, or scattered.

Some little primary masses as our proposition mentions, may remain undissipated.—Boyle.

It [debt] is rejected as an outcast, whilst the whole undissipated attention of the minister has been employed for the discharge of claims entitled to his favour by the merits we have seen.

Burke. Speech on Nabob of Arcot's Debts, (1785.)

UNDISSOLVED. }
UNDISSOLVING. }

That cannot be relaxed, loosened, melted; disjoined, separated, destroyed.

And by that firm and undissolved knot,
Betwixt their neighb'ring French and bord'ring Scot,
Bruce shall bring in his Redshanks from the sea.

Drayton. Q. Isabel to Mortimer.

And would'st thou have my partial friendship brake
That holy knot, which, ty'd once, all mankind
Agree to hold sacred and undissolvable?

Rowe. Tamerlane, Act iii.

Thence winding eastward to the Tartar's coast,
She sweeps the howling margin of the main;
Where undissolving, from the first of time,
Snows swell on snows amazing to the sky.

Thomson. Winter.

— On the flood
Indurated and fix'd, the snowy weight
Lies undissolv'd; while silently beneath,
And unperceiv'd, the current steals away.

Cowper. Task, b. v.

UN-DISTEMPERED. Not disorganized, disordered, diseased, disturbed.

The beautiful harmony of the whole, and the artificial contrivance of each part of the world; the which it is hardly possible that any unprejudiced and undistemp'ered mind should conceive to proceed from blind chance, or as blind necessity.—Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 36.

UN-DISTINCTLY. See INDISTINCT.
Not discriminately, determinately, definitely.

They haue giuen vs manifest occasion to thinke it requisite, that we earnestly aduise rather and exhort them to consider as they ought, their sundry ouer-sights, first, in equalling undistinctly crimes with errors.

Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, b. v. § 68.

That cannot be discerned or discriminated;
espied, seen, observed.

The form by which the thing is what it is, is oft so slender and undistinguishable, that it would soon confuse, were it not sustain'd by the efficient and final causes, which concur to make up the form invalid otherwise of it self.

Milton. Tetrachordon.

His swelling body is distended farre Past humane growth, and undistinguish'd are His limmes; all parts the poison doth confound,
And hee lyes hid, in his owne body drown'd.

May. Lucan. Pharsalia, b. ix.

Where divers-speaking zeal one murmur finds,
In undistinguish'd voice to tell their minds.

Daniel. Civil Wars, b. ii.

If Shakespeare be allow'd, as I think he must, to have made his characters distinct, it will easily be infer'd, that he understood the nature of the passions; because it has been prov'd already that confus'd passions make undistinguishable characters.—Dryden. Troil. & Cres. Pref.

For some years last past the use of gold and silver galloon upon hats has been almost universal; being undistinguishably worn by soldiers, esquires, &c.—Tatler, No. 270.

Benefits would not be scattered among the crowd of men, with so promiscuous and undistinguishing a freeness.

Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 36.

Laws, nevertheless, disposed and controlled by that Providence which conducts the affairs of the universe, though by an influence inscrutable, and generally undistinguishable by us.—Paley. Evidences of Christianity, pt. iii. c. 8.

UN-DISTORTED. Not turned, twisted, writhed, or wrenched.

[To] the undistorted suggestions of his own heart, these easy hints will be found no fallacious directions.

More. Song of the Soul, (1647.) Pref.

UN-DISTRA'CTED. } Not drawn or torn UNDISTRA'CTEDLY. } apart; not dis-
UNDISTRA'CTEDNESS. } tressed, discomposed, UNDISTRA'CTING. } troubled, unsettled, perplexed.

It were good we used more easy and undistracting diligence, for increasing of these treasures, which we cannot deny are far better.—Leighton. Expos. Lect. on Psalm xix.

When Enoch had walked with God as many years as the year has days, God was so far from being importuned or tired by that lasting assiduity, that vouchsafing him an unexampled exemption from death, he was pleased by a new and a nearer cut to heaven, to admit him to a yet closer, more immediate, and more undistracted communion with himself.—Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 276.

As St. Paul tells us, that there is difference betwixt married and single persons, the affections of one being at liberty to devote themselves more undistractedly to God, whereas those of the other are distracted; (as Adam's were betwixt his Maker and his rib.)—Id. ib. p. 254.

I need not represent to the equitable reader, how much the strange confusions of this unhappy nation in the midst of which I have made and written these experiments are apt to disturb that calmness of mind, and undistractedness of thought, that are wont to be requisite to happy speculations.—Id. ib. p. 3. To the Reader.

UN-DISTURBED. } Not disordered or UNDISTURBEDLY. } disarranged; not con-UNDISTURBEDNESS. } fused or confounded, disquieted or perplexed.

There counterfeiting that shee was possest
Shee vtters from an undisturbed brest
Fain'd words with no confus'd murmure flowing,
Nor the least signe of diuine fury showing.

Low in the valley some small herds of deere,
For head and footmanship withouten peere
Fed undisturb'd.—Browne. Brit. Pastorals, b. ii. s. 3.

It much conduces, all the cares to know
Of gardening, how to scare nocturnal thieves,
And how the little race of birds that hop
From spray to spray, scooping the costliest fruit
Insatiate, undisturb'd.

J. Philips. Cider, b. i.

Your lordship plainly opposes heat and flame to that calmness and undisturbedness, with which you would have our addresses to God unaccompanied.

Dr. Snape's Let. to Bp. Hoadly.

[It is the special interest of great persons] by all means to protect and promote piety, as the best instrument of their security, and undisturbedly enjoying the accommodations of their state.—Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 2.

From this little excursion, I found that we were to expect nothing from these people but the privilege of visiting their country undisturbed.—Cook. Second Voyage, c. 8.

UN-DIVERSIFIED. } Not being different, UNDIVERSIFICATED. } dissimilar, varied or variegated.

If he take away all aptitudes, operations, properties and modifications from a subject, his conception thereof vanishes into nothing, but into the idea of a mere undiversificated substance.—More. Immortality of the Soul, b. i. c. 2.

For "we can behold a particle of mere undiversified matter," says he [Mr. Grove], "though incomparably smaller, without such wonder."—Cogan. On the Passions, Note R.

UN-DIVERTED. Not turned aside; withdrawn; (met.) amused.

These grounds have not any patent passages, whereby to derive water and fatness from the river, and therefore must suffer the greatest part of it to run by them undiverted.

UNDIVISIBLE. } cannot be severed, sundered, disunited or disjoined.

All ships with their appurtenances, and the commodities of the mariners, according unto the condition of the things, and all other goods taken away by the English, which are actually undivided and whole, are incontinently and with all speed to bee restored.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 157.

For he seeth and perceyeth by good reason, that the soule is undivisible and is in every part of the body, and in every part it is whole.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 1131.

How comes it now, my husband, oh how comes it,
That thou art then estranged from thy selfe?
Thy selfe I call it, being strange to me:
That undividable incorporate Am better then thy deere selves better part.
Ah doe not teare away thy selfe from me.

Shakespeare. Comedie of Errors, Act ii. sc. 2.

Upon this base a curious work is rais'd,
Like undivided brick, entire and one,
Though soft, yet lasting, with just balance paid;
Distributed with due proportion.

P. Fletcher. Purple Island, c. 2.

A man may love a friend as a brother, as an alter idem, but he should love his wife as his idem idem: creation, nature, religion, law and policy, makes them undividedly one.—Feltham. On Luke, xiv. 20.

Indeed true courage and courtesie are undivided companions.—Fuller. Worthies. Worcestershire.

UN-DIVINE. (Milton means) unlike a teacher of divinity or one learned in divine things.

These are his fair grounds both from scripture-canons and ecclesiastical examples; how undivine-like written, and how like a worldly gospeller that understands nothing of these matters, posterity no doubt will be able to judge.

Milton. Ans. to Eikon Basilike, § 17.

UN-DIVORCED. Not turned away, put away or apart, separated or disjoined.

How vain our efforts! and our arts how vain!

The distant train of thought I took to shun,
Has thrown me on my fate—These died together,
Happy in ruin! undivorc'd by death!

Young. Complaint, Night 5.

UN-DIVULGED. Not made known to the vulgar; not published, or declared.

Lear. Let the great goddess

That keeps this dreadful pudder o're our heads, Finde out their enemies now. Tremble thou wretch,
That hast within thee undivulged crimes
Unwhipt of justice.—Shakespeare. Lear, Act iii. sc. 2.

Feares and scruples shake vs;
In the great hand of God I stand, and thence,
Against the undivulgd pretence, I fight
Of treasonous mallice.—Id. Macbeth, Act ii. sc. 3.

Nowe, this inbred desire of all nations to blaze and set foorth their owne petigree hath so much preuayled with the greater part, that leauing the undoubted trueth, they haue betaken themselves vnto meere fables and fictions.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 221.

And undoubted, it were moche better to be occupied in honeste recreation; than to do nothyng.
Sir T. Elyot. Governour, b. i. c. 26.

Where the merites of menne be hydde and vknownen to the soueraygne gouernour, and the neglygent ministers or inferiour gouernours haue not onely equalle thanke or rewarde, but perchance moche more than they, whiche be diligent, or wolde be, if they mought haue assistance, there undoubtedly is greuous discourge, and peryll of conscience.
Id. b. iii. c. 25.

And laste he promiseth very true and undoubtfull hope to hym selfe of the desire that he asketh.
Fisher. Seuen Psalmes, Ps. 51.

Jesus therfore to shew an undoubtable trueth vnto them all, that both he was aliue, & also that he bare about with him a verai reall bodie in dede, and not any other bodie then the same which he carried to fore, saied vnto them.
Udal. Luke, c. 24.

The nineteenth of August, he came thither, & mustered his armie before the king's presence, which undoubtedly made a passing faire shew.
Holinshed. Chron. Rich. II. an. 1399.

Pro. His friends still wrought repreeues for him
And indeed his fact till now in the gouernment of Lord
Angelo, came not to an undoubtfull prooffe.
Shakespeare. Measure for Measure, Act iv. sc. 4.

This envy I was fain to take of my speedy apologetically advertisment, and after that by my reconciler, seconded with the unanimous letters of such reverend, learned, sound divines, both bishops and doctors, as whose undoubtable authority, was able to bear down calumny it self.
Bp. Hall. Specialties, &c.

That virtue and vice do in their own natures tend to make those men happy, or miserable, who severally practise them, is a proposition of undoubted truth.
Atterbury. Ser. vol. ii. Pref.

It might mortify the vanity of some very vain writers and talkers, if they were to recollect, what is undoubtedly true, that it is a species of wit and ingenuity which not only the vilest, but the most stupid and illiterate of mankind have frequently displayed in all its possible perfection.
Knox. Ess. No. 16.

His confidence gives him credit. The company is always disposed to listen with attention, when any man speaks with the assurance of undoubting conviction.
Id. Winter Evenings, Even. 11.

UN-DRAWN. Not pulled or haled. It may be applied as extensively as the v. Draw.

—Forth rush'd with whirlwind sound
The chariot of paternal deitie,
Flashing thick flames, wheele with wheele undrawn,
It self instinct with spirit, but convoyd
By four cherubic shapes.—Milton. Paradise Lost, b. vi.

The death-bed of the just! is yet undrawn
By mortal hand! it merits a divine:
Angels should paint it, angels ever there;
There on a post of honour, and of joy.
Young. Complaint, Night 2.

UN-DRE'ADED. Not feared; not causing fear, terror, or affright.

What thinkst thou of our empire now, though earn'd
With travail difficult, not better farr
Then still at hells dark threshold to have sate watch,
Unnam'd, undreaded, and thy self half starv'd.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. x.

—O'er thee the secret shaft
That wastes at midnight, or th' undreaded hour
Of noon, flies harmless: and that very voice
Which thunders terror through the guilty heart,
With tongues of seraphs whispers peace to thine.
Thomson. Summer.

UN-DRE'AMED. Not seen or thought of
(sc. in sleep); not imagined.

Cam. A course more promising,
Then a wild dedication of your selues
To vnpath'd waters, undream'd shores.
Shakespeare. Winter's Tale, Act iv. sc. 3.

Surely many things fall out by the design of the general motor, and undreamt of contrivance of nature, which are not imputable unto the intention or knowledge of the particular actor.—Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. iii. c. 10.

UN-DRE'NCHED. Not merged or im-merged; not sunken or drowned.

—But whom the torrid zone
Diuides from vs, those people euer see
The shadowes southward, which heere northward be,
You slowly seeing Cynosure, suppose
Her undrench'd carre into the ocean goes,
And that no northerne signe from seas is free.
May. Lucan. Pharsalia, b. ix.

UN-DRESS, v. } To divest of dress, or UNDRE'SS, n. } array, of ornament; of preparation for use.

Undressed,—not arrayed, decked, provided,
prepared, furnished, garnished.

Wife. What are you mad, to make me

Dress, and undress, turn, and wind me,
Because you find me pilyant?

Beaum. & Fletcher. The Noble Gentleman, Act ii.

O! never once discourage goodnesse (lending
One glimpse of light) to see misfortune spending
Her utmost rage on Truth, dispisde, distressed, Unhappy, unrelieved, yet undressed.
Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b. i. s. 4.

Tis prudence to reform her into ease,
And put her in undress to make her please.

Dryden. The Hind and the Panther

Where lilies smile in virgin robes of white,
The thin undress of superficial light.

Pope. The Garden. Imit. of English Poets.

You catch his first philosophy, as Butler's hero did Aristotle's first matter, undressed, and without a rag of form, however flaunting and fluttering in fragments.
Warburton. Bolingbroke's Philosophy, Let. 2.

UN-DR'IED. Not drained, not freed or free from moisture.

The gods, he saw espous'd the juster side,
When late their titles in the field were try'd
Witness the fresh laments, and fun'ral tears undry'd.
Dryden. Virgil. Æneis, b. xi.

UN-DR'IVEN. Not forced into action; not compelled.

Here is no patience, but joy: he that was won with ten shekells may be lost with eleuen: when maintenance and honour calls him, hee goes undriuen; and rather steales himself away, than is stolne.

Bp. Hall. Cont. Micha's Idolatry.

As wint'ry winds contending in the sky,
With equal force of lungs their titles try.
They rage, they roar; the doubtful rack of heav'n
Stands without motion, and the tyde undriv'n:
Each bent to conquer, neither side to yield;
They long suspend the fortune of the field.
Dryden. Virgil. Æneis, b. x.

UN-DROO'PING. Not falling, sinking, fainting, languishing.

—Where meet, combin'd,
Whate'er high fancy, sound judicious thought,
An ample generous heart, undrooping soul,
And firm tenacious valour can bestow.
Thomson. Liberty.

UN-DRO'SSY. Free from gross sediment, foulness or impurity.

As when a noontide sun, with summer beams,
Darts through a cloud, her wat'ry skirts are edg'd
With lucid amber, or undrossy gold:
So, and so richly, the purg'd liquid shines.
J. Philips. Cider, b. ii.

Rapt by th' æthereal steeds the chariot roll'd;
Brass were their hoofs, their curling manes of gold;
Of heav'n's undrossy gold the God's array Refulgent, flash'd intolerable day.
Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. viii.

UN-DRO'WNED. Not sunk, plunged, depressed, immersed, sunk till dead.

—Let them for her sake
Who to thy safeguard doth herself betake,
Escape undrown'd, unshipwreck'd.
Drayton. Elegy upon Lady Aston.

What availed it wicked Ham, to outlive the flood, to inherit a curse after it; to be kept undrowned in the waters, to see himself and his posterity blasted with his father's curse?—Leighton. Com. on 1 Pet. c. 3.

UN-DU'BBED. Not endowed with a name or title.

—I know
What made his valour undubb'd windmill go.
Within a point at most.
Donne. Sat. 6.

UND

UN-DUBITABLE. That cannot be doubted. See UNDOUBTED.

Let that principle, that all is matter, and that there is nothing else, be received for certain and undubitable, and it will be easy to be seen, what consequences it will lead us to.—Locke.

UN-DUE. } Not owed, not deserved or UNDULY. } earned; not convenient, seasonable, fit, suitable.

Superstition of an undue object is that which the etymologists call the worshipping of idols.

Bp. Taylor, vol. i. Ser. 9.

Alexander the third, who made Gratian's decree to become law, was a schismatical pope, an antipope, and unduly elected.—Id. Rule of Conscience, b. iii. c. 4

It [love] delights not in undue disclosing of brethren's failings, doth not eye them rigidly, nor expose them willingly to the eyes of others.

Leighton. Com. on 1 Peter, iv. 8.

VI. Remitting and relaxing to all persons, to those whose hands ecclesiastical goods have come, all the fruits and profits from the same taken, however unduly.

Strype. Eccles. Mem. 1 Mary, an. 1554.

They will pretend to account for all this, by the mechanism of the body, unaccountably subject to the delusions of the mind, when unduly agitated either by sensation or reflection.—Warburton, vol. x. Ser. 27.

UNDULATE, v. } Lat. Undulatus, from UNDULATION. } unda, a wave.
UNDULATORY. } To move as the waves, UNDULARY. } backward and forward—in curving, arching, or bending lines.

In the dread ocean, undulating wide,
Beneath the radiant line that girts the globe,
The circling Typhon, whirl'd from point to point,
Exhausting all the rage of all the sky,
And dire Ecnephia reign. Thomson. Summer.

And o'er the high pil'd hills of fractur'd earth
Wide dash'd the waves, in undulating vast;
Till, from the centre to the streaming clouds,
A shoreless ocean tumbled round the globe.—Id. Spring.

In corpuscles themselves, it is not all one, as to their effects, whether they move with, or without rotation, and whether in such or such a line, and whether with, or without undulation, trembling, or such a kind of consecution.

Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 682.

Those little undulations of sound, though almost vanishing before they reach'd them, yet still seeming to retain somewhat of their first horror which they had betwixt the fleets.—Dryden. Essay on Dramatic Poesie.

A constant undulatory motion is perceived by looking through telescopes.—Arbuthnot. On Air.

The blasts and undulary breaths thereof maintain no certainty in their course, nor are they numerally feared by navigators.—Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. vii. c. 17.

The Christ is a better character, has more beauty and grace, than is usual with Rubens; the outline remarkably undulating, smooth and flowing.

Reynolds. Journey to Flanders & Holland.

Dark, like a stormy cloud, uprose the dust
Beneath them, and their undulating manes Play'd in the breezes.—Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. xxiii.

The meanest creature is a collection of wonders. The play of the rings in an earth-worm, as it crawls; the undulatory motion propagated along the body.

Paley. Natural Theology, c. 16.

UN-DUMPISH, v. To remove or relieve heaviness, dullness, sullenness.

When queen Elizabeth was serious (I dare not say sullen) and out of good humour, he [Tarlton, the Jester] could undumpish her at his pleasure.—Fuller. Worthies. Staffordshire.

UN-DURABLE. Used actively,—that cannot last or continue.

All unmeasurable vice is undurable: the fall of angels, and of the late imperious parliament, are fair examples of it.—Arnway. Table of Mod. p. 109.

UN-DUST. So we use To dust; i. e.—

To wipe or clear away the dust; to clear away.

For when we frequently dress up the altar of our hearts, and undust it from all these little foulnesses, by degrees we came to be aided ev'n by one weakness of our nature, towards the delivery from others.

Montague. Devoute Essayes, pt. ii. Treat. 6.

UN-DUTIFUL. } Not doing or perform-UNDUTIFULLY. } ing that which is owed or UNDUTIFULNESS. } ought to be done; acting UNDUTEOUS. } or feeling, contrary or in opposition to what we ought to act or feel; not obedient to rule or right, to authority.

VOL. II.

UNE

Other some forgetting themselves, spake more undutifully in this behalfe, saying: that they had as leue be hanged when they came home, as without hope of safetie to seeke to passe, and so to perish amongst the yce.

Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 83.

[The haie] hath bene by mens ydlenesse and undutifulnesse, let alone vntouched, and so neyther serueth the pore to make money of, nor any cattell to lyue with.

Sir J. Cheeke. The Hurt of Sedition.

The church was indeed very severe against such undutiful proceedings and rebellions against the supreme naturall power.—Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. iii. c. 5.

A question wherein I was vehemently pressed in my late western charge, by some persons of greatest eminency in those parts, upon occasion of some of their children undutifully carving for themselves in the choice of their matches.

Bp. Hall. Cases of Conscience, Dec. 4. Case 1.

With the same evidence I argue, that man or wife who hates in wedlock, is perpetually unsociable, unpeaceful, or undutious, either not being able, or not willing to perform what the main ends of marriage demand in help and solace, cannot be said to care for who should be dearest in the house.—Milton. Tetrachordon.

Searchers of mud and sea-weed! that would swear
The fish had long in Cæsar's ponds been fed,
And from its Lord undutifully fled;
So, justly ought to be again restor'd.

Dryden. Juvenal, Sat. 4.

What friendship could endure, could pass over, could forget, could admit an entire reconciliation, and reestablishment in affection after such heinous indignities, such infidelities, such undutifulness, as were those of Adam, of Noah, of David, of Peter?—Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 36.

Undutifulness to an almighty superior, and ingratitude to a gracious benefactor, such as God is.

Secker, vol. ii. Ser. 18.

UN-DWELT. Not remained, abided, inhabited.

If beautie wanting lovers long should stay,
It like an house undwelt in would decay.

Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b. i. s. 1.

UN-DY'ING. Not mortal; not perishing.

— And [I] wish heartily
That firm affection that made us two happy,
May take as deep undying root, and flourish
Betwixt my daughter Casta, and your goodness.

Beaum. & Fletch. Moral Representations.

They fell devoted, but undying;
The very gale their names seem'd sighing.

Byron. Siege of Corinth, s. 15.

UN-EA'RNED. Not acquired or attained, merited or deserved; not gained or won by service.

For while so near each other thus all day
Our task we choose, what wonder if so near Looks intervene and smiles, or object new Casual discourse draws on, which intermits
Our dayes work brought to little, though begun
Early, and the hour of supper comes unearn'd.

Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ix.

— Wilt thou then repine
To labour for thy self? and rather choose
To lie supinely, hoping Heaven will bless Thy slighted fruits, and give thee bread unearn'd?

J. Philips. Cider, b. i.

UN-EA'RNEST. Not eager, anxious, zealous.

Yea and vneath maie it possibly bee eschewed, excepte that euen those vntoward thynges whiche we dooe possesse of our owne good righte, be possessed of vs after an unearnest sorte, and with suche contempt, that we can sette them at nought whan it is expedient so to dooe.—Udal. Luke, c. 12.

UN-EA'RTHED. } Freed or cleared from UNEARTHLY. } earth; from the cover of earth.

Unearthly,—not like earth or any thing on earth; supernal or supernatural.

— The robber of the fold:
Him from his craggy, winding haunts unearth'd,
Let all the thunder of the chase pursue.

Thomson. Autumn.

Something unearthly, which they deem not of,
Like the remember'd tone of a mute lyre,
Shall on their soften'd spirits sink, and move
In hearts all rocky now the late remorse of love.

Byron. Childe Harold, c. 4.

UN-EASE. } See DISEASE, MISEASE. Un- UNEASY. } easy,—
UNEASILY. } Not quiet, peaceful, tranquil;
UNEASINESS. } not free from pain, trouble, difficulty, distress, constraint, confinement; pained, troubled, constrained, harsh, disagreeable.

This effect [a brasse pot broken in sunder with frozen water in Pontus] being wrought in the parallel of fourtie three degrees in latitude, it was presently counted a place very hardly and uneasily to be inhabited for the great colde.

Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 54.

Which invasion perhaps, had the heptarchy stood divided as it was, had either not bin attempted, or not uneasily resisted.—Milton. Hist. of England, b. v.

That it [transubstantiation] was a meer stranger to antiquity, will not be deny'd by any sober person, who considers, That it was with so much uneasiness entertained, even in the corruptest and most degenerate times, and argued and settled almost 1300 years after Christ.

Bp. Taylor. Diss. from Popery, pt. i. c. 1.

This accident to the Tryal's mast, which gave us so much uneasiness at that time, on account of the delay it occasioned, was, in all probability, the means of preserving the sloop, and all her crew.—Anson. Voyages, b. i. c. 6.

It did not appear to me, that it would have caused a moment's uneasiness in the breast of any one, had his [Tupia] death been occasioned by any other means than by sickness.

Cook. Second Voyage, b. i. c. 10.

UN-E'ATEN. Not chewed and swallowed; not consumed, devoured, corroded.

Therefore I will out-swear him and all his followers, that this is all that's left uneaten of my sword.

Beaum. & Fletch. King & No King, Act iii.

Then carving forth a portion from the loins
Of a huge brawn, of which uneaten still Large part and delicate remain'd, thus spake
Ulysses—Herald! bear it to the bard.

Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. viii.

UN-EATH. Eath or eth, is—easy. Uneath or uneth,—uneasily. See UNEASY.

With that, they heard a roaring hideous sound,
That all the ayre with terrour filled wide,
And seem'd uneath to shake the stedfast ground.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 11.

So, her uneath at last he did reuiue,
That long had lien dead, and made againe aliuie.

Id. Ib. b. vi. c. 11.

Glost. Tenne is the houre that was appointed me,
To watch the comming of my punisht Duchesse:
Vnnearth may shee endure the flintie streets,
To treade them with her tender-feeling feet.

Shakespeare. 2 Pt. Hen. VI. Act ii. sc. 4.

UN-ECLIPSED. Not deficient; not deprived (of light); not shadowed, obscured, darkened.

Her glory also, which whilst she continued unmarried she retained intire to herself and uneclipsed, she feared would by marriage be transferred to her husband.

Camden. Hist. of Q. Elizabeth, an. 1581.

We now fixed the micrometers to the telescopes, and observed or measured the uneclipsed part of the sun's disk.

Cook. Third Voyage, b. iii. c. 10.

UN-E'DGE, v. Not sharpened; destitute, deprived of sharpness, blunt.

To deprive of the edge, acuteness, sharpness; to blunt, to be or cause to be devoid or destitute of sharpness.

— Must I be scandal'd by ye,
That hedg'd in all the helps I had to save ye?
That, where there was a valiant weapon stirring,
Both search'd it out, and singl'd it, unedg'd it,
For fear it should bite you, am I a coward?

Beaum. & Fletch. Humorous Lieutenant, Act ii. sc. 2.

— Here our weapons
And bodies that were made for shining brass,
Are both unedg'd and old with ease and women.

Id. Valentinian, Act i. sc. 3.

Vas. Fie mistress, you are not near the limits of reason: if my lord had a resolution as noble as virtue itself, you take the course to unedge it all.

Ford. 'Tis Pity She's a Whore, Act ii. sc. 2.

War. Pale fear unedge their weapons' sharpest points,
And when they draw their arrows to the head,
Numbness shall strike their sinews.

Id. Perkin Warbeck, Act iv. sc. 5.

UN-EDIFYING. } (Met.) Not instructing, UN-EDIFIED. } improving, teaching, enlightening.

If (you say) to these we should adde the late alterations in the use of the leiturgy, bringing in loud musick; uncouth, and unedifying anthems, a pompous superstitious altar-service; we think any indifferent eye will say, this is not the leiturgy established by parliament.

Bp. Hall. Answer to Vindication of Smectymnus, § 3.

'Tis true, there be a sort of moody, hot-brain'd, and always unedify'd consciences: apt to engage their leaders into great and dangerous affairs past retirement, and then upon a sudden qualm and swimming of their conscience, to betray them basely in the midst of what was chiefly undertaken for their sakes.—Milton. Answer to Eikon Basilike, s. 28.

In a word, in such kind of sermons, there is little spoken, either from the heart, or to the heart; the orator and the auditory tacitly agreeing to deceive themselves; and the conversion of sinners being neither the effect, or the aim of such florid, but unedifying discourses.

Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 387.

It is not extravagant flights and raptures: it is not unmeaning or unedifying forms and ceremonies: much less is it bitterness against those who differ from you.

Secker. Ser. On Confirmation.

UN-EDUCATED. Not drawn forth, not trained, cultivated, exercised.

Hol. Most barbarous intimation; yet a kinde of insinuation, as it were in via, in way of explanation facere: as it were replication, or rather ostentare, to show as it were his inclination after his vndressed, vnpolished, uneducated fashion, to insert againe my haud credo for a deare.

Shakespeare. Loue's Labour Lost, Act iv. sc. 2.

If the attainments of learning were of no importance to the true and effectual preaching of the gospel, to what purpose did that God who commanded the light to spring out of darkness by an exertion of the same almighty power light up the lamp of knowledge in the minds of uneducated men?

Bp. Horsley, vol. i. Ser. 14.

Those who have been taught to adhere to systems, are sometimes too much attached to the straight and unknown path, to permit themselves to venture even on proper deviation; while the uneducated experimentalist, a stranger to the prepossessions unavoidably derived from learning, is almost sure to acquire the merit of originality

Knox. Ess. No. 38.

UN-EFFA'CED. Not defaced, or with the face, look or appearance, blotted, rubbed, erased, obliterated.

If we have received a good impression, let us bear it away uneffaced to our graves.—Knox, vol. vi. Ser. 2.

And in the palace of St. Mark
Unnamed accusers in the dark Within the "Lion's mouth" had placed
A charge against him uneffaced.

Byron. Siege of Corinth, s. 4.

UN-EFFE'CTUAL. See INEFFECTUAL. That cannot do or make, act or perform; inert, impotent.

Moses was onely the pronouncer and setter forth of the lawe, but not the autour, & he brought a lawe uneffectuall, sharpe, and hard.—Udal. John, c. 1.

The bare reading in like sort of whatsoever, yea, euen of scriptures themselves, they mislike, as a thing uneffectuall to doe that good, which we are perswaded may grow by it.

Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, b. v. § 21.

Force is no honest confutation, but uneffectual, and for the most part unsuccessful, oft-times fatal to them who use it.—Milton. Civil Power in Ecclesiastical Causes.

UN-ELE'CTED. } Not chosen; not pre-UNELE'CTIVE. } ferred. See INELIGIBLE.

— So putting him to rage,
You should haue t'ane th' aduantage of his choller,
And pass'd him unelected.

Shakespeare. Coriolanus, Act ii. sc. 3.

The conformation of these little molecule seminales cannot be the production either meerly of chance, as the Epicureans would have it; nor of that which little differs, namely an ignorant, unknowing, unelective principle.

Hale. Origin. of Mankind, p. 274.

UN-E'LEGANT. } See INELEGANT. Not UNE'LEGANTLY. } choice or select; common, vulgar, coarse, rude.

He calleth death a brazen sleep; giving us thereby to understand, how senselesse death is: neither seemeth he unelegantly and besides the purpose, whosoever he was, to have expressed as much in this verse.

Holland. Plutarch, p. 425.

Possibly in some of these books you meet with expressions now and then, which appear unelegant and singular: and they excite ludicrous ideas in your minds, instead of serious ones.—Secker, vol. iv. Ser. 15.

UN-EMBAR'RASED. Not debarred, obstructed, hindered, perplexed, confounded.

Ulysses, happy in his native land
(So taught by Pallas, progeny of Jove),
With unembarrass'd readiness return'd
Not truth, but figments to truth opposite,
For guile in him stood never at a pause.

Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. xiii.

I hope the people, both here and with you, will always apply to the house of commons with becoming modesty; but at the same time with minds unembarrassed with any sort of terror.—Burke. Letter to Sir H. Langrishe.

UN-EMBE'LLISHED. Not beautified, decked, adorned.

What may be said in very high praise of any man, may usually be comprehended in very few words, if truth only and unembellished facts are plainly represented.

Knox. Ess. No. 45.

UN-EMBITTERED. Not without, not free from, bitterness or acerbity; not without, or unmixed with pain.

There rose no day, there roll'd no hour
Of pleasure unembitter'd;
And not a trapping deck'd my power
That gall'd not while it glitter'd.

Byron. Hebrew Melodies. All is Vanity, &c

UN-EMBO'DIED. Not clothed with body or corporeal substance; not corporate.

Then, unembodied, doth it trace
By steps each planet's heavenly way?
Or fill at once the realms of space,
A thing of eyes, that all survey?

Byron. Hebrew Melodies. When Coldness wraps, &c.

UN-EMPLOY'ED. Not engaged, occupied, busied.

— God hath set

Labour and rest, as day and night to men
Successive, and the timely dew of sleep
Now falling with soft slumbrous weight inclines
Our eye-lids; other creatures all day long Rove idle unemployed, and less need rest.

Milton. Paradise Lost, b. iv.

Time gives himself, and is not valu'd, there;
But sells at mighty rates, each minute, here.
There he is lazy, unemploy'd, and slow;
Here, he's more swift; and yet has more to do.

Dryden. Marriage A-la-Mode, Act ii. sc. 1.

We saw coarse garments amongst them, made of a sort of matting, but they seemed never to wear them, except when out in their canoes and unemployed.

Cook. Second Voyage, b. iii. c. 9.

UN-EMPTIABLE. } That cannot be made UNE'MPTIED. } void, vacant, or evacuated.

Whatsoever either men on earth, or the angels of heaven doe know, it is as a drop of that unemptiable fountaine of wisdom; whiche wisdom hath diuersly imparted her treasures vnto the world.

Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, b. ii. § 1.

And mounts in spray the skies, and thence again
Returns in an unceasing shower, which round,
With its unemptied cloud of gentle rain,
Is an eternal April to the ground,
Making it all one emerald.—Byron. Childe Harold, c. 4.

UN-ENDE'ARED. Not highly or greatly prized or valued, not much or greatly loved; not united with or strengthened by love.

Here Love his golden shafts imploies, here lights
His constant lamp, and waves his purple wings,
Reigns here and revels; not in the bought smile
Of harlots, loveless, joyless, unindeard.

Milton. Paradise Lost, b. iv.

UN-E'NDING. Not ending, or finishing, ceasing, terminating, concluding.

Our wisdom is but in finding more of our folly, and when we think we have progress'd far in the un-ending circles of laborious science, we onely at last with fruitless sweat attach our own learn'd ignorance.

Feltham. On Eccles. ii. 11.

UN-ENDOW'ED. Without dowry; without portion given; without any gift, settled, or bestowed.

The philosophers, indeed, shewed the beauty of virtue; they set her off so, as drew men's eyes and approbation to her; but leaving her unendowed, very few were willing to espouse her.—Locke. Reasonableness of Christianity.

UN-ENGAGED. Not bound or pledged; not occupied, not busied.

Both the houses of parliament, your assembly, and the whole kingdom, stand yet free and unengaged to any part.

Bp. Hall. A Modest Offer.

It suffic'd some years past to convince and satisfy the uningag'd of other nations in the justice of your doings.

Milton. Con. touching the Rem. of Hirelings

UN-ENGLISH'ED. Not rendered into English.

Whereto I am no whit beholding for leaving it unenglished.—Bp. Hall. Honour of the Married Clergie, § 2.

UN-ENJOY'ED. } Not possessed or used UNENJOY'ING. } with gladness, pleasure, or delight.

Each day's a mistress unenjoy'd before;
Like travellers, we're pleas'd with seeing more.—Dryden.

The more we have the meaner is our store;
The unenjoying, craving wretch is poor.—Creech.

UN-ENLA'RGED. Not magnified, or amplified; not augmented, extended, or expanded.

These unenlarged souls are in the same manner disgusted with the wonders which the microscope has discovered concerning the shape, the limbs, and motions of ten thousand little animals, whose united bulk would not equal a pepper-corn.—Watts. Logick, pt. i. c. 16.

UN-ENLIGH'TENED. Not illuminated; not freed or released from the darkness, obscurity, (sc.) of ignorance.

A conceit that would have sounded very strangely in the ears of our un-enlightned forefathers.

Bp. Hall. The Revel. Unrevealed, s. 20.

That virtue and vice do in their own natures tend to make those men happy, or miserable, who severally practise them, is a proposition of undoubted (and, I am sure, by me undisputed) truth; as far as it relates to moral virtue or vice properly so called; that is, to those measures of duty, which natural reason, unenlightened by revelation, prescribes.—Atterbury. Ser. vol. ii. Pref.

And had we, here present been left to ourselves, in all likelihood we had been, at this hour (like multitudes of other poor wretches in every part of the world that is unenlightened by Christianity,) worshipping stocks and stones.

Secker, vol. vi. Lect. 5.

UN-ENLIVENED. Not animated, inspirited, exhilarated, gladdened.

And these effects, of which every man, who joins in that hymn, must be sensible, are owing to that majestic plainness and simplicity of thought which goes through it, unadorned by words, unlivened by figures.

Atterbury, vol. i. Ser. 1.

UN-ENSLA'VED. Not reduced to servitude, or bondage.

—By thee

She sits a sov'reign, unenlav'd and free.—Addison.

UN-ENTANGLE, v. See DIS-ENTANGLE.
To free or release from tie, fastening, intricacy or perplexity.

O my God, how dost thou unentangle me in any scruple arising out of the consideration of this thy fear.

Donne. Devotions, p. 129.

UN-ENTERED. Not come into; not put or placed in.

That he may deliuer vp vnto Messias at his comyng, a people not vtterlie vntraded or unentered in his discipline, but somewhat prepaired already & instructed therunto with the agnisyng & knowlageyng of theyr own synfulness.

Udal. Luke, c. 1.

UN-ENTERPRISING. Not undertaking or venturing to undertake; not venturous or adventurous.

Boldness formerly was not the character of Atheists as such. They were even of a character nearly the reverse; they were formerly like the old Epicureans, rather an unenterprising race.—Burke. Thoughts on French Affairs, (1791.)

What must his reflections be, on learning further, that a fleet of five hundred men of war, the best appointed, and to the full as ably commanded as this country ever had upon the sea, was for the greater part employed in carrying on the same system of unenterprising defence?

Id. On a Regicide Peace, Let. 3.

UN-ENTERTAINING. } Not holding or UNENTERTAININGNESS. } keeping (the attention); not engaging, not amusing.

This not only enables him to understand them more clearly, and to remember them better, but renders the study of grammar, which to a young mind is of necessity dry, less unentertaining.—Knox. Liberal Education, § 4.

The labour is long, and the elements dry and unentertaining; nor was ever any body (especially those that afterwards made a figure in it) amused, or even not disgusted in the beginning; yet, upon a further acquaintance, there is surely matter for curiosity and reflection.

Gray. To West, Let. 25, (1740.)

Last post I received a very diminutive letter: it made excuses for its unentertainingness, very little to the purpose; since it assured me, very strongly, of your esteem.

Id. Let. 27. Ib.

UN-ENTOMBED. Not placed or deposited within a tomb; not buried.

What hopes delude thee, miserable man?
Think'st thou thus untomb'd to cross the floods,
To view the furies, and infernal gods,
And visit, without leave, the dark abodes?

Dryden. Virgil. Æneis, b. vi.

UN-ENVIED. } Not viewed (sc.) with evil
UNENVIABLE. } eyes, with malignant, be-UNENVIUS. } grudging feelings; not be-grudged.

Swear, that none e'er had such a graceful art,
Fortune's free-gifts as freely to impart,
With an unenvious hand, and an unbounded heart.

Cowley. Pindar. Oly. Ode 2.

Who broke no promise, serv'd no private end,
Who gain'd no title, and who lost no friend;
Ennobled by himself, by all approv'd,
And prais'd unenvy'd, by the muse he lov'd.

Pope. To Mr. Addison, Ep. 1.

Envied, yet how unenviable! what stings
Are theirs! One breast laid open were a school
Which would unteach mankind the lust to shine or rule.

Byron. Childe Harold, c. 3.

We shall be far surer of finding these upright, unenvious, considerate, benevolent, compassionate, than others, who have not equal inducements.—Secker, vol. v. Ser. 11.

UN-EPILOGUED. Not accompanied by an epilogue.

And now with late repentance,
Un-epilogued, the poet waits his sentence.
Condemn the stubborn fool who can't submit
To thrive by flattery, though he starves by wit.

Goldsmith. The Sisters, Epil.

UN-EQUAL. } See INEQUAL. The noun

UNEQUALLY. } Un.
UNEQUALNESS. } Not similar, like, even,
UNEQUALABLE. } proportionate, adequate.
UNEQUABLE. } Unequitable, (see INEQUI-UNEQUITABLE. } TABLE,)—not alike to all; and,
consequently, partial, unjust.

The Romanes were unequallye matched, both in place and number.—Goldinge. Cæsar, fol. 209.

How unequall had it bin, that all believers through the preaching of other apostles, should have their faith strongly built vpon the evidence of God's owne miraculous approbation, & they whom he had converted, should have their perswasion built onely vpon his skill and wisdom who perswaded them?—Hooker. Eccles. Politie, b. iii. § 8.

Amin. Then pray like her that sent 'em.
Do ye like wealth, and most unequal'd beauty?

Beaum. & Fletch. The Sea Voyage, Act iv.

The seventh canonical degree is the fourteenth civil degree, the unequality and unreasonableness of which, all lawyers will deride.

Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. ii. c. 2.

This was greatly short of her value, but the impatience of the commodore to get to sea, to which the merchants were no strangers, prompted them to insist on these unequal terms.—Anson. Voyages, b. iii. c. 10.

He has not yet attain'd the experience, that what affects his touch so or so, must affect his sight so or so: or that a protuberant angle in the cube, that press'd his hand unequally, shall appear to his eye, as it does in the cube.

Locke. Hum. Underst. b. ii. c. 9.

And of Christ himself, whose love to God is unquestionless filial and unequalable, it is said, Looking unto Jesus the author, &c.—Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 282.

'Tis very well known, that the months of March and September, the two equinoxes of our year, are the most windy and tempestuous, the most unsettled and unequal of seasons in most countries in the world.—Bentley, Ser. 8.

It is still more to be deplored by this country, which may justly boast of having produced a man hitherto unequalled by nautical talents.

Cook. Third Voyage. Inscript. to his Memory.

Nor will sterling benevolence ever make the possessor unequitable or intemperate in his likings; it knows no bounds besides those of reason, and diffuses itself to all capable of receiving benefit by it.

Search. Light of Nature, vol. i. pt. ii. c. 34.

But [whoever is grieved will set himself to consider] how he can retrieve any part of it, which is illegally or unequally seized and detained.

Secker. Charge to the Clergy of the Diocese of Oxford, 1750.

UN-EQUIVOCAL. } Not ambiguous, or UNEQUIVOCALLY. } doubtful.

Fashion gives absolute sway to modes, forms, colours, &c. wantonly introduced by the whim of an individual, with whom the majority have not the most distant connection, and concerning whom they are totally ignorant; unless circumstances and situations of notoriety render their characters either equivocal, or unequivocal.

Cogan. On the Passions, pt. ii. c. 2.

If I had been permitted to frame a proof of contrivance, such as might satisfy the most distrustful inquirer, I know not whether I could have chosen an example of mechanism more unequivocal, or more free from objection, than this ligament.—Paley. Natural Theology, c. 8.

The descent of Christ from David, his mother Mary, his miraculous conception, the star at his birth, his baptism by John, the reason assigned for it, his appeal to the prophets, the ointment poured on his head, his sufferings under Pontius Pilate and Herod the tetrarch, his resurrection, the Lord's day called and kept in commemoration of it, and the eucharist, in both its parts,—are unequivocally referred to.

Id. Evidences of Christianity, vol. i. pt. i. c. 7.

UN-ERA'DICABLE. That cannot be rooted up, utterly destroyed or exterminated.

— This hard decree,

This uneradicable taint of sin,
This boundless upas, this all-blasting tree,
Whose root is earth, whose leaves and branches be
The skies which rain their plagues on men like dew.

Byron. Childe Harold, c. 4.

UN-ERRING. } Not straying or going UNERRINGLY. } astray; not mistaking the UNERRABLE. } right way; not roving or UNERRABLENESS. } wandering; not missing or deviating.

It was known and confess'd, these clergy-guides had an infallible unerring spirit.

Bp. Taylor. Dissuasive from Popery, pt. ii. b. i. § 1.

I refer them to that prudent and well deliberated act, August 9, 1650, where the parliament defines blasphemy against God, as far as it is a crime belonging to civil judicature, plenius ac melius Chrysippo & Crantore; in plain English, more warily, more judiciously, more orthodoxically than twice their number of divines have done in many a prolix volume: although in all likelihood they whose whole study and profession these things are, should be most diligent and authentic therein, as they are for the most part, yet neither they nor these unerring always, or infallible.

Milton. Treatment of Civil Power in Eccles. Causes.

The ignominy of your unerrable see is discovered.

Sheldon. Mirror of Antichrist, (1616,) p. 142.

The many innovations of that church witness the danger of presuming upon the unerrableness of a guide.

Decay of Christian Piety.

Since I have been admitted to her council,
And seen her, with unerring judgment, guide
The reins of empire, I have been amaz'd
To see her more than manly strength of soul.

Rowe. Ambitious Step-mother, Act i.

And [I] am of opinion, that the blind man at first sight, would not be able with certainty to say which was the globe, which the cube, whilst he only saw them: though he could unerringly name them by his touch, and certainly distinguish them by the difference of their figures felt.

Locke. On Hum. Underst. b. ii. c. 9.

— Well-skill'd was he,

To rouse and with unerring aim arrest
All savage kinds, that haunt the mountain wilds,
For him Diana taught.—Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. v.

Nor would the general laws of instinct guiding those vermin, suffice to conduct them unerringly to the very place where their operation was wanted.

Search. Light of Nature, vol. ii. pt. iii. c. 25.

UN-ESCHE/WABLE. That cannot be shunned, avoided, or fled from.

But thilke order procedyng, by an vneschuable betidyng together.—Chaucer. Boecius, b. v.

If that he deme, that thei been to comen vneschuably.

Hee gaue the maior sufficient warning to shift for safety, if an uneschewable destiny had not haltered him to that advancement.—Carew. Survey of Cornwall, fol. 124.

UN-ESPIED. Not sought or seen, beheld, observed, descried.

It is full harde to-halten vnespyed.

Chaucer. Troil. & Cres. b. iv.

He durst not enter into th' open greene,
For dread of them vnwares to be descride,
For breaking of their dance, if he were seene;
But in the court of the wood did bide,
Beholding all, yet of them vnespide.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 10.

'Tis not to be chaste, nor fair,
Such gifts malice may impair;
Richly trimm'd to walk or ride,
Or to wanton unespy'd.

Beaum. & Fletch. Women Pleas'd, Act v. sc. 1.

He following soone after happened to find hir garter, which slack'd by chance and so fell from hir leg, vnespied in the throng by such as attended vpon hir.

Holinshed. Description of England, b. ii. c. 5.

UN-ESSAYED. (See UNASSAYED.) Not proved or tried, or attempted.

But to be rid of these mortifying propositions, he leaves tyrannical evasion unessay'd; first, that they are not the joint and free desires of both houses, or the major part; next, that the choice of many members was carried on by faction.—Milton. Ans. to Eikon Basilike, § 11

Nor has the joy, which this success of my discourses brings me, been sparingly increased by my having ventured them with much more desire, than expectation, or of their prospering, and less out of any strong hope they would succeed, than out of an unwillingness to leave the means, I thought at least improbable, unessay'd.

Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 248.

UN-ESSENTIAL. Not pertaining or relating to the being; not necessary to the being; not important, or momentous.

Neither difference of time, nor distance of place, nor rigor of unjust censure, nor any unessential error can barre our interest in this blessed unity.

Bp. Hall. The Beauty & Vnity of the Church.

— Prime cheerer Light!

Of all material beings first, and best!
Efflux divine; Nature's resplendent robe!
Without whose vesting beauty all were wrapt
In unessential gloom.

Thomson. Summer.

UN-ESTABLISH, v. To remove from a steady or fixed position.

But the people discerning these abuses, began to call for reformation, in order to which the parliament demanded of the king to un-establish that prelatical government, which without scripture had usurp'd over us.

Milton. Answer to Eikon Basilike, § 27.

UN-EVANGELICAL. Not according or agreeable to the writings of the evangelists.

It seems he found himself not so much concern'd as those who had lost fathers, brothers, wives and children by their cruelty; whom in justice to retaliate, is not as he supposes unevangelical, so long as magistracy and war are not laid down under the gospel.

Milton. Answer to Eikon Basilike, § 12.

UN-EVEN. } Not plane, smooth, level;
UNEVENLY. } not equal, proportionate, ade-UNEVENNESS. } quate.

Amonge the vices, whiche I fynde,
There is yet one suche of the seuen,
Whiche all this worlde hath set uneuen.

Gower. Con. A. b. v.

And eke of that thou tellest forth,
Howe that hir weight of loue vneuen
Is vnto thynne, vnder the heuen
Stonde neuer in euen that balance,
Whiche stont in loues gouernance.

Id. Ib.

But the charrets being troubled with prease of enemies, & vneuenness of the ground, they could not worke their feat to anie purpose.

Holinshed. Chron. Historie of England, b. iv. c. 17.

For one of them was like an eagles clawe,
With griping talons armd to greedy fight,
The other like a beares vneuen paw:
More vgly shape yet neuer living creature saw.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 9.

So forth they traueled, an vneuen payre,
That mote to all men seem an vnouth sight;
A saluage man matcht with a lady fayre.

Id. Ib. b. vi. c. 5.

If the earth be not well delved, it will be soone found out by the uneven balkes or beds.

Donne. Obs. on Lord Harrington.

Whosoever rides on a lame horse, cannot but move unevenly, uneasily, uncertainly.

Bp. Hall. No Peace with Rome, § 9.

But if it be a straight golden reed by which the temple is measured, then let it have its own esteem, both of straightness and preciousness, whatsoever unevenness be found in those that profess to receive it.

Leighton. Com. on 1 Peter, c. 3.

They would not have it run without rubs, as if that style were more strong and manly, that struck the ear with a kind of unevenness.—B. Jonson. Discoveries.

And now the chapel's silver bell you hear,
That summons you to all the pride of prayer:
Light quirks of music, broken and uneven,
Make the soul dance upon a jig to heaven.

Pope, Ep. 4. To the Earl of Burlington.

It were strange if in what I writ there did not appear much of unevenness, and if it did not betray the unlearnedness, and relish of the unsettledness of the wandering author.—Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 251.

The most humorous character in Horace is founded upon this unevenness of temper and irregularity of conduct.

Spectator, No. 162.

Our road lies through lanes and hedges or over an uneven hilly country where we can see very little way before us.

Search. Light of Nature, vol. i. pt. ii. c. 27.

UN-EVITABLE. } See INEVITABLE. That UN-EVITATED. } may not be shunned or avoided, eschewed or escaped.

Wherefore weying and foreseeing this (as I may well terme it) calamity and unevitable danger of men, and that by men she must be brought home againe (except that God will shew an extraordinary miracle) I purpose not nor dare I venture with a safe conscience to tempt God herein

Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. p. 53.

This hand, he said, this now victorious lance Shall urge thy fate: assist me, equal chance!
With that, th' unerring dart at Cynus flung.
Th' unevitated on his shoulder rung;
Which like a rock the lance repeld againe.

Sandys. Ovid. Metam. b. xii.

UN-EXA/CTED. Not driven, or forced, or compelled; not extorted, or wrung from.

No fences parted fields, nor marks nor bounds
Distinguish'd acres of litigious grounds:
But all was common, and the fruitful earth
Was free to give her unexact birth.

Dryden. Virgil. Georgics, b. i.

The Precedent was full as long a doing,
And yet within these fiue houres Hastings liu'd Vntainted, unexamined, free, at libertie.

Shakespeare. Rich. III. Act iii. sc. 6.

Which for him [Bp. Hall] who would be counted the first English satyr, to abase himself to, who might have learnt better among the Latin and Italian satyrists, and in our own tongue from the vision and creed of Pierce Plowman, besides others before him, manifested a presumptuous undertaking with weak and unexamined shoulders.

Milton. An Apology for Smeectymnus.

[Peter] at an impertinent time would needs strain courtesy with his master, and falling troublesomely upon the lowly, alwise, and unexamined intention of Christ, in what he went with resolution to do, so provok'd by his interruption the meek Lord, that he threaten'd to exclude him from his heavenly portion, unless he could be content to be less arrogant and stiff-neck in his humility.

Id. Of Reformation in England, b. i.

Declaring thereby, that it is not evidence he seeks, but the quiet enjoyment of the opinion he is fond of, with a forward condemnation of all that may stand in opposition to it, unheard and unexamined; which, what is it but prejudice?—Locke. Conduct of the Underst. s. 10.

Though I had proved there was no continent but what must lie far from the south, there remained nevertheless room for very large islands in places wholly unexamined.

Cook. Second Voyage, b. ii. c. 6.

UNE

He to appease thy wrauth, and end the strife
Of mercy and justice in thy face discern'd,
Regardless of the bliss wherein hee sat
Second to thee, offerd himself to die
For man's offence, O unexampl'd love,
Love no where to be found less than divine!

Milton. Paradise Lost, b. iii.

Which [love] I have sworn for ever to avoid,
In memory of all those hapless maids,
That love has plung'd in unexampl'd woes.

Rowe. Ambitious Step-mother, Act iii.

And should I wage an unsuccessful fight
Alone with many, rather would I die
At my own home, than witness evermore
Their unexampl'd deeds.—Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. xvi.

UN-EXCELLED. Not surmounted, nor surpassed; outgone, or outstripped.

Say, Pandarus! thy bow, thy shafts, thy fame,
Unrival'd here, in Lycia unexcell'd,

UNE

How can the uncorrupt and majestic law of God, bearing in her hand the wages of life and death, harbour such a repugnance within her self, as to require an unexempted and impartial obedience to all her decrees, either from us or from our mediator, and yet debase herself to fault so many ages with circumsis'd adulteries by unclean and slubbing permissions?—Milton. Doct. & Disc. of Divorce, b. ii. c. 13.

UN-EXERCISED. Not kept in practice, in habitual use; not inured, or regularly used.

Lest er that he wexte old, his vertue that laie now stil, ne should not perishe unexercised, in gouernance of commune.

Chaucer. Boecius, b. ii.

We suck in the first rudiments as we do the common air, as my lord Bacon expresseth it, without discrimination or election, of which indeed our tender and unexercised minds are not capable.—Glanvill, Ess. 3.

At this he bar'd his breast, and show'd his scars,
As of a furrow'd field, well plough'd with wars;
Nor is this part unexercis'd, said he;
That gyant-bulk of his from wounds is free.

Dryden. Ovid. Metam. b. xiii.

UN-EXE/RTED. Not put forth, with effort or energy; not laboured or endeavoured.

Who all at once, gaping full greedily,
And rearing fiercely their vpstarting crests,
Ran towards, to deuoure those unexpected guests.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 12.

——— Nor does now
Any impeachment rise, except the sad
And unexpected quarrel, which divided
So noble, and so excellent a friendship,
Which as I ne'er had magick to foresee,
So I could not prevent.

Beaum. & Fletcher. Fair Maid of the Inn, Act iii.

Calling to mind since first my love begun,
Th' uncertain times oft varying in their course,
How things still unexpectedly have run,
As 't please the fates by their resistless force.

Dayton, Idea 51.

The unexpectedness added (if not to the pain) to the fright thereof.—Fuller. Worthies. Wiltshire.

As every other evil, so this [losse] especially is aggravated by our unexpectation.

Bp. Hall. The Balm of Gilead, § 1.

They might indeed be at first surprized and terrified, at the appearance of so unusual and unexpected a messenger (one rising from the dead).

Clarke. Evidences of Religion, Prop. 15.

Grief and passion are like floods rais'd in little brooks by a sudden rain; they are quickly up, and if the concernment be pour'd unexpectedly in upon us, it overflows us.

Dryden. Essay on Dramatic Poesie.

UNE

Commonly surprise and unexpectedness of any evil, renders the fear more terrible; because it takes a man upon the sudden, and before he can compose himself, or rally the succours of hope and reason to support him against it.

Hale. Cont. Of Humility.

But still what there is need we should be told concerning it, the scripture hath revealed, that it should come unexpectedly, and that it shall come soon.

Secker, vol. vi. Lect. 12.

It is the apparent novelty of the subject, or of some peculiarity relative to it; or the unexpectedness of its introduction, at a particular time, or in a particular manner, contrary to probability or expectancy, which produces the effect.—Cogan. On the Passions, pt. ii. c. 1.

UN-EXPEDIENT. See INEXPEDIENT. Not having free, unrestrained, motion; not easy or convenient, suitable, fit, proper.

The like also would not be unexpedient after meat to assist and cherish Nature in her first concoction, and send their minds back to study in good tune and satisfaction.

Milton. Of Education.

We have caused canes to be stained into the likeness almost of tortoise shell by a mixture of aqua fortis, not too well rectified, which is unexpedient in this work.

Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 448.

For [amusements and diversions] their abuse doth not of necessity make our use of them unlawful, nor possibly sometimes unexpedient.—Secker, vol. i. Ser. 20.

UN-EXPENSIVE. Free from costs or charges; not costly.

For this I cannot omit without ingratitude to that Providence above, who hath ever bred me up in plenty, although my life hath not bin unexpensive in learning, and voyaging about.—Milton. An Apology for Smectymnus, § 8.

Then cherish this, this unexpensive power,
Undangerous to the public, ever prompt,
By lavish Nature thrust into your hand.

Thomson. Britannia.

UN-EXPERIENCE. } See INEXPERIENCE.
UNEXPERIENCED. } Not having knowledge or wisdom, acquired or gained by repeated trial, by frequent and repeated proof, by practice; not practised.

I am not ashamed to recant that which my unexperience hath (out of hearsay) written in praise of French education.

Bp. Hall. Quo Vadis, § 10.

Doubtless the law never suppos'd so great an arrogance could be in one man; that he whose seventeen years unexperience had almost ruin'd all, should sit another seven years school-master, to tutor those who were sent by the whole realm to be his counsellors and teachers.

Milton. Answer to Eikon Basilike, § 11.

For it appears not how this can be done, without danger and mischance of putting out a great number of the best and ablest: in whose stead new elections may bring in as much raw, unexperienc'd and otherwise affected, to the weakening and much altering for the worse of public transactions.—Id. Way to Establish a Free Commonwealth.

Gond. Count, thou art young, and unexperienc'd in the dark, hidden ways of women.

Beaum. & Fletch. The Woman-Hater, Act v. sc. 3.

I hope she is as kind as she is fair;
Kinder than unexperienc'd virgins are
To their first loves.

Dryden. 2 Pt. Conquest of Granada, Act iii.

And none but weak and unexperienced men will believe them, if they should.

Burke. Obs. on the State of the Nation, (1769.)

UN-EXPERT. See INEXPERT. Not having the readiness, adroitness, dexterity, skill of experience or of much practice.

We also by hys ensample, shoulde suffre other that are yet weake, as them that are fraile, open sinners, vnlearned, vnexperte, and of lothesome manners, and not to caste them awaye forthwith.—Udal. Romaynes, Prol. to Ed. 6.

How unsafe it is, much more for an unexpert and injudicious person to meddle with the holy oracles of the Almighty.—Bp. Hall. Cases of Conscience, Dec. 3. Case 10.

UN-EXPIRED. Not exhausted, ended, or finished.

With like agreement, clauses, prohibitions, prouisoos and articles (mutatis mutandis) as in these our letters patents are contained, for, and during the residue of the said terme of seuen yeres then remaining unexpired.

Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. p. 148.

UN-EXPLORED. Not searched, or inquired into; not tried or proved by searching; not pried or examined into.

Id. Virgil. Æneis, b. iv.

— He, rack'd with pain

Intolerable, handled, as they stood,

The backs of all, but, in his folly, left

Their bosoms, where we clung, still unexplor'd.

Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. ix.

It is true, indeed, that we saw only the sea-coast on the eastern side; and that, between this and the western coast, there is an immense tract of country wholly unexplored.

Cook. First Voyage, b. iii. c. 6.

UN-EXPOSED. Not put out, laid out, (sc.) to view; made known, shown openly.

They will endeavour to diminish the honour of the best treatise that has been written on any subject, and to render it useless by their censures, rather than suffer their envy to lie asleep, and the little mistakes of the author to pass unexposed.—Watts. On the Mind, c. 5. § 8.

UN-EXPOSED. Not laid open; not explained, declared, interpreted.

When we are to chuse our doctrine or our side, we take that which is in the plain unexpounded words of scripture; for in that only our religion can consist.

Bp. Taylor, vol. ii. Ser. 22.

Now for their demeanor within the church, how have they disfigur'd and defac'd that more than angelic brightness, with the dark overcasting of superstitious copes and flaminical vestures, wearing on their backs, and I abhor to think, perhaps in some worse place, the unexpressible image of God the Father?

Milton. Reason. of Church Government, b. ii. c. 2.

O my God, when wilt thou put an end to these unexpressible miseries?—Bp. Hall. The Peace Maker, s. 6.

Nisi me mutassem was Socrates his word; till then your condition (what ever it may be in civil and secular regards) is unexpressibly wofull.—Id. The Character of Man.

Evelyn. Golden Book of Chrysostome, Ep. Ded.

Run, run, Orlando, carue on euery tree

The faire, the chaste, and vnexpressive shée.

Shakespeare. As You Like It, Act iii. sc. 2.

So Lycidas sunk low, but mounted high,

Thro' the dear might of him that walk'd the waves;

Where other groves, and other streams along,

With nectar pure his oozy locks he laves,

And hears the unexpresive nuptial song

In the blest kingdoms meek of joy and love.

Milton. Lycidas.

If any one shall endeavour to recount particularly every one of these things, he will but plunge himself into an unexpressible deep of benefits, and then perceive for how unexpressibly and inconceivably many good things he stands engaged to God.—Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 9.

Next—for some gracious service unexpress'd,

And from its wages only to be guess'd—

Rais'd from the toilet to the table,—where

Her wondering betters wait behind her chair.

Byron. A Sketch.

UNEXPUGNABLE. Not to be beaten, overpowered, conquered.

He, hating cities, and the discontent

Of glittering courts; the lonely woods frequents,

And unambitious fields; but made repaire

To Ilium rarely; yet, he debonaire,

Nor unexpugnable to love.—Sandys. Ovid. Metam. b. xi.

UN-EXTENDED. See INEXTENDED. Not stretched out, (sc.) over any portion of space.

And yet if they will not allow matter as matter, that is, every particle of matter to be as well cogitative as extended, they will have as hard a task to make out to their own reasons a cogitative being out of incogitative particles, as an extended being out of unextended parts, if I may so speak.

Locke. Hum. Underst. b. iv. c. 10.

— But look forward;

Dryden. Sigismonda & Guiscardo.

— Till thou behold her stalk

Red with the blood of martyrs, and wide wasting

O'er England's bosom? All the mourning year

Our towns shall glow with unextinguish'd fires.

Rowe. Lady Jane Gray, Act iii.

UN-EXTIRPATED. Not rooted out or eradicated; not exterminated.

The use of these prophetic warnings is to guard the faithful against the scepticisms which these unpromising appearances might be apt to produce; that instead of taking offence at the sin which remains as yet unextirpated, or even at an occasional growth and prevalence of iniquity, we may firmly rely on the promises of the prophetic word, and set ourselves to consider what may be done on our own part, and what God may expect that we should do, for the furtherance of his work and the removal of impediments.

Bp. Horsley, vol. iii. Ser. 40.

UN-EXTRICABLE, i. e. Inextricable, (qv.) That cannot be freed from entanglement or perplexity, impediment or hinderance.

Which supposition we shall finde involved in unextricable difficulties.—More. Immortality of the Soul, b. ii. c. 2

Many times the world is rescued from confusions and distractions unextricable by any visible wit or force.

Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 36.

UN-EYED. Not seen, viewed, observed by eyes.

Happy is that man, that is once possessed of a crown incorruptible, unfadable, reserved for him in heaven.

Bp. Hall. Cont. Ahasuerus Feasting.

He [the righteous man] is heir to a mighty inheritance, an everlasting one: to the inheritance of a kingdom, to a kingdom of glory, a kingdom among the blessed, whose crown is unmixt and unfading.—Glanvill, Ser. 5.

Secure from thunder, and unharm'd by Jove,

Unfading as th' immortal pow'rs above:

And as the locks of Phœbus are unshorn,

So shall perpetual green thy boughs adorn.

Dryden. Ovid. Metam. b. i.

Immortality of life, an unfading crown of glory, a kingdom that cannot be shaken, unspeakable joys, endless bliss, God hath covenanted and promised to all his faithful servants; to all who in his way please to accept and embrace them.—Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 38.

His garment and his gate ful gay of graie.
Chaucer. Test. of Creseide.

Sometimes they complain of me as very unfair to take an advantage of an opinion of theirs, and to plead it as true, at the same time that I myself judge it to be erroneous and false.—Waterland. Works, vol. iv. p. 53.

If I have wrested your words to another sense than you designed them, or in any respect argued unfairly, I assure you it was without design.

Butler. To Dr. Samuel Clarke, Let. 1.

But I must complain of it as a great instance of unfairness, after I had given you the hint of this in the preface to my sermons, (which you have read,) for you to bring up this pretence again, that the Ante-Nicene writers did not allow the Son to exist, or to be generated by necessity of nature.—Waterland. Works, vol. iii. p. 238.

It was, indeed, rather too unfair that a female should be made responsible for eleven children upon the faith of a misinterpreted abbreviation, and the decision of a librarian.
Byron. Child Harold, c. 4. Note 15.

To use even those unfairly, who have used us so, is very bad: but to use any one unfairly, because another hath used us so, is what, were we to suffer such usage, we should think monstrously wicked.—Secker, vol. iv. Ser. 13.

By this aversion to baseness and unfairness, (though it can never be too deeply rooted, and to begin the world with indifference in these respects is a very bad sign, yet,) if they are naturally of eager spirits, hurries them on into most grievous errors.—Id. vol. ii. Ser. 4.

Sir J. Cheeke. The Hurt of Sedition.

At length herself bourdeth Æneas thus.
Unfaithful wight! to cover such a fault
Couldst thou hope? unwist to leave my land?
Surrey. Virgile. Æneis, b. iv.

And wold to God that examples of our tymes were as rare as they were in the apostells tyme, & that the new impiety did not far exceede the old unfaithfulness.

Strype. Eccles. Mem. Originals. Hen. VIII. No. 115.

The duke laid diuerse things to the earles charge, for his disobedience, unfaithfulness, and ingratitude.

Holinshed. Chron. of England. Rich. II. an. 1382.

Lying, or craftiness, and unfaithful usages, rob a man of the honour of his soul, making his understanding useless and in the condition of a fool, spoiled, and dishonoured, and despised.—Bp. Taylor, vol. ii. Ser. 23.

Third. (Inconvenience in calling and using counsell) the danger of being unfaithfully counselled; and more for the good of them that counsell, than of him that is counselled.

Bacon. Ess. Of Counsell.

Such a labourer as shall not be put to shame for his illness, or his unskillfulness, his falseness and unfaithfulness, in that day when the great bishop of souls shall make his last and dreadful visitation.—Bp. Taylor, vol. iii. Ser. 4.

The prince so far for piety renown'd,
To thee, Eliza, was unfaithful found;
To thee forlorn, and languishing with grief,
His sword alone he left, thy last relief.
Congreve. Ovid. Art of Love, b. iii.

Any one may see, that he, who acts unfaithfully, acts against his promises and engagements, and therefore denies and sins against truth; does what it can never be for the good of the world should become an universal practice, does what he would not have done to himself; and wrongs the man, who depends upon him. of what he justly might expect.
Wollaston. Religion of Nature, s. 6.

— Shouldst thou prevail,
By pow'r divine assisted, to destroy
The haughty suitors, I will then, myself, Teach thee to judge the women, and discern
Th' unfaithful many from the duteous few.
Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. xix.

UN-FA'LLEN. Not fallen, and consequently, in their original state of uprightness.

Can a finite spirit bear such excess? The pleasures of eternity crowd into a moment; did unfain angels ever know such another?—Glanvill, Ser. 7.

UN-FA'LLIBLE, i. e. Infallible, (qv.)

These blessings hathe his eternal truth and unfallible promysse perfourmed vnto youre hyghnes, because ye seke hym more then the worlde.

Udal. Luke. Pref. to Q. Katharine.

What's past, and what's to come, she can descry.
Speake, shall I call her in? beleue my words,
For they are certaine, and unfallible.

Shakespeare. 1 Pt. Hen. VI. Act i. sc. 2.

UN-FA'LLowed. Not tilled or turned, or left in the state effected by the plough, or by being turned.

— Th' unfallow'd glebe
Yearly o'ercomes the granaries with store
Of golden wheat, the strength of human life.
J. Philips. Cider, b. i.

UN-FA'MED. Not famed; without fame or renown.

There's not the meanest spirit on our partie,
Without a heart to dare, or sword to draw,
When Helen is defended; nor none so noble,
Whose life were ill bestow'd, or death unfam'd,
Where Helen is the subiect.
Shakespeare. Troil. & Cres. Act ii. sc. 2.

UN-FAM'LIAR. Not well known to, or acquainted with; not used or accustomed; common or frequent.

Figured and metaphorical expressions do well to illustrate more abstruse and unfamiliar ideas which the mind is not yet thoroughly accustomed to; but then they must be made use of to illustrate ideas that we already have, not to paint to us those which we yet have not.

Locke. Conduct of the Underst. s. 32.

For sometimes he would hear, however nigh,
That name repeated loud without reply,
As unfamiliar, or, if roused again,
Start to the sound, as but remember'd then.
Byron. Lara, c. 1.

But, oh! her mind, that Orcus, which includes Legions of mischief, countless multitudes
Of former curses, projects unmade up,
Abuses yet unfashion'd.
Donne, Elegy 15.

Our second fault is iniurious dealing with the scripture of God, as if it contained only the principall poynts of religion, some rude and unfashioned matter of building the church, but had left out that which belongeth vnto the forme and fashion of it.

Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, b. iii. § 2.

— Sent before my time
Into this breathing world, scarce halfe made vp,
And that so lamely and unfashionable,
That dogges barke at me, as I halt by them.
Shakespeare. Rich. III. Act i. sc. 1.

All the actions of childishness, and unfashionable carriage, and whatever time and age will of itself be sure to reform, being (as I have said) exempt from the discipline of the rod, there will not be so much need of beating children, as is generally made use of.—Locke. Of Education, § 72.

But you must be sure to have a good master, that knows, and can teach, what is graceful and becoming, and what gives a freedom and easiness to all the motions of the body. One that teaches not this, is worse than none at all, natural unfashionableness being much better than apish, affected postures.—Id. Ib. § 197.

Almanz. Forgive that fury which my soul does move;
'Tis the essay of an untaught first love.
Yet rude, unfashion'd truth it does express:
'Tis love just peeping in an hasty dress.
Dryden. 1 Pt. Conquest of Granada, Act iii.

What, only you two! How many visits may a man make before he falls into such unfashionable company? a brother and sister soberly sitting at home, when the whole town is a gadding.—Vanburgh. A Journey to London, Act i. sc. 1.

Pride in their port, defiance in their eye,
I see the lords of human kind pass by;
Intent on high designs, a thoughtful band,
By forms unfashion'd fresh from Nature's hand.
Goldsmith. The Traveller.

UN-FA'STEN. To remove that which fixes, keeps or holds firm or close together.

— Then in the key hole turns
Th' intricate wards, and every bolt and bar
Of massie iron or solid rock with ease Unfast'ns.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ii.

— My broken chain
With links unfasten'd did remain,
And it was liberty to stride
Along my cell from side to side.
Byron. The Prisoner of Chillon, s. 11.

UN-FA'THERED. Having no father, or male parent.

Glo. The people feare me; for they doe obserue Unfather'd heires, and loathly birds of nature;
The seasons change their manners, as the yeere
Had found some moneths asleepe, and leap'd them ouer!

These are indeed unfathomable depths in that ocean, wherein we shall vainly hope to pitch our anchor; but all necessary truths need not much line.

Bp. Hall. Christian Moderation, b. ii. § 7.

A sufficient argument of the unfathomableness of this great dispensation of mercy, which can still find further employment for the study and curiosity even of angels.
Norris. On the Beatitudes, p. 133.

If he could make such agents wholly free,
I not dispute; the point's too high for me;
For heav'n's unfathom'd pow'r what man can sound,
Or put to his omnipotence a bound.
Dryden. The Cock and the Fox.

The wisest of them were never backward to confess their own ignorance and great blindness: that truth was hid from them, as it were in an unfathomable deep.
Clarke. On the Attributes, Prop. 6.

Then throng the busy shapes into his mind,
Of cover'd pits, unfathomably deep,
A dire descent! beyond the power of frost.
Thomson. Winter.

— I plunged deep;
But, like an ebbing wave, it dash'd me back
Into the gulf of my unfathom'd thought.
Byron. Manfred, Act ii. sc. 2.

For here there are reefs of coral rock, rising like a wall almost perpendicularly out of the unfathomable deep, always overflowed at high water, and at low water dry in many places.—Cook. First Voyage, b. iii. c. 5.

UN-FATIGUED. Not wearied, tired, over-toiled.

— Over dank, and dry,
They journey toilsome, unfatigued with length
Of march, unstruck with horror at the sight
Of Alpine ridges bleak, high-stretching hills,
All white with summer's snows.—J. Philips. Blenheim.

UNF

So they, (but cheerful,) unfatig'd, still move
The draining sucker, then alone concern'd
When the dry bowl forbids their pleasing work.
J. Philips. Cider, b. ii.

I should prove myself, at best, an indifferent politician, to tire the reader with a long preface, when I want his unfatigued attention to a long poem.
Goldsmith. Deserted Village, Ded.

UN-FA'ULTERING. Not failing, or hesitating.

And lives the man, whose universal eye
Has swept at once th' unbounded scheme of things;
Mark'd their dependence so, and firm accord,
As with unfaltering accent to conclude That this availeth nought?—Thomson. Summer.

UN-FA'ULTY. Not having, not committing, error, mistake or offence; having no defect or deficiency.

Whom because he had prouoked against hym with well doynge, he made them not unfaultie, but suffered them and gaue thē lybertie that they myght doe the thyng whiche they heartes desyred to doe.—Udal. Mathew, c. 21.

the most unfavorable.—Udal. Luke, c. 19.

These tempests, so dreadful in themselves, though unattended by any other unfavourable circumstance, were yet rendered more mischievous to us by their inequality, and the deceitful intervals which they at sometimes afforded.
Anson. Voyages, b. i. c. 8.

This is an artful preparative for the following transition;
and finely obviates what might be thought unfavourably of the severity of the satire, by those who were strangers to the provocation.—Pope. Prol. to Satires, Note on v. 192.

There hath been either an approach towards it, or a blameable appearance of it, or something or another that should not have been; else so many would not have judged, or at least persisted in judging, so unfavourably.
Secker, vol. iii. Ser. 15.

This high price of corn, however, seems evidently to have been the effect of the extraordinary unfavourableness of the seasons, and ought therefore to be regarded, not as a permanent, but as a transitory and occasional event.
Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. i. c. 11.

UN-FE'ARED. } Not scared or terrified;
UNFE'ARFUL. } not afraid; not dreaded.

They shall see this body after it be dead, live again, and ascende vp into heauen, and shal see the Holy Ghost sent,
and make you soodainly unfearefull preachers of my name.
Udal. John, c. 16.

Pal. He
A most unbounded tyrant, whose successes
Makes heaven unfeard, and villany assured
Beyond its power.
Beaum. & Fletcher. Two Noble Kinsmen, Act i. sc. 2.

Cato. I never saw a morn more full of horror.
Cato. To Catiline and his: but to just men
Though heaven should speak with all his wrath at once,
That with his breath the hinges of the world
Did crack, we should stand upright and unfeard.
B. Jonson. Catiline, Act iv. sc. 1.

UN-FE'ASIBLE. See INFEASIBLE. That cannot or may not be done, or performed, or produced.

So hard, or utterly unfeasible is it for men to be zealous votaries of the blind God, without losing their eyes in his service, and it is well if their noses do not follow.
South, vol. iii. Ser. 2.

UN-FE'ATHERED. Not having feathers or plumage, the natural clothing of winged animals; not furnished with clothing, or means of warmth and comfort; stripped, divested.

Christ's yoke is like feathers to a bird, not loads, but helps to motion, without them the body falls; and we do not pity birds, when in summer we wish them unfeathered and callow, or bald as eggs, that they might be cooler and lighter.
Bp. Taylor, vol. i. Ser. 1.

UNF

In the meane time, he so handled the matter, that he had unfeathered him of his best friends, aids, and helps.
Holinshed. Chron. of Ireland, an. 1567.

So when the lark (poor bird!) afar espy'th
Her yet unfeather'd children (whom to save
She strives in vain) slain by the fatal scythe.
G. Fletcher. Christ's Triumph over Death.

UN-FE'ATLY. } Feat, is done, well done;
UNFE'ATY. } and unfeately, undone, ill-done.

And certes it was a thing not unfeately ne vnskyfully spoken in the prouerbes of the Grekes, that woordes and talke is the phisicion of a mynde beeyng dyseased and sycke.—Udal. Luke, Pref. of Erasmus.

While Dorus was practising, one might see Dametas holding his hands under his girdle behind him, nodding from the waste upwards, and swearing he never knew man go more aukwardly to work; and that they might talk of book-learning what they would, but for his part he never saw more unfeaty fellows than great clerks were.
Sidney. Arcadia, b. ii.

UN-FE'ATURED. Not having form or fashion, (sc.) in the distinct parts of the face or countenance; in the general appearance.

A ropy chain of rheumes; a visage rough,
Deform'd, unfeatur'd, and a skin of buff.
A stich-fal'n cheek, that hangs below the chaw.
Dryden. Juvenal, Sat. 10.

UN-FED. Not having food, victuals or nourishment; not nourished or sustained.

Clar. Will I live?
She that is forfeited to lust must dye,
That humour being unfed.
Beaum. & Fletcher. Lover's Progress, Act iv.

"As when a greedy lion, long unfed,
Breaks in at length into the harmless folds,
(So hungry rage commands) with fearful dread
He drags the silly beasts."
P. Fletcher. Purple Island, c. 11.

Some sons of mine who bear upon their shield,
Three steeples argent in a sable field,
Have sharply tax'd your converts, who unfed
Have follow'd you for miracles of bread.
Dryden. Hind and the Panther.

Even as a flame unfed, which runs to waste
With its own flickering, or a sword laid by Which eats into itself, and rusts ingloriously.
Byron. Child Harold, c. 3.

UN-FEED. Having no payment, reward or recompense, or perquisite.

Foole. Then 'tis like the breath of an unfed lawyer, you gaue me nothing for't, can you make no vse of nothing nuncle?—Shakespeare. K. Lear, Act i. sc. 4.

UN FEELING. } Not having or receiving UNFE'ELINGLY. } sensations or perceptions;
UNFE'ELINGNESS. } not having kind feelings
UNFE'ELT. } compassion, or sympathy.
Unfelt,—not perceived.

—O heaven! can it be
That men should live with such unfeeling souls,
Without or touch or conscience of religion?
B. Jonson. The Case is Altered, Act iv. sc. 3.

Whilst Talbot (whose fresh ardour having got A marvellous advantage of his years)
Carries his unfelt age as if forgot,
Whirling about where any need appears.
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. vi.

The broadest mirth unfeeling folly wears,
Less pleasing far than virtue's very tears.
Pope. Essay on Man, Ep. 4.

The wise man who strikes out of the secret paths of a private life, for honour and dignity, allured by the splendour of a court, and the unfelt weight of public employment, whether he succeeds in his attempt or no, usually comes near enough to this painted greatness to discern the daubing.
Spectator, No. 224.

Thou hast releas'd thy shouldiers at my cost,
Physignathus! unfeeling as the rock,
But not nototie'd by the gods above.
Cowper. Homer. Battle of the Frogs & Mice.

The German turn'd his head back, look'd down upon as Goliath did upon David; and unfeelingly resumed his posture.—Sterns. Sentimental Journey. The Dwarf.

Religion and hypocrisy; honesty and deceit; charity and malice; compassion and unfeelingness; with many other contrarieties, are continually taking their turns in his mind.
Gilpin, vol. i. Ser. 17.

I feel my spirit in my bosom fir'd
Afresh for battle: lightness in my limbs,
In hands and feet a glow unfelt before.
Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. xiii.

UNF

UN-FE'IGNED. } Not imagining or in-UNFE'IGNEDLY. } venting, contriving, or UNFE'IGNEDNESS. } pretending, a likeness, a UNFE'IGNING. } resemblance, a reality; not dissembling; not assuming, or taking, or displaying a false appearance, a false colouring.

For God so wisely on my soule rewe,
As verely ye slaine me with the payne,
That mowe ye see unfained on mine hewe.
Chaucer. Annelida & Arcite.

And whan suche of his companyons as had serued hym longe, herde hym speke those wordes, they parceyued well howe he spake them with all his herte unfained.
Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. c. 170.

But this strength and stoutnesse of hert dooeth God geue vnto suche as through simple & unfeigned belieuyng, dooe shewe theselues apt for to receiue his giftes.
Udal. Luke, c. 18.

At that houre shall suche bee adiudged to more grievous tormentes, then those, whiche are to the open sighte of the world, and unfeignedly, full of hainous enormitees.
Id. Ib. c. 20.

Betimes who giveth willingly,
Redoubled thanks aye doth deserve;
And I that sue unfeignedly,
In fruitless hope, alas! do sterue.
Wyatt. The Lover Laments his Estate, &c.

Thus appointed in the dead of the night, they enter the chambers to ech of them assigned, where (as it is said) the lords laie fast asleepe, who being at the first as it were halfe awakened, were wonderfullie amazed at the strangenesse of the sight (doubting whether it were but a dreame, or some true and unfeined vision.)
Holinshed. History of Scotland. Alpine.

If thou be one of these, or all, or more,
Succour a seely maid, that doth implore
Aide, on a bended heart, unfain'd and meeke,
As true as blushes of a maiden cheeke.
Broune. Britannia's Pastorals, b. i. s. 4.

Necessary it was that he, which purposed to saue their soules, should, as he did, touch their hearts with true unfained repentance, that his mercy might restore them again to life, whom sinne had made the children of death and condemnation.—Hooker. Of Justification, § 26.

The resolved Christian dares, and would die, because he knowes he shall be happy; and looking merrily towards heaven (the place of his rest) can unfainedly say, I desire to be dissolved.—Ep. Hall. Heaven upon Earth, § 17.

Melanchthon in human learning is wondrous fluent, but greater knowledge in the scriptures I attribute to Bucer, and speak it unfeignedly.
Milton. Judgment of Martin Bucer concerning Divorce.

The mouth of the righteous speaketh wisdom, and his tongue talketh of judgment, and his feet strive to keep pace with his tongue, which gives evidence of its unfeignedness.
Leighton. Com. on 1 Peter, ii. 24.

The word there signifies straight pillars, like the tallest, straightest kind of trees, and, indeed, the sincerity and unfeignedness of prayer makes it grow up as a straight pillar, when there is no crookedness in it, but it is tending straight towards heaven, and bowing to no side by the way.
Id. Ib. iv. 7.

Oh Pembroke! thou hast done me much injustice,
For I have born thee true unfeign'd affection.
Rowe. Lady Jane Gray, Act ii.

Achilles spake; to whom I thus replied:
Of noble Peleus have I nothing heard;
But I will tell thee, as thou bidd'st, the truth
Unfeign'd of Neoptolemus thy son.
Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. xi.

Eumæus also fervently the gods
In pray'r implor'd, that they would render back Ulysses to his home. He then, convinc'd
Of their unfeigning honesty, began.—Id. Ib. b. xxi.

UN-FE'ELLOWED. Not having a companion, comrade, mate or match.

Osr. I mean, sir, for his weapon; but in the imputation laid on him by them, in his meed he's unfellowed.
Shakespeare. Hamlet, Act iii. sc. 7.

Sur. Heralds, the English general returns
A sensible devotion from his heart,
His very soul, to this unfellow'd grace.
Ford. Perkin Warbeck, Act iv. sc. 1.

UN-FENCE, v. To remove the protection, guard, or security; that which keeps safe.

Jedworth, [is] a towne which after the manner of the countrie is vnailed and unfenced, but onelie with the strength of the inhabitants.
Holinshed. Historie of Scotland, an. 1572.

I'de play incessantly vpon these fades,
Euen till unfenced desolation
Leaue them as naked as the vulgar ayre.
Shakespeare. K. John, Act ii. sc. 2.

UNF

There is never a limb, never a vein or artery of the body, but it is the scene and receptacle of pain, whensoever it shall please God to unfence it, and et in some sharp disease or distemper upon it.—South, vol. iv. Ser. 4.

— They the first foundations laid
And built the tow'rs of seven-gated Thebes,
For that, though valliant both, in spacious Thebes, Unfenc'd by tow'rs, they could not dwell secure.
Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. xi.

UN-FERMENTED. Not raised or swollen by fermentation, or by the heat, commotion, or action of the internal parts.

Some of the plants which yield a milky juice, as lettuce, chicory; whose milk is anodyne and resolvent, therefore good in diseases of the liver; but all such vegetables must be unfermented, for fermentation changes their nature.
Arbuthnot. Of Aliments, c. 5.

UN-FERTILE. See INFERTILE. That cannot bear, produce, or bring forth.

Peace is not such a dry tree, such a sapless, unfertile thing, but that it might fructify and increase.
Decay of Christian Piety.

UN-FESTIVAL. Not according to the rules of religious feasts or festivals.

But a sacrifice, where no God is present, like as a temple without a sacred feast or holy banquet, is profane, unfestival, impious, irreligious, and without divine inspiration and devotion.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 492.

UN-FETTER, v. To remove the bonds of the feet. Generally,—

To remove bonds, fastenings or restraints.

And geveth the gailer gold. & grotes to gederes
To unfetter the false.
Piers Plouhman, p. 47.

The shireve tho unfetterid
Him righte some anon,
And sent in after a gode leche
To hele his rigge bon.
Imputed to Chaucer. Cokes Tale of Gamelyn.

Gamelyn lete her unfettir,
His brothir out of bend.—Id. Ib.

What can more advance her pride, than to tell her, that she hath in her own hands freedom enough of will (with a little prevention) to prepare her selfe to her justification; that she hath (whereof to rejoyce) somewhat, what she hath not received; that if God please to unfetter her, she can walk alone?—Bp. Hall. Epis. Dec. 3. Ep. 3.

To an unfetter'd soul's quick nimble haste
Are falling stars, and heart's thoughts, but slow pac'd.
Donne. Progress of the Soul, s. 1.

Now if a muse cannot run when she is unfetter'd, 'tis a sign she has but little speed.—Dryden. Virgil. Æneis, Ded.

UN-FIGURED. Without, not having, form or shape, or portraiture of animated or vegetable bodies.

In unfigured paintings the noblest is the imitation of marbles, and of architecture it self, as arches, freezes, columns, and the like.—Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 57.

UN-FILED. Not dirtied, polluted, corrupted or contaminated.

"Then, by the gods, to whom all truth is known;
By faith unfil'd, if any any-where
With mortal folk remains; I thee beseech, O king, thereby rue on my travail great."
Surrey. Virgile. Æneis, b. ii.

UN-FILED. Not rubbed or polished by a file; not polished, smoothened, brightened or burnished.

It was to weet, the good Sir Satyrane,
That raung'd abroad, to seeke adventures wilde,
As was his wont in forrest, and in plaine;
He was all arm'd in rugged steele unfiled,
As in the smoky forge it was compilde.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 7.

Or were they Spanish stamps still travelling,
That are become as catholique as their king,
Those unlickt beare-whelps, unfil'd pistols,
That (more than cannon-shot) availles or lets.
Donne, Elegy 12.

UN-FILIAL. Not agreeable or according to a son or child; to the feelings, affections, duties of a child.

Pol. By my white beard,
You offer him (if this be so) a wrong
Something unfiliall.
Shakespeare. Winter's Tale, Act iv. sc. 3.

UNF

He, that cannot err, seems daily to justify our assertion by inflicting sickness and the sharpest outward calamities on his own dearest children, to preserve them from the contagion of sin, or cure them of the unfilial habitudes of it.
Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 280.

Choose whom she may, my farewell gifts shall speak
Me well content, so bounteous shall they be.
But to dismiss her rudely were an act
Unfilial—That I dare not—God forbid!
Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. xx.

UN-FILLED. Not replete or complete; not occupied; being, remaining, void, vacant or empty.

His unfil'd skin hung dangling on his brest,
His feeble knees with paine enough uphold
That pined carcasse.
Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b. ii. s. 1.

The tables furnish'd with a cursed feast,
Which harpies, with lean famine, feed upon Unfil'd for ever.—Crashaw. Steps to the Temple. Herode.

At the same time we fixed some tin plates under the binds, first taking off the old sheathing, and putting in a piece unfilled, over which the plates were nailed.
Cook. Third Voyage, b. iii. c. 7.

UN-FINISHED. } Not ended, terminated,
UNFINISHING, n. } concluded, completed, or perfected.

At what time a building is begonne the compt muste diligently be cast what all the costs & charges will be which are required to acōplishe ye building, lest it repent the after thei haue bestowed more than thei shuld & so leaue ye worke unfinished.—Caluin. Fovre Godlye Sermons, Ser. 4.

I perceive how hopeless it will be to reach the height of their praises at the accomplishment of that expectation that waits upon their noble deeds, the unfinishing whereof already surpasses what others before them have left enacted with their utmost performance through many ages.
Milton. An Apology for Smeetynnus, § 8.

Their pleasing task the weeping virgins leave,
And with unfinish'd garlands strew thy grave.
Congreve. The Tears of Amaryllis for Amyntas.

UN-FIRED. Not heated by fire; without a fire.

Then, last, Achilles in the circus plac'd
A pond'rous spear and caldron yet unfir'd,
Emboss'd with flow'rs around, its worth an ox.
Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. xxiii.

UN-FIRM, i.e. Infirm, (qv.)

Cæsar not more in any danger try'd
How tottering and unfirme a propp his pride
Had lean'd vpon, and well might stagger, reft
Of all those souldiers hands, and almost left
To his owne sword.
May. Lucan. Pharsalia, b. v.

For without it, it is not only inauspicious and unlucky, but illegal, unfirm and insufficient.
Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. iii. c. 5.

Now take the time, while stagg'ring yet they stand
With feet unfirm; and prepossess the strand:
Fortune befriends the bold.—Dryden. Virgil. Æneis, b. x.

UN-FIT, adj. } Not suited, or adapted, UNFIT, v. } accommodated, adjusted, or UNFITLY. } appropriated; not qualified.
UNFITNESS.

Unfyttyng Suffraunce, hure suster and hure selve
Have maked almost. bote Marie the help.
That no londe loveth thee.—Piers Plouhman, p. 48.

Told him plainly, it was full unfitting,
Such doublenesse to finden in a king.
Lidgate. Story of Thebes, pt. iii.

For there is no time nor place unfit or vncōueniēt for to learne those things which pertaine to euerlasting welthe.
Udal. John, c. 1.

It is an unfitting thing, & a veri blemish, & highe disparagemēt, to the sacrē magesty of a prince.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 59.

— Counsels are unfit
In business, where all rest is more pernicious
Than rashness can be.—B. Jonson. Sejanus, Act ii. sc. 2.

Then with an eye of mercy inform'd his judgment,
How yet unripe we were, unblown, unharden'd,
Unfitted for such fatal ends.
Beaum. & Fletcher. Humorous Lieutenant, Act ii. sc. 4.

Widow. Pray sir cast off these fellows, as unfitting for your bare knowledge, and far more your companie.
Id. The Scornful Lady, Act iv.

Though to us they [evils] come ever (as wee thinke) unseasonably, and at some times most unfitly than others, yet he that sends them knowes their opportunities.
Bp. Hall. Cont. The Foyle of Amek.

UNF

I answer, if it [marriage] be more than human, so much the more it argues the chief society therof to be in the soul rather than in the body, and the greatest breacn therof to be unfitness of mind rather than defect of body.
Milton. Doct. & Disc. of Divorce, b. i. c. 13.

I do by no means think it modest for us to determine what the government should do: and in this case, 'tis as unfit as in any whatsoever; since this matter depends upon the consideration of so many things, that 'tis very difficult to state the bounds of just permission, and restraint.
Glanvill. Ser. 2.

These two sorts of essences, I suppose, may not unfitly be termed, the one real, the other nominal essence.
Locke. Hum. Underst. b. iii. c. 3.

From these necessary differences of things, there cannot but arise a fitness or unfitness of the application of different things or different relations one to another.
Clarke. On the Evidences, Introd.

The peculiarity of structure by which an organ is made to answer one purpose necessarily unfits it for some other purpose.—Paley. Natural Theology, c. 16.

I have too much cause, in every thing, to be sensible of my own unfitness to direct; but, in several articles relating to this point, I am peculiarly unqualified.
Secker. Charge at Oxford, 1750.

UN-FIX, v. } To remove the fastening or UNFIXED. } bond; that which holds fast,
UNFIXEDNESS. } or firm, or steady; that which keeps stable, constant, or consistent.

It is in vain to dispute concerning the stability of atomes, which as of themselves they are volatile and unfixt, so they have no basis but the light air.

Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. ii. c. 3.

He stands so high with so unfixt a mind,
Two factions turn him with each blast of wind.
Dryden. 1 Pt. Conquest of Granada, Act iii.

So Myrrha's mind, impell'd on either side,
Takes ev'ry bent, but cannot long abide;
Irresolute on which she shoud' relie,
At last unfix'd in all, is only fix'd to die.
Id. Ovid. Metam. b. x.

From all professions careless Airy flies,
For, all professions can't be good, he cries,
And here a fault, and there another views,
And lives unfix'd for want of heart to choose.
Pope. Sat. of Dr. Donne.

But to abide fixed (as it were) in their unfixedness, and steady in their restless motions; not to vary at all sensibly in the time of their revolution (so that [no] one year was ever observed to differ in an hour, or one day in a minute from another) doth it not argue a constant will directing them, and a mighty hand upholding them?
Barrow, vol. ii. Ser. 6.

So long as bodily labour continues, on so many accounts, to be necessary for the bulk of mankind, any dependency upon supernatural aid, by unfixing those motives which promote exertion, or by relaxing those habits which engender patient industry, might introduce negligence, inactivity, and disorder, into the most useful occupations of human life; and thereby deteriorate the condition of human life itself.—Paley. Natural Theology, c. 26.

UN-FLA'GGING. Not flying or hanging loose; not drooping, or failing.

That, which is carried on with a continued unflagging vigour of expression, can never be thought tedious, nor consequently long.—South, vol. iv. Ser. 1.

UN-FLA'MED, i. e. Inflamed.

2 Phy. Now with your favours I should think a vomit.
For take away the cause, the effect must follow,
The stomach's foul and fur'd, the pot's unflam'd yet.
Beaum. & Fletcher. Monsieur Thomas, Act ii. sc. 3.

UN-FLA'NKED. Not covered, protected, or defended on the flank or side.

Which thing chaunced wel for Alexander, for it was the thing that he doubted most, that they frō the higher ground should inuade the opē side of his battail, which lay unflanked towards thē.—Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 37.

UN-FLA'TTERING. Not soothing or lulling, gratifying or pleasing; by praise, or words or actions intended to please or gratify; by compliance, submission.

The neighbouring lake, which oft itself discovers,
Swell'd by the tears of her forsaken lovers;
In whose unflattering mirror, every morn,
She counsel takes how best herself t' adorn.
Sherburne. Salmacis.

Then Aristides lifts his honest front;
Spotless of heart, to whom th' unflattering voice
Of freedom gave the noblest name of just;
In pure majestic poverty rever'd;
Who, ev'n his glory to his country's weal Submitting, swell'd a haughty rival's fame.
Thomson. Winter.

UN-FLEDGED. Not feathered, or clothed or covered with feathers or plumage; not having power to fly; infantine, untried, unexperienced.

The day of my dark woes is yet but morn,
My tears but tender, and my death new-born.
Yet may these unfledg'd griefs give fate some guess,
These cradle torments have their towardness.
Crashaw. On our Lord in his Circumcision.

The nightingals instruct their young birds in song, insomuch as those which be taken unfledge out of the nest, and are nourished by man's hand, never afterwards sing so well, because they be had away before their time from schoole, and want their master of musick.
Holland. Plutarch, p. 469.

Victo. You more forget Alphonso's greater actions,
When the young hero, yet unfledg'd in arms,
Made the tough age of bold Ramirez bend.
Dryden. Love Triumphant, Act i. sc. 1.

— But as the bird
Gives to her unfledg'd brood a morsel gain'd
After long search, though wanting it herself,
So have I worn out many a sleepless night,
And waded deep through many a bloody day
In battle for their wives.—Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. ix.

UN-FLESHED. Not inured to flesh or blood, or deeds of blood; not inured or trained.

When e're I go to the field, heaven keep me from
The meeting of an unflesh'd youth, or coward,
The first, to get a name, comes on too hot,
The coward is so swift in giving ground,
There is no overtaking him.
Beaum. & Fletch. Little French Lawyer, Act i.

But as a generous, unflesh'd hound, that hears
From far the hunter's horn and cheerful cry,
So will I haste; and by the musick led,
Come up with death and honour.
Dryden. Cleomenes, Act v.

— Unflesh'd in blood
A stranger to the savage arts of life,
Death, rapine, carnage, surfeit, and disease;
The lord, and not the tyrant of the world.
Thomson. Spring.

UN-FLEXIBLE, i.e. Inflexible, (qv.)

But if ever man glory'd in an unflexible stiffness, he came not behind any.
Milton. Answer to Eikon Basilike, § 18.

UN-FLOWER, v. To strip of flowers, or flowering plants.

"Bring, bring ye Graces, all your silver flasks,
Painted with every choicest flow'r that grows,
That I may soon unflow'r your fragrant baskets,
To strow the fields with odours where he goes,
Let whatsoe'er he treads on be a rose."
G. Fletcher. Christ's Victory & Triumph.

UN-FOILED. Not baffled, not defeated.

The usurped powers thought themselves secure in the strength of an unfoild army of sixty thousand men, and in a revenue proportionable.—Temple.

UN-FOLD, v. } To remove that which en-UNFO'LDING, n. } folds, or enwraps, or encloses; UNFO'LDRESS. } to disclose, to discover, to reveal, to lay open.

But if the bulle unfolds were red among vs here,
Gour hote [word] salle be holden, als dette in that manere.
R. Brunne, p. 284.

And Peers at hus preyer, the pardon unfolds.
Piers Plouhman, p. 162.

For the paume hath power, to putten oute the joyntes
And to unfolde the fuste.
Id. p. 328.

For first he maketh promise for to hold
His ladies counceel, and it not unfolds.
Chaucer. The Court of Loue.

For I ne maie my witte unfolde
To finde o worde of that I meane,
For it is all foryete cleane.—Gower. Con. A. b. iv.

The next day they sent embassadours vnto Alexander, whom hee admitted to his presene & unfolding his woud, (whereby he thought to dyssimule ye greatnes therof) shewed his legge vnto them.
Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 190.

Vpon which ground the learned haue, not without cause, adiudged an historie to be the marrow of reason, the creame of experience, the sap of wisdom, the pith of iudgement, the librarie of knowledge, the kernell of policie, the unfolds of treacherie, &c.
Holinshed. Chron. Description of Ireland, Ep.

Gent. Now heaven forbid I should do wrong to you
My dearest wife, and madam; yet give leave
To your poor creature to unfolds himself.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Noble Gentleman, Act i.

Mar. What riddle's this? unfolds yourself, dear Robin.
B. Jonson. The Sad Shepherd, Act ii. sc. 2.

Whoe'er on this reflects, and then beholds,
With strict attention what this book unfolds,
With admiration struck, shall question who
So very long could live, so much to know?
Congreve. To Lady Gelhin.

On the 5th I received a present of three hogs, some fowls, several pieces of cloth, the largest we had seen being fifty yards long, which they unfolds and displayed so as to make the greatest shew possible.—Cook. First Voyage, b. i. c. 20.

Then at her feet with trembling hope to kneel,
Such as rapt saints and raptur'd lovers feel;
To watch the chaste *unfolding*s of her heart,
In joy to meet, in agony to part.
Crabbe. Tales of the Hall, b. vii.

UN-FOLLOWED. Not pursued, not accompanied or attended by others—going or coming after, in the train.

— No care
Of outward grace, t' amuse the poor devout;
Pow'rless, unfollow'd: scarcely men can spare
The necessary rites to set thee out.—Daniel. Musophilus.

UN-FOOL, v. To restore from the state or condition of a fool, of one fooled or gulled.

I, but if proue true (Mr. Page) have you any way then to unfoole me againe. Set downe the basket, villaine.
Shakespeare. Merry Wiues of Windsor, Act iv. sc. 2.

UN-FORBID. } Not prohibited, inter-UNFORBIDDENNESS. } dicted, commanded not to do.

— If unforbid thou maist unfold
What we, not to explore the secrets aske
Of his eternal empire, but the more
To magnifie his work, the more we know.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. vii.

The bravery you are so severe to, is no where expressly prohibited in scripture; and this unforbiddenness they think sufficient to evince, that the sumptuousness you condemn is not in its own nature sinful.—Boyle.

UN-FORCED. } Not effected by force,
UNFO'RCEDLY. } violence, or compulsion;
UNFO'RCIBLE. } not compelled or impelled by violence; not constrained.

Unforcible,—(used actively,) that cannot force or compel; weak, feeble, inefficient.

— The place it self puts on
The brow of majesty, and flings her lustre
Like the air newly light'ned; form, and order,
Are only there themselves, unforc'd, and sound,
As they were first created to this place.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Noble Gentleman, Act i. sc. 1.

Even so, we can finde in our hearts, easily to pardon a scoff, a frump, or broad jest; if it proceed from some matter, at the present delivery, or seem to come naturally, unforced, and without all heart.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 548.

It is feigned how Pluto and Proserpina, commiserating their deaths, tooke away their bodies, and raised two starres in their roome, which forthwith ascended the firmament.
This may unforcedly admit of the former interpretation.
Sandys. Ovid. Metam. b. xiii. Notes.

Amongst other memorials to keepe vs mindfull of that vow wee cannot thinke that the signe which our new baptised foreheads did there receiue is either vnfit or unforcible, the reasons hitherto alledged being weighed with indifferent ballance.—Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, b. v. § 65.

I wish them earnestly and calmly not to fall off from their first principles, nor to affect rigor and superiority over men not under them, not to compel unforcible things in religion especially, which if not voluntary, becomes a sin.
Milton. The Tenure of Kings & Magistrates.

— What hopes can Rodorick have,
That she who leaves him freely, and unforc'd,
Should ever of her own accord return?
Dryden. The Rival Ladies, Act i. sc. 2.

UN-FORDABLE. } That cannot be passed UNFO'RDED. } through; too deep to be passed through.

I am not angry with the man, who with a great deal of wit, and an unfordable stream of eloquence (excessive cour-tesie) which will ripen with his years, prosecutes what he proposeth to himself, and takes for a truth, not without some favour of modesty.
White. Answer to Vanity of Dogmatism.

Nor bits nor bridles can his rage restrain;
And rugged rocks are interpos'd in vain:
He makes his way o're mountains, and contemns
Unruly torrents and unfoorded streams.
Dryden. Virgil. Georgics, b. iii.

UN-FOREBODING. Not foretelling or telling the future.

— better read the skies.
Unnumber'd birds glide through th' aerial way,
Vagrants of air, and unforeboding stray.
Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. ii.

UN-FOREKNOWN. Not foreknown.

— If I foreknew,
Foreknowledge had no influence on their fault,
Which had no less prov'd certain unforeknown.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. iii.

UN-FORESEE/ABLE. } Not kenned, or UNFORESEE/N. } perceived before; UNFORESEE/ING. } not provided, or foreknown.

For whilst this wild, unreined multitude
(Led with an unforeseeing, greedy mind,
Of an imagin'd good, that did delude
Their ignorance, in their desires made blind)
Ransack the city.
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. vi.

By such unlikely and unforeseeable ways does providence sometimes bring about its great designs in opposition to the shrewdest conjectures and contrivances of men.
South, vol. v. Ser. 6.

— I have not time to talk,
For danger presses, danger unforeseen,
And secret as the shaft that flies by night,
Is aiming at thy life.—Rowe. Lady Jane Gray, Act iv.

Earth nourishes, of all that breathe or keep,
No creature weak as man; for while the gods
Grant him firm health and plenty, neither fear
Nor thought hath he, that he shall ever mourn:
But when the gods with evils unforeseen
Smite him, he bears them with a grudging mind.
Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. xviii.

UN-FORESKINNED. Without, not having,
the foreskin.

So had the glory of prowess been recover'd
To Palestine, won by a Philistine
From the unforeskin'd race.—Milton. Samson Agonistes.

UN-FORETHOUGHT. Not thought, considered, contemplated, conceived before.

This unfore-thought-on accident confounds
All their designs, and frustrates all their grounds.
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. vii.

UN-FOREWARNED. Not cautioned, admonished, advised, apprised before.

— Tell him withall
His danger, and from whom, what enemy
Late falln himself from heav'n, is plotting now
The fall of others from like state of bliss;
By violence, no, for that shall be withstood,
But by deceit and lies; this let him know,
Least wilfully transgressing he pretend Surprisal, unadmonisht, unforewarn'd.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. v.

UN-FORFEITED. Not done away, lost, alienated; not lost by misdeed; and, consequentially, preserved entire.

Sal. O ten times faster Venus pidgions flye
To steale loues bonds new made, then they are wont
To keepe obliged faith unforfeited.
Shakespeare. Merchant of Venice, Act ii. sc. 6.

UN-FORGIVING. } Not remitting, releas-UNFORGI'VEN. } ing; not pardoning; not yielding or resigning, (sc.) anger, resentment.

And because the head (whiche is Christe) is the chiefe membere of all, and farre more then all the rest, suche influence is from him deriued throughout his mysticall body, that euen his death may as well inwardly by charitie, as outwardly by an other wale also be applied to vs for the pardoninge of that temporal satisfactiō, which after the sacrament of penance is left unforgeuen. [Quoted from Hardinge.]—Jewell. A Replie to M. Hardinge, p. 346.

Hast. Accursed jealousy!
O merciless, wild and unforgiving fiend!
Blindfold it runs to undistinguish'd mischief,
And murders all it meets.—Rowe. Jane Shore, Act iv.

Fare thee well! and if for ever,
Still for ever, fare thee well:
Even though, unforgiving, never
'Gainst thee shall my heart rebel.
Byron. Fare Thee Well.

UN-FORGOTTEN. Not gotten forth; passed or escaped from the memory.

Clime of the unforgotten brave!
Whose land from plain to mountain-cave
Was Freedom's home or Glory's grave!
Byron. The Giaour.

UNF

UN-FORMED. Not framed, fashioned, shaped, moulded, or modelled.

And who (in time) knows whither we may vent
The treasure of our tongue? To what strange shores
This gain of our best glory shall be sent,
To enrich unknowing nations with our stores?
What words in th' yet unformed occident,
May come refin'd with th' accents that are ours?
Daniel. Musophilus.

Thus God th' Heav'n created, thus the earth,
Matter unform'd and void.—Milton. Paradise Lost, b. vii.

UN-FORSAKEN. Not quitted, left, deserted or relinquished.

They extend no farther to any sort of sins continued in or unforsaken, than as they are reconcileable with sincere endeavours to forsake them.—Hammond. On Fundamentals.

UN-FORTIFIED. Not strengthened, defended, confirmed, assured.

The lorde of the Towre was sore blamed of them of the country that he had lefte that place unfortified and unprouyded.—Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. c. 170.

—'Tis vnmanly greefe,
It shewes a will most incorrect to heauen,
A heart unfortified, a mind impatient,
An vnderstanding simple, and vnchool'd.
Shakespeare. Hamlet, Act i. sc. 2.

A Muse by these is like a mistress us'd,
This hour she's idoliz'd, the next abus'd;
While their weak heads, like towns unfortify'd,
'Twixt sense and nonsense daily change their side.
Pope. Essay on Criticism.

Pouring down upon your unfortified frontiers a fierce and irresistible cavalry, [they] become masters of your governments and your counsellors, your collectors and comptrollers, and of all the slaves that adhered to them.
Burke. Speech on Conc. with America, (1775.)

UN-FORTUNATE. } See INFORTUNE. Not UNFORTUNATELY. } happy; not lucky; not UNFORTUNATENESS. } successful or prosperous.

But being drunken with the too excessive ioy, which they had conceiued for their returning into France, or rather deprived of all foresight and consideration, without regarding the inconstancie of the winds, which change in a moment, they put themselves to sea, and with so slender victuals, that the end of their interprise became vn lucky and unfortunate.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 318.

I haue learned to be unfortunate, and it is often tymes a comforte of a mannes calamitie to know his mishap.
Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 81.

So unfortunately, that it doth appall their minds, though they had leisure: and so mischieuously that it doth exceed both the suddenness and unfortunateness of it.
Sidney. Arcadia, b. v.

Cu. The strangest marriage, and unfortunat'st bride,
That ever humane memory contain'd;
I cannot be my self for't.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Nice Valour, Act iii.

The master of the Anna Pink, was not to fail in answering the signals made by any ship of the squadron, and was to be very careful to destroy his papers and orders, if he should be so unfortunate as to fall into the hands of the enemy.
Anson. Voyages, b. i. c. 7.

Then smil'd severe; nor with a troubl'd look,
Or trembling hand, the fun'ral present took;
Ev'n kept her count'nance, when the lid remov'd,
Disclos'd the heart, unfortunately lov'd.
Dryden. Sigismonda & Guiscardo.

As soon as the boat came up, the Indians being alarmed, leaped into the sea; and Tootahah being unfortunately one of the number, the boatswain took him up, and brought him to the ship, suffering the rest of the people to swim on shore.—Cook. First Voyage, b. i. c. 11.

UN-FOUGHT. Not combatted, or battled; not contested, or striven, or engaged in battle.

For he toke mede and money of the Scottis, to thentent they myght departe pryuely by nyght, vnfought with all.
Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 18.

The French kyng harde well what he dyd, and sware, and sayd, howe they shulde neuer retourne agayne vnfought withall.—Id. Ib. c. 123.

— I would my charge were off,
Mountferrat should perceive my sister had
A brother would not live to see her dye
Unfought for, since the statutes of our state
Allow (in case of accusations)
A champion to defend a ladies truth.
Beaum. & Fletch. Knight of Malta, Act i. sc. 3.

UNF

The queen still watchful, wisely understands,
That Warwick late, who at St. Alban's fled,
(Whereas his heels serv'd better than his hands,)
Had met the duke of York, and made a head
Of many fresh and yet unfought with bands.
Drayton. Miseries of Q. Margaret.

UN-FOU'LED. See UNFILED. Not filed or polluted.

The humour and tunicles [of the eye] are purely transparent, to let in light and colours unfould and unsophisticated by any tincture.
More. Antidote against Atheism, b. ii. c. 12.

UN-FOUND. Not found, discovered or detected; not invented.

Th' invention all admir'd, and each, how hee
To be th' inventor miss'd, so easie it seem'd
Once found, which yet unfound most would haue thought Impossible.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. vi.

UN-FOUNDED. Not placed, laid deeply, firmly; not having a ground or basis to rest or stand upon; not established.

— From whom I go
This uncouth errand sole, and one or all
My self expose, with lonely steps to tread
Th' unfounded deep.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ii.

These suggestions so fall in with our consciousness, as sometimes to produce a general distrust of our faculties, and our conclusions. But this is an unfounded jealousy.
Paley. Natural Theology, c. 5.

UN-FRAME, v. } To remove, take away UNFRA'MABLE. } or destroy the form or UNFRA'MABLENESS. } fashion, shape, mould or model.

A trustie maister would wishe, that (if it could be) his scholer should forthwith take and vnderstande his wholle science, yet for a time he fourmeth & fashioneth the rude and vnframed witte with certain principles, vntill he haue brought him vp to the perfeict knowledge of his facultie.
Udal. John, c. 6.

The cause of which their disposition so vnframeable vnto societies wherein they liue, is for that they discerne not aright what place and force their seuerall kindes of lawes ought to haue in all their actions.
Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, b. i. § 16.

All those very many passages in the New Testament which either set forth the unframeableness of our nature to the doing of any thing that is good, or else ascribe our best performances to the glory of the grace of God, are so many clear confirmations of the truth.
Bp. Sanderson in Knox. Christian Philosophy.

God's wisdom and infinite knowledge foresees and debates all inconveniences antecedently to every act of volition; and so there can be no new emergent inconvenience that may unframe his resolutions and cause a change.
South, vol. xi. Ser. 10.

UN-FRANGIBLE. See INFRACT. Not to be broken.

[We say it is unreasonable that this should be changed] into that body of Christ which is in heaven, he remaining there, and being whole and impassible, and unfrangible.
Bp. Taylor. Of the Real Presence, § 11.

UN-FRAUGHT. Not filled with a load or burthen; freed from load or burthen.

Then thou dear swain, thy heav'nly load unfraught;
For she herself hath thee her speeches taught,
So near her heav'n they be, so far from human thought.
P. Fletcher. The Purple Island, c. 6.

UN-FRE'QUENT. } See INFREQUENT. Not UNFREQUENTED. } often, not usual or com-UNFRE'QUENCY. } mon.
UNFRE'QUENTLY. } To unfrequent (see the quotation from Philips,)—to quit, to forsake.

— All nations,
The seas, and unfrequented deserts, where the snow dwels, Wakens the ruin'd monuments, and there
Where nothing but eternal death and sleep is,
Informs again the dead bones.
Beaum. & Fletch. Bonduca, Act iii. sc. 2.

To which I have said some things already, when I accounted for the unfrequency of apparitions.—Glanvill. Ess. 6.

This misfortune is so very great and unfrequent, that one would think an establishment for all the poor [blind men] under it might be easily accomplished.
Spectator, No. 472.

UNF

— Their fancy represents
His mortal talons, and his ravenous beak
Destructive; glad to shun his hostile gripe,
They quit their thefts and unfrequent the fields.
J. Philips. Cider, b. i.

— But let me find
Some unfrequented shade, there lay me down,
And let forgetful dulness steal upon me,
To soften and assuage this pain of thinking.
Rowe. The Fair Penitent, Act iv.

The flight into Egypt, by Vanderwerf; one of his best: the back-ground is much cracked, an accident not unfrequent in his pictures.
Reynolds. A Journey to Holland & Flanders,

Hermes, swift bearer of the golden rod!
Whom I respect and love, thou art a guest Unfrequent here—say, wherefore hast thou come?
Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. v.

It [dislike] is sometimes inspired by unfavourable reports and misrepresentations, constituting insufferable prejudices, and not unfrequently, by some very disagreeable peculiarity of manners in the object.
Cogan. On the Passions pt i c. 2.

UN-FRE'TTED. Not worn or rubbed.

At night againe he found the paper vnfretted, and musing thereat he began to pore on the writing, which notified the earle his death, and the apprehension of the lord Thomas.
Holinshed. Chronicles of Ireland, an. 1532.

UN-FRI'ABLE. That cannot be separated, sundered, reduced to minute particles, crumbled.

The smooth surface, the elastic and unfriable nature of cartilage, render it of all substances the most proper for the place and purpose.—Paley. Natural Theology, c. 8.

Udal. James, c. 4.

But that your wills have said it must be so,
And charge me live to comfort this unfriended,
This miserable prince that cuts away
A life more worthy from him, than all women;
I should, and would die too.
Beaum. & Fletch. Two Noble Kinsmen, Act v. sc. 3.

Has not my lady sent for me yet?
Cun. Not that I hear, sure some unfriendly messenger
Is imploy'd betwixt you.
Id. Wit at Several Weapons, Act v.

But by the troubles and unfriendliness of the world he gains this, that when they abound most upon him, he then feels himself a stranger, and remembers to behave as such, and thinks often with much delight and strong desires on his own country, and the rich and sure inheritance that lies there, and the ease and rest he shall have when he comes thither.—Leighton. Com. on 1 Pet. ii. 11.

But to covet to obtain what is another man's by just means, and with his consent, when it may contribute to the happiness of ourselves or families, and perhaps of the other person too, has nothing surely that looks unfriendly upon truth, or is blameable, in it.
Wollaston. Religion of Nature, s. 6.

Every day we see those who are possessed by this evil spirit, [anger] return monstrous acts of injustice for slight instances of neglect or unfriendliness.—Secker, vol. iii. Ser. 4.

UN-FRIGH'TED. Not scared or terrified.

But they unfrighted passe, though many a privie
Spake to them louder than the oxe in Livia.

The unfruitfulness of Hannah had never with so much despite been laid to her dish, if her husbands heart had not been as barren of love to her.

Bp. Hall. Cont. Hannah & Peninnah.

Compassion checks my spleen, yet Scorn denies
The tears a passage thro' my swelling eyes;
To laugh or weep at sins might idly show
Unheeded passion, or unfruitful woe.—Pope, Sat. 3.

The Gentiles again are reminded, that if the natural branches were not spared, because of their unfruitfulness, much less should they be spared, who were aliens to the Jewish stock, if they should prove unfruitful.

Gilpin, vol. iv. Illustrations by St. Paul.

UN-FULFILLED. Not completed or accomplished; not performed completely.

To the extent that he would leaue no one poynt of hu-militie or of righteousness unfulfilled: thought no disdeigne to come with the residue of folkes vnto baptism.

Udal. Luke, c. 3.

Had authority prevail'd here, the fourth part of the earth had been yet unknown, and Hercules Pillars had still been the worlds ne ultra: Seneca's prophesie had been an unfulfill'd prediction, and one moiety of our globes an empty hemisphere.—Glanvill, Ess. 1.

UN-FUMED. Not fumed or fumigated, or Men prize the thing ungain'd, more then it is.

Shakespeare. Troyl. & Cress. Act i. sc. 2.

Fond man, Musophilus, that thus dost spend
In an ungainful art thy dearest days,
Tiring thy wits, and toiling to no end,
But to attain that idle smoke of praise!

Daniel. Musophilus.

This is the impression of that humbling spirit, which proud heathen nature was never stamp't with, for 'twas not so much their ignorance in which they offended God (though that was also full of guilt, as hath been proved) as their misusing of their knowledge to ungainly ends.

Hammond, vol. iv. Ser. 13.

Flora had a little beauty, and a great deal of wit; but then she was so ungainly in her behaviour, and such a laughing hoyden!—Tatler, No. 13.

Flip. Me!

Don't I speak to be understood?

Vanburgh. The Confederacy, Act i. sc. 1.

UN-GA'NSAID. Not said or spoken against, not contradicted or denied.

The pope may as well boast his ungainsaid authority to them that will believe that all his contradicters were either irreligious or heretical.

Milton. Animad. on the Remonstrants' Defence, § 1.

UN-GA'LLED. Not chafed, fretted, vexed, hurt.

Ham. Why let the stricken deere go weepe,

The hart ungalled play:

For some must watch, while some must sleepe;
So runnes the world away.

And dwell vpon your graue when you are dead.

Shakespeare. Comedie of Errors, Act iii. sc. 1.

UN-GA'RNISHED. Not furnished, decked, adorned.

And he that now for haste snatches up a plain ungarnish'd present as a thank-offering to thee, which could not be deferr'd in regard of thy so many late deliverances wrought for us one upon another, may then perhaps take up a harp, and sing thee an elaborate song to generations.

Milton. Animad. on the Remonstrants' Defence, § 4.

UN-GA'RRISONED. Not provided or furnished, (sc.) with means, with force, for defence.

On the north side it has an old Turkish ungarrisoned castle.—Maundrell. Travels, p. 48.

UN-GA'RTERED. Not girded; not surrounded or secured with a band.

But I pardon you for that, for simply your hauing in beard, is a yonger brothers reuennue: then your hose should be ungarter'd, your bonnet vnbande'd, your sleeue vnbutton'd, your shoo vnti'de, and euerie thing about you demonstrate a carelesse desolation.

Shakespeare. As You Like It, Act iii. sc. 2.

Lord Hamlet with his doublet all vnbrac'd
No hat vpon his head, his stockings foul'd, Ungartered, and downe giued to his ankle.

Id. Hamlet, Act ii. sc. 1.

With olives ever green the ground is strow'd,
And grapes ungather'd shed their gen'rous blood.

Dryden. Ovid Metam. b. viii.

UN-GA'UGED. Not measured or calculated.

What greater evil can I wish my foe
Than his full draught of pleasure, from a cask
Unbroach'd by just authority, ungaug'd
By temperance, by reason unrefin'd?

Young. The Complaint, Night 8.

UN-GE'NERALLED. A coinage by Fuller, who explains his own meaning.

I mean, that, having gained better intelligence from some Welsh antiquaries (whereof that principality affordeth many) these persons may be ungeneral'd, and impaled in their particular counties.—Fuller. Worthies. General.

UN-GE'NERATED. } Not begotten, or UNGE'NITURED. } borne into existence;
not procreated.

But such is the infinite wisdom of God, as he foresaw that the earth could not have contained mankind; or else, that millions of souls must have been ungenenerated, and have had no being, if the first number, wherewith the earth was replenished, had abode thereon for ever.

Raleigh. History of the World, b. i. c. 4.

Duke. Why should he die, sir?

Luc. Why? for filling a bottle with a tunne dish: I would the duke we talke of were return'd againe; this ungenitur'd

Shakespeare. Measure for Measure, Act iii. sc. 2.

UN-GE'NEROUS. Not noble, magnanimous, liberal.

I thought it would be ungenenerous now to attack him in his weakest hold, after he had himself betrayed a suspicion, at least, that he could no longer maintain it.

Waterland. Works, vol. ii. p. 283.

Nothing more would be unworthy of this nation, than with a mean and mechanical rule, to mete out the splendour of the crown. Indeed I have found very few persons disposed to so ungenenerous a procedure.

Burke. On the Present Discontents, (1770.)

UN-GE'NIAL. Not belonging, or according, or agreeable, or favourable to nature; not natural,
not kind.

Milton. Apology for Smectymnuus, Introd.

Yet she her weary limbes would neuer rest,
But euery hill and dale, each wood and plaine
Did search, sore grieved in her gentle brest,
He so ungently left her, whom she loued best.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 2.

In case he do it for the common-wealth and the state, and for the country and place where he liveth, it cannot be accounted a vile or ungentleman-like service, but a great credit even to be serviceable, ready, and diligent to execute the meanest functions that be.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 300.

After a cautelous and subtil manner they insinuate themselves and get between them and home, and so defraud and cousen them ungentlemanly of their parents love, which is the greatest and fairest portion of their inheritance.

Id. Ib. p. 148.

Her woeful story, fain she wou'd have told
With hands upheld, but had no hands to hold.
Her head to her ungentle keeper bow'd,
She strove to speak, she spoke not, but she low'd.

Dryden. Ovid. Metam. b. i.

UN-GHO'STLY. Not spiritual, or of a holy spirit.

Cōpare. I saye, these ioyful cryinges with the unghostly acclamacions, wherwith the multitude of flatterers crye vpon an vngracious Jewish bishop, saying: God send the most holy father in God, long life.—Udal. Marke, c. 11.

The word incest is not a scripture word, but wholly heathen; and signified amongst them all unchast and for-bidden marriages, such which were not allowed by law and honor: an inauspicious conjunction, in which their goddess of love was not president; marriages made without her girdle, and so ungirt, unblest'd.

Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. ii. c. 2.

UN-GLAD. Not cheerful or rejoicing; not happy.

And wearing virtue's livry's smile,
Prone the distressed to relieve,
And little trespasses forgive.—Green. The Spleen.

UN-GLO'RIFIED. Not having or receiving, giving or paying—honour or praise: without honour or praise.

But I am sure glorified or unglorified, yf hee sayed it hee is able to dooe it.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 839.

God is the glass; as thou, when thou dost see Him, who sees all, seest all concerning thee:
So, yet unglorified, I comprehend
All, in these mirrors of thy ways and end.

Donne. Obseq. on Ld. Harrington.

Neuerthelesse, lest God should bee any way unglorified, the greatest part of our daily seruice they know consisteth according to the blessed apostles owne precise rule, in much varietie of psalmnes and hymnes, for no other purpose, but only that out of so plentifull a treasure there might be for euery mans heart to chuse out his owne sacrifice, and to offer vnto God by particular secret instinct, what fitteth best the often occasions which any seuerall either partie or congregation may seeme to haue.

Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, b. v. § 43.

UN-GLOVE, v. To remove or take off that covering of the hand called a glove. See GLOVE.

salvation in heaven, unglue thyself from the world and the vanities of it.—Bp. Hall. Christ Mystical, § 24.

UN-GLU'TTED. Not satiate or saturated, not cloyed.

While Vengeance ponder'd o'er new plans of pain,
And stanch'd the blood she saves to shed again—
But drop by drop, for Seyd's ungluttled eye
Would doom him ever dying—ne'er to die!

Byron. The Corsair, s. 8.

UN-GOD, v. } To strip or divest of the UNGO'DLY. } God-head or divinity or divine UNGO'DLINESS. } nature.

Ungodly,—not due or just to God; not according to, or becomingly reverent towards God; not pious, or holy, or righteous.

He that vseth not his owne, well and charitably, hath much to aunswere for, and shall they be thought not vniust, who not onely take away other mens, but also misvse and waste the same ungodlye?

Sir J. Cheeke. The Hurt of Sedition.

Let these therefore be examples set forth, for all kingis, that in the feare of God and for the loue of Cryste they might lerne to auoyde the horrible and terrible plagis of their ungodlynes.—Joye. Expositio of Daniel, c. 11.

Oh, were we waken'd by this tyranny
T' ungod this child again, it could not be
I should love her, who loves not me.

Donne. Love's Deity.

For now this absent lord out of his land,
Gave time to them at home, that had in hand
Th' ungodly work, and knew the season when.

Daniel. Civil Wars, b. 1.

The main drift and purport of which is, to represent the liberal exercising of bounty and mercy, to be the necessary duty, the ordinary practice, and the proper character of a truly pious man; so that performing such acts is a good sign of true piety; and omitting them is a certain argument of ungodliness.—Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 31.

God cannot fail on his part, without violating his truth and justice, which would be to destroy his own being, and un-god himself.—Scott. Christian Life, pt. ii. c. 7.

But I think it is upon such principles, as will leave you no pretence from scripture to object Tritheism to others; nor any just ground for insisting, as you generally do, upon the strict force of the exclusive terms, in order to ungod the Son.—Waterland. Works, vol. i. p. 57.

But if Shimei, or a better man, without commission, should presume to denounce curses, he would thereby prove himself an ungodly wretch and a grievous transgressor.

Id. Ib. vol. v. p. 208.

UN-GOOD. } Not virtuous or holy, just or UNGOO'DLY. } righteous.

Thus euer Loue alas, and that is routh,
His false lieges forthereth what he may,
And sleeth the trewe ungoodly day by day.

Chaucer. Com. of the Black Knight.

The vice of them that ben ungood
Is no repreefe vnto the good.

Gower. Con. A. Prol.

Whiche thyng my sonne I the forbode.
For it is an ungoodly dede.
For who that taketh by robberie
His loue, he maie not iustifie
His cause.

Id. Ib. b. v.

UN-GO'RED. See UNGORGED.

UN-GO'RGED. Not gluttonously crammed or fed; not glutted. Present reading of Shakespeare is ungored; q. d. not stabbed, or pierced, or wounded.

But in my termes of honor
I stand aloofe, and will no reconcilment,
Till by some elder masters of knowne honor,
I haue a voyce, and president of peace
To keepe my name ungorg'd.

The hell-hounds, as ungorg'd with flesh and blood
Pursue their prey, and seek their wonted food.

Dryden. Theodore & Honoria.

UNG

UN-GO'SPEL-LIKE. Not like or resembling the gospel; or good tidings.

Smothering and extinguishing the spiritual force of his bodily weakness in the discipline of his church with the boistrous and carnal tyranny of an undue, unlawful, and un-gospel-like jurisdiction.

Milton. The Reason of Church Government, b. ii.

UN-GOT. } Not gained, acquired, reached,
UNGO'TTEN. } attained; not borne, produced, procreated.

Whilst Somerset with main endeavour lay
To get his giv'n (but ungot) government,
The stout Calisians (bent another way)
Fiercely repel him, frustrate his intent.

Daniel. Civil Wars, b. vii.

O malecontent, seducing guest,
Contriver of our greatest woes,
Which born of wind, and fed with shows,
Dost nurse thyself in thine unrest,
Judging ungotten things the best.—Id. Cleopatra, Cho.

First hath this woman
Most wrongfully accus'd your substitute,
Who is as free from touch, or soyle with her
As she from one ungot.

Shakespeare. Measure for Measure, Act v. sc. 1.

UN-GOVERNED. } Not ruled, or regu-UNGO'VERNABLE. } lated, or subject to rule, UNGO'VERNABLY. } guidance, or control;
not guided or directed, kept in subjection or obedience.

Take heed you do not cause the blessing leave you,
With your ungovern'd haste.

B. Jonson. The Alchemist, Act ii. sc. 1.

From hence many times come heresies, when men pretending to greatness of wit, and learning, but in truth of haughty and ungovernable spirits, either upon the score of vain glory and reputation, or upon some conceived affront or neglect from the orthodox, set up for themselves, draw parties to them, and begin a scheme of religion of their own devising.—Hale. Cont. Of Humility.

For great intemperance and ungoverned passions, not only incapacitate a man to perform his duty; but also expose him to run headlong into the commission of the greatest enormities.—Clarke. On the Evidences, Prop. 1.

Heavens! how unlike their Belgic sires of old!
Rough, poor, content, ungovernably bold;
War in each breast, and freedom on each brow;
How much unlike the sons of Britain now!

Goldsmith. The Traveller.

Daughter of Jove! shall thou and I survey
For ever unconcern'd, yon dreadful scene,
The sons of Greece all perishing, destroy'd
By one ungovern'd maniac?

Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. viii.

UN-GRAC'ED. } Not favoured, honoured,
UNGRA'CEFUL. } dignified, adorned; not UNGRA'CEFULLY. } endowed with pleasing UNGRA'CEFULNESS. } qualities or manners; not polished or elegant, or elegantly easy.

Come, be valiant, sister,
She that dares not stand the push o' th' court, dares nothing,
And yet come off ungraced.

Beaum. & Fletch. The Loyal Subject, Act iii. sc. 2.

No, no; unsparing Time will proudly send
A warrant unto wrath, that with one frown
Will all these mock'ries of vain-glory rend,
And make them (as before) ungrac'd, unknown.

Daniel. Musophilus.

For when that men of merit go ungrac'd,
And by her fautors ignorance held in,
And parasites in good men's rooms are plac'd,
Only to sooth the highest in their sin,
From those whose skill and knowledge is debas'd,
There many strange enormities begin.

Drayton. The Barons' Wars, b. iv.

To whom thus Raphael answer'd heav'nly meek.
Nor are thy lips ungraceful. Sire of men,
Nor tongue ineloquent.—Milton. Paradise Lost, b. viii.

Your crowded plains,
Void of their cities; unadorn'd your hills;
Ungrac'd your lakes; your ports to ships unknown.

Thomson. Liberty.

I find I am not in the humour for telling a tale; and nothing in nature is so ungraceful as story-telling against the grain.—Tatler, No. 2.

These copiers of men, like those of authors and painters, run into affectations of some oddness, which perhaps was not disagreeable in the original, but sits ungracefully on the narrowed-soul-transcriber.—Spectator, No. 432.

UNG

Every one's natural genius should be carried as far as it could, but to attempt the putting another upon him, will be but labour in vain; and what is so plaster'd on, will at least sit but untowardly, and have always hanging to it the ungracefulness of constraint and affectation.

Locke. Of Education, § 66.

Stranger, not ungraceful is thy speech,
Who hast but vindicated in our ears
Thy question'd prowess.

Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. viii.

The child paid no attention to the neat finishing or naturalness of any bit of drapery, but appeared to observe only the ungracefulness of the persons represented, and put herself in the posture of every figure which she saw in a forced and awkward situation.—Reynolds, vol. ii. Disc. 11.

UN-GRAC'IOUS. } Not favoured; not UNGRA'CIOUSLY. } favourable, kind, or UNGRA'CIOUSNESS. } pleasing, agreeable or lively.

greuously offended, heapyng synne vpon synne, howe shall he so lyghtly haue mercy vpon me.

Fisher. Seuen Psalmes, Ps. 51. pt. i.

And for all his falshed bothe before that in thefte and than in treason to, Christe abode stil with him among his other apostles: and his vnggraciouslynes letted not, but that of that companye (as euyl as hee was) yet one he was.

Sir T. More. Workes, p. 1311.

Now let the woman turne to her selfe, and consider her owne vnggraciousnes, she shal feare and abhorre her selfe, nor take rest day nor night.

Vives. Instruction of a Christian Woman, b. i. c. 7.

Yet n'ould she stent
Her bitter rayling and foule revilement,
But still provok't her sonne to wreake her wrong;
But nathelesse he did her still torment,
And catching hold of her vnggracious tongue,
Thereon an iron lock did fasten firme and strong.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 4.

A sinful hatred is a state of ungraciousness with God, and sin is possessed of our love and choice.

Bp. Taylor. On Repentance, c. 5. § 3.

Have thy children a due sense of religion? they will be pleased that thou hast made a pious disposal of such a part of thy fortunes, as will sanctify and secure the rest to them:
are they ungracious and dissolute? thou hast the less reason in thy charitable distributions to regard them.

Atterbury, vol. ii. Ser. 7.

They are unavoidably drawn, by the alacrity of their own heaviness, into the very centers of Malmesbury and Rome; from whence indeed they derived their birth; but are I know not how, ungraciously ashamed of their progenitors.

Warburton. Alliance, b. i.

UN-GRAMMA'TICAL. } Not according or UNGRAMMA'TICALLY. } agreeable to the rules of grammar.

It seems a great folly to declaim against us for denying the literal, natural sence, and yet that themselves should expound it in a sence which suffers a violence and a most unnatural, ungrammatical torture.

Bp. Taylor. Real Presence, § 5.

Yet it must be allow'd to the present age, that the tongue in general is so much refined since Shakespear's time, that many of his words, and more of his phrases, are scarce intelligible. And of those which we understand some are un-grammatical, others coarse; and his whole stile is so pester'd with figurative expressions, that it is as affected as it is obscure.—Dryden. Troil. & Cres. Pref.

Pardon me, sir, but I could not help blushing for two or three gentlemen in gold chains, who expressed themselves ungrammatically and vulgarly on the commonest subjects.

Knox. Winter Evenings, Even. 66.

UN-GRANT'ED. Not given or bestowed, conceded or yielded.

This only from your goodness let me gain;
(And this ungranted, all rewards are vain.)

UN-GRATEFUL. } Not pleasing or agree-UNGRA'TEFULLY. } able; not kind or re-UNGRA'TEFULNESS. } turning kindness; not willing or desirous to return favour or kindness;
not thankful.

Then the Macedōs repented that euer they had denyed him diuine honours: confessing them selues bothe wicked & vnggratefull for depriving him of any name, wherof he was worthy.—Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 301.

He (considering the ungratefulness of the message, and doubting what entertainment he was like to have from a proud, and (as he might think) an obdurate city) diverts another way, and flees towards Tarshish.—Glanvill, Ser. 9.

As fruits, ungrateful to the planter's care,
On savage stocks inserted, learn to bear;
The surest virtues thus from passions shoot,
Wild Nature's vigour working at the root.

Pope. Essay on Man, Ep. 2.

Alm. My lord, mine eyes ungratefully behold
The gilded trophies of exterior honours.
Nor will my ears be charm'd with sounding words,
Or pompous phrase.—Congreve. Mourning Bride, Act 1.

Dr. Hartley has arranged the passions under five grateful and five ungrateful ones. The grateful ones are love, desire, hope, joy, and pleasing recollection; the ungrateful are hatred, aversion, fear, grief, displeasing recollection.

Cogan. On the Passions, c. 1. § 2.

UN-GRATIFIED. Not pleased.

By the justice now
Of thine own rule, I should begin with thee,
I should turn thee away ungratified
For all thy former kindness, forget
Thou ever didst me any service.

Beaum. & Fletch. Honest Man's Fortune, Act i.

UN-GRAVED. Not placed, not buried in a grave; not cut or carved.

And alle Rome renners. for robbers in Fraunce
Bere no sulver over see. that kynges sygne sheweth
Neither grave ne ungrave. of gold ne of sulver.

Piers Plouhman, p. 70.

And after hard conditions of peace,
His realm, nor life desired may he brook;
But fall before his time ungraved amid the sands.

Surrey. Virgile. Æneis, b. 1v.

UN-GRAVELY. Not seriously.

But your loues
Thinking vpon his seruices, tooke from you
Th' apprehension of his present portance,
Which most gibingly, vnggrauely, he did fashion
After the inueterate hate he beares you.

Shakespeare. Coriolanus, Act ii. sc. 3.

UN-GROUND. Not bruised or crushed, (sc.
as in a mill.)

Shall the sayls of my love stand still?

Shall the grists of my hopes be unground?

Beaum. & Fletch. Maid in the Mill, Act v. sc. 2.

UN-GROUNDED. } Not founded, esta-UNGROUNDEDLY. } blished on firm founda-UNGROUNDEDNESS. } tion, fixed or settled on a firm basis.

The scrupel or spyced conscience that he hath in the matter, is concerning ye breake of her promyse made to God, and that putteth he in here, vngroundedly, doubtfully, hypocritically, and vtterly agaynst hymselfe.

Bale. Apologie, fol. 85.

Who sees not what spirits of error are gone forth into the world, for the seducing of simple and ungrounded souls?

Bp. Hall. The Great Myst. of Godliness, Ep.

The nullitie of that which a iudge doth by way of autho-ritie without authoritie, is knowne to all men, and agreed vpon with full consent of the whole world, euery man receiueth it as a generall edict of nature, whereas the nullitie of baptisme in regard of the like defect, is onely a few mens new vngrounded and as yet vnapprooued imagination.—Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, b. v. § 62.

Yet let me arreed him, not to be the fireman of any mis-judg'd opinion, unless his resolutions be firmly seated in a square and constant mind, not conscious to it self of any deserved blame, and regardless of ungrounded suspicions.

Milton. Doct. & Disc. of Divorce. To the Parliament.

Neither shall it be displeasing to your majesty, that your most honourable peers, and most faithful commons now assembled, shall see the injustice and ungroundedness of that bold appeal which was made to them by my daring answerers.

Bp. Hall. Def. of the Humble Remonstrants, Ep. Ded.

UN-GROWN. Not arrived at mature growth, at maturity or strength.

How dare I then forsake my well set-bounds,
Whose new-cut pipe as yet but harshly sounds;
A narrow compass best my ungrown muse empounds.

P. Fletcher. The Purple Island, c. 6.

UNG

UN-GRUDGED. } Not grieved, fretted, or UNGRUDGINGLY. } repined; given or bestowed without envy or regret, as being too good, too great a gift.

For, when that cross ungrudg'd unto you sticks,
 Then are you to yourself a crucifix.—Donne. The Cross

But if, when all his art and time is spent,
 He say 'twill ne'er be found, yet be content;
 Receive from him the doom ungrudgingly,
 Because he is the mouth of Destiny.—Id. Elegy 12.

UN-GUARDED. } Not looked after,
UNGUARDEDLY. } watched, observed, preserved, protected.

I lov'd you once for virtue, and have not
 A thought so much unguarded, as to be won From my truth, and innocence with any Motives of state to affect you.

Beaum. & Fletcher. The Coronation, Act iv.

The sound whereof no sooner heard, but huge havoc begins upon the sleeping and unguarded enemy.

Milton. Hist. of England, b. i.

Thy words have met with an unguarded side,
 And pierce ev'n thro' my soul.

Rowe. Ambitious Step-Mother, Act v.

As when he finds a flock unguarded, sheep
 Or goats, the lion rushes on his prey,
 With such unsparing force Tydides smote
 The men of Thrace.—Couper. Homer. Iliad, b. x.

If you find that you have a hastiness in your temper, which unguardedly breaks out into indiscreet sallies, watch.

Chesterfield.

UNGUENT. } Fr. Onguent; It. Unguento; UNGUINOUS. } Sp. Unguento; Lat. Unguentum, from ungere (unum agere. See ANOINT.)

Ointment; a compound of substances, one of which is oily or greasy.

And if a man make a gash or incision in any of them,
 they yield from within a certain bloody liquor, or gum, yea, and there issueth from the torch staves made of them, an oylous humour, which shineth again, because they are so fatty and unguinous.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 554.

Who would not take offence, to see a face
 All daub'd, and dripping with the melted grease
 And tho' your unguents bear th' Athenian name,
 The wool's unsav'ry scent is still the same.

Congreve. Ovid. Art of Love, b. iii.

Soon as the water in the singing brass
 Simmer'd, they bath'd him; and with limpid oil
 Anointed; filling, next, his ruddy wounds
 With unguent mellow'd by nine circling years,
 They stretch'd him on his bed.

Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. xviii.

UN-GUESSED. Not conjectured, supposed, or suspected.

He me sent, for cause to me unguessed.—Spenser.

The lordly Angus by her side
 In courtesy to cheer her tried;
 He deemed she shuddered at the sight
 Of warriors met for mortal fight,
 But cause of terror all unguessed
 Was fluttering in her gentle breast.

Scott. Lay of the Last Minstrel, c. 5.

UN-GUEST-LIKE. Not like one fed, feasted, entertained—as a guest.

Herod had been long time married to the daughter of Aretas king of Petra, till happening on his journey towards Rome to be entertain'd at his brother Philip's house, he cast his eye unlawfully and unguestlike upon Herodias there, the wife of Philip.—Milton. Tetrachordon.

UN-GUIDED. Not taught, not kept, (sc.)
 in the right way; not directed, ruled; not steered right.

Ha. The world's a labyrinth, where unguided men
 Walk up and down to find their weariness;
 No sooner have we measured with much toil
 One crooked path with hope to gain our freedom,
 But it betrays us to a new affliction.

Beaum. & Fletcher. Night-Walker, Act iv.

"A stately palace he forthwith did build,
 Whose intricate innumerable ways,
 With such confused errors, so beguill'd
 Th' unguided ent'ers with uncertain strays,
 And doubtful turnings kept them in delays."

Daniel. Comp. of Rosamond.

His own example is a flame so bright;
 That he, who but arrives to copy wel.
Unguided will advance; unknowing will excel.

Dryden. To the Earl of Roscommon.

UNH

UN-GUILTY. } Not beguiled (sc.) to wrong;
UNGUILTNESS. } not having committed wrong, evil or iniquity; any crime or sin.

He procured some of them to murder the king; and after put all the said Scots and Picts to death, as well the guiltie as the unguiltie.

Holinshed. Hist. of Scotland. Dongall II.

Among other things also used in the time of the Saxons, it shall not be amisse to set downe the forme of their Ordalian law, which they brought hither with them from beyond the seas onelie in the trial of guiltie and unguilt- nesse.—Id. Description of England, b. ii.

—Ne her unguiltie age

Did weene, vnwares, that her vnluckie lot
 Lay hidden in the bottome of the pot.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 2.

"Stay here thy foot, thy yet unguiltie foot,
 That can'st not stay when thou art further in."

Daniel. Civil Wars, b. i.

[Posthumia] more boldly peradventure than became a maiden of her profession, was so deeply suspected of incon-tinence, that she was brought judicially into question, about it, howbeit found unguiltie and acquit she was.

Holland. Plutarch, p. 198.

UN-GY'VED. Freed from fetters; also, from handcuffs or manacles.

The prince beinge aduertised, and incensed by lyghte persones aboute him, in furious rage came hastily to the barre, where his suruāt stode as a prisoner, and commaunded hym to be ungyued and set at libertie.

Sir T. Elyot. The Governour, b. ii. c. 6.

UN-HABILE. See INHABILITY. That may not be used, unfit for use; unfit, unsuitable.

Thus if irregularity be ipso facto incur'd, the offending person is bound in conscience not to accept a benefice or execute an office to which by that censure he is made unhabile and unapt.

Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. iii. c. 2.

UN-HABITABLE. } Also written Inha- UNHA'BITED. } bitable and Uninhabitable.
 See UNINHABITABLE.

The pastures without cattell, and the aire without fowles, and the whole prouince for the most part desolate and unhabited, sauing townes and cities.

Holinshed. Conquest of Ireland, Ep. Ded.

For though the course of the sun be curbed between the tropicks, yet are not those parts directly subject to his perpendicular beams, either unhabitable, or extremely hot, as the ancients fansied.—Ray. On the Creation, pt. ii.

UN-HA'CKED. Not cut or chopped, maimed by cutting or chopping.

Our cannons malice vainly shall be spent
 Against th' invulnerable clouds of heauen,
 And with a blessed and vn-vested retyre,
 With vnhack'd swords, and helmets all vnbruised,
 We will beare home that lustie blood againe.

Shakespeare. K. John, Act ii. sc. 1.

—Then, to send

Measures of wheate to Rome; this greed vpon,
 To part with vnhackt edges, and beare backe
 Our targes vndinted.

Id. Anthony & Cleopatra, Act ii. sc. 6.

UN-HA'ILED. Not saluted.

No voice of chearful salutation chear'd him,
 None wish'd his arms might thrive, or bade God speed
 him;
 But thro' a staring ghastly looking crowd,
Unhail'd, unblest'd with heavy heart he went.

Rowe. Lady Jane Gray, Act iii.

UN-HAIR, v. To strip off or remove the hair.

Hence horrible villaine, or Ile spurne thine eyes
 Like balls before thee: Ile vnhaire thine head.

Shakespeare. Anthony & Cleopatra, Act ii. sc. 5.

UN-HA'LOWED. Not sanctified, consecrated, devoted or dedicated (sc. to holy purposes).
 To unhallow,—to desecrate; to apply to unholy purposes.

Ac vorth chyrche vnhalwed was, theruor hym was wo.

R. Gloucester, p. 349.

But nowe wyll not Tyndal sette a strawe the more by the annoynting with holie oyle, then by smeryng with vn- halowed butter, but yf menne tell hym some farther thing therby that maye edify his soule and make it better.

Sir T. More. Workes, p. 375.

Shall we esteem and reckon how it heeds
 Our works, that his own vows unhalloweth?

Daniel. Musophilus.

Vile traitors, hold off your unhallow'd hands,
 His brow vpon it majesty still bears.

Drayton. The Barons' Wars, s. 36.

UNH

Stay, what art thou, that in this strange attire, Dar'st kindle stranger and unhallow'd fire Upon this altar?—B. Jonson. K. James's Entertainment.

The mystical and blessed unity of marriage can be no way more unhallow'd and profan'd, than by the forcible uniting of such disunions and separations.

Milton. Tetrachordon.

But this king, not content with that which, although in a thing holy, is no holy theft, to attribute to his own making other men's whole prayers, hath as it were unhallow'd and unchristen'd the very duty of prayer it self, by borrowing to a Christian use prayers offer'd to a heathen God.

Id. Answer to Eikon Basilike, § 1.

By the invocation of his [God] name, all our actions, it seems, are unhallowed and profane, if not accompanied with devotion.—Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 1.

UN-HAND, v. } To remove, to loose, to set UNHA'NDLED. } free from, hold or seizure.
Unhanded,—not touched, or used to the hand,
 not managed.

Evad. Unhand me, and learn manners, such another Forgetfulness forfeits your life.

Beaum. & Fletcher. The Maid's Tragedy, Act iv.

Ros. Child of my flesh,
 And not of my fair unspotted mind,
Un-hand this monster.

Id. Sea-Voyage, Act ii.

For doe but note a wilde and wanton heard
 Or race of youthful and vnhandled colts,
 Fetching mad bounds, bellowing and neighing loud.

Shakespeare. Merchant of Venice, Act v. sc. 1.

—Cardinall Campeius,
 Is stolne away to Rome, hath 'tane no leaue,
 Has left the cause o' th' king vnhandled, and
 Is posted as the agent of our Cardinall,
 To second all his plot.—Id. Hen. VIII. Act iii. sc. 2.

UN-HANDSOME. } Not handily or dex-UNHA'NDSOMELY. } terously made or done; UNHA'NDSOMENESS. } not suited, or becoming,
 or convenient; not graceful, liberal, ingenuous;
 not well-favoured.

Now at his last goyng, whan he to Gascoyn went,
 Ge sette a certeyn thing, at gaur bothe assent,
 & that suld holden be. euer withouten ende,
 Thoub brak that certeynte wikkedly & vnhende.

R. Brunne, p. 259.

Our men taking weapon quicklye draue theym back into the woods, and after they had slayne a great number of them, they folowed them so farre in somewhat vnhandsome places, that they lost a few of their company.

Goldinge. Caesar, fol. 83.

Ye hold your enemy in a place vnhandsome and of disad-uantage.—Id. Ib. fol. 151.

—I know she loves him,
 His memory beyond the hope of —
 Beyond the Indies in his mouldy cabinets,
 But 'tis her unhandsome fate.

Beaum. & Fletcher. Night Walker, Act i.

Then the intermedial evil to a wise and religious person is like unhandsome and ill-tasted physick, it is against nature in the taking and in its operating.

Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. i. c. 5.

And this was not unhandsomely intimated by the word sometimes used by the Greek church, calling the publick liturgie Εὐχολογίον κοινάκιον, which signifies prayers, made for the use of the idiotæ, or private persons, as the word is contradistinguished, from the rulers of the church.

Id. Set Forms of Liturgie, § 92.

Then we shall see things as they are, the evil circumstances and the crooked intentions, the adherent unhand- someness and the direct crimes.—Id. vol. i. Ser. 3.

Let our actions to God and their circumstances be supposed to be done towards men, and we should scorn ourselves; and how then can we expect God should not scorn us, and reject our prayer, when we have done all the dishonour to him and with all the unhandsomeness in the world?

Id. Ib. Ser. 4.

Why all this shifting and shuffling, if a man were not conscious of a bad cause, and of his acting an unhandsome part?—Waterland. Works, vol. v. p. 304.

You would be very unwilling to hear those, whom you respect, unhandsomely spoken of: therefore speak unhand- somely of no one, whom it is possible any other person may respect.—Secker, vol. iv. Ser. 13.

UN-HANG, v. To remove from a hanging or pendant position.
Unhanged,—not suspended or depended.

Some in Parys sayde; it is pytle these vnthriftes be vn- hanged or drowned, for tellyng of suche lies.

Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. c. 218.

Their cables do oftentimes breake, and their ruthers are unchanged, the cause thereof is by reason the shippes doe ride but in little water, yet goeth there a great sea.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 552.

Wicked swaines, that beare me spight,
In the gloomy vaile of night,
Of my fold will draw the pegges,
Or else breake my lambkins' legges:
Or unhang my weather's bell.

Browne. Shepheard's Pipe, Ecl. 1.

UN-HAP. } Not having or bringing (good)
UNHA'PPY. } luck or fortune; not lucky,
UNHA'PPIED. } or fortunate, or successful; UNHA'PPILY. } feeling the consequences of UNHA'PPINESS. } bad fortune or calamity; calamitous, wretched, miserable.

Whan thei had slayn & brent, robbed toun & feld,
To Dunbar alle thei went, als ther unhap wild.

R. Brunne, p. 273.

Fabyan. Chronycle, an. 1312.

This vnhappy wether for the Englisshemen fell well for them in the cyte, who toke no hede of that bushment, for they were nat ware therof.

Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 340.

Sir, ye may se the *vnhappy*nes of them of this coultre and their nature.—Id. Ib. c. 392.

In a pelting chafe he flings me the sponge-full of colors that he had wiped out, full against that unhappy place of the table which had put him to all this trouble: but see what came of it! the sponge left the colours behind, in better order than hee could have laid them, and in truth, as well as his heart could wish.

Holland. Plinie, b. xxxv. c. 10.

You haue mis-led a prince, a royall king,
A happie gentleman in blood, and lineaments,
By you vnhappyed, and disfigur'd cleane.

Shakespeare. Rich. II. Act iii. sc. 1.

Worc'ster (who had escap'd unhappily
His death in battle) on a scaffold dies.

Daniel. Civil Wars, b. iv.

Fortune her gifts may variously dispose,
And these be happy call'd, unhappy those;
By Heav'n's just balance equal will appear,
While those are plac'd in Hope, and these in Fear.

Pope. Essay on Man, Ep. 4.

Since no retreat can be impervious to his eye, no corner so much out of the way, as not to be within his plan, no doubt there is to every wrong and vitious act a suitable degree of unhappiness and punishment annext, which the criminal will be sure to meet with some time or other.

Wollaston. Religion of Nature, s. 6.

And again, what does the wicked man lose? That happiness, which the virtuous gain as such; and he sinks, beside, in some degree of the unhappiness of that future state: of which one may say in general, that it may be as much greater than the unhappiness or sufferings of this world, as the happiness and joys of that are above those of this.—Wollaston. Religion of Nature, s. 9.

Would I were offspring of some happier sire,
Ordain'd in calm possession of his own
To reach the verge of life. But now, alas!
I am the rumour'd offspring of a man
Of all mankind unhappiest.—Cowper. Hom. Odyssey, b. i.

They began the attack with their paddles, and with stones and other offensive weapons that were in the boat, so vigorously, that we were obliged to fire upon them in our own defence; four were unhappily killed.

Cook. First Voyage, b. ii. c. 1.

UN-HARBOURED. Not having or supplying, not supplied with protection, shelter, lodging.

She that has that, is clad in complete steel,
And like a quiver'd nymph with arrows keen
May trace huge forests, and unharbour'd heaths, Infamous hills, and sandy perilous wilds.

Milton. Comus.

UN-HARDENED. } Not confirmed, forti-UNHA'RDY. } fied, or strengthened;
not obdurate; not seasoned to bear or endure.

I wol arise, and aunte it by my say:

Unhardy is unsely, thus men say.

Chaucer. The Reves Tale, v. 4208.

Then with an eye of mercy inform'd his judgment,
How yet unripe we were, unblown, unharden'd,
Unfitted for such fatal ends.

Beaum. & Fletch. Humorous Lieutenant, Act ii. sc. 4.

Arcite. Dear Palamon, dearer in love than blood
And our prime cosin, yet *unhard'n*ed in
The crimes of nature.

Id. Two Noble Kinsmen, Act i. sc. 2.

The wisest, unexperienc't, will be ever
Timorous and loth, with novice modesty,
(As he who seeking asses found a kingdom)
Irresolute, unhardy, unadventrous.

Milton. Paradise Regained, b. ii.

UN-HARMED. } Not hurt, injured, wronged; UNHA'RMFUL. } not damaged.

Lord! how shuld o sely lomb among wolvis weld,
And scape unharmyd? it hath been seyn seild.

Imputed to Chaucer. The Marchantes Second Tale.

This is he whom the lambe in Moses lawe did signifie, whose unharmeful bloud defended the children of Israel from the reuengeing sweorde of the aungell.

Udal. John, c. 1.

Rom. Well in that hit you misse, shee'l not be hit
With Cupids arrow, she hath Dians wit:
And in strong prooffe of chastity well arm'd;
From lous weake childish bow, she liues unharm'd.
[First fol. uncharm'd.]

Shakespeare. Romeo & Juliet, Act i. sc. 1.

Prosp. No courage can resist 'em.

Hip. How then have you, sir,

Liv'd so long unharm'd among them?

Dryden. The Tempest, Act ii.

Where birth has plac'd 'em let 'em safely share

The common benefit of vital air.

Themselves unharmful, let them live unharm'd.

Id. The Hind and the Panther.

— I will also give

New raiment for thy limbs, and will dispatch

Winds after thee to waft thee home unharm'd.

Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. v.

One gallant steed is stretch'd a mangled corse;
Another, hideous sight! unseam'd appears,
His gory chest unveils life's panting source;
Though death struck, still his feeble frame he rears;
Staggering, but stemming all, his lord unharm'd he bears.

Byron. Child Harold, c. 1.

UN-HARMONIOUS, i. e. Inharmonious.

Those pure immortal elements that know

No gross, no unharmful mixture foule,

Eject him tainted now, and purge him off

As a distemper.

Milton. Paradise Lost, b. xi.

UN-HARNNESS, v. To remove, to take off, strip off,—the dress or furniture, the armour or arms, the equipment.

For then declared them freely and plainly to be ouercōmen and unharnessed, when that in sight both of men and aungels, he caryed vs about as it were in a triumphe, shewyng that our enemyes were subdued and put to flight, not by the ayde of aungels or men, but by his owne myghty power.—Udal. Colossians, c. 2.

For as in combats in England, so they being unharnessed, did fight with their swords or weapons in the open sight of the people, indeuouring ech one to kill the other.

Holinshed. Conquest of Ireland, c. 42.

2079

It is not when two unfortunately met are by the canon
forc'd to draw in that yoke an unmerciful day's work of sorrow till death unharness 'em, that then the law keeps marriage most unviolated and unbroken.

Milton. Doct. & Disc. of Divorce, b. iii. c. 21.

Unharness'd chariots stand along the shore:
Amidst the wheels and reins, the goblet by,
A medly of debauch and war they lye.

Dryden. Virgil. Aeneis, b. ix.

Unharness'd at the chariot's side the steeds
Cropp'd the green lotus, or at leisure brows'd
On celery wild, from wat'ry freshness glean'd.

Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. ii.

UN-HASTY. Not speedy, rapid, impetuous, rash.

He is a perfect man, and well grown in grace, who hath so habitual a resolution, and so unhasty and wary a spirit, as that he decrees upon no act before he hath considered maturely, and changed the sudden occasion into a sober counsel.—Dr. Taylor, vol. ii. Ser. 15.

UN-HATCHED, i. e. Unhack'd, (qv.)

Vio. I pray you sir what is he?

To. He is knight dubb'd with vnatch'd rapier.

Shakespeare. Twelfth Night, Act iii. sc. 4.

UN-HATCHED. Not fostered into life or being; not brooded, or given birth to; not matured, or ripened.

— Something sure of state,

Either from Venice, or some vnatch'd practice
Made demonstrable heere in Cyprus, to him,
Hath pudled his cleare spirit.

Shakespeare. Othello, Act iii. sc. 4.

Behold me in my sex, I am no soldier;
Tender, and full of fears our blushing sex is,
Unhard'n'd with relentless thoughts; unhatcht
With blood, and bloody practice.

Beaum. & Fletch. Knight of Malta, Act ii. sc. 4.

UN-HAUNTED. Not followed or frequented.

Concluding thus they point without delay
Parliament to hold, in some unhaunted place,
Far from London, out of the common way.

Mirror for Magistrates, p. 338.

So of a lone unhaunted place possess'd,
Did this soul's second inn, built by the guest
This living buried man, this quiet mandrake, rest.

Donne. Progress of the Soul, s. 1.

UN-HAZARDED. } Not risked, or put or UNHA'ZARDOUS. } placed at risk.

Here I should still enjoy thee day and night
Mine and loves prisoner, not the Phillistines, Whole to my self, unhazarded abroad,
Fearless at home of partners in my love.

Milton. Samson Agonistes.

'Tis enough, my lord, that your own part was neither obscure in it, nor unhazardous.

Dryden. Duke of Guise, Epis.

In some places this riuer is very vnhealthfull and full of noysome wormes; but the first place thereupon which the Spaniards doe inhabit called Mompox is exceeding health-full.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 781.

The towne was situated in a waterie soile, and subiect much to raine, very vnhealthy as any place in the Indies, hauling great store of oranges, plantans, cassauy-roots & such other fruits; but very dangerous to be eaten for breeding of diseases.—Id. Ib. p. 587.

The whiles their snowy limbes, as through a vele,
So through the crystall waues appeared plaine:
Then suddainly both would themselues vnheile,
And th' amorous sweet spoyles to greedy eyes reuele.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 12.

Next, did Sir Triamond vnto their sight
The face of his deare Canacee vnheile;
Whose beauties beame eftsoones did shine so bright,
That daz'd the eyes of all, as with exceeding light.
Id. Ib. b. iv. c. 5.

There should the swallow see new life embrace
Dead ashes, and the grave unheal his face,
To let the living from his bowels creep,
Unable longer his own dead to keep.
G. Fletcher. Christ's Triumph after Death.

The best way haply it were altogether to avoid an house and not therein at all to dwell, which is close, without fresh air, dark, standing bleak & cold, or otherwise unhealthfull.
Holland. Plutarch, p. 110.

Experiment solitary touching the healthfulness or unhealthfulness of the southern winds.
Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 786.

Then mists from marishes, and grounds whose veynes
Were conduit pipes to many a christall spring:
From standing pooles and fens were following Unhealthy fogs.—Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b. ii.

Which proving but of bad nourishment in the concoction, as it was heedless in the devouring, puffs up unhealthily
a certain big face of pretended learning, mistaken among credulous men for the wholesome habit of soundness and good constitution.—Milton. Doct. & Disc. of Divorce, Pref.

He in his youth was afflicted in an unhealable sprain in his hip.—Fuller. Worthies. Warwickshire.

Our men who had been very healthy till now, began to fall down apace in fevers. Whether it was the badness of the water, or the unhealthiness of the town was the cause of it, we did not know.—Dampier. Voyages, an. 1685.

With whom whoever, tho' a fav'rite spake,
At every sentence set his life at stake,
Tho' the discourse were of no weightier things,
Than sultry summers or unhealthfull springs.
Dryden. Juvenal, Sat. 4.

But the town is a most wretched place, and extremely unhealthy, for the air about it is so pent up by the hills that it has scarcely any circulation.—Anson. Voyages, b. ii. c. 10.

In less than a week, we were sensible of the *unhealthi-

Unheard sawciness (Shakespeare), Theobald reads,—unhair'd (qd.) unbearded, the sawciness of beardless boys.

Nor is it no cause to kepe the corps of scripture out of the handes of anye christen people so many yeres fastly confirmed in fayth, because Christ & hys apostles vsed uche prouision in their vtterance of so strage & vnherd mist i s.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 245.

This vn-heard sawcinesse and boyish troopes,
The king doth smile at.
Shakespeare. K. John, Act iv. sc. 2.

These pitchy curtains drew 'twixt earth and heaven,
And as Night's chariot through the ayre was driven,
Clamour grew dumb, unheard was shepheard's song,
And silence girt the woods; no warbling tongue
Talk'd to the echo.

Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b. ii. s. 1.

— If you would unheard of things express,
Invent new words; we can indulge a muse,
Until the licence rise to an abuse.
Creech. Horace. Art of Poetry.

UN-HEART, v. To take away heart or courage; to discourage. See DISHEARTEN.

His breaded train, and of his fatal guile
Gave proof unheeded.—Milton. Paradise Lost, b. iv.

Jul. He might, but how? with an unheedful eye,
An accidental view, as men fee multitudes
That the next day dare not precisely say
They saw that face, or that amongst 'em all.
Beaum. & Fletch. Maid in the Mill, Act v.

Jul. But say, Lucetta (now we are alone)
Would'st thou then counsaile me to fall in loue?
Luc. I, madam, so you stumble not unheedfully.
Shakespeare. Two Gentlemen of Verona, Act i. sc. 2.

And therefore is wing'd Cupid painted blinde.
Nor hath loues minde of any judgement taste:
Wings and no eyes, figure, unheedy haste.
Id. Midsummer Night's Dreame, Act i. sc. 1.

Perhaps [they thought] this omission was unheedy.
Bp. Hall. Cont. Haman Disrespected.

Whose manner was all passengers to stay,
And entertaine with her occasions sly;
Through which some lost great hope unheedily,
Which neuer they recouer might againe.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 10.

I perceive some readers have unheedily and unjustly stübled at this proposition, as if I had herein sleighted the differences betwixt us and the Romane church.
Bp. Hall. Certaine Catholike Prop. &c. Note.

The Indians laid out a very plentiful repast, considering their numbers, and had their bread-fruit and coco-nuts prepared ready for eating, in a manner too which plainly evinced, that, with them a good meal was neither an uncommon nor an unheeded article.
Anson. Voyages, b. iii. c. 5.

And such the storm of battle on this day,
And such the phrensy, whose convulsion blinds
To all save carnage, that beneath the fray,
An earthquake reel'd unheededly away.
Byron. Childe Harold, c. 4.

Furious as hungry wolves the kids assail
Or lambs, which haply some unheeding swain
Hath left to roam at large the mountains wild.
Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. xvi.

All silent and unheeding now,
With downcast eyes and knitting brow,
And folded arms and freezing air,
And lips that scarce their scorn forbear.
Byron. Parisina, s. 10.

UN-HE'LMED. Freed from, stripped of—the helm, or covering or protection of the face.

Saynt Pye strake him in the sight of the helme a sorer stroke, so that therwith he was so vnhelmed, that ye bocle behynde brake, and the helme fell to the groude.
Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. c. 168.

"Come, valiant sir," said Wamba, "I must be your armourer as well as your equerry—I have dismounted you, and now I will unhelm you."—Scott. Ivanhoe, c. 40.

UN-HE'LPED.

UN-HE'LPFUL.

UN-HE'LPEN.

Not aided, assisted, relieved, or succoured.

For they taught the people such a devotion, that they offered their goods into the treasure-house of the temple, under the pretence of God's honour, leaving their fathers, and mothers, (to whom they were chiefly bound) unholpen, and so they brake the commandments of God, to keepe their owne traditions.—Homilies of Good Workes, pt. ii.

Is it his care the common-wealth that keeps,
As doth the nurse her baby whilst it sleeps?
And that poor king of all those hopes prevented,
Unheard, unhelp'd, unpity'd, unlamented?
Drayton. Hen. II. to Rosamond.

And what difference is there whether she pervert him to superstition by her enticing sorcery, or disainable him in the whole service of God through the disturbance of her unhelpful and unfit society, and so drive him at last, through murmuring and despair, to thoughts of atheism?
Milton. Doct. & Disc. of Divorce, b. i. c. 7.

But who hath taught you to mangle thus, and make more gashes in the miseries of a blameless creature, with the leaden daggers of your literal decrees, to whose ease you cannot add the tithe of one small atom, but by letting alone your unhelpful surgery.—Id. Ib. b. ii. c. 17.

Euen so my selfe bewayles good Glosters case
With sad unhelpefull teares, and with dimme eyes.
Shakespeare. 2 Pt. Hen. VI. Act iii. sc. 1.

Is it then to see the world filled with drooping, super-annuated, half-starved, helpless, and unhelped animals, that you would alter the present system of pursuit and prey?
Paley. Natural Theology, c. 26.

UN-HERST. Stripped of their ornaments.
Upton says,—took from the herse or temporary monument whereon they were hung.

Then from him reft his shield, and it r'enverst,
And blotted out his armes with falshood blent,
And himselfe baffuld, and his armes vnherst,
And broke his sword in twaine, & all his armour sperst.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 3.

UNHE'WN. } formed, framed, shaped, (by cutting or carving.

And with an ax of gold, from that Jove-sacred tree
The misleto cut down; then with a bended knee
On th' unhew'd altar laid, put to the hallow'd fires.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 9.

However, in occasions of merriment they [Saturnian and Fescennine] were first practis'd; and this rough-cast unhewn poetry, was instead of stage-plays for the space of an hundred and twenty years together.—Dryden. Juvenal, Ded.

UN-HIDE, v. To remove or take away that which covers or conceals.

Are thy lines broke? or are thy trammels tore?
If thou desir'st my help, unhide the sore.
P. Fletcher. Piscatory Eclogues, Ecl. 5.

There best, where most with ravin I may meet;
Which here, though plenteous, all too little seems
To stuff this maw, this vast unhide-bound corps.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. x.

UN-H'LED. See UNHEAL.

UN-H'NDERED. Not put behind; not prevented.

Virtue, 'tis true, in its proper seat, and with all its full effects and consequences unhindered, must be confessed to be the chief good; as being truly the enjoyment, as well as the imitation of God.—Clarke. On the Attributes, Prop. 4.

UN-HINGE, v. To remove from that on which it hangs or depends; by which it is sustained or supported; is held firm or steady; on which it turns; to destroy the balance or equipoise.

Whose injuries betray'd me into treason,
Effac'd my loyalty, unhing'd my faith,
And hurry'd me from hopes of heaven to hell.
Dryden. Don Sebastian, Act iv. sc. 1.

Thus human life unhing'd to ruin reel'd,
And giddy Reason totter'd on her throne.
Thomson. Liberty

Old chief! he said, thy dauntless spirit asks
As firm a knee. But time unhinges all.
Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. iv.

UN-H'PRED. Not paid; not engaged by pay, crepith as a canker.—Wiclif. 2 Tymo, c. 2.

The life is swete, and that he kepeth.
So that the feith unholye slepeth.—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

The Jewes cal that common whiche is vnclane and unholy, abhorring al impuritie, and endeuyng in no wise to seme to haue any where any maner of vnclane or fylthy thyng.
Udal. Marke, c. 7.

Nor now lykewyse the vyees of vicious folke in Christes church, can not lette, but that hys catholyke church of which they be part, is for their unholynes, his holy catholyke churche: with whiche he hathe promysed to bee vnto the ende of the world.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 1311.

Nothing shall enter into the New Jerusalem that is defiled or unholy; nothing but perfect purty is there; not a spot of sinful pollution, not a wrinkle of the whole man.
Leighton. Com. on 1 Peter, ii. 24.

Thus to the law of representing and commemorating the death of our dearest Lord by the celebration of his last supper, it is necessarily appendant and included that we should come worthily prepared, lest that which is holy be given to dogs, and holy things be handled unholily.
Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. ii. c. 3.

One of the chief matrimonial ends is said to seek a holy seed; but where an unfit marriage administers continual cause of hatred and distemper, there, it was heard before, cannot choose but much unholiness abide.
Milton. Tetrachordon.

Silent, exult, O ancient matron dear!
Shout not, be still. Unholy is the voice
Of loud thanksgiving over slaughter'd men
Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. xxii.

UN-HO'NEST. } See DISHONEST.
UNHO'NESTLY. } Being without, void of—UNHO'NESTY. } honesty or of good faith,

And thilke that we gessen to be the unworthiere membris of the bodi, we ghyuen more honour to hem. And tho membris that ben unhonest han more honestee. for oure honeste membris han nede of noon.—Wiclif. 1 Cor. c. 12.

Honorius the emperour commaunded this maner of shewing the people pastyme by couplyng or matchyng together of swearde players, to bee lefte and vtterlye abolysed. Nowe marke me well howe unhonest a pastime it was, and howe many thousandes had by reason thereof been miserably slayne and murdered.—Udal. Pref. to Marke.

He that hath deserved for euer to bee thrust out of his fathers house, whiche beeyng an vnthakeful persone he had tofore wilfully and unhonestly forsake, to him returning and coming home againe, the father in his own persone came forth of the doores, and mette him.—Id. Luke, c. 15.

This day [good Christian people] shall be declared unto you, the unprofitableness, and shamefull unhonesty of contention, strife, and debate.—Homilies. Against Contention.

But a poor, cold, unspirited, unmanner'd,
Unhonest, unaffected, undone, fool,
And most unheard of coward, a meer lump.
Beaum. & Fletch. Thierry & Theodore, Act ii.

I never call'd a fool my friend, a mad man
That durst expose his fame to all opinions,
His life to unhonest dangers.
Id. Women Pleas'd, Act i. sc. 1.

I'll think thee no more valiant, but a villain;
Nothing thou hast done brave, but like a thief,
Atchiev'd by craft, and kept by cruelty;
Nothing thou canst deserve, thou art unhonest.
Id. The Island Princess, Act ii.

UN-HO'NOURED. } See DISHONOURED.
UNHO'NOURABLE. } Void of, destitute, deprived of, esteem, price, value, regard, or respect.

Therefore the Jewis answeriden and seiden, wher we seyen not wel, that thou art a Samaritan, and hast a deuel? Jhesus answeride and seide, I haue not a deuel; but I honour my Fadir, and ye han unhonourid me.—Wiclif. Jon, c. 8.

Great quantite of Cristen people [were] put to deth, and the holye seruyce of God lefte, and holye churche vnworshyppyd & unhonouryd, wth many great enormyties.
Fabyan. Chronycle, an. 1339.

I beseech your Lordship, that I may know what I shall do herein; I intend to give him one of my servants for guide; and would God I were then ready; if it were so the king's pleasure, I would make him such company as should not be unhonourable to the king.
Surrey, Let. 41. To Cromwell.

But seeing now I am not as I would,
But here, among th' unhonour'd willow's shade
The muddy Chame doth me enforced hold.
P. Fletcher. To my Cousin M. R. Esquire.

This proffer, with such protestations, made Unto a king that so near danger stood,
Was a sufficient motive to persuade,
When no way else could shew a face so good:
Th' unhonourable means of safety bad
Danger accept, what majesty withstood.
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. ii.

Wrath touches ev'n the gods; the queen of night
Fir'd with disdain, and jealous of her right, Unhonour'd though I am, at least, said she,
Not unreveng'd that impious act shall be.
Dryden. Ovid. Metam. b. viii.

UN-HOOD, v. To remove or take away the hood or covering of the head, of the eyes.

Falconer, take care, oppose thy well trained steed,
And sily stalk; unhood thy falcon bold,
Observe at feed the unsuspecting team
Paddling with oary feet. Somerville. Field Sports.

UN-HO'OKED. Not having a hook, (sc.)
any thing crooked or curved, to catch, to hold.

— And what more nimble spirits
Apter to byte at such unhooked baytes,
Gaine by our losse; that must we needs confesse
The princely valure would haue purchast vs.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 671.

And all unhop'd the common-wealth restor'd,
Amaz'd the public, and effac'd his [Sylla's] crimes.
Thomson. Liberty.

Alas! though Jove hath giv'n me to behold,
Unhop'd, the land again, and I have pass'd Furrowing my way, these num'rous waves, there seems
No egress from the hoary flood for me.
Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. v.

UN-HO'RNED. Without horns.

— O Liber! Still dost thou enjoy
Vnwasted youth; eternally a boy!
Thou'rt seene in heaven; whom all perfections grace;
And, when unhorn'd, thou hast a virgin's face.
Sandys. Ovid. Metam. b. iv.

UN-HORSE, v. To fall, to throw, from a horse; to dismount.

With swerde in honde on hym he felle,
And smote hym with a deatnes wounde,
That he unhorsed fell to ground.—Gower. Con. A. b. iii.

If any of thē were sore wounded or unhorsed, theis guarded him about.—Goldinge. Caesar, fol. 40.

2 Gent. Thanks to our folly,
That spur'd us on; we were indeed hedg'd round in 't;
And ev'n beyond the hand of succour, beaten,
Unhors'd, disarm'd.
Beaum. & Fletch. Humorous Lieutenant, Act ii. sc. 4.

And [Singin who led the Worcestershire men] came at length where Constantine himself fought, unhors'd him, and us'd all means to take him alive.
Milton. History of England, b. v.

The knights unhors'd, on foot renew the fight;
The glitt'ring fauchions cast a gleaming light:
Hauberks and helms are hew'd with many a wound;
Out spins the streaming blood, and dies the ground.
Dryden. Palamon & Arcite, b. iii.

Burke need not have regretted that its days are over, though Maria Antoinette was quite as chaste, as most of those in whose honours lances were shivered, and knights unhorsed.—Byron. Childe Harold, Pref.

UN-HO'SPITABLE, i. e. Inhospitable, (qv.)
Not kind to strangers.

Serv. Shall we kill him?
Abber. No, I'll not be so unhospitable.
Beaum. & Fletch. Fair Maid of the Inn, Act ii
The Britons then shall join their arms with yours,
To drive out these unhospitable guests,
And leave you peaceful lord of fruitful Kent.
Rowe. The Royal Convert, Act v.

With ruffian violence and murd'rous rage
You menace the defenceless and the stranger;
And from th' unhospitable dwelling drive
Safety and friendly peace. Id. Ulysses, Act i.

UN-HO'STILE. Not inimical, or unfriendly.

Of pain impatient, the high-prancing steeds
Disdain the curb, and, flinging to and fro,
Spurn their dismounted riders; they expire
Indignant, by unhostile wounds destroy'd.
J. Philips. Blenheim.

UN-HOUSED. Destitute, deprived of a house, mansion, covered dwelling.

Seek true religion: O where? Mirreus,
Thinking her unhous'd here, and fled from us,
Seeks her at Rome, there, because he doth know
That she was there a thousand years ago.—Donne, Sat. 3.

— Call the creatures,
Whose naked natures live in all the spight
Of wrekefull heauen, whose bare unhoused trunks,
To the conflicting elements expos'd
Answer meere nature.
Shakespeare. Timon of Athens, Act iv. so. 3.

— For know Iago,
But that I loue the gentle Desdemona,
I would not my unhoused free condition
Put into circumscription, and confine,
For the seas worth. Id. Othello, Act i. sc. 2.

A thousand entries to this citie guide:
The gates still open stand, on every side.
And as all rivers run into the deepe:
So all unhoused soules doe thither creepe.
Sandys. Ovid. Metam. b. iv.

All the volumes, written by such hands, shall be from time to time placed in proper order upon the rails of the unhoused booksellers within the district of the colledge.
Tatler, No. 174.

— Dismay'd, unfed, unhous'd,
The widow and the orphan stroll around
The desert wide; with oft retorted eye
They view the gaping walls, and poor remains Of mansions, once their own.—J. Philips. Blenheim.

UN-HOUSED. The A. S. Huslean, to administer or give the sacrament.

Unhouselled,—not having communicated or received the sacrament.

Thus was I, sleeping, by a brother's hand,
Of life, of crowne, and queene at once dispatch;
Cut off euen in the blossomes of my sinne,
Vnhouzzled, disappointed, vnnaneld,
No reckoning made, but sent to my account
With all my imperfections on my head.
Shakespeare. Hamlet, Act i. sc. 5.

UN-HUMAN. } i. e. Inhuman, (qv.) Not UNHU'MANIZE, v. } having the nature or qualities of man; the feelings, the natural, kind feelings of man.

That they themselves should infallibly have their turns in the course and circulation of divine justice, and be strictly reckoned with for their intollerable pride, their insatiable avarice, and their unhuman and remorseless cruelty, shewn in the spoil and waste they had made upon all nations round about them for the propagation of their empire.—South, vol. xi. Ser. 2.

Purity is ridiculed and set at nought, as a sour, unsocial, unhumanized virtue; is called austerity, preciseness, puritanism, or any thing but what it really is.
Porteus, vol. ii. Ser. 6.

UN-HUMBLED. Not lowered or brought low, subjected, depressed, (sc.) in spirit.

Should I of these the liberty regard,
Who freed, as to their antient patrimony,
Unhumbl'd, unrepentant, unreform'd,
Headlong would follow.—Milton. Par. Regained, b. iii.

UN-HURT. } Not harmed, injured, or UNHU'RTFUL. } damaged; not having re-UNHU'RTFULLY. } ceived any mischief, pain, UNHU'RTFULNESS. } or loss.

And it is not yought for a Christan mannes cōmunication to be unhurtfull, but it ought also to bee of suche sorte, that it bee spoken in season, and to do so good purpose as it may bee commodious vnto the hearers.
Udal. Ephesians, c. 4.

Your faythe shall condemne theyr incredulitie, your godly lyfe, theyr vngodlines, your unhurtfulness, shal condemne theyr vncleannes, and euen nowe condemneth, yf ye bee good, and lyue christianlye.—Udal. 1 Corinthians, c. 6.

As if she in her kinde (unhurting elfe)
Did bid me take such lodging as herselfe:
Gladly I took the place the sheepe had given,
Uncanopy'd of any thing but heaven.

Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b. i. s. 4.

In foreign realms and lands remote,
Supported by thy care,
Through burning climes I pass'd unhurt
And breath'd in tainted air.

Spectator, No. 489.

After so many dispersions, and so many divisions, two or three of us may yet be gathered together, to divert ourselves and the world too if it pleases; or at worst to laugh at others as innocently and as unhurtfully, as at ourselves.

Pope. To Swift, Sep. 1725.

But as soon as they found themselves unhurt, they got again in their canoes; gave us some halloos; flourished their weapons; and returned once more to the buoys.

Cook. Second Voyage, b. iii. c. 4.

UN-HU'SBANDED. Not used carefully, providently, or thriftily.

— With hanging head I have beheld

A widow vine, stand, in a naked field,
Unhusbanded, neglected, all forlorne,
Brouz'd on by deere, by cattle cropt and torne.

Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b. ii. s. 5.

UN-HU'SHED. Not stilled, quieted, or tranquillized.

Without thine ear to listen to my lay,
Still must my song my thoughts, my soul betray:
Still must each accent to my bosom suit,
My heart unhush'd—although my lips were mute!

Byron. The Corsair, c. 1.

UN-HU'SKED. Void of, destitute of, the husk or cover.

Time was, that, whiles the autumn fall did last,
Our hungry sires gap't for the falling mast,
Of the Dodonian oaks.

Could no unhusked akorne leave the tree,
But there was challenge made whose it might bee.

Bp. Hall, b. iii. Sat. 1.

U'NICORNE. } Fr. Unicorne; It. Unicorno; U'NICORNOUS. } Sp. Unicornio; Lat. Unicornis.
An animal having one horn only, (unum cornu.)

Venym is defended by the horne of an unicorne.

Golden Boke, c. 43.

The lion king, the elephant,
The maiden unicorne was there.

Spenser. An Elegie for Astrophell.

Nature in other cornigerous animals, hath placed the horns higher and reclining, as in bucks; in some inverted upwards, as in the rhinoceros, the Indian ass, and unicornous beetles.—Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. v. c. 19.

Yet supposing those names to stand for complex abstract ideas that contained no inconsistency in them, the essence of a mermaid is as intelligible as that of a man; and the idea of an unicorn as certain, steady, and permanent as that of a horse.—Locke. Hum. Underst. b. iii. c. 3.

UN-IDE'AL. Not having, destitute of, ideas, or sensations, of thoughts; of mental action.

Some will be discovered at a window by the road side, rejoicing when a new cloud of dust gathers towards them, as at the approach of a momentary supply of conversation, and a short relief from the tediousness of unideal vacancy.

Rambler, No. 135.

They [cards] appear to me too dull and unideal to afford a thinking man, who values his leisure, an adequate return of amusement for the time they engross.

Knox. Winter Evenings, Even. 1.

UN-IDE'LL. Chaucer seems to use this word more strongly than to express the mere absence or negation of idleness; (sc.)—

Laborious.

Thou reader mayst thy self full well divine
That soche a wo my wit can not define,
Unidell for to write it should I swinke,
Whan that my wit is werle it to thinke.

Chaucer. Troil. & Cres. b. v.

UN-JE'ALOUS. Not envious, or invidious, or suspicious.

The indulgence, under which they enjoy present ease, is founded on the gentle and unjealous temper of the king, which may be shaken and changed by several accidents, that may fall out.—Clarendon. Papal Usurpation, vol. i. c. 10.

UNIFORM. } Fr. Uniforme; It. Uniforme; UNIFORMITY. } Sp. Uniforme; Lat. Uniformis, UNIFORMLY. } of one form (una forma).
UNIFORMNESS. } Having one form, frame, or fashion; shape, or make; one general appearance; keeping or preserving one mode or manner, plan, method or design; one constant or consistent method, course, or tenor.

Thordinance of these sacraments is Goddes worke, the verye author of them, who as he is himselfe uniforme, as saint James sayth without alteration, so as David sayth, his workes be true, whiche is as much as uniforme, for truth and uniforme answerith together.

Bp. Gardner. Explication. Of Catholique Fayth, fol. 5.

Whereupon proceeded Salamons most wise iudgmēt, which hath this lesson in it, euer where contention is, on that parte to be the truth, where all saynges and doynge appear uniformely consonante to the truth pretended.—Id. Ib.

But for uniformitie of building, orderlie compaction, and politike regiment, the towne of Cambridge, as the newer workmanship, exceedeth that of Oxford.

Holinshed. Description of England, b. ii. c. 3.

They giue it gentle heats (after they haue spread it there verie thin abroad) till it be drie, and in the meane while they turne it often, that it may be uniformely drie.

Id. Ib. c. 6.

Sometimes there are many parts of a law, and sometimes it is uniform, and hath in it but one duty.

Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. iii. c. 6.

The direction of all their progressive motions, both of the primary and secondary planets, uniformly from west to east, (when by the motion of comets it appears there was no necessity but that they might as easily have moved in all imaginable transverse directions;) is an evident proof that these things are solely the effect of wisdom and choice.

Clarke. On the Attributes, Prop. 9.

Analogies, harmonies, and agreements are discovered in the works of nature, and the particular effects explained, that is, reduced to general rules, which rules grounded on the analogy, and uniformness observed in the production of natural effects, are most agreeable, and sought after by the mind.—Berkley. Of Human Knowledge, pt. i. § 105.

Their skins were so uniformly covered with dirt, that it was very difficult to ascertain their true colour.

Cook. First Voyage, b. iii. c. 6.

UN-IMA'GINABLE. } See INIMAGINABLE.
UNIMA'GINABLENESS. } That cannot be formed UNIMA'GINABLY. } or conceived, as an UNIMA'GINED. } image in the mind;
cannot be depicted or devised.

Either while the skilful organist plies his grave and fancied descant in lofty fugues, or the whole symphony with artful and unimaginable touches adorn and grace the well-studied chords of some choice composer.

Milton. Of Education.

If there be yet any cavil to be made, it can be none other then what is perfectly common to it and to matter, that is, the unimaginableness of points and smallest particles, and how what is discernible or divisible can at all hang together.

More. Immortality of the Soul, b. i. c. 6.

Nor could the child of reason, feeble man,
With vigour through this infant being drudge;
Did brighter worlds, their unimagin'd bliss
Disclosing, dazzle and dissolve his mind.

Thomson. Liberty.

There is scarce a passage of scripture, that is not suitable or appropriate to some of those numberless differences of humour the bible was designed for; and in that unimaginable variety of occurrences shared amongst such vast multitudes, finds not a proper object.

Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 263.

We cannot but conclude those odorous streams to be unimaginably subtil, that could for so long a time issue out, in such swarms, from a little perfumed water lodged in the pores of a glove, and yet leave it richly stocked with particles of the same nature.—Id. Ib. vol. iii. p. 677.

In the works of men, it is often mere ignorance, that occasions our admiration; but in these, the minuter our inspection, and the deeper our search is, the greater abundance we often find of accurate adjustment and unimaginable precautions.—Secker, vol. vi. Ser. 6.

UN-IMITABLE. See INIMITABLE. That cannot be imitated.

Cass. Ambitious villain.

Gonz. Thou art all un-imitable.

Beaum. & Fletch. The Laws of Candy, Act i. sc. 2.

It is hard to counterfeit the spirit of majesty, and the unimitable peculiarities of an incommunicable genius and condition.—South, vol. v. Ser. 2.

UN-IMMORTAL. To make unimmortal; i.e. to make those mortal who were immortal.

This said, they both betook them several wayes,
Both to destroy, or unimmortal make
All kinds, and for destruction to mature Sooner or later.

Milton. Paradise Lost, b. x.

UN-IMPA'IRABLE. } That cannot be made UNIMPA'IRRED. } or become worse, or less, lessened or weakened.

The earth strictly and philosophically considered is neither the lowest of the creation, nor immovable; but this metaphysical earth is both, as is manifest at first sight, it being the lowest degree and shadow of being; and not only immovable, but undiminshable and unimpaired.

More. Defence of the Philos. Cabbala, c. 7.

Instead of immersing ourselves in the pursuit of wealth, which we shall never enjoy, and honours which are empty bubbles, let our desire be to preserve our faculties unimpaired to the last, and to shine as the sun shines, bright through the whole of its progress.

Knox. Winter Evenings, Even. 16.

Thou needs't not blush, young prince, to have receiv'd
A guest like me; for neither swerv'd my shaft,
Nor labour'd I long time to draw the bow;
My strength is unimpaired, not such as these
In scorn affirm it.—Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. xxi.

UN-IMPA'RTED. Not divided, shared, or communicated (in part) to others.

— But brave Achilles shuts

His virtues close, an unimpaired store.

Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. x.

UN-IMPA'SSIONED. Not moved, roused, warmed, with passion, sense, or feeling; not animated or spirited.

While there with thee th' enchanted round I walk
The regulated wild, gay Fancy then
Will tread in thought the groves of Attic land;
Will from thy standard taste refine her own,
Correct her pencil to the purest truth
Of Nature, or, the unimpassion'd shades
Forsaking, raise it to the human mind.

Thomson. Autumn.

We admire wit, beauty, station, wealth, titles, and all that sparkles with the brilliancy of external lustre; and though we probably approve the plain and homely virtues which form the foundation of all real excellence, it is with the cold feelings of unimpassioned judgment.

Knox. Winter Evenings, Even. 66.

The day, that by their consent, the seat of regicide has its place among the thrones of Europe, there is no longer a motive for zeal in their favour; it will at best be cold, unimpassioned, dejected, melancholy duty.

Burke. On a Regicide Peace, Let. 4.

UN-IMPE'ACHABLE. } That cannot be UNIMPE'ACHED. } withstood or opposed; consequentially, that cannot be contested, accused, arraigned, charged with failure, fault, or crime.

Why did my stars refuse me to die warm?
While yet my regal state stood unimpeach'd,
Nor knew the curse of having one above me.

Rowe. Tamerlane, Act iv.

Hence merchants, unimpeachable of sin
Against the charities of domestic life,
Incorporated—seem at once to lose Their nature; and, disclaiming all regard
For mercy and the common rights of man,
Build factories with blood.—Cowper. Task, b. iv.

The unimpeachable integrity and piety of many of the promoters of this petition, renders those aspersions as idle as they are unjust.

Burke. Speech on the Acts of Uniformity.

UN-IMPLI'CIT. Not entire, unlimited, or unrestricted;—truth—limited, guarded, precautioned; the result of inquiry and conviction.

In logic they teach, that contraries laid together more evidently appear: it follows then that all controversy being permitted, falshood will appear more false, and truth the more true; which must needs conduce much, not only to the confounding of popery but to the general confirmation of unimplicit truth.—Milton. Of Toleration.

UN-IMPLO'ED. Not entreated, supplicated, or besought, or solicited.

If answerable style I can obtaine
Of my celestial patroness, who deignes
Her nightly visitation unimplor'd,
And dictates to me slumbring, or inspires
Easie my unpremeditated verse.

Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ix.

And shall grace not find means, that finds her way,
The speediest of thy winged messengers
To visit all thy creatures, and to all Comes unprevented, unimplor'd, unsought.—Id. Ib. b. iii.

UN-IMPOR'TANT. } Not having weight, UNIMPOR'TING. } value, force, efficacy, great consequence or moment.

But if it be only matter of rite, or of unimporting consequence (as he said) Oh what madness is it in us to draw the world into sides, and to pour out the souls of Gods people like water?—Bp. Hall. St. Paul's Combat.

Yet, the chosen vessel fears not to seem too scrupulous, in laying weighty charges upon us in so small, and as we might imagine, unimporting a business.

Id. The Women's Vail.

They would be surprised to be informed, that one of the antient critics has acquired a great reputation by writing on an art which is conversant in sound rather than in sense, and which is, therefore, in their opinion, unimportant.

Knox. Ess. No. 46.

UN-IMPOR'TUNED. Not troubled by solicitation; not begged, besought, or solicited—perseveringly, pertinaciously.

So is the blood sometimes; whoever ran
To danger unimportun'd, he was then
No better than a sanguine-virtuous man.

Donne. Let. to the Lady Carey.

UN-IMP'OS'ED. } Not placed, set, or fixed UNIMPO'SING. } upon; not charged, enjoined, or exacted.

Certainly readers, the worship of God singly in it self, the very act of prayer and thanksgiving, with those free and unimpos'd expressions which from a sincere heart unbidden come into the outward gesture, is the greatest decency that can be imagin'd.

Milton. Apology for Smeetynnus, § 11.

From the sure land is rooted ruffian force,
And, the lewd nurse of villains, idle waste;
Lo! raz'd their haunts, down dash'd their maddening bowl,

A nation's poison! beauteous order reigns!
Manly submission, unimposing toil.—Thomson. Liberty.

UN-IMPRESSED. Not marked or infixed—deeply.

By night, from objects free, from passions cool,
Thoughts uncontrol'd, and unimpress'd, the births
Of pure election, arbitrary range,
Not to the limits of one world confin'd.

Young. Complaint, Night 5.

UN-PRISONABLE. That cannot be taken or held in confinement; that cannot be confined or shut up.

To imprison and confine by force, into a pinfold of set words, those two most unimprisonable things, our prayers, and that divine spirit of utterance that moves them, is a tyranny that would have longer hands than those giants who threaten'd bondage to heaven.

Milton. Answer to Bikon Basilike, § 16.

UN-IMPROVABLE. } That cannot be UNIMPROVABLENESS. } meliorated, bettered, UNIMPROVED. } corrected, amended,
UNIMPROVING. } enhanced.

And of this kind of imperfect creatures it will be perhaps worth your marking, that the principal faculty which is irrevocably wanting in such, and by all teaching irreparable and unimprovable, is the power of numbring.

Hammond. Works, vol. iv. p. 577.

'Tis visible to what antidotes this must be imputed, 1. to their ignorance and unimproveableness in matters of knowledge and rational discourse.—Id. Ib. vol. i. p. 489.

He [Dr. Reid] has finally, however, placed the esteem of the wise and good in the order of animal principles; not from any persuasion that it is to be found in brute animals, but because it appears in the most unimproved, and the most degenerate part of our species, even in those in whom we hardly perceive any exertion either of reason or of virtue.—Cogan. On the Passions, pt. ii. c. 1.

But I ask whether, if the idle were to lay aside such unimproving works, they might not probably find more pleasure, together with improvement, in works of sound judgment, taste, and knowledge.

Knox. Winter Evenings, Even. 52.

UN-IMPROVED. Not censured, blamed or reproved.

— Now sir, young Fortinbras,
Of unimproved mettle, hot and full,
Hath in the skirts of Norway, heere and there,
Shark'd vp a list of landlesse resolute,
For foode and diet, to some enterprize
That hath a stomacke in't.

Shakespeare. Hamlet, Act i. sc. 1.

UN-INCE/NS'ED. Not heated or inflamed; provoked, irritated, angered.

Jove! see'st thou unincens'd these deeds of Mars,
How many noblest Grecians he has slain
All shamelessly, and all with grief of heart
Deplor'd by me?

Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. v.

See'st thou, O ove, and see'st thou unincens'd
These injuries, with which the gods afflict
Each other daily, for the sake of man?

Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. v.

UN-INCH'ANTED. Not acted upon, or influenced by charms, enchantment, or incantation; not charmed or enraptured.

But beauty, like the fair Hesperian tree,
Laden with blooming gold, had need the guard
Of dragon-watch with uninchant'd eye,
To save her blossoms, and defend her fruit
From the rash hand of bold incontinence.

Milton. Comus.

Who? whence? thy city and thy birth declare,
Amaz'd I see thee with that potion drench'd,
Yet unenchanted; never man before
Once pass'd it through his lips, and liv'd the same.

Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. x.

UN-INCLO'SED. Not shut in, surrounded (sc. by hedge or fence).

In waste and uninclosed lands, any person who discovers a tin mine may mark out its limits to a certain extent, which is called bounding a mine.

Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. i. c. 11.

UN-INCO'RPORATED. Not embodied; not mixed, mingled, blended, or united into one body or substance, into one whole.

And all this while (which is the most strange and singular circumstance of their punishment) they have continued unmixed, unincorporated with any of the nations of the earth, amidst whom they dwelt.—Atterbury, vol. iii. Ser. 5.

UN-INCREA'SABLE. That cannot be augmented, or enlarged.

And which results chiefly from an either altogether, or almost unincreasable elevation, and vastness of affection.

Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 249.

UN-INCUMBERED. Not loaded by accumulation; not overloaded, oppressed; not embarrassed.

It is said further, that one should expect a book, written by direction from God for instructing the world in religion, to be a short plain methodical system of belief and practice, unincumbered with any other matters: and the bible is quite a different thing.—Secker, vol. iii. Ser. 20.

His fortune is among the largest; a fortune which, wholly unincumbered, as it is, with one single charge from luxury, vanity, or excess, sinks under the benevolence of its dispenser.—Burke. Speech at Bristol, (1780.)

UN-INDIFFERENT. Not impartial, not disinterested; not without anxiety, or care; price, value, or importance.

Cesar when he saw howe thencounter was in an unindifferent place, and that the power of hys ennemyes continually encreased, fearyng the successe of his men, sent to T. Sextius his lieutenant, &c.—Goldinge. Caesar, fol. 209.

Whatsoever is reprehensiuue, seuere and sharpe, they haue others on the contrarie part whom they must alwayes concerne; by which their ouer partiall and unindifferent proceeding, while they thus labour amongst the people to diuide the word, they make the word a meane to diuide and distract the people.—Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, b. v. § 81.

Yet the state of the calling vnto the ministerie, whereunto it hath pleased God of his goodnesse to call me, though vnworthiest of all, is so subject to mis-information, as except we may find this fauour with your honours, wee cannot looke for any other, but that our unindifferent parties may easily procure vs to be hardly esteemed of.

Id. Wal. Travers Supp. to the Councell.

UN-INDU/LGENT. Not unindulgent, i. e. indulgent. See the quotation.

On me not unindulgent fate
Bestow'd a rural, calm retreat,
Where I may tune the Roman lyre
And warm the song with Grecian fire.

Francis. Horace, b. ii. Ode 16.

UN-INDU'STRIOUS. } Not laborious, dili-UNINDU'STRIOUSLY. } gent, assiduous.

— Far beyond the ordinary course,
That other unindustrious ages ran.—Daniel. Musophilus.

And even the Socinians (how prosperously I determine not) are not a little, or unindustriously solicitous to free their erroneous doctrine of justification from the objected guilt of its tendency to draw the embracers of it to sacrifice to their own nets, and thank themselves for their felicity.

Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 278.

UN-INFE/CTED. Not dyed or stained; tinged or tainted.

For Agricola the son of Severianus a Pelagian bishop had spread his doctrine wide among the Britains not uninfected before.—Milton. Hist. of England, b. iii.

Honest Will Wimble, who I should have thought had been altogether uninfected with ceremony, gives me abundance of trouble in this particular.—Spectator, No. 119.

— The sullen door,
Yet uninfected, on its cautious hinge Fearing to turn, abhors society.—Thomson. Summer.

As influence increases, the jealousy and vigilance of the uninfected part of the community should increase in proportion.—Knox. Spirit of Despotism, § 29.

UN-INFLA'MED. } Not warmed, heated, UNINFLA'MMABLE. } enkindled.

When weak bodies come to be inflamed, they gather a much greater heat than others have uninflamed.—Bacon.

The uninflammable spirit of such concretes, may be pretended to be but a mixture of phlegm and salt.—Boyle.

— He beat his breast,
And thus the fervour of his soul exprest:
"Oh! let thy thought o'er our past converse rove,
And show one moment uninflam'd with love!"

Young. Force of Religion, b. ii.

UN-INFLUENCED. } Not moved, actuated, UNINFLUE'NTIAL. } induced.

Not but there were some few, whose selfish dispositions were uninfluenced by the justice of this procedure, and who were incapable of discerning the force of equity, however glaring, when it tended to deprive them of any part of what they had once got into their hands.

Anson. Voyages, b. ii. c. 7.

Will he [the god of this world] teach them to become men, men in understanding as well as form, daring to follow nature, reason, and simplicity of manners, uninfluenced by fashion and affectation?—Knox, vol. v. Ser. 25.

From this example it is evident, that we feel an impropriety in calling that a motive which was uninfluential, or was not productive of the correspondent act.

Cogan. Ethical Treatise, Dis. 2. c. 4.

UN-INFORMED. Not without idea or knowledge; not taught, instructed or made acquainted with.

— On she came,
Led by her heav'nly Maker, though unseen,
And guided by his voice, nor uninform'd
Of nuptial sanctity and marriage rites.

Milton. Paradise Lost, b. viii.

Nor dare we under blasphemous conceive
He that shall be our supreme judge, shall leave Himself so un-inform'd of his elect,
Who knows the hearts of all, and can dissect
The smallest fibre of our flesh.—B. Jonson, Elegy 9.

She is very pretty, but you cannot imagine how uninformed a creature it is.—Spectator, No. 266.

Nor was Penelope left uninform'd
Long time of their clandestine plottings deep;
For herald Medon told her all, whose ear
Their councils caught, while in the outer court
He stood, and that they project fram'd within.

Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. iv.

UN-INFRI'NGED. Not broken into; broken down, encroached, trespassed upon.

The vessels that convey blood, more approach the surface of the body, and also by dexterously wounding determinate veins with instruments dipt in poisons (especially moist or liquid ones) that being carried by the circulated blood to the heart and heat, it may be found whether their strength be that way more uninfringed, and their operation more speedy (or otherwise differing) than if they were taken in at the mouth.—Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 87.

The constitution of England is founded on liberty, and the people are warmly attached to liberty; then why is it ever in danger, and why is a constant struggle necessary to preserve it uninfringed?—Knox. Spirit of Despotism, § 3.

UN-INGE'NIOUS. Not having ingenuity, wit, invention, contrivance, cleverness.

The reader does not, I hope, imagine that I mean seriously to set about the refutation of these uningenious paradoxes and reveries without imagination.

Burke. On a Late State of the Nation.

UN-INGE'NUOUS. } Not frank, liberal,
UNINGE'NUOUSNESS. } candid, fair, open, sincere.

If they had means of breeding from their parents, 'tis likely they have more now; and if they have, it needs must be mechanic and uningenious in them, to bring a bill of charges for the learning of those liberal arts and sciences, which they have learn'd (if they have indeed learn'd them, as they seldom have) to their own benefit and accomplishment.—Milton. Cons. on the Removal of Hirelings.

It is but an illiterate policy to think that such indirect and uningenious proceedings can among wise and free men disgrace the authors and disrepute their discourses.

Bp. Taylor. Liberty of Prophesying, Epis. Ded.

If beginnings be ominous (as they say they are,) D. Potter hath cause to look for great store of uningenious dealing from you.

Chillingworth. Religion of Protestants, Ans. to Pref.

If these four things be made good, I cannot guess what could be further added to prove the injustice and uningeniousness, I shall add the untowardness and unluckiness of this answer.—Hammond. Works, vol. i. p. 324.

UN-INHA'BITABLE. } That cannot be UNINHA'BITABLENESS. } dwelt, resided, re-UNINHA'BITED. } mained, or abided in.

Andr. Though this island seems to be desert,
Uninhabitable, and almost inaccessible.

Shakespeare. The Tempest, Act ii. sc. 1.

They were not so destroyed from the land, until it grew uninhabitable in any tolerable manner, and itself could not, as it were, endure them any longer.

Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 37.

Experience has shown us, that divers very plausible and radicated opinions, such as that of the *uninhabitable*ness of the torrid zone, of the solidity of the celestial part of the world, &c. are generally grown out of request.

Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 312.

This is an uninhabited island [Cocos]; it is 7 or 8 leagues round, and pretty high in the middle, where it is destitute of trees, but looks very green and pleasant.

Dampier. Voyages, an. 1684.

But where is the difference to us, between a less globe, and part of the present being uninhabitable?

Paley. Natural Theology, c. 26.

The inhabitants of Ulitea speak of an uninhabited island, about this situation, called by them Mopeha, to which they go at certain seasons for turtle.

Cook. Second Voyage, b. iii. c. 1.

UN-INJURED. } Not wronged, or harmed, UNINJ'RIOUS. } or hurt wrongfully.

You may as well spread out the unsunn'd heaps
Of miser's treasure by an outlaw's den,
And tell me it is safe, as bid me hope
Danger will wink on opportunity,
And let a single helpless maiden pass
Uninjur'd in this wild surrounding waste.

Milton. Comus.

The harmless plunderer rifles the sweets, but leaves the flower uninjured.—Paley. Natural Theology, c. 19.

Their own bosoms will be calm and serene, uninjured and uninjurious, smooth as the stream which glides in its proper channel, and diffuses beauty and fertility on every plant which happily vegetates near its margin.

Knox, vol. vi. Ser. 12.

UN-INQUI'SITIVE. Not seeking, searching or examining into or after; not asking or interrogating or investigating.

"Go therefore thou, with all thy stirring train
Of swelling sciences, the gifts of grief,
Go loose the links of that soul-binding chain, Enlarge this uninquisitive belief."

Daniel. Civil Wars, b. vi.

The religion of such persons has always a great tendency towards superstition; for, as their uninquisitive temper keeps them in a total ignorance about secondary causes, they are apt to refer every thing which is out of what they call the common course of nature,—that is, which is out of the course of their own daily observation and experience,—to an immediate exertion of the power of God.

Bp. Horsley, vol. i. Ser. 11.

UN-INSCRIBED. Not written upon or engraved.

Make sacred Charles' tomb for ever known;
Obscure the place, and uninscrib'd the stone.
Oh fact accurst!

Pope. Windsor Forest.

UN-INSP'RED. Not breathed into or enbreathed; not actuated, animated by the Spirit.

For thus, all the truths, of what kind soever, that men uninspired are enlightened with, came into their minds, and are established there.—Locke. Hum. Underst. b. iv. c. 19.

They unfortunately contracted also a veneration for his opinions, [Calvin]—a veneration more than was due to the opinions of any uninspired teacher.

Bp. Horsley, vol. i. Ser. 5.

UN-INSTRU'CTED. } Not provided or UNINSTRU'CTIVE. } furnished, (sc.) with knowledge or learning; not informed, taught, guided, directed.

Natural reason is a light to the conscience, but faith is a greater, and therefore if it be not followed, it damns deeper than the hell of the infidels and uninstructed.

Bp. Taylor, vol. iii. Ser. 3.

Bend. In an unlucky hour
That fool intrudes, raw in this great affair,
And uninstructed how to stem the tide

Dryden. Don Sebastian, Act iii. sc. 1.

[I might have instanced] pain from captious uninstructive wrangling, and the pleasure of rational conversation with a friend, or of well-directed study in the search and discovery of truth.—Locke. Hum. Underst. b. ii. c. 20.

To make sure that the present discourse should not be uninstructive to you, I would add, &c.

Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 98.

[I have seen men] who wrote learnedly, elegantly, politely and acutely, so dull and apparently weak in conversation as to be considered as very unpleasant and uninstructive companions.—Knox. Winter Evenings, Even. 40.

UN-INTELLIGENT. } Not perceiving or UNINTE'LLIGENCE. } understanding; not UNINTE'LLIGIBLE. } having power or UNINTE'LLIGIBLY. } ability to under-UNINTELLIGIB'LITY. } stand; not knowing, UNINTE'LLIGIBLENESS. } or skilful, or well-informed.

And [he thinks] that those that practise them are a sort of brain sick, melancholy, unintelligent persons, that want wit or breeding, and understand not themselves or the world.—Hale. Cont. Ep. to his Son.

And now his unintelligence, was not more strange than his mis-construction; This is John Baptist, whom I beheaded.—Bp. Hall. Cont. John Baptist Beheaded.

S. Paul reproved the endless genealogies of the Gnosticks and Platonists, making circles of the same things, or of divers whose difference they understood not; as intelligence, fear, majesty, foundation, wisdom, magnificence, mercy, victory, kingdom, foundation, God, and such unintelligible stuff which would make fools stare, and wise men at a loss.

Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. i. c. 21.

Credit the unintelligibility of this union.—Glanvill.

I require our theorist to shew us some inconvenience or unintelligibility in the one more than in the other.

Bp. Herb. Croft on Burnet's Theory, (1685.)

The known properties are, that it is not necessary or self-existent, but dependent, finite, (nay, that it fills but a few very small and inconsiderable portions of space,) that it is divisible, passive, unintelligent, and consequently incapable of any active power.—Clarke. Evidences of Religion, Pref.

That a truth should be innate, and yet not assented to, is to me as unintelligible, as for a man to know a truth, and be ignorant of it, at the same time.

Locke. Hum. Underst. b. i. c. 2.

After he had gone on for some time in this unintelligible cant, I found that he jumbled natural and moral ideas together in the same discourse, and that his great secret was nothing else but content.—Spectator, No. 574.

However, this art of writing unintelligibly has been very much improved, and followed by several of the moderns, who, observing the general inclination of mankind to dive into a secret, and the reputation many have acquired by concealing their meaning under obscure terms and phrases, resolve, that they may be still more abstruse, to write without any meaning at all.—Id. No. 379.

What the stream of water does in the affair, is neither more nor less than this; by the application of an unintelligent impulse to a mechanism previously arranged, arranged independently of it, and arranged by intelligence, an effect is produced, viz. the corn is ground.

Paley. Natural Theology, c. 2.

As he counted the fathoms, we observed that he called the numbers by the same name that they do at Otaheite; nevertheless his language was in a manner wholly unintelligible to all of us.—Cook. Second Voyage, b. ii. c. 7.

Therefore to talk of the will by a single act giving birth to many successive motions and casting a perverseness upon itself that shall continue for days, months and years, is talking unintelligibly: the continuance of a thing in its own nature momentary being a contradiction in terms.

Search. Light of Nature, vol. i. pt. i. c. 6.

UN-INTENTIONAL. } Not designed, pur-UNINTE'NTIONALLY. } posed, or meant.

It is the infirmity of human nature which causes unintentional lapses in the duties of friendship, as well as in all other duties.—Knox. Ess. No. 25.

Ignorance may be productive of many evils unintentionally, which upon the retrospect it may sincerely lament.

Cogan. Ethical Treatise, Dis. 1. c. 2.

We endeavoured to make him understand the necessity we were under of setting fire to the village, by which his house, and those of his brethren, were unintentionally consumed.—Cook. Third Voyage, b. v. c. 4.

UN-INTERESTED. } Not concerned or UNINTERESTED. } affected; not moved UNINTERESTING. } or engaged; having nothing (good or ill) involved as a consequence.

When the testimony is general, both as to time and place uninterested, full, plain and constant, in matters of sense and of easie knowledg in such circumstances as these, the evidence of testimony is no more doubted, than the first principles of reason or sense.—Glanvill, Ess. 2.

And [it] deprives me of the only means which I had left to shew the world that true honour and uninterested respect which I have always payed you.

Dryden. Troil. & Cres. Ep. Ded.

Nearness of relation is a ground of preference, which should never be disregarded without the strongest motives to the contrary: motives which not only we ourselves think sufficient, but other good and wise persons, uninterested in the case, allow to be such.—Secker, vol. ii. Ser. 5.

Paradoxes which affront common sense, and uninteresting barren truths which generate no conclusion, are thrown in to augment unwieldy bulk, without adding any thing to weight.

Burke. On a Late State of the Nation.

UN-INTERM'XED. Not intermingled, or mingled or blended with.

How causes, counsels, and events did run,

So long as these unhappy times did last,

Unintermix'd with fictions, fantasies;

I versify the truth, not poetize.—Daniel. Civil Wars. b. i.

UN-INTE'RPRED. Not explained or expounded; not made known, clear, or intelligible.

And not only single words may in process of time vary their sense greatly, but combinations of several words may come to have meaning, very different from what the terms, of which they are composed, uninterpreted by practice, would lead one to comprehend.—Secker, vol. iii. Ser. 7.

UN-INTE'RR. Not put or placed under the earth; not buried.

They would have their names memorable and famous, yet, they rot; they are either buried with them, or remembered with disgrace; and rotting above ground as carcases uninterred, and so are the more noisome, and it is as little credit to them to be mentioned, as for Pilate that his name is in the Confession of Faith.

Leighton. Com. on 1 Peter, iii. 19.

UN-INTERRUPTED. } Not broken in be-UNINTERRU'PTEDLY. } tween, so as to be in the way; not stopped, or hindered from proceeding or continuing.

Here he promised himself a virtuous quietness; that blessed tranquility which he always prayed and laboured for; that so he might in peace bring forth the fruits of peace, and glorify God by uninterrupted prayers and praises; for this he always thirsted; and yet this was denied him.

Walton. Life of Hooker.

We have as clear an idea of succession and duration, by the train of other ideas succeeding one another in the mind, without the idea of any motion, as by the train of ideas caused by the uninterrupted sensible change of distance between two bodies, which we have from motion.

Locke. On Hum. Underst. b. ii. c. 14.

We are not sensible enough of our continual need and dependence on the divine goodness, if we long and uninterruptedly enjoy it.—Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 367.

I guessed it might have continued uninterruptedly eighteen or twenty minutes.—Id. Ib. vol. iii. p. 665.

About six thousand pipes [of wine] were exported every year to North America, while the trade with it was uninterrupted; at present, they think not above half the quantity.

Cook. Third Voyage, b. i. c. 2.

It is intire, separate, and uninterruptedly directed to one scene of things (Isaiah 52).

Paley. Evidences of Christianity, pt. ii. c. 1.

UN-INTHRA'LL. See DISENTHRA'LL.
Free from slavery or bondage,—from the domination of a master.

It needs must be ridiculous to any judgment uninthralld, that they who in other matters express so little fear either of God or man, should in one particular outstrip all precisionism with their scruples and cases.

Milton. Answer to Eikon Basilike, Pref.

UN-INTITLED. Having no right or claim.

But however, that state, is undoubtedly a bad one; destitute of sufficient strength, unintitled to pardon of sin, to supplies of grace, to reward of obedience: till God, in the covenant of baptism, affords us relief in all these respects.

Secker, vol. iii. Ser. 17

UN-INTRICATED. Not intangled, perplexed, involved.

That plain, honest, well-natur'd, undisguised heart both towards men and God, emblematically express'd by those smooth hands of Jacob, the fair open campania of even, clear, unintricated designs, far from the groves and meanders, the dark depths, the intrigues, the dexterities and subtilties and falsenesses of the merchant-worldling.

Hammond. Works, vol. iv. p. 502.

UN-INTRODUCED. Not led or brought in; not brought into notice, to the knowledge of, or an acquaintance with.

— The truths I sing shall fee;
And, feeling, give assent; and their assent
Is ample recompense; is more than praise.
But chiefly thine, O Litchfield! nor mistake;
Think not unintroduc'd I force my way

Young. Complaint, Night 5.

UN-INVADDED. Not gone or entered upon; not encroached upon, assailed, or attacked.

Of this I shall speak with such latitude, as may leave the province of the professor uninvaded; and shall not anticipate those precepts, which it is his business to give, and your duty to understand.—Reynolds, Dis. 2.

UN-INVENTED. } Not come to or arrived
UNINVENTIVE. } at, not found, or discovered, or disclosed. Uninventive,—

Not having the power of invention, of finding, discovering, or contriving.

— If that happen
Then I shall force thee tho' thou wert a virgin
By vow to Heaven, and shall pull a heap
Of strange yet uninvented sin upon me.

Beaum. & Fletcher. King & No King, Act iv.

Whereto with look compos'd Satan repli'd
Not uninvented that, which thou aright
Believest so main to our success, I bring.

Milton. Paradise Lost, b. vi.

"It is thine own fault, thou sullen uninventive companion," answered Varney.—Scott. Kenilworth, c. 5.

UN-INVESTIGABLE. That may not be traced or followed out, pursued, searched, inquired after or examined.

Whence it will appear, that upon this account they will deserve admiration, the number of them being uninvestigable by us, and so affording us a demonstrative proof of the unlimited extent of the Creator's skill, and the fecundity of his wisdom and power.—Ray. On the Creation, pt. i.

As to idiots and infants, our Saviour's meritorious performances are applied (in a manner unknowable by us) without so much as a capacity to know or believe any thing; that so we (to whom God's judgment's are inscrutable, and his ways uninvestigable) know not how grace may be communicated unto, and Christ's merits may avail for other ignorant persons.—Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 4.

UN-INVITED. } Not called or asked to UNINVITING. } come.

Uninviting,—not asking, requesting, soliciting; persuading, enticing.

Don John. That thought comes uninvited. Then, like an uninvited guest, let it be treated: Begone intruder.

Vanburgh. The False Friend, Act iii.

It cannot reasonably be thought, that such unlikely men, should so successfully preach so uninviting a doctrine, unless it were confirmed by conspicuous miracles.

Boyle. Works, vol. v. p. 536.

We dare not yet approach—thou know'st his mood,
When strange or uninvited steps intrude.

Byron. The Corsair, s. 6.

UN-INVOLVED. Not infolded, complicated, perplexed.

You will not be obliged to sell your vote and influence; nor to court a minister for a lucrative employment, so long as you preserve your own finances uninvolved.

Knox. To a Young Nobleman, Let. 28.

UN-INVULNERED. Not accustomed, habituated; not habitually practised.

— Protected mice
The race exiguous, uninvulnered to wet,
Their mansions quit, and other countries seek.

Philips. On the Fall of Chloe's Jordan.

He then took foremost up the shaft and bow,
And, at the portal standing, strove to bend,
But bent it not, fatiguing first his hands
Too delicate and uninvulner'd to toil.

Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. xxi.

UN-JOIN, v. } See DISJOIN. To separate or UNJOINT, v. } sever, the union; to dispart, to divide, to sunder.

And al the Jewene joye unjoyenen. and unlocken
And bote yf thei reverencen hus resurexion. and the rode honoure. Piers Plouhman p. 353.

For than I wolde I were unioynted
Of euery lymme that I haue.—Gower. Con. A. b. iv.

And the same diuersitie of hir natures, that so discorden, that one fro that other muste departen, and unioynen the thynges, that been conioyned, if there ne were one that contained, that he hath conioyned and ibound.

Chaucer. Boecius, b. iii.

"Unhappy hand! it had been happy time for me
If when to write thou learned first, unjointed hadst thou be."—Surrey. Repents his Rashness, &c.

My bloud congeleth, and my synewes drie, the stoanes openeth, and my sowele woulde passe foorth: the ioynctes unioigne a sonder, and my spirites are troubled.

Golden Boke, c. 40.

The while thilke same vnhappy ewe,
Whose clouted legges her hurt doth shew,
Fell headlong into a dell,
And there unioynted both her bones.

Spenser. Shepheard's Calender. March.

And therefore to speak in this cause at all, were but labour lost, saving only in respect of them, who beinge as yet unjointed unto this conspiracy, may be haply somewhat stayed.—Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, b. vii. § 21.

And gluttonous death will instantly unjoint
My body and soul, and I shall sleep a space.

Donne. Holy Sonnets, Son. 6.

Sam. I hear the sound of words, their sence the air
Dissolves unjointed e're it reach my ear.

Milton. Samson Agonistes

U'NIFY, v. } alesce, to concur.
A unit is—one, sole, single thing.

Union,—the conjunction into one of more than one.

In an hote heruest. wenne ich hadde myn hele
And lymes to labore with. and lovede wel fare
And no dede to do. bote drynke and to slepe
In hele and in unite. Piers Plouhman, p. 75.

Consider that my conning is dis-able
To write to you the figure uniale.
Imputed to Chaucer. The Craft of Louers.

Wherof men knowe redily
The high almighty trinitee, Whiche is a god in unitee.—Gower. Con. A. b. vi.

They taste not the very true and sincere delectation, whiche groweth by a certayne union and perfect agreement, by the conjunction and ioyning together of our soules with almightie God.—Fisher. A Godlie Treatise, &c.

Than Benedyc answered and said: the unyon of the churche I desyre, and I haue taken great payne therin.

Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. c. 233.

Wherefore the English and French, with forces and mindes united, sayled ouer into Africa, who when they approched vnto the shore were repelled by the barbarians from landing.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. p. 69.

The emperoure taryed vpon vii wekys and odde dayes in Englande, whiche after some wryters, was to thentent to set an vnite & rest atwene the Frenshe kynge & kynge Henry.—Fabyan. Chronycle, an. 1415.

For all the townes were in unite and of one acorde agaynst hym.—Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 403.

Then her grace marched forward toward Gracious strete, where was erected a goodly pageant and a sumptuous, which was the uniting of the two houses of Yorke and Lancaster.—Fabyan. Chronycle, an. 1558.

Excommunication cuts the refractory sinner from the communion or religious intercourse of the church; he is not to be reckoned as a brother, or a relative in our religious friendship and union.

Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. iii. c. 4.

But body and spirit stand at such a distance in their essentiall compositions, that to suppose an uniter of a middle constitution, that should partake of some of the qualities of both, is unwarranted by any of our faculties;
yea, most absonous to our reasons.

Glanvill. Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 3. s. 3.

This was the cause of mens uniting themselves at the first in politique societies, which societies could not bee without government, nor government without a distinct kind of law from that which hath beene already declared.
Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, b. i. § 10.

The bigots of the popish party cried out against us vehemently, and enquired, where is your church of England, since you have no unity? for your ecclesiastic head of unity, your bishops are gone.

Bp. Taylor, vol. iii. Ser. 4. To the Reader.

And yet it is without all peradventure that all laws which are commonly called natural are most reasonable, they are perfective of nature, unitive of societies, necessary to common life, and therefore most agreeable to reason.

Id. Rule of Conscience, b. ii. c. 1.

Let then all the pretenders to peace, procure to simplifie and unifie their desires by this single address to the will and order of God.

Montague. Devoute Essayes, pt. ii. Treat. 8.

Self-love and social at her birth began,
Union the bond of all things, and of man.

Pope. Essay on Man, Ep. 3.

[We were] ignorant that the time drew near, when the squadron would be separated never to unite again, and that this day of our passage was the last cheerful day that the greatest part of us would ever live to enjoy.

Anson. Voyages, b. i. c. 6.

Now of substances also, there are two sorts of ideas; one of single substances, as they exist separately, as of a man or a sheep; the other of several of those put together, as an army of men, or flock of sheep; which collective ideas of several substances thus put together, are as much each of them one single idea, as that of a man, or an unit.

Locke. Hum. Underst. b. ii. c. 12.

The great collective idea of all bodies whatsoever, signified by the name world, is as much one idea, as the idea of any the least particle of matter in it; it sufficing to the unity of any idea, that it be considered as one representation or picture, though made up of ever so many particulars.

Id. Ib. c. 24.

From hence it follows, that the unity of God, is a true and real, not figurative unity.

Clarke. On the Attributes, Prop. 3.

Parts separated and disjoined, are to be brought together gently and equally, that they may touch one another, and so be prepared for union.—Wiseman. Surgery, b. v. c. 1.

— Let the bond
Of mutual firm accord, as heretofore,
Unite them, and let wealth and peace abound.

Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. xxiv.

By some unitarians the scripture is acknowledged only in part. When this is the case, the debate ends at once:
the trinitarian insists on the belief of the whole canonical body of scripture.—Gilpin. Ser. Hint 90.

UN-JOYFUL. } Not having, or giving glad-UNJOYOUS. } ness, pleasure, or delight;
not gladdening, pleasing, or delighting.

It must needs be both unjoyous, and injurious to any perceiving person so detain'd, and more injurious than to be freely, and upon good terms dīsmist.

Milton. Tetrachordon.

She has read and distributed [printed certificates of Flori-mel's age] to this unjoyful set of people, who are always enemies to those in possession of the good opinion of the company.—Tatler, No. 16.

— It freezes on;
Till Morn, late rising o'er the drooping world,
Lifts her pale eye unjoyous. Thomson. Winter.

UNIPAROUS. Bearing or bringing forth one at a birth, (partus.)

Others make good the paucity of their breed with the duration of their dayes, whereof there want not examples in animals uniparous.—Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. vi. c. 6.

UNIQUE, n. From Fr. adj. Unique. Single, singular; one, only, alone.

The success, therefore, of Mahometanism, stands not in the way of this important conclusion; that the propagation of Christianity, in the manner and under the circumstances in which it was propagated, is an unique in the history of the species.—Paley. Evidences of Christianity, pt. ii. c. 9.

U'NISON, n. } Fr. Unisson, unissonant; It.
U'NISON, adj. } Unisono.
U'NISONOUS. } One single sound; concu-rence, concord, agreement of sound; generally—concord, agreement.

Not suffering her shrill waters, as they run,
Tun'd with a whistling gale in unison;
To tell as high they priz'd the border'd vale,
As the quick lennet or sweet nightingale.

Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b. i. s. 2.

— All organs of sweet stop
All sounds on fret by string or golden wire
Temper'd soft tunings, intermixt with voice Choral or unison. Milton. Paradise Lost, b. vii.

And in all exigencies of his children, he is overcome with their complaints, and cannot hold out against their moanings; he may, as Joseph, seem strange for a while, but cannot act that strangeness long; his heart moves and sounds to theirs, gives the echo to their griefs and groans, as they say of two strings that are perfect unisons, touch the one, the other also sounds.

Leighton. Com. on 1 Peter, c. 3.

That both these parties [papists and puritans] should so exactly keep time together in troubling it [Government] if there were not something of peculiar harmony, or rather a kind of unison correspondence between them, requires a more than ordinary reach of understanding to conceive.

South, vol. vi. Ser. 1.

A work which warms our passions, and hurries us on with the rapid vehemence of its style, may be read once or twice with pleasure; but it is the more tranquil style which is most frequently in unison with our minds.

Knox. Ess. No. 28.

These apt notes (to sing the Psalms withall) were about 40 tunes of one part only, and in one unisonous key.

Warton. History of English Poetry, vol. i. p. 171.

UN-JU'DGED. Not doomed, decided, or determined.

Causes unjudg'd disgrace the loaded file,
And sleeping laws the king's neglect revile.

Prior. Solomon, b. ii.

UNIVERSE. Fr. Univers; It. Unìverso; Lat. Unìversus, (unus et versus, quasi unum versus, Vossius.) Universe, and formerly Universal and University, applied, to— UNIVER'SAL. adj.
UNIVER'SAL, n.
UNIVER'SALIST.
UNIVER'SALLY.
UNIVER'SALITY.
UNIVER'SALNESS.
UNIVER'SITY. The whole or entire mundane system, the system of the world. Universal, adj.—

Extending to, comprehending all, (without exception,) the whole, the total. For university, (in common usage),—

A school or college for teaching; see the quotation from Adam Smith.

So also the tunge is but a litel membre, and reisith greet thingis. Io hou litil fier brenneth a ful greet wood? and oure tunge is fier, the unyuersitee of wickidnesse.

Wiclif. James, c. 3.

Reason surmounteth imaginacion, and comprehendeth by uniuersall loking, the common speache, but the iye of intelligence is higher, for it surmounteth the enuironnyng of the uniuersitie, and looketh ouer that, by pure subtiltie of thought.—Chaucer. Boecius, b. v.

That sothly she her self that is to sain reason, loketh and comprehendeth by reason of uniuersalitie, both that that is sensible, and that that is imaginable.—Id. Ib.

So that in due tyme is bore
This childe: and forthwith therupon
There fell wonders many one Of terremote uniuersele.—Gower. Con. A. b. vi.

For yet withouten any forme

For as the celestyall bodyes aboue complecte all and at every tyme the uniuersall worlde, the creatures therein cōteyned, and all their dedes, semblably so dothe history.

Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. Pref.

But the stonne which had smittē the image was made so great that it fulfilled the uniuersal erthe.

Joye. Exposition of Daniel, b. ii.

He attayned to suche a fourme in all his gouernaunce, that he was named and taken for father of the senate, of the people, and unyuersally of all the hole empyre.

Sir T. Elyot. The Governour, b. iii. c. 23.

In this 31 yeare of king Henries reigne, great death and murren of cattell began in this land so uniuersallie in all places, that no towne nor village escaped free.

Holinshed. Chron. of England, Hen. I. an. 1130.

But if a man may presentlie giue a ghesse at the uniuersalitie of this euill by contemplation of the circumstance, he shall saie at the last, that the twentieth part of the realme is imploied vpon deere and conies alreadie.

Id. Descrip. of England, b. ii. c. 19.

These be the contentes of M. Hardinges clew, and thus substantially hath he prooued the antiquitie, and uniuersalitie of his masse.

Jewell. Replie vnto M. Hardinge, p. 93.

There be many nowe a days in famouse scholes and uniuersities, whiche be so moche gyuen to the study of tongues only, that whan they write epistels, they seme to the reder, that lyke to a trumpet they make a soun without any purpose.—Sir T. Elyot. The Governour, b. i. c. 13.

O for a clap of thunder now, as loud
As to be heard throughout the universe,
To tell the world the fact, and to applaud it!

B. Jonson. Catiline, Act i. sc. 1.

For Catholic in Greek signifies universal: and the Christian church was so call'd, as consisting of all nations to whom the gospel was to be preach'd, in contradistinction to the Jewish church, which consisted for the most part of Jews only.—Milton. Of Toleration.

Our learned antiquary [Mr. Cambden] mentioning his death, the modesty and other virtues of Mr. Hooker, and magnifying his books, wished, that for the honour of this, and benefit of other nations, they were turned into the universal language.—Walton. Life of Hooker.

The appellations that be universal, and common to many things, are not always given to all the particulars (as they ought to be) for like conceptions, and like considerations in them all; which is the cause of many of them are not of constant signification, but bring into our mind other thoughts than those for which they were ordained, and these are called equivocal.—Hobbs. Human Nature, c. 5.

The rules that God hath set men to live by, are universally just, and there is an universal obligation upon all men to obey them.—Leighton. Com. on 1 Peter, c. 2.

God sends not ill; if rightly understood,
Or partial ill is universal good.

Pope. Essay on Man, Ep. 4.

But you require an answer positive,
Which yet, when I demand, you dare not give,
For fallacies in universals live.

Dryden. The Hind and the Panther.

The same colour being observed to-day in chalk or snow, which the mind yesterday received from milk, it considers that appearance alone, makes it a representative of all that kind; and having given it the same whiteness, it by that sound signifies the same quality, wheresoever to be imagined or met with: and thus universals, whether ideas or terms, are made.—Locke. Hum. Underst. b. ii. c. 11.

For a modern free-thinker is an universalist in speculation; any proposition whatsoever he's ready to decide; every day de quolibet ente, as our author here professes.

Bentley. On Free Thinking, § 3.

Words are general, as has been said, when used for signs or general ideas, and so are applicable indifferently to many particular things: but universality belongs not to things themselves, which are all of them particular in their existence; even those words and ideas, which in their signification are general.—Locke. Hum. Underst. b. iii. c. 3.

One of the grand difficulties, that he, who would be highly virtuous, must expect to surmount and conquer, is the temptation, that is afforded by the universality of vicious customs and examples.—Boyle. Works, vol. v. p. 558.

As it resembled a royal court in regard of those many noblemen and persons of quality that lived in it, so one might esteem it an university, for those many accomplished men in all kinds of knowledge and good learning that were his domesticks.—Strype. Eccles. Mem. Hen. VIII. an. 1530.

— Shame not, now, my son!

Thine and my brave forefathers, whose exploits
Have shar'd so long, such universal praise.

Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. xxiv.

The present universities of Europe were originally, the greater part of them, ecclesiastical corporations, instituted for the education of churchmen. They were founded by the authority of the pope; and were so entirely under his immediate protection, that their members, whether masters or students, had all of them what was then called the benefit of clergy, that is, were exempted from the civil jurisdiction of the countries in which their respective universities were situated, and were amenable only to the ecclesiastical tribunals. What was taught in the greater part of those universities was suitable to the end of their institutions, either theology, or something that was merely preparatory to theology.—Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. v. c. 1.

UNIVO'CAL. Fr. Univoque,—simple, of UNIVO'CALLY. one only sense or signification, UNIVOCA'TION. (Cotgrave.) It. Univoco;
Sp. Univoco; Lat. Univocus, (una vox.)

Having one sense or meaning; one purpose or tendency.

But if this fear be instanced in a matter of religion, it will be apt to multiply eternal scruples, and they are equivocal effects of a good meaning, but are proper and univocal enemies to piety and a wise religion.—Bp. Taylor. Pol. Dis.

For there is no difference in the manner of the commandment; and the precept hath not the head of a man and the arm of a tree, and the foot of a mountain, but it is univocal and simple, and proper, and if there be any difference it must be discovered by some clear light from without.

Id. Rule of Conscience, b. ii. c. 3.

They are commonly the true mothers, the univocal parents of their productions, otherwise than it is in fear and drunkenness and ignorance; for these produce things of a nature different from their immediate principles, as drunkenness produces effects of anger, &c. that is, it is the occasion of them, not the proper mother.—Id. Ib.

Yea, their very owne word shall stop their owne mouth, for how is sin univocally distinguished into veniall and mortall, if the veniall bee no sinne? and the wages of every sinne is death.—Bp. Hall. No Peace with Rome, s. 13.

Very being itself not predicating univocally touching him and any created being and intellect, and will, as we attribute them to God, are, as we may reasonably think, not only of a perfection infinitely transcending any created intellect and will, but of another kind and nature from it.

Hale. Origin. of Mankind, p. 16.

Univocal words are such as signify but one idea, or at least but one sort of thing; the words book, bible, fish, house, elephant, may be called univocal words, for I know not that they signify any thing else but those ideas to which they are generally affixed.—Watts. Logick, b. i. c. 4.

The univocation of Tartar cities with those of Israel, concurring with the former reason from the place and country whither they were sometime transplanted by the Assyrians, doth plainly shew that the Israelitish people have been there.

Whiston. Mem. (1749), p. 583.

UNJU'STIFIABLE.

UNJU'STIFIABLY.

UNJU'STIFIABLENESS.

We now write Injustice, (qv.) Fr. Injuste; It. Ingiusto; Sp. Injusto; Lat. Injustus, (in, priv. and justus, ordered. See JUST.) Against or contrary to law or order, the laws of religion or morality, of God or man; not equitable, not righteous; wrongful, wicked.

For God is not unjust that he forghete ghoure werke and loue whiche ghe han schewid in his name, for ghe han mynstrid to seintis and mynystren.—Wiclif. Ebrewis, c. 6.

For this is grace if for conscience of God any men suffrith heuynessis and suffrith unjustly.—Id. 1 Petir, c. 2.

And whanne he was cursid, he curside not, whanne he suffride he manasid not, but he bitook hymself to him that denyde him unjustly.—Id. Ib.

He that vseth not his owne, well and charitably, hath much to aunswere for, and shall they be thought not unjust, who not only take away other mens, but also misvse and waste the same vngodlye?

Sir J. Cheeke. The Hurt of Sedition.

Ye haue robbed euery honest house, and spoyled them unjustly, and pitiously wroonge pore men being no offenders, to their vtter vndoing, and yet ye thinke ye haue not broken the king's lawes.—Id. Ib.

We all make complaint of the iniquitie of our times; not unjustly; for the dayes are euill.

Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, b. i. § 10.

Doubtless it is a pious and religious intent, to endeavour to free God from all imputation of unnecessary rigour, and his justice from seeming unjustice, and seeming congruity.

Hales. Rem. Ser. Rom. xiv. 1.

One of the great instances to prove the Roman religion to be new; not primitive, nor apostolick, is the foolish and unjustifiable doctrine of indulgences.

Bp. Taylor. Of Repentance, b. ii. c. 1.

So drives self-love thro' just and thro' unjust,
To one man's pow'r, ambition, lucre, lust.

Pope. Essay on Man, Ep. 3.

Even the desire of obtaining any thing unjustly is evil; because to desire to do evil by the terms again, is an evil or criminal desire.—Wollaston. Religion of Nature, s. 6.

To measure the justness, or unjustness of this deceit, I change the supposition of persons with him.

Hale. Cont. Of Doing as we would be done to.

Some are morally evil, as impiety, disobedience to God, malice, hatred, envy, cruelty, unjustice towards men.

Id. Ib.

They [passions and appetites] are not to proceed from unjustifiable causes, or terminate in wrong objects; not to be unseasonable or immoderate.

Wollaston. Religion of Nature, s. 9.

It must be consider'd, that had he [Lot] not allowed himself to drink to excess, it had not been in the power of his daughters to deceive him. The daughters indeed without this expedient, could not have attain'd their end; but then the unjustifiableness of the means desecrates the means, even tho' it were good and laudable before.

Marchant. Expos. of the Book of Genesis, c. 20.

The earnest desire that every one feels to make others believe what he believes himself, is a strong temptation to support it by unjustifiable evidence.

Cook. First Voyage, b. iii. c. 12.

But to charge their guilt on christianity, would not to be like censuring the legal constitution of any government, because they, who rebel against it, behave unjustifiably.

Secker, vol. v. Ser. 18.

formances are applied (unknowable by us) without so much as a capacity to know or believe any thing; that so we (to whom God's judgments are inscrutable, and his way unin-vestigable) know not how grace may be communicated unto,
and Christ's merits may avail for other ignorant persons.
Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 40.

The idea then we have, to which we give the general name substance, being nothing but the supposed, but un- known support of those qualities we find existing, which we imagine cannot subsist, "sine re substantie," without something to support them, we call that support substantia; which according to the true import of the word, is in plain English, standing under, or upholding.
Locke. Hum. Underst. b. ii. c. 23.

Unknowing of the cause, he took his way,
Mournful in mind, and still in black array.
Dryden. Palamon & Arcite, b. iii.

Then from his inmost soul he sigh'd, and said,
The beauty I behold has struck me dead;
Unknowingly she strikes, and kills by chance;
Poyson is in her eyes, and death in ev'ry glance.
Id. Ib. b. i.

I said, that, after many woes, and loss
Of all his people, in the twentieth year,
Unknown to all, he should regain his home,
And my prediction shall be now fulfill'd.
Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. ii.

But out of physical causes, unknown to us, perhaps un- knowable, arise moral duties, which, as we are able perfectly to comprehend, we are bound indispensably to perform.
Burke. Appeal from the New to the Old Whigs.

The same power which gave laws to man established likewise those of nature and has made them both so to correspond that while you fulfill your duty you will unknow- ingly furnish yourself with powers for your use and enjoyment hereafter.—Search. Light of Nature, vol. ii. pt. ii. c. 23.

UNL

UN-KONNING. Not cunning, kenning, or knowing.

Wardeyns gode he sette, to stabille the lond & mende,
Justise that the lawe gette to vnkonand thei kende.
R. Brunne, p. 244.

I am yonge and unkonning, as thou wost,
And, as, I trow, with love offended most,
That ever was on lives creature.
Chaucer. The Knights Tale, v. 2396.

UN-LA'BOURED. } Not worked; not per-UNLABO'RIOUS. } formed with pains and care, or with industry.

How among the drove of custom and prejudice this will be relisht by such whose capacity since their youth run ahead into the easy creek of a system, or a medulla, sails there at will under the blown physiognomy of their un- labour'd rudiments. I have surely sufficient.
Milton. Doct. & Disc. of Divorce. To the Parliament.

Who [the present licensers] doubtless took this office up, looking on it thro' their obedience to the parliament, whose commands perhaps made all things seem easy and unlabo- rious to them.—Id. Areopagitica.

— Then, let thy ground
Not lie unlabo'r'd; if the richest stem
Refuse to thrive, yet who would doubt to plant
Somewhat, that may to human use redound,
And penury, the worst of ills, remove?
J. Philips. Cider, b. i.

UN-LACE, v. To remove that which catcheth, holdeth, tieth, fasteneth; the catch, hold, tie, or fastening.

In Shakespeare, to unlace is (in Tooke's opinion)—to unless or onles; to dismiss, to loosen.

And prechide and seyde a strengre than I schal come after me and I am not worthi to knele down and unlase his schoon.—Wiclif. Mark, c. 3.

She, with the mole all in her hands devout,
Standing near th' altar, bare of the one foot,
With vesture loose, the bands unlaced all,
Bent for to die, calls the gods to record,
And guilty stars eke of her destiny.
Surrey. Virgile. Æneis, b. iv.

Whom when he sawe before his foote prostrated,
He to her leapt, with deadly dreadfull looke,
And her sunshiny helmet soone vnlaced,
Thinking at once both head and helmet to haue raced.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 5.

— What's the matter
That you vnlace your reputation thus,
And spend your rich opinion, for the name
Of a night-brawler?—Shakespeare. Othello, Act ii. sc. 3.

A sound no time can steal; a sweet perfume
No winds can scatter, an entire embrace,
That no satiety can e'er unlace.
G. Fletcher. Christ's Triumph after Death.

His buckler held him under, while he press'd
With both his knees above, his panting breast,
Unlac'd his helm: about his chin the twist
He ty'd; and soon the strangled soul dismiss'd.
Dryden. Ovid. Metam. b. xii.

However, I am not sure if they do not sometimes unlace that part of the sail from the yard which is between the tack and mast head, and so shift both sail and boom leeward of the mast.—Cook. Second Voyage, b. 3. c. 2.

UN-LADE, v. To remove, take out, or away—the load or burthen, the weight, the freight, the cargo.

The ordinary charges for transporting of goods from Narue to Newles by way as aforesaid, besides the spoile by so often lading and vnloading cariage by land, and the dangers of the seas, pirats,
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 416.

— My pupill's hungry.
Lea. Pray ye sir, unlade me.
Lop. I'll refresh ye sir;
When ye want, you know your exchequer.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Spanish Curate, Act ii. sc. 1.

Nor yet content with the wonted room of his margent, but he must cut out large flocks and creeks into his text to unlade
the foolish frigate of his unseasonable authorities.
Milton. Apology for Smectymnuus, § 8.

Thither, let all th' industrious bees repair,
Unlade their thighs, and leave their honey there.
Congreve. Mourning Muse of Alexis.

— The galleys soon
Unladen of their freight, some barter'd brass,
Some steel, or oxen, or their hides, for wine,
And some their captives.—Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. vii.

UN-LAID. Not put, placed, or set down; not deposited, not reposed.

Whatsoever wee doe behold now in this present world, it was inwrapped within the bowels of divine mercie written in the booke of eternall wisdom, and held in the hands of Omnipotent Power, the first foundations of the world being as yet enlayd.

Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, b. v. § 56.

And should he doubt it (as no doubt he doth,) That I should open to the listening air,
How many worthy princes' bloods were shed,
To keep his bed of blackness unlaid ope,—
To lop that doubt, he'll fill this land with arms,
And make pretence of wrong that I have done him.

Shakespeare. Pericles, Act i. sc. 2.

When their pot-guns ayme to hit,
With their pellets of small wit,
Parts of me (they judg'd) decay'd,
But we last out, still unlay'd.

B. Jonson. Underwoods. Petition to Charles II.

Guid. No exorcisor harme thee,
Arui. Nor no witch-craft charme thee.
Guid. Ghost enlaid forbear thee.
Arui. Nothing ill come neere thee.

Shakespeare. Cymbeline, Act iv. sc. 2.

No evil thing that walks by night,
Blue meagre hag, or stubborn unlaid ghost,
Hath hurtful power o'er true virginity.—Milton. Comus.

Terrours and ghosts of unlaid accountants, haunt the houses of their children from generation to generation.

Burke. On Economical Reform, (1780.)

UN-LAMENTED. Not bewailed, deplored, bemoaned, grieved, or sorrowed for.

Wherefore procuring all the world's despite,
A tyrant loath'd, a homicide convented,
Poison'd he [John] dies, disgrac'd, and unlamented.

Daniel. Civil Wars, b. i.

Is it his care the common-wealth that keeps,
As doth the nurse her baby whilst it sleeps?
And that poor king of all those hopes prevented,
Unheard, unhelp'd, unpity'd, unlamented?

Drayton. Hen. II. to Rosamond.

UN-LAPT. Not folded or turned over; in-folded or inwrapt.

Speech being like to tapestry, which if it be folded vp, sheweth but part of that which is wrought, and being enlapt and laid open, sheweth plainly to the eye all the work that is in it.—Hooker. Walter Travers' Sup. to the Council.

UN-LARDED. Not interlaid or intermixed.

Speak the language of the company you are in; speak it purely, and unlarded with any other.

Chesterfield. Letter to his Son.

UN-LATCHED. Not catched or held fast (by a latch).

Mean time my worthy wife, our arms mislay'd;
And from beneath my head my sword convey'd:
The door unlatch'd; and with repeated calls,
Invites her former lord within my walls.

Dryden. Virgil. Æneis, b. vi.

UN-LAUGH. A word coined by Sir T. More, for his own purpose.

Tindall must of reason gyue vs leaue to laugh at hys proude inuented folye. And I shall find hym fower suerties very good and sufficient, that at what tyme hereafter he proue himselfe a true prophete, I shall vpon reasonable warning enlaughe agayn it all.

Sir T. More. Workes, p. 684.

UN-LA'VISHED. Not thrown profusely; not squandered, or prodigally or wastefully bestowed.

But now the feather'd youth their former bounds,
Ardent, disdain; and, weighing oft their wings,
Demand the free possession of the sky:
This one glad office more, and then dissolves
Parental love at once, now needless grown,
Unlavish'd wisdom never works in vain.

Thomson. Spring.

He glanc'd contemptuous o'er my ruin'd fold;
He blam'd the graces of my favourite bower;
My breast, unsully'd by the lust of gold;
My time, unlavish'd in pursuit of power.

Shenstone, Elegy 19.

UN-LAU'RELLED. Not crowned or adorned with laurel: as an emblem of merit.

But thus unlaurel'd to descend in vain,
By all forgotten, save the lonely breast,
And mix unbleeding with the boasted slain,
While glory crowns so many a meaner crest!

Ryron. Childe Harold, c. 1.

VOL. II

UN-LA'WFUL. } R. Gloucester uses un-
UNLA'WFULLY. } lawe, as a noun,—“If men UNLA'WFULNESS. } did hem unlaw,” (i. e. in-UNLA'W-LIKE. } justice,) p. 473.

Not according to law, contrary to law; to rules laid down; to rules imposed, fixed, established, decreed, determined; to statute, decree, edict.

The sixte was, zuf eni play to chaptile were idrawe,
& eni man made is apell, zuf me dude him enlawe,
Than to the bissop from ercedekne is apell solde make.

R. Gloucester, p. 473.

A good Fryday ich fynde a felon was ysavede
That unlawfelleche hadde ylyved. al hus lyf tyme
And for he by knew on the crois. and to Crist shrove hym.

Piers Plouhman, p. 197.

As ye sauter sheweth. by suche as geven mede
That unlawfulliche. haven large hondeu. Id. p. 52.

But then he was supprisyd with such pryde, that he exercisid tyranny and other enlawful meanes in so excedyng maner, that the countree waxed wery of hym, & cōspyrid his deth.—Fabyan. Chronycle, c. 63.

The dwellers and habitantes in the bondes of our realme, are drawn and are coō to our court, to haue ryght of certayne grefes and troubles enlawfull, y^t you by feble counsell and symple informacion, haue bē in purpose to do to them.

Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 43.

How should honest men liue quietly in the commonwelth at any time, if their goodes other gotten by their owne labour, or left to them by their friends, shall enlawfully and vnorderly, to the feeding of a sort of rebels, be spoyled and wasted, and vtterly scattered abroad.

Sir J. Cheeke. The Hurt of Sedition.

God had made provision for this case, that no unlawful oath should pass an obligation.—Bp. Taylor, vol. ii. Ser. 27.

“Never shall this poor breath of mine consent,
That he, that two and twenty years hath reign'd
As lawful lord and king by just descent,
Should here be judg'd, unheard, and unarraign'd;
By subjects too, (Judges incompetent
To judge their king, unlawfully detain'd)
And unbrought forth to plead his guiltless cause;
Barring th' anointed liberty of laws.”

Daniel. Civil Wars, b. iii.

But in matters of right or duty inquiry must be made ever, when the question is of the lawfulness or unlawfulness of what is to be done; because we enter upon danger, and despise our own safety, and are careless of our duty, and not zealous for God, nor yet subjects of conscience, or of the Spirit of God, if we do not well inquire of an action we are to do, whether it be good or bad.

Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. i. c. 5.

It being therefore most unlike a law, to ordain a remedy so slender and unlawlike, to be the utmost means of all public safety or prevention, as advice is, which may at any time be rejected by the sole judgment of one man, the king, and so unlike the law of England, which lawyers say is the quintessence of reason; we may conclude that the king's negative voice was never any law.

Milton. Answer to Eikon Basilike, § 6.

Of opinions thus injurious, there are various kinds; from that which is least so, the unlawfulness of tithes, up through the rising degrees of—the unlawfulness of oaths—of self defence—of capital punishments; till we come to a reprobation of civil magistracy itself, and the renouncing of all kings but king Jesus.—Warburton. Alliance, b. ii. Note A.

UN-LAY, v. To unlaid a cable is to untwist the folds in which it is laid together.

After working up all our junk and old shrouds, to make twice-laid cordage, we were at last obliged to unlay a cable to work into running rigging.—Anson. Voyages, b. ii. c. 2.

UN-LEARN, v. } Gower writes, to unlere.
UNLEARNED. } See LERE.

UNLEARNEDLY. } Not to take, accept, receive, acquire or procure knowledge; to refuse, to reject, to put away, knowledge.

A nyce herte, fle for shame.
A whorof arte thou so sore alered, —Gower. Con. A. b. iv.

Hitherto pertaineth the precept of clemencye and mercy for kinges, which is to do well to the good men decerning the good and lerned from the euil & enlerned, & to moderate the punisshments of the tractable and curable, and to suppress the obstinate vncurable.

Joye. Exposicion of Daniel, c. 1.

An vnlettered mā myght be ashamed to write so enlearnedly, and a mad man woulde almoste waxe red for shame, to wryte in some thinges so frantikely.

Sir T. More. Workes, p. 1037.

And adulation now is spent so nigh,
As that it hath no colours to express
That which it would, that now we must be fain
T' unlearn that art, and labour to be plain.

Daniel. A Panegyric Congratulatory.

For as for the unlearned, in private, nothing more usual with them then to take offence at our dissensions, and to become more uncertain and unjoynted upon the hearing of any question discusst.—Hales. Rem. Ser. Rom. xiv. 1.

That a single innocence might not be oppress'd and overborn by a crew of mouths, for the restoring of a law and doctrine falsly and unlearnedly reputed new and scandalous, God, that I may ever magnify and record this his goodness, hath unexpectedly rais'd up as it were from the dead, more than one famous light of the first reformation to bear witness with me.—Milton. The Judgment of Martin Bucer.

The immortality of the soul, has been commonly believed in all ages and in all places, by the unlearned part of all civilized people and by the almost general consent of all the most barbarous nations under heaven.

Clarke. On the Evidences, Prop. 4.

He [Pope] used to say, that he had been seven years (that is from twenty to twenty seven) in unlearning all he had been acquiring for twice that time.

Pope. Imitations of Horace, b. ii. Ep. 2. Notes.

UN-LE'AVENED. Not raised; lightened.

Being indifferent of it selfe, wee are by this axiome o. theirs to auoid the vse of enleavened bread in their sacrament, because such bread the church of Rome being hereticall vseth.—Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, b. iv. § 10.

Tertullian, among other Jewish rites and customs, such as feasts, sabbaths, fasts, and unleavened bread, mentions, “oraciones litorales,” that is, prayers by the river-side.

Paley. Evidences of Christianity, pt. ii. c. 6.

UN-LE'CTURED. Not read; not taught (orally).

Lorenzo! hast thou ever weigh'd a sigh?
Or study'd the philosophy of tears?

(A science, yet unlectur'd in our schools!)

Hast thou descended deep into the breast,
And seen their source? if not, descend with me,
And trace those briny rivulets to their springs.

Young. The Complaint, Night 5.

UN-LE'ISURED. } Being in want of, de-UNLE'ISUREDNESS. } prived of, denied, the free use of time; of liberty or freedom from labour or employment.

But her unleisured thoughts ran not over the ten first words.—Sidney. Arcadia, b. ii.

It were strange, if in what I writ, there did not appear much of unevenness; and if it did not betray the unleisuredness, and relish of the unsettledness of the wandering author.

Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 251.

The true, though seldom the avowed cause of these men's neglect of the scripture, is not their unleisuredness, but their pride.—Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 312.

UN-LESS, (see ONLESS,) is (Tooke), A. S. Onles, dimittē, imperative of the verb on-lesan. to dismiss. Les, (qv.) the imp. of les-an, is sometimes used by our old writers. A great variety of examples is produced to shew that onles, onlesse, was the common mode of writing; and Tooke believes Tyndall to have been one of the first who wrote the word with an u. In the Bible, 1551, it is written with o; in the collection of his Works, 1573, with u. In Barnes, published with Tyndall, onles.

The scripture was geuen, that we may applye the medicine of the scripture, every man to his own sores, unlesse then we entende to be idle disputers and braulers about vaine wordes.—Prol. before the Five Books of Moses.

Onles it be lucre, whiche a gentyl wit littel estemeth.

Sir T. Elyot. The Governour, b. i. c. 14.

Saincte Augustine sayd well when he noted these wordes of Christ, verely verely onlesse ye eat the flesh of the Sonne of man &c. to be a figuratiue speache.

Bp. Gardner. Explic. of True Catholique Fayth, tol. 8.

They did forbyd to appele to the court of Rome onles the king gaue licence.—Barnes. Workes, p. 201.

Seeing then no man can pleade eloquently, unlesse he be able first to speake, it followeth that abilitie of speech is in this case a thing most necessary.

Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, b. i. § 14.

Till he who bore the eagle of the tenth legion, yet in the gallies, first beseeching his gods, said thus aloud, Leap down souldiers, unlesse ye mean to betray your ensigne; I for my part will perform what I owe to the common-wealth and my general.—Milton. History of England, b. ii.

And must no egg in Japhet's face be thrown,
Because the deed he forg'd was not my own?
Must never patriot then declaim at gin,
Unless, good man! he has been fairly in.

Pope. Ep. to Sat. Dial. 2.

12 K

Nor me the foot-path pleases more; my foot
Shall none of all thy min'string maidens touch,
Unless there be some ancient matron grave
Among them, who hath pangs of heart endur'd
Num'rous, and keen as I have felt myself;
Her I refuse not. Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. xix.

UN-LESSONED. Not read to, taught, or instructed.

— But the full summe of me
Is sum of nothing: which to terme in grosse,
Is an unlessoned girle, vnschoold, vnpractiz'd,
Happy in this, she is not yet so old
But she may learne.
Shakespeare. Merchunt of Venice, Act iii. sc. 2.

UN-LET'TED. Not lated, retarded, hindered, impeded.

And song full low and softly,
Three songs in her harmony,
Unletted of every wight.—Chaucer. Dreame.

UN-LET'TERED. Having no literature or learning; not possessed of, or acquainted with, literature or learning.

And thei sighen the stidefastnesse of Petir and of Joon, for it was foundun that thei weren men unlettrid and lewde men.—Wiclif. Dedis, c. 4.

He also vsed fayres of hooly churche thynges, and was a lewde or unlettrid man, as the more parte of the bysshoppes of Englande at those dayes were.
Fabyan. Chronycle, c. 212.

And therefore men unlettered and vnlearned bee hable to doe so great thynges, because they beleue simply that by the power of God I chace away deuils.
Udal. Mathew, c. 12.

That famous Greece where learning flourish'd most,
Hath of her muses long since left to boast,
Th' unletter'd Turk, and rude barbarian trades,
Where Homer sang his lofty Iliads.
Dryden. To Master George Sandys.

The unletter'd Christian, who believes in gross,
Plods on to heaven, and ne'er is at a loss.—Dryden.

UN-LE'VELLED. Not evened, flattened, made even or smooth.

You, who thro' gazing crowds, your captive throng,
Throw pangs and passions, as you move along,
Turn on the left, ye fair, your radiant eyes,
Where all unelev'd the gay garden lies.
Tickell. Kensington Garden.

UN-LIB'DINOUS. Not lustful or lecherous.

— O innocence
Deserving paradise! if ever, then,
Then had the sons of God excuse to have bin
Enamour'd at that sight; but in those hearts
Love unlibidinous, nor jealousie
Was understood, the injur'd lovers hell.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. v.

UN-L'ICENSED. Not authorised, permitted; not controlled by authority.

If then the order shall not be vain and frustrate, behold a new labour, lords and commons, ye must repeal and proscribe all scandalous and unlicens'd books already printed and divulg'd.—Milton. Areopagitica.

If the people be intelligent, and can discern, they are hindred in their devotion; for they dare not say Amen till they have considered, and many such cases will occur in extempore, or unlicensed prayers, that need much considering before we attest them.
Bp. Taylor. Set Forms of Liturgie, s. 135.

There Truth, unlicens'd, walks; and dares accost
Ev'n kings themselves, the monarchs of the free!
Thomson. Liberty.

UN-L'ICKED. Not touched by, passed over by touch of, the tongue.

Foro. Dog, leave thy snarling, or I'll cut thy tongue out,
Thou unlickt bear, darst thou yet stand my fury?
Beaum. & Fletch. Fair Maid of the Inn, Act iii.

The bloody bear, an inopendant beast,
Unlick'd to form, in groans her hate express'd.
Dryden. The Hind and the Panther,

UN-L'IFTED. Not raised, or elevated.

And the tents were all silent, the banners alone,
The lances unlifted, the trumpet unblown.
Byron. Destruct. of Sennacherib, s. 5.

UN-L'IGHTED. } Not kindled; not ignited.
UNL'IGHTSOME. } Unlightsome,—not having light; consequentially—dark, gloomy.

For of celestiall bodies first the sun
A mighty spheare he fram'd, unlightsom first,
Though of ethereal mould; then form'd the moon
Globose, and every magnitude of starrs,
And sowed with starrs the heav'n thick as a field.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. vii.

There lay a log unlighted on the hearth;
Where she was labring in the throes of birth
For th' unborn chief, the fatal sisters came,
And rais'd it up, and toss'd it on the flame.
Dryden. Ovid. Metam. b. viii.

UN-LIKE. } Not similar, or resembling;
UNL'IKELY. } not having (appearances)
UNL'IKENESS. } similar to truth or reality, UNL'IKELIHOOD. } to facts, circumstances, or UNL'IKELINESS. } events; not probable or credible.

Ye ben so depe enprented in my thought,
That whan that I consider your beautee,
And therewith all the unlikely elde of me,
I may not certes, though I shulde die.
Chaucer. The Marchantes Tale, v. 10,055.

(I) ne dare to loue, for mine vnlikelnesse.
Id. Troil. & Cres. b. i.

Of his clothyng, and of his gere
He was vnliche all o'ther there,
So that it happeneth at laste,
The quene vpon hym hir eie cast,
And knewe, that he was straunge, anone.
Gower. Con. A. b. vi.

His grace was strangely handled by his agents with unjust and unreasonable demands, and unlike to proceed out of a willing heart to conclude.—Henry VIII. to Wyatt, an. 30.

The vices in a womā is as a grene rede, that bloweth euery waie: but the libertie and dishonestie is as a drie kixe that breketh in such wise, that the more yll they vtter, the more unlikely is the redresse therof again.
Golden Boke, c. 26.

But whan the sede was now sprung vp into a blade and the stalkes wer laden and burdened with eares, than at length the cokels, growyng vp together, (theyr vnlykenesse vtterlyng or shewyng them,) began also to appeare.
Udal. Mathew, c. 13.

Jesus being then condemned, found one, whom of a thiefe
he made a citizen of paradise: so much unlikelihood was it, that the feloweshyp of punishment should defile him.
Id. John, c. 19.

As she cannot well do without company, so in no company so well as where the different sex in most resembling unlikenesse, and most unlike resemblance, cannot but please best, and be pleas'd in the aptitude of that variety.
Milton. Tetrachordon.

Christ being our patriarch in a supernatural birth, we fall infinitely short of him, and are not so like him as we were to Adam, and yet that we in greater unlikenesse should receive a greater favour, this was the excess of the comparison, and this is the free gift of God.
Bp. Taylor. Deus Justificatus.

But the saieng of Girald Cambren, in that point is not to be credited, because of the vnlikelihood of the thing it selfe, and also generall consent of other writers.
Holinshed. Historie of England, b. viii. c. 11.

John did every way forerun Christ, not so much in the time of his birth, as in his office; neither was there more unlikelihood in their disposition and cariage, than similitude in their function.—Bp. Hall. Cont. Christ's Baptisme.

How many pictures of one nymph we view,
All how unlike each other, all how true!—Pope, Epis. 2.

Direct his eye and contemplation, through those azure fields and vast regions above him, up to the fixt stars, that radiant numberless host of heaven; and make him understand how unlikely a thing it is, that they should be placed there only to adorn and bespangle a canopy over our heads.
Wollaston. Religion of Nature, s. 5.

The next unlikenesse to be taken notice of betwixt rotten wood and a kindled coal is, that the latter will in a very few minutes be totally extinguished by the withdrawing of the air.—Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 172.

Notwithstanding the unlikelihood, that she should appear there, without having been forcibly brought thither.
Id. Ib. vol. v. p. 287.

The night before we came out of the port [Sandwich] two reddish fish, about the size of large bearm, and not unlike them, were caught with hook and line.
Cook. Second Voyage, b. iii. c. 4.

Though, from the colour and shagginess of the hair, and its unlikenesse to any land animal, we judged it might probably be that of the large male ursine seal, or sea-bear.
Id. Third Voyage, b. vi. c. 5.

The extreme unlikelihood that such men should engage in such a measure as a scheme.
Paley. Evidences of Christianity, pt. ii. c. 8.

UN-LIMBER. Not easily bent, flexible or pliant.

To which temper more septentrional unlimber nations have not yet bent themselves.
Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 246.

UN-LIMITABLE. } Unlimitable, now writ-UNL'IMITED. } ten Ilimitable, (qv.)
UNL'IMITEDLY. } Unlimited,—not bound-UNL'IMITEDNESS. } ed, marked out or determined; having no bounds described or prescribed;
not defined or confined.

This covenant gives no unlimitable exemption to the king's person, but gives to all as much defence and preservation as to him, and to him as much as to their own persons, and no more.—Milton. Ans. to Eikon Basilike, § 28.

It might seem unto him [Christ] expedient to divide his kingdom into many provinces, and place many heads over it, that the power which each of them hath in particular with restraint, might illustrate the greatness of his unlimited power.—Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, b. viii.

One would have thought he [Filmer] would have told us expressly, what that fatherly authority is, have defined it, though not limited it, because in some other treatises of his he tells us, 'tis unlimited and unlimitable.
Locke. Of Government, b. i. c. 2.

Even the most advanced notion we have of God is but attributing the same simple ideas which we have got from reflection on what we find in ourselves, and which we conceive to have more perfection in them, than would be in their absence; attributing, I say, those simple ideas to him in an unlimited degree.—Id. Hum. Underst. b. iii. c. 6.

And now the evil is grown mighty and invincible, and swelled into a strange unlimitedness.—South, vol. x. Ser. 9.

Many ascribe too unlimitedly to the force of a good meaning, to think that it is able to bear the stress of whatsoever commissions they shall lay upon it.
Decay of Christian Piety.

Some of them told us, that the power of the king is unlimited, and that the life and property of the subject is at his disposal.—Cook. Third Voyage, b. ii. c. 11.

UN-L'INEAL. Not succeeding in a direct course of geniture.

Vpon my head they plac'd a fruitlesse crowne,
And put a barren scepter in my gripe,
Thence to be wrencht with an vnlineall hand,
No sonne of mine succeeding.
Shakespeare. Macbeth, Act iii. sc. 1.

UN-L'INED. Not having the inside covered, (with linen, with any material.)

Then came the iolly Sommer, being dight
In a thin silken cassock coloured greene,
That was vnlyned all, to be more light.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vii. c. 7.

UN-LINK, v. To loosen the link, or the concatenation; the connexion, folds or twists.

— But sodainly
Seeing Orlando, it vnlink'd it selfe,
And with intended glides, did slip away
Into a bush.—Shakespeare. As You Like It, Act iv. sc. 3.

But to make a king a type, we say is an abusive and unskilful speech, and of moral solidity makes it seem a ceremonial shadow: therefore your typical chain of king and priest must unlink.
Milton. Reason. of Church Government, b. i. c. 5.

UN-L'IQUEURED. Not wetted or moistened, or rubbed with any liquid substance; not having (yet) drunk (fermented) liquors.

How have we seen churches and states, like a dry unliquored coach, set themselves on fire with their own motion! how have we seen good timber rotted, with but the droppings of a small chink!—Bp. Hall, vol. v. Ser. 33.

Certainly he that could endure with a sober pen to sit and devise laws for drunkards to carouse by, I doubt me whether the very soberness of such a one, like an unlicour'd Silenus, were not stark drunk.—Milton. Apology for Smeectymnus.

UN-L'ISTENING. Not hearkening or at- tending to; not heeding.

— Rapine, that led
Millions of raging robbers in his train:
Unlistening, barbarous force, to whom the sword
Is reason, honour, law: the foe of arts
By monsters follow'd, hideous to behold,
That claim'd their place.
Thomson. Liberty.

UN-LIVE, v. } To unlive our former life is—UNL'IVELINESS. } to live in opposition to it, to the rules of it; to annul the effects of it.

Unliveliness,—want of life or vivacity, of animation or spirit.

The soberest and best govern'd men are least practis'd in these affairs; and who knows not that the bashful muteness of a virgin may oftentimes hide all the unliveliness and natural sloth which is really unfit for conversation.

Milton. Doct. & Disc. of Divorce, b. i. c. 3.

And if we would endeavour after an unmixed knowledge; we must unlive our former lives, and (inverting the practise of Penelope) undo in the day of our more advanc'd understandings, what we had spun in the night of our infant-ignorance.—Glanvill. Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 8.

It will be better to see, that we must unlive our former life, and undo all we have done; that we must renounce the principles we have avowed, we must root out the habits we have planted, we must forsake the paths which we have beaten and so long trod in, if ever we will be happy.

Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 17.

Many entertain principles which they defy by their practices, and unlive all that they have believed; so that that which was intended for the cure of sin, by accident becomes its aggravation.—South, vol. vii. Ser. 5.

UN-LOAD, v. } To take off or away the UNLOADING, n. } weight or burthen laid or put on, the freight, the cargo; to remove, to discharge—a weight or oppression.

I will make no mention of their miseries, being now under their enemies raging stripes: I thinke there is no man will iudge their fare good, or their bodies unladen of stripes, and not pestered with too much heate, and also with too much cold.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. p. 132.

As when some brook from th' over-moisten'd ground
By swelling waters proudly overflow'd,
Stoppeth his current, should' reth down his mound,
And from his course doth quite himself unload.

Drayton. Barons' Wars, s. 24.

Lynd. While for Abdalla's freedom we prepare,
You, in each other's breast, unload your care.

Dryden. 2 Pt. Conquest of Granada, Act iii.

The merchant, in order to save a second loading and unloading, endeavours always to sell in the home market, as much of the goods of all those different countries as he can.—Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. iv. c. 2.

UN-LOCK, v. To open, to loosen—a lock, or that which closes, or fastens, or holds fast, or confines; to open, to disclose.

And al the Iewene joye unjoyenen. and unlocken
And bote yf thei reverencen hus resurexion. and the rode honoure.

Piers Plouhman, p. 353.

A lytel ich over lep. for lesynges sake
That ich ne segge as ich seih. syunge my teme
For eft that light bad unlouke. and Lucifer answered.

Id. p. 358.

"Thou shalte stond up by the post,
As thou were bonde fast,
And I shall them leve unlok, that Away thou may them cast."

Imputed to Chaucer. Cokes Tale of Gamelyn.

He unlokid yonge Gamelyn
Both hondis and eke fete,
On hope of the avauncement
Which that he him behete.

Id. Ib.

That sweuen hath Daniell unloke
And saied, that it is Gods might,
Whiche whan men were moste vpright
To stonde, shall them ouer cast.—Gower. Con. A. Prol.

So that his lippes ben unloke,
And his courage is all to broke,
That euery thyng, whiche he can tell,
It springeth vp as doth a welle.

Id. Ib. b. iii.

His hand, his eye, his wits all present, wrought
The function of the glorious part he bears:
Now urging here, now cheering there, he flies;
Unlocks the thickest troops, where most force lies.

Daniel. Civil Wars, b. vi.

Yet death must usher and unlock the door.
Think further on thy self, my soul.

Donne. Progress of the Soul.

Know I have gold, which you shall never find,
No pains, no tortures shall unlock my mind.

Dryden. Conquest of Mexico, Act v. sc. 2.

Do but allow (as you must) this power of discerning to be in God proportionable to his nature, as in lower beings it is proportionable to theirs, and then it becomes infinite; and then again, the future actions of free agents are at once all unlocked, and exposed to His view.

Wollaston. Religion of Nature, s. 5.

UN-LO'DGED. Not having a lodging or place to lie or rest, to reside, or abide, or dwell.

Now that these heavenly mansions are to be void, you that shall hereafter be found unlodged, will be found inexcusable; especially since virtue alone shall be sufficient title, fine, and rent.—Carew. Caelum Britannicum.

UN-LOOKED. Not having the sight or vision directed to; not expected or foreseen.

Nowe therfore, when they wer farre from the lande, and hadde rowed vpon a fyue and twentye, or thyrtye furlonges, being almoste in despaire of theyr liues, our Lord Jesus was come nigh vnto them unlooked for.—Udal. John, c. 6.

My usage here has been the same it was,
Worthy a royal conqueror. For my restraint,
It came unkindly, because much unlook'd for.

Beaum. & Fletch. A King & No King, Act iv.

May this a fair example be to me,
To rule with temper: for on lustful kings
Unlookt for sudden deaths from heaven are sent!

Id. The Maid's Tragedy, Act v.

Cha. I take her from your lordship with all thanks,
And bless the hour wherein I was made prisoner,
For the fruition of this present fortune,
So full of happy and unlook'd-for joys.

B. Jonson. The Case is Altered, Act v. sc. 2.

Cal. To steal unlook'd for on my private sorrow, Speaks not the man of honour, nor the friend,
But rather means the spy.

Rowe. The Fair Penitent, Act iii.

UN-LO'OPED. Not fastened by a loop, by the involution of a band.

— Their guarded feet
Defy the muddy dangers of the street;
While you with hat unloop'd, the fiery tread
Shun every dashing pool, or idly stop,
To seek the kind protection of a shop.—Gay. Trivia, b. i.

UN-LOOSE, v. } See LOOSE. A. S. On-les- UNLO'USEN. } an, dimittere. Un is not here the negative, but the A. S. On, aug.
To let go, or free from hold or fastening.
To remit, to dismiss; to untie, to unbind; to relax.

Seriauntes hii semede, that serven atte the barre
To plede for penyes. and poundes the lawe
And nat for oure Lordes love. unlose hure lyppe ones.

Piers Plouhman, p. 8.

At the ende of these foure or fve dayes, they unloose him and put one of the females vnto him, and giue them meate and drinke, and in eight dayes he is become tame.

Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. p. 235.

The maryage notwithstandinge is not conformed, vntyll at night that the husbnde putteth a ryng on the finger of his wife, and unloseth her girdell.

Sir T. Elyot. The Governour, b. ii. c. 12.

He with his hands strave to unloose the knots, (Whose sacred fillets all-besprinkled were With filth of gory blood, and venom rank.)

Surrey. Virgile. Æneis, b. ii.

If you swear you will not procure a dispensation, you can as well be dispens'd with for that perjury as the other;
and you cannot be tied so fast, but the pope can unloose you.

Bp. Taylor. Dissuasive from Popery, pt. i. c. 3. § 2.

But when mysterious Superstition came,
And with her civil sister leagu'd, involv'd
In study'd darkness the desponding mind;
Then tyrant Power the righteous scourge unloos'd,
For yielded reason speaks the soul a slave.

Thomson. Liberty.

Fix them [religious, virtuous, manly principles] deeply in your bosom, and let them go with you unloosened and unaltered to the grave.—Knox. Ess. No. 2.

UN-LO'RDED. } Not preferred, or raised UNLO'RDING, n. } to the rank of lord.
UNLO'RDLY.

But he that would mould a modern bishop into a primitive, must yield him to be elected by the popular voice, undiocest, unrevenu'd, unlorded, and leave him nothing but brotherly equality, matchless temperance, frequent fasting, incessant prayer and preaching, continual watchings and labours in his ministry.

Milton. Reformation in England, b. i.

The worst and strangest of that Any Thing, which the people then demanded, was but the unlording of bishops, and expelling them the house, and the reducing of church discipline to a conformity with other Protestant churches.

Id. Answer to Eikon Basilike, § 6.

Were it such a desperate hazard to put to the venture the universal votes of Christ's congregation, the fellowly and friendly yoke of a teaching and laborious ministry, the pastorlike and apostolick imitation of meek and unlordly discipline, the gentle and benevolent mediocrity of church-maintenance, without the ignoble hucksterage of piddling tithes?—Id. Reformation in England, b. ii.

UN-LO'USEABLE. } That cannot be lost, UNLO'ST. } or departed from.

The Epicureans suppose this world to be produced by the casual concourse of atoms, and ascribe to every particular atom an innate and unloseable mobility, or, rather, an actual motion, or a restless endeavour after it.

Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 445.

Dazzled, o'erpower'd, with the delicious draught
Of miscellaneous splendours, how I reel
From thought to thought, inebriate, without end!
An Edeu this! a Paradise unlost!

Young. Complaint, Night 9.

UN-LOVED. } Not preferred, or selected,
UNLO'VING. } or desired, (as an object of possession or enjoyment;) not delighted in.

Ac let hure be unloveliche. unlofsom a bedde
A bastarde. a bounde on a begeneldes doughter.

Piers Plouhman, p. 179.

"Through which I see, that clene out of your mind
Ye have me cast, and I ne can nor may
For all this world within mine herte find,
To unloven you a quarter of a day."

Chaucer. Troil. & Cres. b. v.

— Alas the great greuance
To loue unloved.

Id. The Court of Loue.

Whan were maisters more unlouyng or strayterlaced to their seruauntes, and seruauntes lesse diligent and trustye to their maisters, than nowe?—Udal. Ephesians, Prol.

The old man growing only in age and affection, followed his suit with all means of dishonest servants, large promises, and each thing else that might help to countervail his own unloveliness.—Sidney. Arcadia, b. ii.

Nay such an unbounteous giver we should make him, as in the fables Jupiter was to Ixion, giving him a cloud instead of Juno, giving him a monstrous issue by her, the breed of Centaurs, a neglected and unlov'd race, the fruits of a delusive marriage: and lastly, giving him her with a damnation to that wheel in hell, from a light thrown into the midst of temptations and disorders.—Milton. Tetrachordon.

Nay, perhaps they will say it was too great a sufferance, and with as slight a reason, for no wife but would sooner pardon the act of adultery once and again committed by a person worth pity and forgiveness, than to lead a wearisome life of unloving and unquiet conversation with one who neither affects nor is affected.—Id. Ib.

A beauty which on Psyche's face did throw Unlovely blacknesse.—Beaumont. Psyche, (1651,) p. 19.

I have often wondered, considering the excellent and choice spirits that we have among our divines, that they do not think of putting vicious habits into a more contemptible and unlovely figure than they do at present.

Tatler, No. 205.

Lo! beauty fails; lost in unlovely forms
Of little pomp, magnificence no more Exalts the mind, and bids the public smile.

Thomson. Liberty.

UN-LU'CKY. } Not fortunate, prosperous
UNLU'CKILY. } or happy; not having good hap or fortune.

It is said y^t whē the king according to the Macedōs custome vsed the ceremony of steapyng barly, at the making of the walles, y^t the birdes came & fed ther vpon: which being takē of many for an unlucky tokē: it was answered by their diuiners, y^t there should bee great resorte of straigers to y^e city, & y^t it should geue nourishment to many lādes.—Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 74.

And from the seas the cruel Trojan's eyes Shall well discern this flame, and take with him
Eke these unlucky tokens of my death.

Surrey. Virgile. Æneis, b. iv.

Yet since she sawe the streight extremitie,
In which his life unluckily was laid,
It was no time to scan the prophecie,
Whether old Proteus true or false had said,
That his decay should happen by a mayd.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 12.

But Grave a pilot unluckily dissuading him, as if it were an incommodious road for ships, he set sail from thence with his whole fleet to Saint Michael's Isle.

Camden. Hist. of Q. Elizabeth, (1597.)

This Rhodophil's the unluckiest fellow to me, this is now the second time he has barr'd the dice, when we were just ready to have nick'd him.

Dryden. Marriage A-la-Mode, Act iv. sc. 3.

Now, Sir, I dare say you will agree with me, that as there is no moral in these jests they ought to be discouraged, and looked upon rather as pieces of unluckiness, than wit.

Spectator, No. 371.

Mr. Locke has somewhere unluckily let drop that he conceives it possible the faculty of thinking may be annexed to a system of matter, and this notion has been eagerly laid hold of by my lord Bolingbroke to confirm his opinion of the corporeity of all thinking substances.

Search. Light of Nature, vol. i. pt. ii. c. 4.

UN-LUST. } We should now say,—Listless, UNLU'STY. } listlessness.

Thei toke vpon hem suche penance,
There was no songe, there was no daunce,
But euery myrthe and melodie
To hem was then a maladie.
For vnlust of that auenture
There was no man whiche toke tonsure.

Gower. Con. A. b. viii.

And thus his yonge vnlusty life
He driueth forth so as he maie.—Id. Ib. b. ii.

Therefore, I say, whosoever they be that do find vnlust and tediousness to do good, may opinion with themselves, that they be none of God's children.

Strype. Eccles. Mem. Originals, an. 1555. No. 44.

UN-LU'STROUS. The old folio reads,— Illustrious; the correction is ascribed to Rowe.
Steevens refers to "Lack-lustre eye," in As You Like It.

— Joyne gripes, with hands Made hard with houely falshood (falshood as With labour;) then by peeping in an eye
Base and illustrious as the smoakie light
That's fed with stinking tallow.

Shakespeare. Cymbeline, Act i. sc. 7.

UN-LU'TING. Removing the lute, or clay, or adhesive fastening.

Our antimony thus handled, afforded us about an ounce of sulphur, yellow and brittle like common brimstone—and, of so sulphureous a smell, that upon the unluting the vessels, it infected the room with a scarce supportable stink.

Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 483.

UN-MA'IDENLY. Not like, not suitable to a maiden; to a virgin.

The wanton gesticulations of a virgin in a wild assembly of gallants, warmed with wine, could be no other than riggish, and unmaidenly.

Bp. Hall. Cont. John Baptist Beheaded.

UN-MA'IMED. Not cut or wounded, not mutilated.

Cethegus not disfigur'd in his shape,
Enjoying all his limbs unmaimed lyes,
And Catiline with his whole carcase dyes.

Sir J. Beaumont. Juvenal, Sat. 10.

It is the first grand duty of an interpreter to give his author entire and unmaimed; and for the rest, the diction and versification only are his proper province, since these must be his own; but the others he is to take as he finds them.—Pope. Homer. Iliad, Pref.

UN-MAKE, v. } To cause not to be, not to UNMA'KABLE. } live or exist; to take away, to destroy the form or frame, shape or mould, the composition or construction.

Who set the imperial crowne vpon the emperoure Henry the sixth's heade, not with his hande, but with his foote;
and with the same foote againe caste the same crowne of, saieng withal, hee had power to make emperours, and to unmake them againe at his pleasure?

Jewell. A Replie vnto M. Hardinge, p. 418.

Hee put his company in remembrance of a pinnesse of fue tunne burthen, which hee had within his shippe, which was caryed in pieces, and unmade vp for the vse of those which should inhabite there the whole yeere.

Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 87.

That is to say if the principles of bodies are unalterable, they are also unmakable, by any but a divine power.

Grew. Cosmo. Sacra, b. i. c. 2.

God, when he makes the prophet, does not unmake the man. He leaves all his faculties in the natural state, to enable him to judge of his inspirations, whether they be of divine original or no.—Locke. Hum. Underst. b. iv. c. 19.

UN-MA'LLEABLE. That cannot or may not be beaten (out in extent); that cannot be plied or made pliant.

They grow, like iron often heated and quenched, churlish, and unmalleable by the hammer of the divine threatenings.

Spenser. Prod. p. 341.

UN-MAN, v. } To take away, strip or de-UNMA'NLY. } prive of men, or of the quali-UNMA'NFULLY. } ties of man—his virtue, UNMA'NHOOD. } strength, fortitude, courage.
Unmanly is also equivalent to inhuman.

— Sothe him saied Pandarus
That for to slaen himself, might he not win
But bothe done unmanhode and a sinne.

Chaucer. Troil. & Cres. b. i.

That Paris now, with his unmanly sort
With mitred hats, with ointed bush and beard
His rape enjoyth.—Surrey. Virgile. Aeneis, b. iv.

To constrain him further were to unchristen him, to unman him, to throw the mountain of Sinai upon him, with the weight of the whole law to boot.

Milton. Doct. & Disc. of Divorce, b. ii. c. 22.

These daughters by appointment of Danaus on the marriage-night having murder'd all ther husbands, except Linceus, whom his wives loyalty sav'd, were by him at the suit of his wife thir sister, not put to death, but turn'd out to sea in a ship unmann'd; of which whole sex they had incurr'd the hate.—Id. History of England, b. i.

— Live, live, my matchless son,
Blest in thy father's blessing: much more blest
In thine own vertues: let me dew thy cheeks
With my unmanly tears.

Beaum. & Fletch. The Laws of Candy, Act v.

Yet so they dy'd not unmanfully, but turning oft upon thir enemies, by the advantage of an upper ground, put them down by heaps, and fill'd up a great ditch with their carcasses.—Milton. History of England, b. vi.

All mocking and scoffing at religion, all jesting and turning arguments of reason into droilery and ridicule, is the most unmanly and unreasonable thing in the world.

Clarke. On the Attributes, Introd.

And, fearing my escape, invit'st thou me,
To share thy couch, with fraudulent design
First to unarm, and to unman me next?

Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. x.

First then, with fears unmanly he possess'd
The heart of Hector; mounting to his seat
He turn'd to flight himself, and bade his host Fly also. — Id. Ib. Iliad, b. xvi.

UN-MA'NACLED. Not handcuffed; not bound, fastened, shackled.

— As if unmanacled
From Greece, Morea were, and that, by some Earthquake unrooted, loose Morea swam.

Donne. Progress of the Soul, s. 1.

Then be the work renew'd with endless pain,
And join with care the shatter'd parts again;
The lurking faults and errors you may see,
When the words run unmanacled and free.

Pitt. Vida. Art of Poetry, b. iii.

UN-MA'NAGED. } Not governed by the UNMA'NAGEABLE. } hand; not guided, conducted, regulated.

The bloody factions and rebellious pride
Of a strong nation, whose unmanag'd might
Them from their natural sovereign did divide,
Their due subjection, and his lawful right.

Drayton. Barons' Wars.

You are sure to have less wit-work, gentle brother,
My humour being as stubborn as the rest,
And as unmanageable.

B. Jonson. Magnetic Lady, Act i. sc. 1.

When they grow impatient of the curb, and are so fretted with it, they do but show how much they wanted it, and how much more unruly and unmanageable they had been without it.—Waterland. Works, vol. viii. p. 383.

The Prussian ministers in foreign courts have (at least not long since) talked the most democratick language with regard to France, and in the most unmanaged terms.

Burke. Thoughts on French Affairs, (1791.)

Pretenders to the art, by working upon the imaginations of their patients, were frequently able to produce convulsions; and convulsions so produced, are amongst the most powerful, but, at the same time, most uncertain and unmanageable applications to the human frame which can be employed.—Paley. Evid. of Christianity, pt. i. c. 2.

UN-MA'NGLED. Not maimed or mutilated.

Which approbrious epithets, if they were deserued by an vntrue report of the author; then should Buchanan haue sharpened his toong against Belenden his countriman, the translator of Hector Boetius into their mother toong, from whom Grafton hath deriu'd his words; sense for sense unmangled (as he found the same written.)

Holinshed. Chron. of England, an. 1296.

UN-MA'NNERED. } Not managed or con-
UNMA'NNERLY. } ducted, or behaved ac-UNMA'NNERLINESS. } cording to the mode or fashion, sort or kind; to the general mode of action or conduct; of polite, civilized, or urbane persons: and, consequentially, rude, vulgar.

Hateful to God, debatouris, proude and highe ouer mesure, fynderis of yuele thingis, not obeiyng to fadir and modir, unwise, unmanerli [incompositos], withouten love, with-outen boond of pees, withouten merci.

Wiclif. Romaynes, c. 1.

They are unmanerly also and vncleanly in taking their meat and their drinke, and in other actions.

Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 55.

Moreouer he noteth much vnmanerlinesse of eating and drinking at bankets.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 586.

Ju. Give room, and keep your places
And you may see enough; keep your places.

Long. These people are too far unmanner'd, thus
To stop your graces way with multitudes.

Beaum. & Fletch. The Noble Gentleman, Act iii.

Neece. Fall back,
Yet backer, backer yet, you unmannerly puppy,
Do you not see I'm going about to read it?

Id. The Sea-Voyage, Act iv.

You stand provided of your braves and ruffians,
To man your cause, and bluster in your brothel.

Dumo. Take back the foul reproach, unmanner'd railer.
Rowe. Jane Shore, Act ii.

Have we not known a box on the ear more severely accounted for than man-slaughter? In these extra-judicial proceedings of mankind, an unmannerly jest is frequently as capital as a premeditated murder.—Tatler, No. 253.

Though children, when little, should not be much perplexed with rules, and ceremonious parts of breeding, yet there is a sort of unmannerliness very apt to grow up with young people, if not early restrain'd, and that is a forwardness to interrupt others that are speaking, and to stop them with some contradiction.—Locke. On Education, § 144.

Why, Beau Nash would have handed your Catos and Brutus out of the ball-room, if they had shown their unmannerly heads in it.—Knox. Ess. No. 161.

UN-MA'NTLE, v. To take off, to divest, the cloak, or covering. Unmantling,—

Removing, withdrawing the closing or contraction of their overspreading brows.

Leicester affected to resist when she strove to take his cloak from him. "Nay," she said, "but I will unmantle you."—Scott. Kenilworth, c. 7.

I spake; at once obedient from the ground,
Their folded brows unmantling, all arose,
And with admiring eyes (for of a bulk
To be admir'd was he) the stag survey'd,
Till having gaz'd their fill, their hands they lav'd,
And preparation made of noble cheer.

Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. x.

UN-MANU'RED. Not worked, tilled, cultivated.

The land, which warlike Britons now possesse,
And therein haue their mighty empire raysd,
In antique times was salvage wilderness,
Vnpeopled, unmanur'd, vnprou'd, vnprayd.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 10.

Thy body is a natural paradise,
In whose self, unmanur'd, all pleasure lies,
Nor needs perfection. — Donne. Sappho to Philanis.

It looks like a vast tract of land newly discover'd: the soil is wonderfully fruitful, but unmanur'd; overstock'd with inhabitants, but almost all savages, without laws, arts, arms, or policy.—Dryden. Let. to Mr. John Dennis.

UN-MARKED. Not noted, or taken notice of; observed, regarded.

Here was himselfe faine to steale away his own wordes, to begyle the reader vpon the readyng of the place, and make hym passe ouer his faute for the while unmarked.

Sir T. More. Workes, p. 1026.

The sea-green syrens taught her voice their flatt'ry;
And, while she speaks, night steals upon the day,
Unmark'd of those that hear.

Dryden. All for Love, Act iv.

Nor went Eumæus from his cottage forth
Unmark'd by Pallas, but the goddess came,
In semblance an accomplish'd damsel, fair
And of majestic mien.—Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. xvi.

UN-MARR'ED. Not spoilt, hurt, harmed, or injured.

His silver waves did softly tumble downe,
Unmarr'd with ragged mosse or filthy mud.

Spenser. Faerie Queene.

No foreign clime they ransack for their robes;
Nor brothers cite to the litigious bar;
Their good is good entire, unmixt, unmarr'd.

Young. Complaint, Night 7.

UN-MARRIED. } Not wedded, or joined in UNMA'RRIABLE. } wedlock or matrimony; not united.

But yf through other displeasures any debate aryse, by meane whereof the wyfe chaunceth to departe from her husbande, leste she through her owne folye stande without hope of reconcilyng, lette her abyde enmarried.

Udal. 1 Corinthians, c. 7

— Husband, wife,
There is some holy mystery in those names
That sure the unmarried cannot understand.

Beaum. & Fletch. Knight of Malta, Act v.

UNM

Neither can it be said properly that such twaine were ever divorc'd, but only parted from each other, as two persons unconjunctive or unmarriageable together.

Milton. Doct. & Disc. of Divorce, b. ii. c. 15.

Augustus upon his return to Rome at the end of a war, received complaints that too great a number of the young men of quality were unmarried.—Spectator, No. 528.

UN-MARSHALLED. Not arranged, ranked, or set in order.

Now to the war not only those, who shar'd
The laurels heap'd on Caucasus, repair'd
With unextinguish'd heat, but ev'ry plain
To combat sends a rude, unmarshalled train.

Lewis. Statius. Thebaid, b. xii.

UN-MASK, v. } To remove, or strip off—
UNMASKING, n. } the mask, or cover worn as a disguise; to remove the veil or concealment.

— You are

Observ'd against the gravity long maintain'd
In Italy (where to see a maid unmasked Is held a blemish) to be over-frequent
In giving or receiving visits.

Beaum. & Fletch. Fair Maid of the Inn, Act i.

I fear no mood stamp'd in a private brow,
When I am pleas'd t' unmask a public vice.

B. Jonson. Every Man out of his Humour. The Stage.

A great light (as the sun's sudden unmasking) being seen upon this discovery.

Browne. The Inner Temple Masque.

Yet will I not insist on that which may seem to be the cause on God's part; as his judgment on our sins, the trial of his own, the unmasking of hypocrites.

Milton. Of Reformation in England, b. i.

UN-MA'STERABLE. } That cannot be
UNMA'STERED. } governed, subdued, overpowered.

Then weigh what losse your honour may sustaine,
If with too credent eare you list his songs;
Or lose your heart: or your chaste treasure open
To his unmastered importunity.

Shakespeare. Hamlet, Act i. sc. 3.

The factor may discover itself as being unmasterable by the art of man.—Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. iv. c. 2.

UN-MA'TCHABLE. } Not made alike; not UNMA'TCHED. } paired, or coupled, equalled, or paralleled.

Albeit many singular peeces & those unmatchable, have passed through their hands.—Holland. Plinie, b. xxxvi. c. 5.

The unmatcht courtesies you have done my miseries,
Without this forfeit to the law, would charge me
To tender you this life, and proud 'twould please you.

Beaum. & Fletch. Custom of the Country, Act v.

Let no man put asunder.] That is to say, what God hath join'd; for if it be, as how oft we see it may be, not of God's joining, and his law tells us he joins not unmatchable things, but hates to join them, as an abominable confusion, then the divine law of Moses puts them asunder, his own divine will in the institut on puts them asunder, as oft as the reasons be not extant, for which only God ordain'd their joining.—Milton. Tetrachordon.

When love finds it self utterly unmatcht, and justly vanishes, nay rather cannot but vanish, the fleshly act indeed may continue, but not holy, not pure, not beseeiming the sacred bond of marriage; being at best but an animal excretion, but more truly worse and more ignoble than that mute kindliness among the herds and flocks.—Id. Ib.

Long time unmatch'd in war the hero shone,
And mighty fame in fields of battle won.

Rowe. The Ambitious Step-Mother, Act ii.

Nor Phoenix' daughter fair, of whom were born Minos unmatch'd but by the pow'rs above,
And Rhadamanthus.—Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. xiv.

UN-MA'TED. Not matched, paired, coupled.

Here like a turtle, (mew'd up in a cage,) Unmated, I converse with air and walls,
And descant on my vile unhappiness.

Ford. 'Tis Pity She's a Whore, Act v. sc. 1.

UN-MATE'RIAL, i.e. Immaterial, (qv.)

Should we this ornament of glory then,
As th' unmaterial fruits of shades, neglect

Daniel. Musophilus

UN-MATRICULATED. See MATRICULATE.
Not "sworne and registered into the societie of their foster-mother of learning, the universitie."

Instead of beginning with arts most easy, and those be such as are most obvious to the sense; they present their young unmatriculated novices at first coming with the most intellectual abstractions of logic and metaphysics.

Milton. On Education.

UNM

UN-ME/ANING. } Not having or keeping in UNME/ANED. } mind; not signifying to the mind; not designing, or purposing, or intending.

Curse on that word so ready to be spoke,
For through my lips, unmeant by me, it broke.
Oh no, we must not, will not, cannot part,
And my tongue talks, unprompted by my heart.

Congreve. To Cynthia.

Now this [a short preparatory act of worship in private,] ought to be done with understanding; not to be an unmeaning formality, in ignorant compliance with common practice.—Secker, vol. iii. Ser. 25.

Then bring me wine, the banquet bring;

Man was not form'd to live alone:

I'll be that light unmeaning thing

That smiles with all, and weeps with none.

Byron. To Thyrsa, s. 2.

UN-ME/ASURABLE. } That cannot be UNME/ASURABLE. } measured or meted; UNME/ASUREABLENESS. } that cannot be UNME/ASURED. } bounded or confined;
have the bounds or confines ascertained, have the magnitude described, or defined.

Like to these unmeasurable mountains
Is my painful life, the burden of ire.

Wyat. The Lover's Life, &c.

But forasmuch as wee bee in hand with laughinge, which is a signe of a verye light and dissolute minde, let her see that shee laugh not unmeasurably.

Vives. Instruction of a Christian Woman, c. 12.

Order must be kept in the common welth lyke helth in the body, and all the drift of pollicie loketh to this ende, how this temper may be safely maintained, without any excesse of unmeasurableness, other of the one side or of the other.—Sir J. Cheeke. The Hurt of Sedition.

And againe, shewing ye unmeasurableness of his Godhed, he sayd vnto his disciples. Beholde, I am wt you vnto ye worldes ende, howe dyd he ascend to heauen, but because he is local and a very man? Or howe is he present vnto his faythfull, but because he is unmeasurable and verye God?—Fryth. A Bok made by him, an. 1533.

It hath beene commonlie told, that Englishmen learnd of him [king Hardicnute] their excessiue gourmandizing and unmeasurable filling of their panches with meates and drinks.—Holinshead. Hist. of England, b. vii. c. 15.

Ye would thinke the displeasures which now grieue you, should seeme easie in respect of the unmeasurable outrage, which might issue through my comming amongst you.

Id. Hist. of Scotland. Macbeth.

And to what an unmeasurable proportion will all this arise?—Holland. Plinie, b. xxxvi. c. 15.

That the great angel-blinding light should shrink
His blaze, to shine in a poor shepherd's eye;
That the unmeasur'd God so low should sink,
As pris'ner in a few poor rags to lie.

Crashaw. Steps to the Temple.

— Heav'nly stranger please to taste
These bounties which our nourisher, from whom
All perfect good unmeasur'd out, descends,
To us for food and for delight hath caus'd
The earth to yeeld.—Milton. Paradise Lost, b. v.

He has in my opinion, the truest veneration for God, not who can set forth his excellencies and prerogatives in the most high and pompous expressions; but he, who willingly has a deep and real sense of the unmeasurable inferiority of himself, and his best ideas, to the unbounded and unparalleled perfections of his Maker.

Boyle. Works, vol. v. p. 156.

[He shewed] that the value of gold was likely to advance unmeasurably, so that he that lived a twelvemonth should see an old angel worth twelve shillings of the current money.—Strype. Eccles. Mem. Edw. VI. an. 1543.

My love, not yet we have attain'd the close
Of all our sufferings, but unmeasur'd toil
Arduous remains, which I must still achieve.

Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. xxxviii.

UN-ME/CHANIZED. Not formed or framed by mechanism; or as an engine or machine.

This, perhaps, would have been nearly the state of the question, if nothing had been before us but an unorganized, unmechanized substance, without mark or indication of contrivance.—Paiey. Natural Theology, c. 2.

UN-ME/DDLED. } Not mixed or inter-
UNME/DDLINGNESS. } mixed, or interfered with; changed or altered.

And after this maner [the flood-gate] is opened and closed for sixe dayes in the whole, continuing from thenceforth other ten dayes unmeddled withall.

Carew. Survey of Cornwall, fol. 105.

If then we be but sojourners, and that in a strange nation, here must be an απαρμολογη, an unmeddlingness with these worldly concerns.—Bp. Hall. Ser. 1 Peter, i. 17.

UNM

UN-ME/DITATED. Not studiously thought; not considered or contemplated.

— For nether various style

Nor holy rapture wanted they to praise
Thir Maker, in fit strains pronounc't or sung, Unmeditated.—Milton. Paradise Lost, b. v.

UN-MEEK. Not mild or gentle.

He ouercomer, as it is saied, hath put an vnmeke lord, fodder to his cruell horse, that is to saie, Hercules slough
Diomedes, and made his horse to fretten him.

Chaucer. Boecius, b. v.

UN-MEET. } Not convenient (meeting)
UNMEE/TLY. } or becoming; not suited,
UNMEE/TNESS. } adapted, fit.

As I lay in my bed, sleepe full vnmete
Was vnto me, but why that I ne might Rest, I ne wist.

Chaucer. The Flower and the Leaf.

And he wolde fayne haue vnderstonde
The cause, why she fared so.
With softe wordes asked tho:

What maie you be my God swete?

And she, whiche thought hir selfe vnmete,

And the lest worthe of women alle.—Gower. Con. A. b. vi.

Also if he lyue temperately, and delyteth moche in study, they embrayd him with nygardshyp, or in derision, calle hym a clerke or a poete, vnmete for any other purpose.

Sir T. Elyot. The Governour, b. iii. c. 26.

Sainte Peter hauynge our Sauyour in suche estimacion and honoure, as it well became hym to haue, thought it in hys mynde vnmetely that his Lorde and Mayster shoulde weshe his feete.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 1316.

This is that rational burning that marriage is to remedy, not to be allay'd with fasting, nor with any penance to be subdu'd; which how can he asswage who by mis-hap hath met the most unmeet and unsuitable mind?

Milton. Doct. & Disc. of Divorce, b. i. c. 4.

So both together traveld, till they met
With a faire mayden clad in mourning weed,
Upon a mangy jade unmeetely set,

And a lewd foole her leading thorough dry and wet.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 6.

A perpetual unmeetness and unwillingness to all the duties of help, of love, and tranquility, is most contrary to the words and meaning of the institution.

Milton. Tetrachordon.

He that loved not to see the disparity of several cattle at the plow, cannot be pleased with vast unmeetness in marriage.—Id. Doct. & Disc. of Divorce, b. i. c. 13.

Perceiving the good inclination to peace, which the French shewed to have, they thought it not unmeet for the public wealth and quietness of Christendom, that the king's highness for his part should give ear unto it.

Strype. Eccles. Mem. Edw. VI. an. 1549.

UN-ME/LLOWED. Not softened to ripeness or maturity; not ripened or matured.

His yeares but yong, but his experience old.

His head vn-mellowed, but his iudgement ripe.

Shakespeare. Two Gentlemen of Verona, Act ii. sc. 4.

UN-MELO/DIOUS. } Having no sweet UNME/LODIZED. } sound.

But ay the ruthless driver goads them on,
And ay of barking dogs the bitter throng
Makes them renew their unmelodious moan;
Ne ever find they rest from their unresting fone:

Thomson. Castle of Indolence, c. 2.

Unlike to living sounds it came,
Unmix'd, unmelodis'd with breath;
But, grinding through some scannell frame,
Creak'd from the bony lungs of death.

Langhorne, Feb. 11.

UN-ME/LTED. Not dissolved or liquefied, or reduced to a liquid or fluid state.

What though he frown, and to tumult do incline?

Thou the flame,

Kindled in his breast, canst tame,

With that snow, which, unmelted, lies on thine.

Waller. Puerperium.

UN-MENTIONED. Not placed before the mind; not named or nominated, (in speech or writing.)

— Now, now, come upon her

With all your oratory,

As a young advocate should, and leave no vertue

Of mine unmention'd, I'll stand centinel.

Beaum. & Fletch. Lover's Progress, Act i.

If this be true, as the Scotch writers themselv's witness (and who would think them fabulous to the disparagement of their own country?) how much wanting have bin our historians to thir countries honour, in letting pass unmention'd an exploit so memorable, by them remember'd and attested, who are wont offer to extenuate them to amplifye aught done in Scotland by the English?

Milton. Hist. of England, b. v.

Oh noble subject for new annals fit,
In musty fame's records unmention'd yet!
A looking-glass must load th' imperial car,
The most important carriage of the war!
Dryden. Juvenal, Sat. 2.

UN-MERCENARY. Not taking, not seeking payment, hire, or wages.

But praise is a generous and unmercenary principle, which proposes no other end to itself, but to do, as is fit for a creature endowed with such faculties to do, towards the most perfect and beneficent of beings; and to pay the willing tribute of honour there, where the voice of reason directs us to pay it.—Atterbury, vol. i. Ser. 1.

UN-MERCIED. } Having no willingness, UNMERCIFUL. } not willing, to spare and UNMERCIFULLY. } save, to pardon or forgive;
UNMERCIFULNESS. } having no, shewing no, UNMERCILESS. } kindness, clemency, compassion, sympathy, pity. Not kind, clement, compassionate, piteous.

Unmerciless,—the prefix un seems to augment the force of the negative termination less. So Un-remorse-less, (qv.) by Cowley.

And for he was to love strange,
He wolde not his herte change
To be benigne and fauorable
To love but unmerciable. Gower. Con. A. b. iii.

A lalemaie maie not accuse a prieste of fornication. This is that extremitie, and unmerciful rigoure, M. Hardinge, that ye shewe your priestes in these cases.

Jewell. A Replie unto M. Hardinge, p. 365.

Now ye see the great diligence of these enuious hypocrites, ye see their deceltes, unmerciless murther, and ingratitude.—Joye. Exposition of Daniel, c. 5.

Out fly the Irish, and with sword and fire
Unmercied havock of the English made.
Drayton. Miseries of Q. Margaret.

Hear me (the child of shame now) hear thou helper,
And take my wrongs into thy hands, thou justice,
Done by unmindful man, unmerciful,
Against his master done, against thy order;
And raise again, thou father of all honor,
The poor despis'd, but yet thy noblest creature.
Beaum. & Fletch. Moral Representations.

The first [hinderance to our prayers] is unmercifulness—He that takes mercy from a man is like him that takes an altar from the temple; the temple is of no use without an altar, and the man cannot pray without mercy—God never can bear the prayers of an unmerciful man.

Bp. Taylor, vol. i. Ser. 4.

Full fiercely layd the Amazon about,
And dealt her blowes unmercifully sore:
Which Britomart withstood with courage stout,
And them repaide againe with double more.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 7.

This was highly resented by the Spaniards, who found out the person that had used the porter so unmercifully, and treated him in the same manner, as if the indignity had been done to their own noses.—Tatler, No. 260.

Whether such losses may not have been inflicted by God, as a just punishment of our former avarice and unmercifulness, when we had it more in our power than now (and yet had it as little in our will) to be charitable.

Atterbury, vol. ii. Ser. 7.

Perhaps some stop might be put to this unmerciful prosecution, if all would seriously reflect, that whoever pays a visit that is not desired, or talks longer than the hearer is willing to attend, is guilty of an injury which he cannot repair, and takes away that which he cannot give.

Idler, No. 14.

The others attacked the poles; and, having beat them most unmercifully, returned to their places.

Cook. Third Voyage, b. ii. c. 9.

UN-MERITABLE. } Not deserved or UNMERITED. } earned, acquired, or ob-UNMERITEDNESS. } tained—as a right.

Ant. This is a slight unmeritable man,
Meet to be sent on errands; is it fit
The three-fold world diuided, he should stand
One of the three to share it?

Shakespeare. Julius Caesar, Act iv. sc. 1.

Your love deserves my thanks, but my desert
Unmeritable, shunnes your high request.

Id. Rich. III. Act iii. sc. 7.

Though I say little myself, my attention to others, and those nods of approbation which I never bestow unmerited, sufficiently shew that I am among them.—Spectator, No. 77.

That the Arminians own the freeness and unmeritedness of God's grace, the remonstrants confession and apology are very careful to satisfy the world.

Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 278.

I take upon me to assert, that no unbeliever of the present age would apply this epithet to the Christianity of the New Testament, or not allow that it was entirely unmerited.

Paley. Evidences of Christianity, pt. iii. c. 4.

UN-MET. Not coming together or convening; not confronting or encountering.

Winds lose their strength, when they do empty fly,
Unmet of woods or buildings.
B. Jonson. Sejanus, Act v. sc. 1.

UN-METHODIZE, v. Not according to an orderly way or regular course; not arranged in order.

Tho the understandings of most men, whom we know or have conversed with, seem to agree in some general maxims, but unpolish'd, unnumber'd and unmethodiz'd, yet we see many nations differing from us in many things, which we think clearly, fundamentally, and naturally true.

Harrington. Oceana, p. 12.

UN-MIGHTY. Not powerful, strong, vigorous, forcible, valiant.

And so shalte thou disarmen the ire of thilke vnmyghtie tiraunte.—Chaucer. Boecius, b. i.

For thy without liues chere
Unmyghty be to see, or here
Or speke, or do, or elles fele,
And yet the fooles to hem [images] knele,
Whiche is hir owne hande werke.—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

So longe as they maye holde styll their hyghe honor and priuilege in makig their vnmyghty Mayzi, thei dout not but to stond faste and fewer, ayenste God and Cryste and his gospell.—Joye. Expos. of Daniel, c. 12.

UN-MILD. } Not soft, gentle, soothing;
UNMILDNESS. } kind or compassionate.

So goth this proude vice vnmilde,
That he disdeigneth all lawe,
He not what is to be felawe,
And serue maie he not for pride.—Gower. Con. A. b. i.

And whereas the tenor of the law was a servant to amplify and illustrate the mildness of grace; now the unmildness of evangetic grace shall turn servant, to declare the grace and mildness of the rigorous law.

Milton. Doct. & Dis. of Divorce, b. ii. c. 7.

UN-MILLED. Not stamped (in a mill).

It perhaps may be of some advantage to strangers to be told that there are two kinds of coin here, of the same denomination, milled and unmilled, and that the milled is of most value.—Cook. First Voyage, b. iii. c. 12.

UN-MINDED. } Not marked, remarked, UNMINDFUL. } observed, attended to; not called to mind, remembered or recollected.

Wherefore like mad men, and vnmyndfull of all discipline of warre, they filled the campe full of sedicious words.
Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 294.

Which taketh glory to aduance your excellent parts and noble virtues, and to spend it selfe in honouring you: not so much for your great bountie to my selfe, which yet may not be *vnminde*d, nor for name or kindred sake by you vouchsafed, being also regardable.

Spenser. Muiopotmos, Epis. Ded.

— But Lords, when peace
Was purchas'd for you, and victorie brought home,
Where was your gratitude, who in your coffers
Hoarded the rustie treasure which was due
To my *unminde*d father?

Beaum. & Fletch. The Laws of Candy, Act v.

Hear me, (the child of shame now) hear thou helper,
And take my wrongs into thy hands, thou justice
Done by unmindful man, unmerciful,
Against his master done, against thy order;
And raise again, thou father of all honor,
The poor despis'd, but yet thy noblest creature.
Id. Moral Representations.

— Ill dost thou repay
The bounties of his hand, unmindful of
The fountain whence thy streams of greatness flow;
Thou hast forgot high Heav'n.

Rowe. Tamerlane, Act iii.

But when the twelfth fair morrow streak'd the east,
Then all the everlasting gods to Heav'n
Resorted, with the Thund'rer at their head,
And Thetis, not unmindful of her son,
From the salt flood emerging, sought betimes
Olympus, and the boundless fields of Heav'n.

Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. i.

UN-MINGLED. } Not mixed or put to-UNMINGLEABLE. } gether, or compounded.

Springs on the tops of high-hills are the best: For both they seem to have a lightness, and appetite of mounting; and besides they are most pure and unmingled.

Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 396.

For know my loue: as easie maist thou fall
A drop of water in the breaking gulfe,
And take unmingled thence that drop againe
Without addition or diminishing,
As take from me thy selfe and not me too.
Shakespeare. Comedie of Errours, Act ii. sc. 2.

2094

It is a cup in which God hath poured much of his severity and anger, and yet it is pure and unmingled; for it is all mercy.—Bp. Taylor, vol. ii. Ser. 13.

Nor shall I insist on the observation elsewhere mentioned, of the divers and unmingleable oils afforded us by human blood, long fermented and digested with spirit of wine.—Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 536.

The pleasure of recollecting speculative notions would not be much less than that of gaining them, if they could be kept pure and unmingled with the passages of life; but such is the necessary concatenation of our thoughts, that good and evil are linked together, and no pleasure recurs but associated with pain.—Idler, No. 44.

UN-MIRACULOUS. Not marvellous or wonderful.

They [miracles] do not, can not, more amaze the mind,
Than this, call'd unmiraculous survey,
If duly weigh'd, if rationally seen,
If seen with human eyes.

Young. The Complaint, Night 9.

UN-MIRY. Not bedaubed with slimy dirt; not dirtied.

Be sure observe where brown Ostrea stands,
Who boasts her shelly ware from Wallfleet sands;
There may'st thou pass with safe unmiry feet,
Where the rais'd pavement leads athwart the street.
Gay. Trivia, b. iii.

UN-MISSED. Not perceived or known, to be wanting; to be absent, or gone.

(Then Thisbe in the darke the doores unbar'd;
And slipping forth, unmiss'd of her guard,
Comes maskt to Ninus tomb: there in the cold
Sits underneath that tree: love made her bold.

Sandys. Ovid. Metam. b. iv.

Why should he [Vellinus] not steal away, unasked and unmiss'd till the hurry of passions in those, that should have guarded him, was a little abated?

Gray. To Mason, Let. 27. (1757.)

UN-MITTIGABLE. } That cannot be softened UNMITIGATED. } or mollified, soothed, assuaged, alleviated, moderated.

— She did confine thee
By helpe of her more potent ministers,
And in her most vnmittigable rage,
Into a clouen pine.—Shakespeare. Tempest, Act i. sc. 2.

The desperate man is crucified with his owne distrust, he pierceth his owne heart with a deepe, irremediable, unmittigable killing sorrow.

Bp. Hall. Ser. before Charles II. (March 30, 1628.)

O that I were a man! what, beare her in hand vntill they come to take hands, and then with publike accusation vncouered slander, vnmitigated rancour?

Shakespeare. Much Adoe about Nothing, Act iv. sc. 1.

UN-MIXED. Not mingled, thrown, or poured together, confused or blended.

And thy commandment all alone shall lue
Within the booke and volume of my braine,
Vnmixt with baser matter.

Shakespeare. Hamlet, Act i. sc. 5.

Then shall thy saints unmixt, and from th' impure
Farr separate, circling thy holy mount Unfained Halleluiahs to thee sing,
Hymns of high praise, and I among them chief.

Milton. Paradise Lost, b. vi.

A temper and conduct of unmixed obedience would be no more, than plain reason and common sense dictates.

Secker, vol. iv. Ser. 4.

UN-MO'ANED. Not bewailed, lamented, deplored.

Daugh. Our fatherlesse distresse was left vnmoan'd
Your widdow-dolour, likewise be vnwept.
Shakespeare. Rich. III. Act ii. sc. 2.

UN-MO'DIFIED. Not brought within measure; not limited, tempered, qualified.

Between the extreme of a total exclusion, to which your maxim goes, and an universal unmodified capacity, to which the fanaticks pretend, there are many different degrees and stages, and a great variety of temperaments, upon which prudence may give full scope to its exertion.

Burke. Let. to Sir H. Langrishe, M.P.

UN-MOIST. } Not wet, damp, bedewed.
UNMOISTEN. }

— Live without honesty,
And may'st thou dye with an unmoist'ned eye,
And no tear follow thee.

Beaum. & Fletch. Passionate Madman, Act ii.

By her
The different qualities of things were found,
And secret motions, how with heavy bulk
Volatile Hermes, fluid and unmoist
Mounts on the wings of air. J. Phillips. Cider, v. i.

The clouds dropt fatness, in the middle sky
The dew suspended staid, and left unmoist
His execrable glebe. Id. Ib. b. ii.

The muses still require Humid regalement, nor will aught avail
Imploring Phœbus, with unmoisten'd lips.—Id. Ib.

The whales,
Leaving their caverns, gambol'd on all sides
Around him, not unconscious of their king;
The sea clave wide for joy; he lightly flew,
And with unmoisten'd axle skimm'd the flood.
Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. xiii.

UN-MOLE/STED. Not encumbered or burdened, troubled, annoyed, disturbed.

Have I not cause to be in such a matter defensive, as may procure me freedom to pass more unmolested hereafter by those incumbrances, not so much regarded for themselves, as for those who incite them?—Milton. Colasterion.

Meanwhile the swains
Shall unmolested reap what plenty strows
From well-stor'd horn, rich grain, and timely fruits.
J. Phillips. Cider, b. ii.

This truce was agreed to, and we were suffered to launch the mast, and carry off the sails, and our astronomical apparatus, unmolested.—Cook. Third Voyage, b. v. c. 4

UN-MO'NIED. Not having money or coin, wealth, riches.

Here, as each season yields a different store,
Each season's stores in order ranged been;

Shenstone. The School-mistress.

UN-MONO/POLIZING. See UNAPPROPRIATING, and the quotation from Milton.

UN-MOOR, v. To free from, to remove—the cables, the anchors, by which a vessel is held.

The 7th of December, the Centurion and her prize unmoored, and stood down the river, passing through the Bocca Tigris on the 10th.—Anson. Voyages, b. iii. c. 10.

Early in the morning of the 4th, we unmoored, and sailed out of the bay, with the Discovery in company, and were followed by a great number of canoes.
Cook. Third Voyage, b. v. c. 2.

Thou speaketh sooth, thy skiff unmoor,
And waft us from the silent shore;
Nay, leave the sail still fur'd, and ply
The nearest oar that's scatter'd by.—Byron. The Giaour.

UN-MO'RRISED, i.e. not dressed for dancing the morris, i.e. with his face blackened, his forehead covered with red or yellow taffety, and with bells tied to his legs.

What a devil ails this fellow? this foolish fellow?
Being admitted to be one of us too,
That are the masters of the sports proceeding,
Thus to appear before me too, unmorris'd?
Beaum. & Fletch. Women Pleas'd, Act iv. sc. 1.

UN-MO'RTERED. Not conjoined by mortar; i.e. certain ingredients bruised or pounded together.

Some loose stones perhaps that lye unmortered upon the battlements, may be easily shaken down, but whoever saw a squared marble laid by line and level in a strong wall upon a well-grounded base, fly out of his place by whatsoever violence?—Bp. Hall. Christ Mystical, § 7.

UN-MO'RTGAGED. Not pledged or staked; not subject from charge or debt.

Is there one God unsworn to my destruction?
The least unmortgag'd hope?—for, if there be,
Methinks I cannot fall beneath the fate
Of such a boy as Cæsar.—Dryden. All for Love, Act v.

When for defraying the expense of government, a revenue is raised within the year, from the produce of free or unmortgaged taxes, a certain portion of the revenue of private people is only turned away from maintaining one species of unproductive labour, towards maintaining another.
Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. v. c. 3.

UN-MO'RTIFIED. } Not quelled or de-UNMO'RTIFIEDNESS. } stroyed; subdued, subjected, debased, humiliated.

Such frenzies, and much greater, are our mutual enmities and oppositions, while we quietly sit down in our unmortified affections.—Glanville, Ser. 2.

His lust is stronger, his passions violent and unmortified, his habits vicious, his customs sinful, and he lives in the regions of sin, and dies and enters into its portion.

Bp. Taylor, vol. ii. Ser. 2.

When there are such extravagant affections in us, that we think any other condition would please us better than our own, this argues much unmortifiedness, though it run not out into acts. When a man is still distempered under variety of conditions and businesses, and is inordinate in them all, it argues much unmortifiedness.

Goodwin. Tryall of a Christian's Growth, c. 3.

UN-MO/VABLE. } See IMMOVABLE; as it
UNMO/VABLY. } is now usually written.
UNMO/VED. } That cannot be moved

Id. Ebreweis, c. 6.

All the mouable and vmouable godes and possessions parteyninge to sir Johan Mercyer within Parys and without, in the realme of Fraunce, that myght be layde hande on, was taken as goodes forfaitte, and gyuen to other persons.
Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. c. 190.

But that my mind is fixt unmoveably
Never with wight in wedlock aye to join,
Sith my first love me left by death dissever'd.
Surrey. Virgile. Æneis, b. iv.

A thing, which no cables be they never so big and strong, no ankers, how massie and weightie soever they be, sticke they also as fast and unmoveable as they will, can performe.
Holland. Plinie, b. xxxii. c. 1.

Neither doth it [the gracious heart] presume to prescribe unto God what and how hee shall worke; but takes what it findes, and unmoveably rests in what it takes.

Bp. Hall. Cont. The Dumble Devill Ejected.

So sure a certainty of our constant and reflected apprehension of eternall life, is both hard to get, and not easie to hold unmoveably.—Id. The Balm of Gilead, § 7.

Me no such cares nor combrous thoughts offend,
Ne once my minds vmoued quiet grieve,
But all the night in siluer sleepe I spend,
And all the day, to what I list, I doe attend.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 9.

—Say you would have my life,
Why, I will give you; for it is of me
A thing so loath'd, and unto you that ask
Of so poor use, that I shall make no price.
If you intreat, I will unmov'dly hear.
Beaum. & Fletch. Philaster, Act i.

Vnmouing, vncorrupt, and spotlesse bright,
That need no sunne t' illuminate their spheres,
But their owne natue light, farre passing theirs.
Spenser. An Hymne of Heauenlie Beautie.

So unmoveable is that truth deliver'd by the spirit of truth, that though the light of nature gave some obscure glimmering, some uncertain hopes of a future state; yet human reason could attain to no clearness, no certainty about it, but that it was Jesus Christ alone, who had brought life and immortality to light through the gospel.

Locke. Hum. Underst. b. iv. c. 3.

What man, but I, so long unmov'd could hear
Such tender passion, and refuse a tear!
But do not talk of dying any more,
Unless you mean that I should die before.
Dryden. 1 Pt. Conquest of Granada, Act iv. sc. 2.

UN-MOULD, v. To take away or destroy the form, shape or feature.

—Whose pleasing poison
The visage quite transforms of him that drinks,
And the inglorious likeness of a beast
Fixes instead, unmolding reason's mintage
Character'd in the face.
Milton. Comus.

UN-MO'UNDED. Not protected by a mound, or raised fence or bank.

And however, by nature, he may be fertile, and of a good soyl; yet, if he lyes unmounted, he shall be sure to be awayes low.—Feltham, pt. ii. Res. 65.

UN-MO'URNED. Not grieved, lamented, bewailed.

Yes—had I ever proved that passion's zeal
The change to hatred were at least to feel:
But still—he goes unmourn'd—returns unsought—
And oft when present—absent from my thought.
Byron. The Corsair, c. 2.

UN-MU'FFLE, v. To remove or take away, that which covers or conceals.

E. Br. Unmuffle ye faint stars, and thou fair moon,
That wont'st to love the traveller's benizon.
Milton. Comus.

UN-MU'RMURED. } Not uttering sounds
UNMU'RMURING. } of complaint, repining or discontent; not complaining or repining.

Duke. Seek me out grooms.
Men more insensible of reputation,
Less curious and precise in terms of honor,
That if my anger chance let fall a stroke,
As we are all subject to impetuous passions,
Yet it may pass unmurmur'd, undisputed,
And not with braver fury prosecuted.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Nice Valour, Act iv.

To soothe thy sickness, watch thy health,
Partake, but never waste thy wealth,
Or stand with smiles un murmuring by,
And lighten half thy poverty.
Byron. The Bride of Abydos, c. 1.

UN-MU'SICAL. Not according or concordant, harmonious or melodious.

Let argument bear no unmusical sound,
Nor jars interpose, sacred friendship to grieve.
For generous lovers let a corner be found,
Where they in soft sighs may their passions relieve.
B. Jonson. Rules for the Tavern Academy.

UN-MU'TABLE, i. e. Immutable, that cannot be changed or altered.

But in this behalf leat the redemption of man ouerecome, and leat that bee dooen, which thy will beeing vnmutable hath determined, and not the thyng whiche the weakenesse of this body dooeth geue aduise or mocion vnto.
Udal. Luke, c. 22.

UN-MU'TILATED. Not maimed, marred, or dismembered.

The parlement had ordered it [Charing-cross] to be sold and broke to pieces: but John River, the brazier who purchased it, having more taste or more loyalty than his masters, buried it unmutilated, and shewed to them some broken pieces of brass in tokens of his obedience.
Pennant. London.

UN-MU'ZZLE, v. } To remove the muzzle, UNMU'ZZLED. } or that which closes or confines the mouth, (stops the utterance.)

Cel. How proue you that in the great heape of your knowledge?
Ros. I marry, unmuzzle your wisdom.
Shakespeare. As You Like It, Act i. sc. 2.

—What might you thinke?
Haue you not set mine honor at the stake,
And baited it with all th' vnmuzzled thought
That tyrannous heart could think?
Id. Twelfth Night, Act iii. sc. 1.

The hell-hounds of war, on all sides, will be uncoupled and unmuzzled.
Burke. Let. to a Member of the Nat. Assembly.

UN-MYSTE'RIOUS. Not shut up, hidden, or concealed.

Sir John Cheeke. The Hurt of Sedition.

A right heavenly nature indeed, as it were unnaturing them, doth so bridle them [the elements].

Sidney. Arcadia, b. iii.

But for all that without shame he still goeth on, exhorting thereunto all princes that will hear him, who do abhor to see such unnaturalness in any man, as he shameless doth set forwards.—Strype. Eccles. Mem. Hen. VIII. an. 1538.

What a mischievous and unnatural thing go ye about? is it meet that the father should destroye the sonne?

Holinshed. Chron. of England, an. 1154.

In the end, such was the vnkindnesse, or (as I maie saie) the unnaturalnesse of which he found in his two daughters, notwithstanding their faire and pleasant words vttered in time past, that being constrained of necessitie, he fled the land, and sailed into Gallia, there to seeke some comfort of his youngest daughter Cordeilla, whom before time he hated.

Id. Historie of England, b. ii. c. 5.

Being persuaded to it by this thought, sir,
That the unnaturalness, first, of the act,
And then his father's oft disclaiming in him,
(Which I did mean t' help on,) would sure enrage him
To do some violence upon his parent.

B. Jonson. The Fox, Act iii. sc. 5.

If there were no more in a crime than the disorder of nature, the very unnaturalness itself were a very great matter.—Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. ii. c. 1.

It is strange to observe, how though he were the meekest person that ever was upon earth, yet here he strives as it were to unnaturalize himself, and lay by his natural sweetness of disposition.—Hales. Rem. Ser. Luke, xviii. 1.

It is unnatural for any one in a gust of passion to speak long together, or for another in the same condition, to suffer him, without interruption.

Dryden. Essay of Dramatic Poesie.

Is there any thing in rhyme more constrain'd than this line in blank verse? "I Heav'n revoke, and strong resistance make." Where you see both the clauses are plac'd unnaturally; that is, contrary to the common way of speaking, and that without the excuse of a rhyme to cause it.—Id. Ib.

Whence this unwonted patience? this weak doubt?
This tame beseeching of rejected peace?
This meek forbearance? this unnative fear,
To generous Britons never known before?

Thomson. Britannia.

Then prudent thus Telemachus replied:
Antinous! to thrust the mother forth,
Who gave me birth and rear'd me, were a deed
Unnat'ral and impossible to me.

Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. ii.

For great are thy judgements, and cannot be expressed:
therefore unnurtured souls have erred.—Wisdom, c. 17.

UN-OBE'DIENT. } i. e. Disobedient, (qv.)
UNOBE'DIENCE. } Unobeyed,—not listened UNOBE'YED. } to, yielded to, observed or subserved, or submitted to.

For ther ben manye unobedient and veyne spekeris and disseyueris, moost thei that ben of circumsion, whiche it bihoueth to be reprev'd.—Wiclif. Tyle, c. 1.

And we han redi to venge al unobedience whanne ghoure obedience schal be fillid.—Id. 2 Corynth. c. 10.

Pepin not unobedient to the Pope's call, passing into Italy, frees him out of danger, and wins for him the whole exarchate of Ravenna.—Milton. Of Ref. in England, b. ii.

To Flint from thence, unto a restless bed,
That miserable night he comes convey'd;
Poorly provided, poorly followed;
Uncourted, unrespected, unobey'd.
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. ii.

— He resolv'd
With all his legions to dislodge, and leave Unworshipt, unobey'd the throne supream Contemptuous, and his next subordinate Awak'ning, thus to him in secret spake.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. v.

UN-OBJECTIONABLE. } By usage, — UNOBJE'CTED. } that can have nothing put or placed, or stated against it.

What will he leave unobjected to Luther, when he makes it his crime that he defied the Devil?—Atterbury.

A translation that should be unobjectionable to my brethren of the Roman Catholic communion.—Dr. Geddes.

I mean, that there are few cases in which, if we permit ourselves to range in possibilities, we cannot suppose something more perfect, and more unobjectionable, than what we see.—Paley. Evidences of Christianity, pt. iii. c. 6.

UN-OBNOXIOUS. Not subject, liable, or exposed, (to punishment.) Generally, not subject, liable or exposed.

So, unobnoxious now, she hath buried both;
For none to death sins, that to sin is loath.
Donne. On Lady Markham.

Such high advantages thir innocence
Gave them above thir foes, not to have sinnd,
Not to have disobey'd; in fight they stood Unwear'd, unobnoxious to be pain'd
By wound, though from thir place by violence mov'd.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. vi.

Mastiffs, in gold and silver, lin'd the approach
On either side, with art celestial fram'd
By Vulcan, guardians of Alcinous' gate
For ever, unobnoxious to decay.
Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. vii.

UN-OBSCURED. Not dimmed or darkened; not clouded or overcast.

— How oft amidst
Thick clouds and dark doth heav'n's all-ruling sire
Choose to reside, his glory unobscur'd.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ii.

UN-OBSERVED. } Not kept or held, (sc.)
UNOBSERVEDLY. } in sight; not beheld;
UNOBSERVANT. } not watched or guarded;
UNOBSERVANCE. } noted or noticed or at-UNOBSERVABLE. } tended to.
UNOBSERVING. }

(Consider the variety of God's grace) his sending angels to watch us, to remove us from evil company, to drive us with swords of fire from forbidden instances, to carry us by unobserved opportunities into holy company.
Bp. Taylor, vol. ii. Ser. 26.

It seems to me more likely, that he went thither secretly and unobservedly, in the dusk of the evening, or in a disguise.—Patrick. On Judges, xvi. 1.

Indeed the unobservant may have some general confus'd apprehensions of a kind of beauty, that guilds the outside frame of the universe.
Glanvill. Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 24.

Among those unaccountable levellers of the world, fate or fortune in the profane lexicon, and in the Christian's undiscovered providence, may pass for the first opinion, and time or the grave, for the other two. The two first require the more serious inquiry into, for the universality of their power, and yet general unobservance of it.
Whitlock. Manners of the English, p. 419.

So when the Sun's broad beam has tir'd the sight,
All mild ascends the moon's more sober light,
Serene in virgin modesty she shines
And unobserv'd the glaring orb declines.
Pope. Moral Essays, Ep. 2.

Imperfect speculum, is qualified to reflect, in a confused manner, so many either beams, or little and singly un-observable images of the lucid body, that from a diaphanous it degenerates into a white body.
Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 702.

The great age which men then lived to could not but help to preserve a sense of religion amongst them, unless they grew culpably careless and unobserving.
Waterland. Works, vol. vi. p. 176.

An unexperienced and unobservant man might expect to find extraordinary devotion and piety in the chapels and colleges in our English universities.—Knox. Ess. No. 90.

UN-OBSTRU'CTED. } Not blocked up; UNOBSSTRU'CTIVE. } not opposed or hindered.

For in the vacant (as your schools approve)
Should finite matter be suppos'd to move,
Not knowing how to stop, or where to stay,
It unobstructed must pursue its way,
Be lost in void immense, and dissipated stray.
Blackmore. Creation, b. iv.

What gulphs, what mounds, what terrours, can controul
The rushing orb, and make him backward roll?
Why should he halt at either station? why
Not forward run in unobstructive sky?—Id. Ib. b. ii.

UN-OBTAINED. Not held or possessed; not acquired or procured.

All the will doth now worke vpon that object by desire, which is as it were a motion towards the end as yet unobtain'd; so likewise vpo the same hereafter received it shal worke also by loue.—Hooker. Eccles. Politie, b. i. § 11.

UN-OBTRUSIVE. That cannot, that does not thrust or force against; put or place offensively forward or in the way; not too forward.

Ye quietists, in homage to the skies!
Serene! of soft address! who mildly make
An unobtrusive tender of your hearts,
Abhorring violence; who halt indeed;
But, for the blessing, wrestle not with Heaven!
Young. Complaint, Night 4.

UN-OBVIOUS. Not lying in the way; not plain before us; not evident, manifest, or clear.

That by the knowledge and application of some unobvious
and unheeded properties and laws of natural things, divers effects may be produced by other means and instruments than those one would judge likely.—Glanvill, Ess. 3.

Let me call upon you to consider a few, not unobvious, things, which may also serve to confirm some part of what has hitherto been delivered.—Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 177.

UN-OCCUPIED. Not taken or seized, held or kept possession of; not possessed, used, employed, engaged.

Looke in the gospel vpon hym which laied vp his talent, and left it unoccupied, and therefore vtterly lost it.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 1182.

Oure ydle unoccupied mynd wãd्रेth about, while our tong at adducture pattereth a pase.—Id. Ib. p. 1359.

Doubtless, if we shall discover further to the very north-pole, we shall find all that tract not to be vain, useless, or unoccupied.—Ray. On the Creation, pt. ii.

In the reign, indeed, of Charles the First, the council, or committees of council, were never a moment unoccupied, with affairs of trade.—Burke. Economical Reform, (1789.)

UN-OFFENDING. } See INOFFENSIVE.
UNOFFENDED. } Not hurting or harm-UNOFFENSIVE. } ing; not injuring or injuring; not affronting.

Cas. My prayers pull daily blessings on thy head,
My unoffending child, my Annapel.
Beaum. & Fletcher. Laws of Candy, Act ii.

The bee stings too; but it is when she is provoked; these draw blood unoffended, and sting for their owne pleasure.
Bp. Hall. Occasional Meditations, Med. 52.

But notwithstanding his unoffensive and cautious return to those ill laid demands, immediately, it being the Munday before Easter, an accusation was sent up to the committee at London.—Fell. Life of Hammond, s. 1.

If such inclemency in heav'n can dwell,
Yet why must unoffending Argos feel
The vengeance due to this unlucky steel?
Pope. Statius. Thebaid, b. i.

The whole trading property of America (even unoffending shipping in port) was indiscriminately and irrevocably given, as the plunder of foreign enemies, to the sailors of your navy.—Burke. Address to the King.

Horace very truly observes, that whatever mad frolics enter into the heads of kings, it is the common people, that is, the honest artizan and the industrious tribes in the middle ranks, unoffended and unoffending, who chiefly suffer in the evil consequences.—Knox. Ess. No. 99.

UN-OFFERED. Not brought before or forward, or in presence; not presented or proposed, held forth or exhibited.

— But why o' th' sudden now does the fit take ye,
Unoffer'd, or uncompe'll'd? why these sweet curtesies?
Beaum. & Fletcher. The Maid in the Mill, Act v. sc. 2.

How then can we know that he hath given it to any other? or how can these men presume to take it unoffer'd first to God, unconsecrated, without another clear and express donation, wherof they shew no evidence or writing?
Milton. Con. to Rem. Hirelings out of the Church.

UN-OFFICIOUS. Not busy to act, or perform, services; not active or forward in the performance of services.

And thus all occasions, which way soever they turn, are not unofficious to administer something which may conduce to explain, or to defend the assertion of this book touching divorce.—Milton. Tetrachordon.

UN-OFTEN. Not frequently; seldom, rarely.

The man of gallantry not unoften has been found to think after the same manner.
Harris. Three Treatises, pt. ii.

UN-OIL, v. To remove or wipe away the oil.
Unoi'd,—not rubbed with oil.

And a tight maid, e're he for wine can ask,
Guesses his meaning, and unoi's the flask.
Dryden. Juvenal, Sat. 8.

His wounded ears complaints eternal fill,
As unoi'd hinges, querulously shrill.
Young. Love of Fame, Sat. 6.

From whence, my guest! should thy belief arise,
That I deserve past other of my sex
The praise of wisdom, if unbath'd, unoi'd, Ill-clad, thou sojourn here?—Cowper. Homer. Odys. b. xix.

UN-OPENED. } Not having the close or UNOPENING. } closing parts separated or severed; having no entrance or passage given;
closed, shut.

Metellus seeing the vast massy doores
Of Saturn's temple ready to fly ope;
Running enrag'd breaking through Cæsar's troope,
Before the yet unopen'd doore he stay'd.
May. Lucan. Pharsalia, b. lii.

UNO

On the third shelf a bundle of letters unopened, endorsed, in the hand of the deceased, "Letters from the Old Testament."—Tatler, No. 113.

Tenants with sighs the smokeless tow'rs survey,
And turn th' unwilling steeds another way:
Benighted wanderers, the forest o'er,
Curs'd the sav'd candle, and unop'ning door.
Pope. Moral Essays, Ep. 3.

But, while the ballad of a minstrel, beautiful perhaps, and well worth preserving, has been recovered from its dust and committed to memory, the family bible has been suffered to lie unopened, or has been perused by many only with a view to painful improvement, without an idea of the possibility of deriving from it the elegant pleasures of literary entertainment.—Knox. Ess. No. 143.

UN-O'PERATIVE. Also written Inoperative. Not able to work; not working; not acting or effecting.

For if the life of Christ be hid to this world, much more is his sceptre unoperative, but in spiritual things.
Milton. Of Reformation in England, b. ii.

The wishing of a thing, is not properly the willing of it; though too often mistaken by men for such: but it is that, which is called by the schools an imperfect velleity, and imports no more than an idle, un-operative complacency in, and desire of the end without any considerations of, nay, for the most part, with a direct abhorrence of the means.
South, vol. i. Ser. 10.

There lie the qualities of beauty either dead or unoperative; or at most exerted to mollify the rigour and sternness of the terror, which is the natural concomitant of greatness.—Burke. On the Sublime & Beautiful, pt. iv. § 24.

UN-OPPO'SED. Not put, placed or set against or in the way of, in the front of; not resisted.

Proud, art thou met? thy hope was to have reacht
The hight of thy aspiring unoppos'd,
The throne of God unguarded.—Milton. Par. Lost, b. vi.

The people like a headlong torrent go;
And every dam they break, or overflow;
But unoppos'd, they either lose their force,
Or wind in volumes to their former course.
Dryden. Conquest of Granada, Act iv. sc. 1.

But for what end was that bill to linger beyond the usual period of an unopposed measure?
Burke. Speech at Bristol, (1789.)

UN-OPPRE'SSIVE. Not pressing too heavily; not too burthensome.

You would have had an unoppressive but a productive revenue.—Burke. On the French Revolution.

UN-O'RDERLY. } See DISORDERLY. Not
UNO'RDRED. } according to rule, regularity, or method; not arranged or composed.

How should honest men live quietly in the common wealth at any time, if their goodies other gotten by their own labour, or left to them by their friends, shall unlawfully and unorderly, to the feeding of a sort of rebels, be spoyled and wasted, and vtterly scatted abroad?
Sir J. Cheeke. The Hurt of Sedition.

All which (as I gather) was done in the life of Edward the First (notwithstanding that I have a little unorderlie before treated of the executing of his office of the pantrie at the coronation of Edward the Second, sonne to Edward the First.)
Holinshed. Chron. of England, an. 1390.

Those long unorder'd troops so marshalled,
Under such formal discipline to stand,
That ev'n his soul seem'd only to direct,
So great a body, such exploits t' effect.
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. v.

Their reply is childish and unorderly to say, that we demand the thing in question, and shew the pouertie of our cause.—Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, b. iv.

UN-O'RDINARY. Not regular, customary, usual, common.

Proportionate to his reading was his meditation, which furnished him with a judgement beyond the vulgar reach of man, built upon unordinary notions, rais'd out of strange observations and comprehensive thoughts within himselfe.
Hales. Rem. Pearson. To the Reader.

And if this be not allowed to be so, I do not know how they can be excused from murder, who kill monstrous births, (as we call them) because of an unordinary shape, without knowing whether they have a rational soul or no.
Locke. Hum. Underst. b. iii. c. 11.

UN-O'RGANIZED. Not made with organs, (sc.) of sense, by which we hear, see, &c.

So all unorganized bodies may possibly have sensation or perception; but because for want of organs there is no variety in it, neither any memory or means of expressing that sensation, therefore to us it seems as if they had no such thing at all.—Clarke. On the Attributes, Prop. 10.

UNP

A body yellow, very malleable, fusible and fixed; but lighter than common water: or an uniform, unorganized body, consisting as to sense, all of similar parts, with perception and voluntary motion.
Locke. Hum. Underst. b. ii. c. 30.

UN-ORIGINAL. } Not rising, springing,
UNORI'GINATED. } or beginning; not generated or produced.
UNORI'GINATELY.
UNORI'GINATEDNESS.

— But I
Toild out my uncouth passage, forc't to ride
Th' untractable abyss, plung'd in the womb
Of unoriginal Night and Chaos wilde.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. x.

The Father [or first Person] alone is self-existent, unde-rived, unoriginated, independant, made of none, begotten of none. [Mod. Plea, p. 5].—Waterland. Works, vol. ii. p. 348.

The Catholics will easily answer every text he can bring to prove the Father only to be the true God; for it is only saying he is so emphatically, or unoriginately, and the Son may be true God and necessarily existing notwithstanding.
Id. Ib. p. 29.

It was to admit of a higher and a lower sense of the word God; the higher supposed to have nothing above the other but self-existence or unoriginatedness; the Father then was supposed to be God in the highest sense as unoriginate, but still the Son and Holy Ghost each God in a sense infinitely higher than any creature can be; being necessarily existing, and wanting nothing but unoriginatedness.
Id. Ib. vol. iii. p. 120.

UN-O'RNAMENTED. } Not beautified, em-UNORNAME'NTAL. } bellished, decorated.

I have bestowed so many garlands upon your shrine, which till my time used to stand unornamented.
Coventry. Phil. to Hyd. Con. 5.

I cannot forbear taking notice of one other mark of integrity which appears in all the compositions of the sacred writers, and particularly the evangelists; and that is, the simple, unaffected, unornamental and unostentatious manner, in which they deliver truths so important and sublime, and facts so magnificent and wonderful.
West. On the Resurrection, (4th ed.) p. 355.

UN-OSTENTA'TIOUS. } Not exhibiting, UNOSTENTA'TIOUSLY. } showing, or displaying; not vainly showing or displaying.

They induce idleness to content itself with the appearances of merit, which are easily assumed, and not to neglect the reality as attainable only by a painful and unostentatious application.—Knox. Ess. No. 3.

He is silently and unostentatiously happy, neither courting the notice of the world, nor regarding its unjust censure.
Id. Christian Phil. § 40.

UN-O'WED. } Not possessed; not having UNO'WNED. } possession; not claimed; not professed, confessed, or acknowledged.

— And England now is left To tug and scramble, and to part by th' teeth
Th' un-owed interest of proud swelling state.
Shakespeare. K. John, Act iv. sc. 3.

I fear th' dread events that dog them both,
Lest some ill-greeting touch attempt the person
Of our unowned sister.—Milton. Comus.

Oh happy unown'd youths! your limbs can bear
The scorching dog-star, and the winter's air;
While the rich infant, nurs'd with care and pain,
Thirsts with each heat, and coughs with every rain!
Gay. Trivia, b. ii.

UN-PA'CIFIED. } Not brought or restored
UNPA'CIFIED. } to peace; not stilled, calmed, quieted, tranquillized.

A western, milde, and pretty whispering gale,
Came dallying with the leaves along the dale,
And seem'd as with the water it did chide,
Because it ran so long unpacified.
Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b. i. s. 4.

Many such works of our disunited and unpacified ancestors were undoubtedly destroyed, either by their first constructors, or by new invaders, by agreement or by conquest, and sometimes by civil dissensions, in the early martial ages.—Warton. Hist. of Kiddingington, p. 71.

UN-PACK, v. To remove or take away the package, or that by which things are put together in a heap or bundle; are held or contained in a bundle or heap.

And also that none of our said subjects shall vnlade or cause to be vnladen, vnder any colour nor otherwise, nor unpackage, in the countreis abouesaide, no kind of wares, goods, nor marchandises whatsoever.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 210.

UNP

— I sure, this is most braue,
That I, the sonne of the deere murdered,
Prompted to my reuenge by heauen, and hell,
Must (like a whore) unpackage my heart with words,
And fall a cursing like a very drab.
Shakespeare. Hamlet, Act ii. sc. 2.

UN-PAID. See UNPAY.

UN-PA'INED. } Not tortured; not affected
UNPA'INFUL. } or afflicted with torturing, distressing, displeasing sensations.

But there's not one of these who are unpain'd,
Or by themselves unpunished; for vice
Is like a fury to the vicious mind,
And turns delight itself to punishment.
B. Jonson. Cynthia's Revels, Act v. sc. 3.

And if we owe a retribution for unpainful courtesies, how much should we reflow, when they come arrayed in sufferings?—Feltham, pt. i. Res. 82.

That being generally called hard by us, which will put us to pain sooner than change figure by the pressure of any part of our bodies; and that on the contrary soft, which changes the situation of its parts upon an easy and unpainful touch.—Locke. Hum. Underst. b. ii. c. 4.

UN-PA'INTED. Not coloured, or covered with coloured substances; not decorated or adorned with colour.

The same Epiphanius, sending another unpainted cloth, for that painted one, which he had torn, to the said Patriarch, writeth thus, &c.
Homilies. Peril of Idolatrie, pt. ii.

For were the true visage of sin seen at a full light, undressed and unpainted, it were impossible, while it so appeared, that any one soul could be in love with it, but would rather fly it, as hideous and abominable.
Leighton. Com. on 1 Pet. c. 1.

UN-PA'ired. Not paired or matched.

Beauty she has, but with it can you find
The enquiring spirit or the studious mind?
This wilt thou need who art to thinking prone,
And minds unpair'd had better think alone.
Crabbe. Tales of the Hall, b. ix.

UN-PA'LATABLE. Not agreeable to, not pleasing to the sense of taste; having no pleasing taste or savour.

We opened some of them [pearl oysters] with a view of tasting them, but we found them extremely tough and unpalatable.—Anson. Voyages, b. ii. c. 8.

The man who laugh'd but once, to see an ass
Mumbling to make the cross-grain'd thistles pass;
Might laugh again, to see a jury chaw
The prickles of unpalatable law.—Dryden. The Medal.

UN-PA'NGED. Not pained or distressed; (not afflicted with any pungent or poignant sensation.)

2 Qu. We come unseasonably: but when could grief Cull forth, as unpanged judgement can, fit'st time
For best solicitation.
Baum. & Fletch. Two Noble Kinsmen, Act i. sc. 1.

UN-PA'RADISE, v. To remove from any place, or state, or condition, of excessive happiness; to destroy or deprive of excessive happiness.

"Now did I find myself unparadis'd,
From those pure fields of my so clean beginning:
Now I perceiv'd how ill I was advis'd,
My flesh gan loath the new-felt touch of sinning."
Daniel. Complaint of Rosamond.

O ye blest scenes of permanent delight!
Full, above measure! lasting, beyond bound!
A perpetuity of bliss is bliss.
Could you, so rich in rapture, fear an end,
That ghastly thought would drink up all your joy,
And quite unparadise the realms of light.
Young. Complaint, Night 1.

This vice [envy] which is always prevalent in a bad heart, turns all the brighter prospects of life into darkness, the fairest into deformity, and would of itself be sufficient to unparadise an Eden.—Knox. vol. i. Ser. 4.

UN-PA'RAGONED. Not surpassed, exceeded or excelled; not rivalled.

Iach. Either your unparagon'd mistress is dead, or she's out-priz'd by a trifle.—Shakespeare. Cymbeline, Act i. sc. 5.

— Rubies unparagon'd,
How deere they doo't: 'Tis her breathing that Perfumes the chamber thus.
Id. Ib. Act ii. sc. 2.

UN-PA'RALLELED. } Not side by side, at UNPA'RALLELABLE. } equal distances from each other; and, consequentially, not matched; not commensurate; not equalled; not alike.

There stood my beauty boldly for the prize,
Where the most clear and perfect judgments be;
And of the same the most judicial eyes
Did give the goal impartially to me:
So did I stand unparallel'd and free.

Drayton. Legend of Matilda the Fair.

It [humility] did not only stand in need of the most explicit doctrine of Christ to teach and commend it, the most unparalleled example of Christ to win men over to it, but also the most plain and direct application of that example.

Hale. Cont. vol. i. Of Humility.

The more thou wert obscured, the more didst thou manifest thy most admirable humility, and unparalleled love to mankind, whose weakness thou disdainest not to take up.—Bp. Hall. The Great Mystery of Godliness, § 6

To the wonder and gratulation of all foreign churches, and to the unparalleled glory of this church and nation.

Id. Ep. by Divine Right, pt. iii. § 8.

UN-PA'RCHED. Un is used augmentatively. Perished or destroyed, (by heat, by drought;) dried up or withered.

Which when I lose, O may at once my tongue
Lose this same busy speaking art,
Unparch'd, her vocal arteries unstrung,
No more acquainted with my heart,
On my dry palate's roof to rest
A wither'd leaf, an idle guest.

Crashaw. On Psalm 137.

UN-PA'RDONABLE. That cannot or UNPA'RDONABLY. may not be forgiven;
UNPA'RDONED. that cannot be re-UNPA'RDONING. mitted or released from a fault or crime, or the consequences, (sc.)
from punishment, anger, resentment, displeasure.

Regarde well that they in no wise be broken, for if they be, and ones openly known, ye ryn in the churches sentence, and to be excommunicate on payne unpardonable.

Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. c. 154.

Some sins do pollute, and some do kill the soul, that is, are very near approaches to death, next to the unpardonable state: and they are to be repented of, just as habits are, even by a long and a laborious repentance, and by the piety and holiness of our whole ensuing life.

Bp. Taylor. Of Repentance, c. 4. § 3.

For the fear of a less inconvenience [he] unpardonably requires of his brethren, in their extreme necessity, to debar themselves the use of God's permissive law, tho' it might be their saving, and no man's indangering the more.

Milton. Tetrachordon.

If we do but err in our choice, the most unblameable error that can be, err but one minute, one moment after those mighty syllables pronounc'd, which take upon them to join Heaven and Hell together unpardonably till death pardon, this divine blessing that look'd but now with such a humane smile upon us, and spoke such gentle reason, strait vanishes like a fair sky, and brings on such a scene of cloud and tempest, as turns all to shipwrack without haven or shore, but to a ransomless captivity.—Id. Ib.

It will be an unpardonable, as well as childish peevishness, if we undervalue the advantages of our knowledge, and neglect to improve it to the ends for which it was given us, because there are some things that are set out of the reach of it.—Locke. On Hum. Underst. b. i. c. 1.

Like the old Lapithites, with the goblets to fight,
Our own 'mongst offences unpardon'd will rank
Or breaking of windows, or glasses, for spite, &c.

Rules for the Tavern Academy. From B. Jonson.

Curse on th' unpard'ning prince, whom tears can draw
To no remorse; who rules by lion's law;
And deaf to pray'rs, by no submission bow'd,
Rends all alike; the penitent and proud.

Dryden. Palamon & Arcite, b. ii.

But whilst I do live, I shall pursue the same course; although my merits should be taken for unpardonable faults, and such avenged, not only on myself, but on my posterity.

Burke. Letter to the Duke of Portland, (1793.)

— And the Spartan monarch drew
From the Byzantine maid's unsleeping spirit
An answer and his destiny—he slew
That which he loved, unknowing what he slew,
And died unpardon'd.—Byron. Manfred, Act ii. sc. 2.

UN-PARLIAMENTARY. } Not according UNPA'RLIAMENTARINESS. } to usage of parliament; not consistent with, or adapted to it.

The secret of all this unprecedented proceeding in their masters, they must not impute to their freedom in debate, but to that unparliamentary abuse of setting individuals upon their shoulders who were hated by God and man.

Swift.

Expressing how sensible he [K. Charles] was of that disrespect; reprehending them for the unparliamentariness of their remonstrance in print.

Clarendon. Civil War, vol. i p. 324.

UN-PARTED. Not severed, or divided.

His prayer ended, the men of arms of the Romans ran in among the horsemen and footmen of the Gauls, one being unparted from another.—North. Plutarch, p. 258.

UN-PARTIAL. } Now written Impartial, (qv.)
UNPA'RTIALLY. }

Let every man look unto himself, and trie whether he be in the faith or no; the surest means to trie this, is to take an unpartial view of all our actions.

Hales. Rem. Ser. Matt. xxvi. 75.

However, I am confident that unpartial posterity, on a serious review of all passages, will allow his name to be reposed amongst the heroes of our nation.

Fuller. Worthies. Berkshire.

All things th' unpartial hand of fate
Can raise out with a thought;
These have a sev'ral fixed date,
Which, ended, turne to nought.

Browne. Shepherd's Pipe, Egl. 4.

Now then my son deal unpartially with thine own heart; ask of it seriously, as in the presence of the searcher of all hearts, whether thou dost not find in thy self these unfailing evidences of thine election.

Bp. Hall. The Balm of Gilead, § 12.

UN-PA'SSABLE. } Now written Impass-

The nyghtes for the more parte be brighter then the dayes, wherfore in the day time ye countrey is wyld and unpassable, when they can nether fynde any tracte nor way to go in, nor marke nor signe whereby to passe, the starres being hidden by the mist.—Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 184.

For neither sinke they quite like seas to stand,
Nor yett like land with shores repell the maine,
But doubtfull, and unpassable remaine.

May. Lucan. Pharsalia, b. ix.

It [the soul] is under a flat impossibility of returning by itself; and that in two respects, 1. Because of the guiltiness of sin standing betwixt, as an unpassable mountain or wall of separation. 2. Because of the dominion of sin keeping the soul captive, yea, still drawing it further off from God, and increasing the distance and the enmity every day.

Leighton. Com. on 1 Peter, c. 3.

What discoveries this mighty prince made, did as far exceed his prædecessours, as the frozen north and horrid coasts of Cambria the milder clime of our Britain, which was yet in those daies esteem'd another world, and her boundaries as much unknown as those of Virginia to us; 'twas called Alter Orbis; and grave authors who speak of the unpassibleness of the ocean, mention the worlds that lay beyond it.—Evelyn. Navigation & Commerce.

"Oh! how gladly," says he, "would they now endure life with all its miseries! but the destinies forbid their return to earth, and the waters of Styx surround them with nine streams that are unpassable."—Tatler, No. 154.

UNPA'SSIONATED. }

The March ensuing, he attended the king into Scotland, and was likewise sworn a counsellor in that kingdom, where (as I have been instructed by unpassionate men) he did carry himself with singular sweetness and temper.

Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 211.

And more sober heads have a set of misconceits, which are as absurd to an unpassionate reason, as those to our unabused senses.—Glanvill. Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 11.

The rebukes and chiding, which their [children] faults will make hardly to be avoided, should not only be in sober, grave and unpassionate words, but also alone and in private.

Locke. Of Education.

UN-PA'STORAL. Not according to, or consistent with the manners or thoughts of shepherds or herdsmen, (of pastors.)

One of them closes his bitter complaint with this very unpathetick and unpastoral idea—that "the portcullis of the castle of his heart was fallen."

Warton. Rowley Enq. p. 95.

UN-PA'THED. Not trodden; generally, not passed or gone over.

Cam. A course more promising,
Then a wild dedication of your selues
To unpath'd waters, vndream'd shores.

Shakespeare. Winter's Tale, Act iv. sc. 3.

UN-PATHE'TICK. Devoid or destitute of pathos or feeling. See UNPASTORAL.

UN-PA'TIENCE. } Now written Impatience,

Whilom I thinke how Loue to me
Saied he would take at gre
My service, if unpacience

Caused me to doen offence.—Chaucer. Rom. of the Rose.

And lest any thinke that these my wordes are spoken either of hastynes or of unpacience, I reherce them againe and againe.—Udal. Galathians, c. 1.

Then the Persians fell down & worshipped him after suche sorte as was deuised, but Polipercon that sat aboute the king at the boarde, asked one in scorne that touched the ground wyth his chinne, whye he kissed no harder: with which wordes hee moued Alexander to yre, whereof hee was euer unpacient.—Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 225.

More unpatient they are and fearfull of winter, than lectuces, and withall carrie an unpleasant strong tast.

Holland. Plinie, b. xix. c. 8.

UN-PA'TRONIZED. Not protected, supported, promoted, (sc.) by a patron, or one who promotes the interests of another.

He now found one of his most frequent visitants accusing him of treason, in hopes of sharing his confiscation; yet, unpatronized and unsupported, he cleared himself by the openness of innocence, and the consistence of truth; he was dismissed with honour, and his accuser perished in prison.—Rambler, No. 120.

UN-PA'TTERNED. Not having a precedent, sample, or example.

Ordel. 'Tis true, that to bring forth a second to yourself, Was only worthy of my virgin loss;
And should I prize you less, unpattern'd sir?
Then being exemplify'd.

Beaum. & Fletch. Thierry & Theodoret, Act iii.

"Choice nymph! the crown of chaste Diana's train,
Thou beauty's lily, set in heav'nly earth;
Thy fair's unpattern'd."—P. Fletcher. Purple Island, c. 10.

UN-PA'VED. Not beaten or laid down firmly, (sc.) with stone, brick, or other substance, for way, road, or flooring.

O Rome, I wepe not to see thy streetes unpaved, nor that there is so many gutters in thy houses, nor that the battylmentes fall downe.—Golden Boke, c. 36.

If it do not, it is a voyce in her eares which horse-haires, and calues-guts, nor the voyce of unpaved eunuch to boot, can neuer amend.—Shakespeare. Cymbeline, Act ii. sc. 3.

Roofe of Bow Church, with the beames were borne into the aire a great heighth, six whereof being 27 foote long, with their fall were driuen 23 foote deepe into the grounde, the streetes of the city lying then unpaved.

Hakewill. Apologie, p. 131.

UN-PA'WNED. Not delivered or deposited in pledge or security.

He roll'd his eyes, that witness'd huge dismay,
Where yet unpawn'd, much learned lumber lay.

So that the paymet of the redēcion is yet in partie unpayed.

Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 242.

But how shal I do, if I dy, say you, [Bradford] this being unpayd? I [Traves] say, God hath gyven you a desyre to pay it, but not a power.

Strype. Eccles. Mem. Originals, an. 1555. No. 33.

The church to pawn would see her chalice laid,
E'er she would leave one pioneer unpaid.

Drayton. The Battle of Agincourt.

And after-days, my friend, must do thee right,
And set thy virtues in unenvy'd light.
Fame due to vast desert is kept in store,
Unpaid, till the deserver is no more.

Congreve. To Sir G. Kneller.

He that should prosecute a poor widow, not worth above two mites, for the debt of a thousand talents due to him from her, yet by reason of this her great poverty, contracted by losses and misfortunes, utterly unpayable; that man prosecutes an impossible thing, and at the same time knows it to be so.—South, vol. x. Ser. 9.

If her armies are three years unpaid, she is the less exhausted by expence.—Burke. On a late State of the Nation.

UN-PE/ACEABLE. } Not quiet, calm,
UNPE/ACEABLENESS. } still, tranquil, satisfied,
UNPE/ACEFUL. } or contented.

And britheren, we preien ghoe, repreue ghe unpesible men, coumforte ghe men of litil herte, resseyue ghe sike men, be ghe pacient to alle men.—Wiclif. 1 Tessal. c. 5.

In the midst of a second treaty not long after, sought by the parliament, and after much ado obtained with him at Oxford, what subtle and unpeaceable designs he then had in chace, his own letters discover'd.

Milton. Answer to Eikon Basilike, § 18.

Doth not the Holy Spirit ascribe all our unpeaceableness to our cupiditie? from whence comes wars and strifes? come they not hence, ev'n of your cupidities which war in your members?—Montague. Dev. Essayes, pt. ii. Treat. 8.

With the same evidence I argue, that man or wife who hates in wedlock, is perpetually unsociable, unpeaceful, or unduteous, either not being able, or not willing to perform what the main ends of marriage demand in help and solace, cannot be said to care for who should be dearest in the house.—Milton. Tetrachordon.

In the great concernment of his life, rather than occasion a tumult, or any unpeaceable disorder, though amongst persons then about the greatest villainy that ever the sun saw; he [Christ] quitted the grand right of self preservation.—South, vol. x. Ser. 9.

Rash war, and perilous battle their delight;
And immature, and red with glorious wounds Unpeaceful death their choice; deriving thence
A right to feast, and drain immortal bowls
In Odin's hall. Thomson. Liberty.

For a time, indeed, the conscience, that is in a good measure pure, may be unpeaceful, but still it is the apprehension and sense of present or former impurity that makes it so; for, without the consideration of guiltiness, there is nothing that can trouble it.—Secker. Com. on 1 Pet. c. 3.

UN-PEG, v. To remove or take away the peg or peck, that which pecketh, pusheth fast; consequentially, holds fast.

Vnpegge the basket on the houses top:
Let the birds flye, and like the famous ape
To try conclusions in the basket creepe
And breake your owne necke downe.
Shakespeare. Hamlet, Act iii. sc. 4.

UN-PE'NCILLED. Not described, delineated, or drawn, (sc.) so as to be intelligible.

In strangers I know not how to distinguish; for there is no disposition, but hath a varnished vizer, as well as an unpencil'd face.—Feltham, pt. i. Res. 23.

The skin or hide of his [river-horse] backe unpenetrable (whereof are made targuets and head-pieces of doubtie prooffe, that no weapon will pierce).—Holland. Plinie, b. viii. c. 25.

UN-PE'NITENT. Now written Impenitent, (qv.)

God will not relieve the unpenitent,
Nor to the prayers of wicked souls consent.
Sandys. Paraphrase of Job.

UN-PE'NSIONED. Not paid, (sc.) by usage, when no specific services are required in return.

And I not strip the gilding off a knave,
Unplac'd, unpension'd, no man's heir, or slave?
I will, or perish in the gen'rous cause.
Pope. Imitation of Horace, b. ii. Sat. 1.

He was the Polish Solomon,
So sung his poets, all but one,
Who, being unpension'd, made a satire,
And boasted that he could not flatter.
Byron. Mazeppa, s. 4.

UN-PE'OPLE, v. To destroy, to divest or strip of, the many (πολλους), the multitude; the dwellers or inhabitants.

Knowest thou wherefore thou art so? bycause thou hast unpeopled the lanes and stretes of workemen and officers, and hast peopled it all about with infinite vacaboundes.
Golden Boke, c. 23.

The land which warlike Britons now possesse,
And therein haue their mighty empire raysd,
In antique times was salvage wilderness,
Vnpeopled, vnmanur'd, vnprout'd, vnprays'd.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 10.

But they spared not to climbe up the top of high mountains, and to rocks unaccessable, to travaille through blind and unpeopled deserts, to search every vetine and corner of the earth, and all to find and know the vertues of hearbs.
Holland. Plinie, b. xxv. c. 1.

He sent with them certain of his own men to Ireland which lay then unpeop'd.—Milton. Hist. of England, b. i.

And netheles in the floode,
Where that Diana hir selfe stooode,
She thought to come unperceiv'd:
But therof she was all deceiv'd.—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

For some time they be shorte in dede, because they would be darke, and haue their false folies passe and repasse all unperceiv'd.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 848.

The diversity of good things and evill is very small, and unperceptible by the sense, for otherwise men could not be ignorant when they had the one or the other, or think they had the one for the other.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 888.

Palm. I know the king, though you are not his son,
Will still regard you as my foster-brother;
And so conduct you downward from a throne,
By slow degrees, so unperceiv'd and soft,
That it may seem no fault.
Dryden. Marriage a-la-Mode, Act iii. sc. 1.

My chief design was not so much to perform the office of a meer historian, as to take rises, from the several circumstances I should relate, to convey unperceiv'dly into the minds of those young persons of quality, for whom I wrote, sentiments of true piety and virtue.
Boyle. Works, vol. v. p. 260.

It enforced those precepts seemingly unreasonable, by such promises as were as seemingly incredible, and unperceivable.—Pearson. On the Creed, Art. 2.

And yet as far and wide as such heresies have reigned and raged in their time, and as woful an havock as they have made of souls, they have been often taken up at first by mere accident, or upon some slight, trivial unprojected occasion: no less unperceivable in their rise, than afterward formidable in their progress.—South, vol. iv. Ser. 9.

What I intend by all I have here said, is to make you at length sensible of two things, about which you have been hitherto very slow and unperceiving.
Waterland. Works, vol. iii. p. 412

UN-PER'FECTEDNESS. }

Certes, either it seemeth that ye be unperfect, or he that made it, so hard, that ye may not hold it.
Imputed to Chaucer. Jack Upland.

By reason of which peas or trewes the hostes were de-seuered, and the ende of ye warre unparfyted.
Fabyan. Chron. Phil. de Valois, an. 8.

And as he went, there was occasion geuen hym wherby to refourme the unperfyt fayth of the sayd ruler of the synagogue, and that by the ensample of a woman.
Udal. Marke, c. 5.

In the dressing of her hair and apparel, she might see neither a careful art, nor an art of carelessness, but even left to a neglected chance, which yet could no more unperfect her perfections, than a die any way cast could lose his squareness.—Sidney. Arcadia, b. iii.

It is you that shake me off, said Pyrocles, being for my unperfectness unworthy of your friendship.—Id. Ib. b. i.

As for Nature, shee hath made nothing unperfect, her workes be absolute all and accomplished in their essence.
Holland. Plinie, b. xxii. c. 24.

For I protest to you I am unperfect, and had I spoke it, I must of necessity have been out.
B. Jonson. Every Man out of his Humour, Introd.

Cas. It hath pleas'd the diuell drunkenness, to giue place to the diuell wrath, one unperfectednesse shewes me another to make me frankly despise myselfe.

UN-PERFO'RMING. } form or frame; not UN-PERFO'RMING, n. } constructed or composed, completed, perfected, effected, executed.

For look how much divine the covenant is, so much the more equal, so much the more to be expected that every article therof should be fairly made good; no false dealing, or unperforming should be thrust upon men without redress, if the covenant be so divine.—Milton. Tetrachordon.

But [scripture] has rather taught us by some severe examples, as in the case of Saul and Uzza, that positive ministrations, confined by the institution of them to certain rules or persons, must rather be left unperformed, than performed irregularly.—Waterland. Works, vol. x. p. 5.

I've mist my heart. O unperforming hand!
That never could'st have err'd in a worse time.
Dryden. All for Love, Act v.

O Circe! with what guide shall I perform
This voyage, unperform'd by living man?
Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. x.

Such an one as hath fully receiv'd into him ye spirite of God, & he that hath thoroughly conceiv'd the fier of charitie & loue unperishable; such an one shal not be mov'd with any storme of misauentures or euils.—Udal. Luke, c. 3.

He reuolued in his mind the solempne othe that he had made, and the honour, which consisted in his promise; he presumed, that faythe beinge obserued unperysshed, shulde please all myghty God aboue al thynges, which was then proued.—Sir T. Elyot. The Governour, b. iii. c. 6.

This venerable person is represented looking forward, as it were, from the verge of extreme old age into a future state, and rising into a contemplation on the unperishable part of his nature, and its existence after death.
Spectator, No. 537.

Ambrosial sweets and nectar she instill'd
Into his breast, lest he should suffer loss
Of strength through abstinence, then soar'd again
To her great sire's unperishing abode.
Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. xix.

UN-PER'JURED. Not forsworn; or having falsely sworn.

Beware of death; thou can'st not die unperjur'd,
And leave an unaccomplish'd love behind;
Thy vows are mine.—Dryden.

UN-PERPLE'X, v. To free from, to remove entanglement, intricacy, embarrassment.

This ecstasy doth unperplex
(We said) and tell us what we love.—Donne. The Ecstasy.

That being understood and fully mastered, proceed to the next adjoining part yet unknown; simple, unperplexed proposition belonging to the matter in hand, and tending to the clearing what is principally designed.
Locke. Conduct of the Underst. § 39.

UN-PER'SECUTED. Not pursued or followed (sc. with pains or penalties, with hostility).

Nevertheless, since I dare not wish to pass this life unpersecuted of slanderous tongues, for God hath told us that to be generally prais'd is woful, I shall rely on his promise to free the innocent from causeless aspersions.
Milton. An Apology for Smectymnus.

Who finding his sister's unpersuadable melancholy, through the love of Amphialus, had for a time left her court.
Sidney. Arcadia, b. i.

The word here used for disobedience, signifies properly unpersuasion; and nothing can more properly express the nature of unbelief than that; and it is the very nature of our corrupt hearts: We are children of disobedience, or unpersuasibleness, (Eph. ii. 2.) altogether incredulous towards God who is truth itself, and pliable as wax in Satan's hand; he works in such what he will, as there the apostle expresses.—Leighton. Com. upon 1 Peter, c. 2.

UN-PERU'SED. Not thoroughly looked through or inspected; not read through.

His letters we have sent you here unperused by us unto your highness by this trusty messenger.

UN-PHILO'SOPHIZE, v. } knowledge or science; to the rules prescribed for investigating science.

The principles they go upon, are found to be very arbitrary and unphilosophical, not by the ordinary declaimers against it, but by the most profound inquirers into things.
Glanvill. Ess. 6.

I could dispense with the unphilosophicalness of this their hypothesis, were it not unchristian.—Norris.

Our passions, our interests flow in upon us, and unphilosophize us into mere mortals.—Pope.

I know not a more rash or unphilosophical conduct of the understanding, than to reject the substance of a story, by reason of some diversity in the circumstance with which it is related.
Paley. Evidences of Christianity, vol. ii. pt. iii. c. 1.

To talk in this strain upon a serious enquiry or contest with an opponent is talking very unphilosophically.
Search. Light of Nature, vol. i. pt. ii. c. 28.

The Jewish writers seem to have had some obscure glimpse of this notion, when they talked of a certain incorruptible part of the body; though these latter indeed explained themselves very weakly and unphilosophically.

Clarke. Evidences of Religion, Prop. 12.

UN-PHYSICKED. Not caused or produced; not effected or acted upon by, medical substances.

Free limbs, unphysick'd health, due appetite,

Such is this famous prince, such his unpierced beam.

P. Fletcher. Purple Island, c. 6.

Saul did not lend David so unpierceable an armour, when he should encounter Goliath, as David now lent him in this plea of his unction.

Bp. Hall. Cont. Saul in David's Cave.

But is he then unpierceable (quoth she)
That neither force nor foe he needs regard?
His limbs (perchance) arm'd with that hardnesse be,
Which makes his heart so cruell and so hard.

Fairefax. Godfrey of Boulogne, b. xx. s. 60.

So cold and stark the raven's beak
May peck unpierced each frozen cheek.

Byron. Mazeppa, s. 12.

UN-PILLARED. Not having, not supported by, piles or pillars, or by any thing raised or fixed (a column), to support or sustain.

See, the cirque falls, th' unpillar'd temple nods,
Streets pay'd with heroes, Tyber choak'd with gods.
Till Peter's keys some christen'd Jove adorn,
And Pan to Moses lends his pagan horn.

Pope. Dunciad, b. iii.

UN-PILLOWED. Not having, not sustained by, a pillow; i.e. some suitable material (a stuffing) to rest the head upon.

Perhaps some cold bank is her bolster now,
Or 'gainst the rugged bark of some broad elm
Leans her unpillow'd head, fraught with sad fears.

Milton. Comus.

Shakespeare. Merry Wives of Windsor, Act iv. sc. 2.

But Amphialus might repent himself of his wilful breaking his sword: the forsaken knight with the extremity of justly conceived hate, and the unpitifulness of his own near threatning death, blotted out all compliments of courtesy.

Sidney. Arcadia, b. iii.

As though thy hard unpitying hand had sent me

Some new devised torture to torment me.

Drayton. Matilda to K. John.

For, 'tis, alas! the poor prerogative

Of greatness, to be wretched and unpitied.

Congreve. Mourning Bride, Act i.

For, that sense and that reason, I have always understood, absolutely to prescribe, whenever we are involved in difficulties from the measures we have pursued, that we should iake a strict review of those measures, in order to correct our errours if they should be corrigible; or at least to avoid a dull uniformity in mischief, and the unpitied calamity of being repeatedly caught in the same snare.

Burke. On American Taxation.

UN-PLAC'ED. Not placed (sc.) in any office, or official situation.

And I not strip the gilding off a knave,
Unplac'd, unpension'd, no man's heir, or slave?

Ladies that haue their toes

Unplagu'd with cornes, will walke about with you.

Shakespeare. Romeo & Juliet, Act i. sc. 5.

UN-PLAIN. Not simple, not open; insincere.

For he his loue had so begiled,

That he shall neuer come ayene,

For he that is to trouth unpleine

He maie not failen of vengeance.—Gower. Con. A. b. i.

UN-PLAIN'ED. Not deplored, bewailed, or lamented; moaned, or mourned.

Ah! wretched boy! the shape of drerie head,
And sad ensample of mans sudden end:
Full little faileth but thou shalt be dead,

Unpitied, unplaynd, of foe or friend.

Spenser. Colin Clout's come home againe.

Then be it so, quoth I, that thou art bent

To die alone, unpitied, unplain'd,

Yet ere thou die, it were conuenient

To tell the cause, which thee thereto constrained.

Id. Daphnaida.

UN-PLA'NTED. Not set or placed (as plants in the ground;) not rooted; not settled or fixed;
not having settlements, or settled or fixed inhabitants.

Figs there unplanted through the fields do grow,

Such as fierce Cato did the Romans show.

Waller. Battle of the Summer Islands, c. 1.

We have an additional argument to demonstrate the ill policy of denying the occupiers of land any solid property in
it. Ireland is a country wholly unplanted.

Burke. Tracts on the Popery Laws.

2101

UN-PLA'USIBLE. } That cannot, or may UNPLA'USIBLY. } not be, or deserve to UNPLA'USIVE. } be, clapped (sc. in token of approbation); that cannot be approved or favoured.

Whose [Truth] first appearance to our eyes, blear'd and dimin'd with prejudice and custom, is more unsightly and unplausible than many errors, even as the person is of many a great man slight and contemptible to see to.

Milton. Areopagitica.

I will come last, 'tis like heele question me,

Why such unplausible eyes are bent? why turn'd on him?

Shakespeare. Troyl. & Cress. Act iii. sc. 3.

We never of our own accord, without divine attraction, should come unto Christ, that is, should effectually consent unto and embrace his institution, consisting of such unplau- sible propositions and precepts.—Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 45.

Men would reason not unplausibly, that it would be better to get rid of the monarchy at once, than to suffer that, which was instituted, and well instituted, to support the glory of the nation, to become the instrument of its degradation and disgrace.

Burke. On a Regicide Peace, Let. 4.

UN-PLEA'DABLE. That cannot or may not be pleaded, urged as a plea; urged, alleged for or against.

So that, if terror set home with evidence, or evidence edged with terror, could convince, ignorance was here un- pleadable.—South, vol. ix. Ser. 6.

UN-PLEA'SANT. } Not causing or creating UNPLEA'SANTLY. } agreeable sensations; UNPLEA'SANTNESS. } sensations agreeable to UNPLEA'SED. } our natures, as sensitive UNPLEA'SING. } beings; such as we wish UNPLEA'SINGLY. } or desire to feel, or con-UNPLEA'SINGNESS. } tinue to feel, which UNPLEA'SIVE. } satisfy, or content, or gratify when felt; not giving joy or gladness or delight; not gladdening or delighting: more positively—causing sensations, disagreeable, &c.

If the one [virtue] bee lacked, it shal be vnure, painefull, unpleasant, and intollerable, yea and full of misery, and wretchednes.

Vives. Instruction of a Christian Woman, b. ii. c. 3.

And howe is it then that it appeareth not fleshe but bread? that we should not loth the eatyng of it, for if fleshe did appeare, we should be unpleasantly disposed to the communion of it.

Bp. Gardner. Explication. Of Christes Presence, fol. 71.

The mathematicall rudiments which children be taught, at the beginning trouble them, even as philosophie at the first is harsh unto young men; but this unpleasantnesse continueth not alwayes with them.

Holland. Plutarch, p. 943.

He suffers Cush to out-go him in his tale, cunningly suppressing that part, which he knew must be both necessarily delivered, and unpleasantly received.

Bp. Hall. Cont. The Death of Absalom.

It being also an unseemly affront to the sequestered and veiled modesty of that sex, to have her unpleasantness and other concealments banded up and down, and aggravated in open court by those hir'd masters of tongue-fence.

Milton. Doct. & Disc. of Divorce, b. ii. c. 21.

Grief is never but an unpleasant passion; the rest have some life and contentment in them.—Id. Ser. Eph. iv. 30.

Does not the eye pass from an unpleasant object to a pleasant in a much shorter time than is requir'd to this?
and does not the unpleasantness of the first commend the beauty of the latter?—Dryden. Essay on Dramatic Poesie.

Unpleas'd and pensive hence he takes his way,

At his own peril; for his life must pay.

Id. Palamon & Arcite, b. i.

—The scouts, with flying speed

Return, and thro' the frighted city spread

Th' unpleasing news, the Trojans are descry'd,

In battel marching by the river side.

Id. Virgil. Aeneis, b. xi.

A figure lean or corpulent, tall or short, though deviating from beauty, may still have a certain union of the various parts, which may contribute to make them on the whole not unpleasing.—Reynolds, vol. i. Dis. 3.

UN-PLI'ANT. } Not bending, bowing, or UNPLI'ABLE. } turning; not yielding or conforming.

Moreover their stiffnesse and unpliable disposition, the roughnesse also of their skin, argueth their dry nature and complexion.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 563.

Wherein the chizel, I must confess, hath more glory than the pencil; that being so hard an instrument, and working upon so unpliant stuff, can yet leave strokes of so general appearance.—Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 53.

These are persons of a stubborn unpliant morality, that sullenly adhere to their friends, when they are disgraced, and to their principles, though they are exploded.

Tatler, No. 114.

Shall this bow fatal prove to many a prince,
Because thou hast, thyself, too feeble prov'd.
To bend it? Thou wast neither born to bend
The unpliant bow, nor to direct the shaft;
But here are nobler, who shall soon prevail.

Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. xxi.

UN-PLIGHT, v. To unfold, to explain.

It is a wondre that I desire to tell, and therefore vnneth may I unplilen [explicare] my sentence with wordes.

Chaucer. Boecius, b. iii.

But if the thriuyng soule ne unplileth [explicat] nothyng, that is to saïne, ne dooeth thyng by his proper mouing.

Id. Ib. b. v.

UN-PLOUGHED, or } Not tilled, or turned UNPLOWED. } with the plough; not ered; not cultivated.

Now turne again my teme, thou iolly swain,
Backe to the furrow which I lately left;
I lately left a furrow, one or twaine
Unplough'd the which my coultter hath not cleft.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 9.

Pal. The earth unplough'd shall yield her crop,
Pure honey from the oak shall drop,
The fountain shall run milk.

B. Jonson. The Golden Age restor'd.

Like to that smell, which oft our sense describes Within a field which long unplowed lyes,
Somewhat before the setting of the sunne.

Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b. i. s. 2.

UN-PLUCKED. Not pulled or torn away.

But one rose,
If well inspir'd, this battel shall confound
Both these brave knights, and I a virgin flower
Must grow alone unpluck'd.

Beaum. & Fletch. Two Noble Kinsmen, Act v. sc. 1.

This is the grave to Lucy shown,
The soil a pure and silver sand,
The green cold moss above it grown,
Unpluck'd of all but maiden hand.

Crabbe. Tales of the Hall, b. viii.

UN-PLUMB, v. To take away, to take out the lead, i.e. leaden coffins.

Their turpitude purveys to their malice; and they unplumb the dead for bullets to assassinate the living.

Burke. Letter to a Noble Lord, (1796.)

UN-PLUME, v. To strip or divest of plumes, of pride or conceit; to humble.

In the most ordinary phenomena in nature, we shall find enough to shame confidence, and unplume dogmatizing.

Glanvill.

UN-POE'TICK. } Not having or possessing UNPOE'TICAL. } poetical qualities; prosaic;
UNPOE'TICALLY. } tame, dull.

O doe not, when your owne are done,
Make for my ladie's eldest sonne
Verses, which he will turn to prose,
When he shall read what you compose:
Nor, for an epithite that failes,
Bite off your unpoetick nailes.

Corbet. Upon the Death of Queene Anne.

How unpoetically and baldly had this been translated:
Thou shalt Marcellus be! Yet some of my friends were of opinion, that I mistook the sense of Virgil in my translation.

Dryden. Virgil. Note.

And it may be remarked, to the honour of Vida, that his most unpoetical works do credit to his heart and to his piety.—Knox. Ess. No. 62.

UN-POINTED. Not pointed at (sc. for the purpose of directing the eye or mind to); not separated or distinguished by points; not sharpened to a point; not acute or keen.

That simple people may beware of their pharisaical vermy, and be not deceived, as now many are unawares, of simplicitie: suffer them not to passe by you unpointed at.

Strype. Eccles. Mem. An Apology of Jhon Philpot.

Pro. Which, ending here, would have shown dull, flat, and unpointed; without any shape or sharpness.

B. Jonson. Magnetic Lady, Act iv. sc. 3.

Clumsy verse unlick'd, unpointed.—Dryden.

UN-POISON, v. To strip, divest of, purify from—poisonous, venomous, contagiously noxious qualities.

Had the parochial clergy frequently and warmly insisted upon [them] to their respective congregations, and to the younger part of them especially; such a course could not, but in a short time, have unpoisoned their perverted minds, and rectified their false notions.—South, vol. v. Ser. 1.

UN-PO'IZED. Not hung in a balance; not balanced.

—Oft on the brink

Of ruin, hurry'd by the charm of speech,
Inforcing hasty counsel immature,
Totter'd the rash democracy; unpois'd,
And by the rage devour'd. Thomson. Liberty.

UN-PO'LICIED. Not being under, or subject to, laws, rules, or regulations for the government of a city, state, or country.

Their [modern savages] being yet unpolicied, and in a state of nature, makes, he thinks, the instance conclude more strongly.—Warburton. Divine Legation, b. i. § 5.

UN-PO'ISHED. } Not smoothened or bur-UNPOLI'TE. } nished; not refined, or UNPOLI'TENESS. } civilized.

Our lodgings hard and homely, as our fare,
That chaste and cheap, as the few clothes we wear;
Those coarse and negligent, as the natural locks
Of these loose groves, rough as th' unpolish'd rocks.

Crashaw. A Religious House.

What not his Father's care, nor tutor's art
Cou'd plant with pains in his unpolish'd heart,
The best instructor love at once inspir'd,
As barren grounds to fruitfulness are fir'd.

Dryden. Cymon & Iphigenia.

As for example [he calls] my cousin Jenny Distaff, Madam Distaff; which, I am sure you are sensible, is very unpolite.

Tatler, No. 140.

Sad outcries are made of the unpoliteness of the style.

Blackwall. Sacred Class.

The oriental tongues, and in general the languages of most unpolished people, have a great force and energy of expression.—Burke. On the Sublime & Beautiful, pt. v. § 7.

Think of the galley-slave: nay, think of your poor neighbour at the next cottage; and, if there were not danger of its being called unpolite and methodistical, I would add, think of Him who, for your sake, sweated, as it were, drops of blood on Calvary.—Knox. Ess. No. 148.

UN-POLY'TICKLY. Now Impolitick, (qv.)

This last [riding on horseback] a sport lately v'sed of our English youths, but now unpolitickly discontinued.

Warner. Albion's England, b. ii. Addition.

UN-PO'LLED. Not piled, polled, pilfered, or plundered.

Richer than unpoll'd
Arabian wealth and Indian gold.

Fanshaw. Poems, (1676.)

UN-PO'LLED. Not counted or numbered (by the poll or head); not having voted.

A very common word at elections of members of parliament or others.

UN-POLLU'TED. Not soiled, defiled, vitiated or corrupted.

—Not one lascivious word,
Not one touch lady; no, not a hope that might not render me
The unpolluted servant of your chastity.

Beaum. & Fletch. The Sea-Voyage, Act i.

He seems, indeed, himself to have been delighted with young children, and found in them what he in vain sought among those who judged themselves their superiors,—unpolluted purity of heart.—Knox. Ess. No. 40.

UN-PO'PULAR. } Not pertaining or be-UNPOPULA'RITY. } longing to the people; not acting among, agreeably to, or favoured by the people.

Some lines [of the noblest Roman families] were noted for a stern, rigid virtue, salvage, haughty, parcimonious and unpopular: others were more sweet, and affable.

Dryden. Palamon & Arcite, Ded.

And you may depend upon it, sir, that many people have an interest in railing, sooner or later, they will bring a considerable degree of unpopularity upon any measure.

Burke. Speech on Econ. Reform.

UN-PO'RTABLE. Not to be carried or borne. See IMPORTABLE.

Had their cables of iron chains had any great length, they had been unportable; and being short, the ships must have sunk at an anchor in any stream of weather or counter-tide.—Raleigh.

UN-PO'RTIONED. Having no portion, part, or share, (sc.) of wealth.

"Has virtue charms?"—I grant her heavenly fair;
But if unportion'd, all will interest wed;
Though that our admiration, this our choice.

Young. Complaint, Night 7.

UN-PO'RTUNATE, i.e. Importunate, (qv.)

Than among so many unfortunate wyndes and vnstable waters, ther is great necessitee of good ores.

The Golden Boke, c. 43.

UN-PO'RTUOUS. Having no ports or harbours.

These harbours of the British dominions are the ports of France. They are of no use but to protect an enemy from our best allies, the storms of Heaven, and his own rashness. Had the west of Ireland been an unportuous coast, the French naval power would have been undone.

Burke. On a Regicide Peace, Let. 3.

UN-POSSE/SS, v. See DISPOSSESS. Not to have or hold, or occupy.

The sharp conquest though fortune did advance,
Could not it use; the hold that is given over
I unpossess.

Wyat. Of Disappointed Purpose by Negligence.

Seeing how many seek to undermine
The treasury that's unpossess'd of any;
And hard 'tis kept that is desir'd of many.

Daniel. Complaint of Rosamond.

Bast. —He replied,
Thou unpossessing bastard, dost thou thinke,
If I would stand against thee, would the reposall
Of any trust, virtue, or worth in thee
Make thy words faith'd?—Shakespeare. Lear, Act ii. sc. 1.

Patagonia is the name often given to the southernmost part of South America, which is unpossessed by the Spaniards, extending from their settlements to the streights of Magellan.—Anson. Voyages, b. i. c. 6.

As it is impossible for an eye, labouring under a malady which causes a defluxion, to see clearly any bright and brilliant object, till the impurity is removed: so it is for the mind, unpossessed of virtue, to reflect the beautiful images of truth.—Knox. Christian Philosophy, § 23.

UN-PO'SSIBLE. Now Impossible, (qv.)

It is, I say, unpossible, but there will be alwayes some of euill conditions and hard to be ruled, which easily conceiue an hatred against him, which by admonitions and light corrections endeouoreth to reduce them to the discipline of warre.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 350.

For when a man is on the one side thereof, he shall not heare what is said or doone on the other, though there be neuer so great noise made, no not if a canon should be discharged of set purpose; which to me dooth seeme unpossible.—Holinshed. Description of Scotland, c. 1.

King. Yet I wonder much
Of the strange desperation of these men,
That dare attempt such acts here in our state,
He could not escape that did it.

Mel. Were he known, unpossible.

Beaum. & Fletch. The Maid's Tragedy, Act iv.

UN-PO'WER. } Want of power; weakness.
UNPO'WERFUL. }

And nat of the unpower of God, that he nys ful of myghte
To amenden al that amys is.—Piers Plouhman, p. 336.

If you say yes, than putttest thou on Christ (that is the wisdom of God the father) vnknowing, unpower, or euill will.—Imputed to Chaucer. Jack Upland.

He grew at last more weary to command
New dangers, than young David to withstand
Or conquer them; he fear'd his mastering fate,
And envy'd him a king's unpowerful hate.

Cowley. Davideis, b. i.

UN-PRA'CTISED. } See IMPRACTICABLE.
UNPRA'CTICABLE. } Not exercised; not frequently or habitually engaged or employed in; not experienced.

So with my prayers I leave you, and must try
Some yet unpractis'd way to grieve and die.

Beaum. & Fletch. The Maid's Tragedy, Act ii.

They did not direct by metaphors, and phrases, and unpracticable fancies: but laid down the true, sober, rational, experimental method of action.—Glanvill. Ess. 7.

The latter brood, who just began to fly
Sick-feather'd, and unpractis'd in the sky,
For succour to their helpless mother call.

Dryden. The Hind and the Panther.

And as for what our author tells us of this design to attempt the redintegration of vitriol, turpentine, and some other concretes, wherein it seemed not unpracticable, he found in it more difficulty than every one would expect.

Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 63.

This rendered the dictates of the Stoics and other such philosophers so extravagant and unpracticable, because they framed them not according to the real nature of man, such as is existent in the world, but according to an idea formed in their own imaginations.—Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 13.

— Peleus, hoary chief,
Sent thee to Agamemnon, yet a child,
Unpractis'd in destructive fight, nor less
Of councils ignorant, the schools in which Great minds are form'd.—Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. ix.

UN-PRAISED. Not spoken well or highly of; not extolled or commended.

My sonne, if reason be well peised,
There maie no vertue be unpreised,
Ne vice none be sette in prise.—Gower. Con. A. b. ii.

The land, which warlike Britons now possesse,
And therein haue their mighty empire raysd,
In antique times was salvage wilderness,
Vnpeopled, vnmanur'd, vnprour'd, vnpraysd.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 10.

Unprais'd by me, tho' Heaven sometime may bless
An impious act with undeserv'd success.

Dryden. Cymon & Iphigenia.

UN-PRA'YED. } Not prayed, sought or UNPRA'Y, v. } besought; not supplicated or implored.

Unpray,—see the quotation from Hale.

"Sens that thou slaist so fele in sundry wise
Ayenst hir will, unpraied day and night,
Doe me at my request this servise,
Deliver now the world, so doest thou right
Of me that am the wofullest wight
That ever was." Chaucer. Troil. & Cres. b. iv.

For yf they leue nothing unpraied for that mai perteine to the pacification of this diuisiō, then must they peradventure putte into theyr service both matins, masse & euen song.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 894.

Even whilst the infirmity of his human nature started at the apprehension of what he was to suffer, and prayed against it, yet the freeness and purity of his obedience carried him on to it, and made him as it were unpray what he had before prayed.—Hale. Cont. vol. i. Christ Crucified.

UN-PREA'CHING. Not teaching publicly (as ministers of religion).

Hee [the devill] hath set up a state of unpreaching prelacy in this realme this 700 yeares, a stately unpreaching prelacy:
he hath made unpreaching prelates, and stirred them up by heapes to persecute this office in the title of heresie.

Latimer. Sixth Sermon before K. Edw. VI.

UN-PRECA'RIOUS. Not uncertain or un-fixed; steady, settled.

The stars, which grace the high expansion, bright
By their own beams, and unprecarious light,
Tho' some near neighbours seem, and some display
United lustre in the milky way,
At a vast distance from each other lie.

Blackmore. Creation, b. ii.

Joy's a fixt state; a tenure, not a start.
Bliss there is none, but unprecarious bliss:
That is the gem: sell all, and purchase that.

Young. Complaint, Night 8.

UN-PRE'CEDENTED. Not preceded by any thing the same; having no previous exemplar, no instance of the kind.

[The enemy] drove forth by one sweeping law of unprecedented despotism, his armed multitudes on every side, to overwhelm the countries and states, which had for centuries stood the firm barriers against the ambition of France.

Burke. On a Regicide Peace, Let. 3.

To a mind so disposed, it must be consolatory to reflect, that a grand effort, an effort unprecedented in the history of the world, is now made in our own distinguished country, to advance the happiness of the poor, and indeed to enlighten the understanding, and meliorate the morals of the human race.—Knox, vol. vi. Ser. 28.

UN-PRECISE. Not exact, accurate, formal.

Chatterton gave a vague unprecise explanation from his own head, or from imperfect remembrance.

Warton. Rowley Eng. p. 47.

UN-PREDI'CT, v. To gainsay or contradict any thing foretold.

Means I must use thou says't, prediction else
Will unpredict, and fail me of the throne.

Milton. Paradise Regained, b. iii.

UN-PREFE'RRED. Not brought or put forward, advanced or promoted.

And if you should depart home unprefer'd,
All discontented, and seditious spirits
Would flock to you, and thrust you into action.

Beaum. & Fletch. Noble Gentleman, Act ii.

UN-PREJUDICATE. } Not judged or UNPREJUDICATING. } doomed before (sc.
UNPREJUDICED. } inquiry or examina-UNPREJUDICEDNESS. } tion); having no preconception, no previous inclination; impartial, indifferent.

Let it breed none offence for me to report a conference that I had with neere friend, who (as I conceiue) looked hereinto with an indifferent and unprejudicating eye.

Carew. Suruey of Cornwall, fol. 69.

And now, let me appeal to your own hearts, and the hearts of all judicious and unprejudicate readers, whether the rules of church-government laid forth in the epistles to Timothie and Titus, do not suppose and import that very proper jurisdiction which is claimed by episcopacy at this day.—Bp. Hall. A Modest Offer.

It would be sufficient to convince unprejudiced readers of the falseness of this supposition, if I should only shew (as I hope I shall in the following parts of this discourse) how men, barely by the use of their natural faculties may attain to all the knowledge they have, without the help of any innate impressions; and may arrive at certainty, without any such original notions or principles.

Locke. Hum. Underst. b. i. c. 2.

Hearing the reason of the case with patience and unprejudicedness, is an equity which men owe to every truth that can in any manner concern them.

Clarke. On the Attributes, Intro.

We should learn to suspect our tempers, have regard to the opinion of the unprejudiced, and lean to the moderate side, when there is any doubt which is right.

Secker, vol. iii. Ser. 4.

Faith, in the Scripture sense, is not barely an act of the understanding, but a mixed act of the will also, consisting very much in that simplicity and unprejudicedness of mind, which our Saviour calls receiving the kingdom of God as a little child.—Knox. Christian Philosophy, § 29.

UN-PRELA'TICAL. Not according to, or consistent with—the station or character of prelates, of the episcopacy.

Some highly commended the zeal of the bishop [Wivill], asserting the rights of his church; whilst others condemned this in him as an unprelatical act, God allowing duells no competent deciders of such differences.

Fuller. Worthies. Leicestershire.

The archbishop of York, by such unprelatical ignominious arguments, in plain terms advised him even for conscience sake, to pass that act [of attainer against Strafford].

Clarendon. Civil War, vol. i. p. 257.

UN-PREME'DITATED. Not before or previously thought of, contemplated, or considered.

A bard here dwelt, more fat than bard beseems,
Who void of envy, guile, and lust of gain,
On virtue still, and nature's pleasing themes,
Pour'd forth his unpremeditated strain.

Thomson. Castle of Indolence, c. 1.

These were the bards or minstrels of Otaheite. Their song was unpremeditated, and accompanied with music.

Cook. First Voyage, b. i. c. 14.

Yet once he struggled 'gainst the demon's sway,
And as in beauty's bower he pensive sate,
Pour'd forth this unpremeditated lay.

To charms as fair as those that soothed his happier day.

Byron. Child Harold, c. 1.

UN-PREPA'RED. } Not before or pre-UNPREPA'REDLY. } viously made ready, apt, UNPREPA'REDNESS. } or fit; not previously UNPREPARA'TION. } formed, fashioned; not provided.

For although ye thinke your selues able to match with a fewe unprepared gentlemen, and put them from their houses, that ye might gaine the spoyle, doe ye iudge therefore your selues strong ynough, not onely to withstande a kings power, but also to ouerthrowe it.

Sir J. Cheeke. The Hurt of Sedition.

Nor how by mast'ring difficulties so,
In times unusual, and by passage hard,
He bravely came to disappoint his foe;
And many times surpris'd him unprepar'd.

Daniel. Funeral Poem upon the Earl of Devonshire.

— I am any thing
That knows not pity; stir not, if thou dost,
I'll take thee unprepar'd; thy fears upon thee,
That make thy sins look double, and so send thee
(By my revenge I will) to look those torments Prepar'd for such black souls.

Beaum. & Fletch. Maid's Tragedy, Act v.

He that lives well, can't but die well. For, if hee die suddenly, yet he unpreparedly.

Bp. Hall. Med. & Fowes, § 56.

There is nothing more likely to procure affliction than security and unpreparedness of mind.

Hale. Cont. vol. i. Of Afflictions.

Our cowardlinesse, our unpreparation is his advantage:
whereas true boldnesse in confronting him, dismaies and weakens his forces.—Id. Holy Obser. § 77.

It is much on what terms, and in what form death presents himself to thee; if as an enemy (as that is somewhere his stile, the last enemy death) thy unpreparation shall make him dreadful; thy readiness and fortitude shall take off his terrour.—Id. The Balm of Gilead, § 10.

All which is the natural, unavoidable consequent of unpreparedness, and want of premeditation; without which, whosoever presumes to pray, cannot be so properly said to approach to, as to break in upon God.—South, vol. ii. Ser. 3.

UN-PREPOSSESSED. Not possessed before, or previous to (sc.) enquiry, or knowledge, means of judging. See UNPREJUDICATE.

My embracing of which I know not why I should be ashamed to own, since I think I can, to a competent and unprepossessed judge, give a rational account of my so doing.

Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 253.

The tincture whereof, when I have imbibed, I am more in danger to misunderstand his true meaning, than if I had come to him with a mind unprepossessed by doctors and commentators of my sect.

Locke. Conduct of the Underst. § 35.

UN-PRESCRIBED. Not ruled or directed by previous writing; not ruled or directed, settled or established previously.

I have grated upon no man's conscience by the pressure (no not by the tender) of the late oath, or any unprescribed ceremony.—Bp. Hall. Letter from the Tower.

UN-PRESENTED. Not put or placed before, in sight, or view; not exhibited or shewn, (sc. for certain purposes, under certain circumstances.)

We also require and advertise you, that for no favour ye go about to excuse, or leave unpresented, those that ye may know to have offended.

Strype. Eccles. Mem. Inst. given by Edw. VI. to his Comm.

UN-PRESUMING. } Not taken, not con-UNPRESUMPTUOUS. } ceived or conceded before trial or proof; not arrogated; not actuated by self-conceit.

But take care not to admit forward pretenders, who will be the first to rush in, to the entire exclusion of modest unpresuming men, who must be drawn with a kind of gentle violence from their obscurity.

Knox. Letter to a Young Nobleman.

His are the mountains, and the vallies his,
And the resplendent rivers. His t' enjoy
With a propriety that none can feel,
But who, with filial confidence inspir'd,
Can lift to Heav'n an unpresumptuous eye,
And smiling say—"My Father made them all!"

Cowper. Task, b. v.

UN-PRETE'NDING. Not reaching forward;
not advancing or vaunting; preferring no claim.

Bad writers are not ridiculed, because ridicule ought to be a pleasure; but to undeceive and vindicate the honest and unpretending part of mankind from imposition.—Pope.

UN-PREVA'ILING. } Not exceeding in UNPREVALENT. } strength; not effecting a purpose; ineffectual, nugatory.

King. — We pray you throw to earth
This unpreuayling woe, and think of vs
As of a father.

Shakespeare. Hamlet, Act i. sc. 2.

If she had left off sooner, and stop'd at the seventh whipping, she had spoiled the child for ever; and, by her unprevailing blows, only confirmed her refractoriness, very hardly afterwards to be cured.—Locke. Of Education, § 78.

It had still continued in that obscurity, if the formerly unprevailing desires of those that would have it appear in public, had not been enforced by an observation or two, that I could not but make.—Boyle. Works, vol. v. p. 508.

The bare unprevailing wish that we were what we necessarily understand we ought to be, hath nothing more in it of moral merit than the involuntary assent of the mind to any other self-evident truth.—Bp. Horsley, vol. i. Ser. 27.

UN-PREVARICA'TING. Not pursuing an indirect course; not acting, speaking or thinking, evasively or indirectly.

They become rhetoricians, fine talkers, or fine writers, and in their hearts look down with contempt on the plain honest man, who is guided by the unprevaricating dictates of a clear conscience, of scriptural instruction, and of common sense.—Knox, vol. vi. Ser. 8.

UN-PREVENTED. Not anticipated; not opposed or obstructed.

Pro. — I rather chose

To crosse my friend in his intended drift,
Then (by concealing it) heap on your head
A pack of sorrowes, which would presse you downe (Being unprevented) to your timelesse graue.

Shakespeare. Two Gentlemen of Verona, Act iii. sc. 1.

And shall grace not find means, that finds her way,
The speediest of thy winged messengers,
To visit all thy creatures, and to all
Comes unprevented, unimplor'd, unsought.

Milton. Paradise Lost, b. iii.

UNP

UN-PRIDED. Stripped or divested of self-exaltation, of high self-esteem.

They will rather flye in a perillous height, then seem to decline at the voyce of one beneath them. Pitiful! that we should rather mischief our selves, than be content to be unprided.—Feltham, pt. i. Res. 33.

UN-PRIEST, v. } To deprive or divest of UNPRIESTLY. } the station, or character of priest or presbyter.

But if he be a laye man, he shal lose his fredome, that is to saye, if he were a secular prest, or one unprest by them, he shuld clerly lose his benefyce, prebende, or other lyuyng.
Bale. English Votaries, fol. 64.

Or (whether they) do haunt and use common games or playes, or behave themselves otherwise unpriestly and unsemely.—Strype. Eccles. Mem. Art. of Inquiry for Bower.

Leo neither dissolves the matrimony, nor excommunicates him, only unpriests him.
Milton. Martin Bucer on Divorce, c. 24.

The people enraged at his unpriestly conduct, would have torn him to pieces; when he retired to Lambeth, and, by way of expiation, rebuilt it with great magnificence.
Pennant. London.

UN-PRIMITIVE. Not original.

The dignity of the holy Sacrament must infallibly suffer, if so mean, so unprimitive a sacrifice should ever be admitted into it.—Waterland. Works, vol. viii. p. 186.

UN-PRINCELY. Not like, not becoming, a prince or chief.

For the justice we had, let the council-table, star-chamber, high-commission speak the praise of it; not forgetting the unprincely usage, and, as far as might be, the abolishing of parlements, the displacing of honest judges, the sale of offices, bribery and exaction, &c.
Milton. Answer to Eikon Basilike, § 9.

UN-PRINCIPLED. Not having principles, or first rules; not grounded, fixed or established, by good rules or laws; not acting upon or guided by, acting in opposition to, good rules.

I do not think my sister so to seek,
Or so unprincipled in virtue's book,
And the sweet peace that goodness bosoms ever,
As that the single want of light and noise (Not being in danger, as I trust she is not)
Could stir the constant mood of her calm thoughts,
And put them into misbecoming plight.—Milton. Comus.

Others betake them to state-affairs, with souls so unprincipled in virtue, and true generous breeding, that flattery and court-ships and tyrannous aphorisms, appear to them the highest points of wisdom.—Id. Of Education.

Whilst the monarchies subsisted, this unprincipled cession was what the influence of the elder branch of the house of Bourbon never dared to attempt on the younger.
Burke. On a Regicide Peace, Let. 3.

There are, indeed, many who are esteemed good sort of persons, but whose goodness is unprincipled, and appears to arise solely from a regard to external decorum, or what is called the saving of appearances.—Knox. Ess. No. 118.

UN-PRINTED. Not printed.

But when he cometh to my seconde booke [he] goeth fro the first chapter to the third, as though the prynter had left the second unprinted.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 627.

The private acts being not so commonly known, because unprinted, and to be found only in the clerk of the parliament's office, were these.

Strype. Eccles. Mem. Edw. VI. an. 1547.

UN-PRISONED. Not placed, or kept, or confined (in captivity).

Therbellis kynge of Bulgarie,
With helpe of his chivalrie,
Justinian hath unprisoned,
And to thempire ageyne coroned.—Gower. Con. A. b. vi.

Fire rose, and each from other but unty'd,
Themselves unprison'd were and purify'd.
Donne. Let. to the Countess of Huntington.

UN-PRIVILEGED. Not having any peculiar immunity, liberty, or franchise.

If Lord Chesterfield's principles are well founded, then, in the first instance, blot out his escutcheon, abolish his title, and let him take his rank where common sense would place him, on a line with private gentlemen, unadorned and unprivileged by their country.
Knox. Letter to a Young Nobleman.

UN-PRIZED. } Not reckoned or accounted UNPRIZABLE. } at a (high) price; not valued or esteemed.

Women are like the arts, forc'd unto none,
Open to all searchers, unpriz'd if unknown.
Donne. Elegy 3.

UNP

Fra. Not all the dukes of watrish Burgundy
Can buy this unpriz'd precious maid of me.
Shakespeare. Lear, Act i. sc. 1.

Du. A bawbling vessel was he captaine of,
For shallow draught and bulke unprizable.
Id. Twelfth Night, Act v. sc. 1.

Iach. Your ring may be stolne too, so your brace of unprizable estimations, the one is but fraile, and the other casuall.—Id. Cymbeline, Act i. sc. 5.

UN-PROBABLY. Now Improbably, (qv.)

Nor [he would not be convinced] of arrogancy in being able to diminish, by the authority of wise and knowing men, things unjustly and unprobably crept in.
Strype. Eccles. Mem. Hen. VIII. an. 1541.

UN-PROCLAIMED. Not called or cried, told or declared openly, publicly.

— The Syrian king, who to surprize
One man, assassin-like had levied warr Warr unproclam'd. Milton. Paradise Lost, b. xi.

UN-PROCURED. Not acquired, attained, or obtained.

These doctors allow nothing to be unavoidable, or a sin of infirmity, and consistent with the state of grace and regeneration, but the mere ineffective, unprocured desirings or lustings after evil things, to which no consent is given, and in which no delight is taken.
Bp. Taylor. Of Repentance, c. 8. § 3.

UN-PRODUCTIVE. Not able to bear or bring forth; not bearing or yielding.

Wherefore the most considerate of mankind have laid down as an uncontestable maxim That nature does nothing in vain, by which must be understood unproductive of good either directly or remotely, for this would be vain with respect to the point it has ultimately in view.
Search. Light of Nature, vol. ii. pt. i. c. 19.

But that desire of improvement in which the apostle places his own and every Christian's perfection, is not a desire terminated in the mind itself, unproductive of any real effort to improve.—Bp. Horsley, vol. ii. Ser. 27.

UN-PROFANE. } Not used to unholy UNPROFANED. } purpose; not polluted or violated.

Then, in a hollow cloud, my self will aid,
To bear the breathless body of my maid;
Unspoild shall be her arms, and unprophan'd
Her holy limbs with any human hand:
And in a marble tomb laid in her native land.
Dryden. Virgil. Æneis, b. xi.

Surely that stream was unprofaned by slaughters.
Byron. Child Harold, c. 4.

UN-PROFICIENCY. Want of progress or advancement; want of improvement. See IMPROFICIENCY.

God makes way for his greatest messages by astonishment and admiration: as on the contrary, carelesnesse carries us to a meere unproficiency under the best means of God.

Bp. Hall. Cont. Of the Calling of Moses.

Here, then let my eyes run down with tears, night and day; and let them not cease, for the obstinate unproficiency of the sons of my mother, under the heavy hand of my God.
Id. Ser. Eccl. iii. 4.

And it is no mean sign of proficiency in piety, to be apt to deplore one's unproficiency in piety.
Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 409.

UN-PROFITABLE. } That cannot, may UNPROFITABLY. } not, does not—make UNPROFITABLENESS. } or gain advantage;
UNPROFITED. } that cannot benefit, be UNPROFITING. } useful or serviceable.

And caste ye out the unprofitable servaunt into utmere derkenessis there schal be wepyng & gryntyng of teeth.
Wiclif. Matthew, c. 25.

And cast that unprofytable seruaunte into vtter darcknes; there shal be wepyng and gnashinge of teeth.
Bible, 1551. Ib.

For thei that wolen be maad riche fallen into temptacioun & in to suare of the deuel, and in to manye unprofitable desires and noyouse whiche drenchen men into deeth and perdition.—Wiclif. 1 Tymo. c. 6.

But if the muses had withdrawn frome with your flatteries, any an unconnyng and unprofitable manne, as been wont to finde commonly among the people, I would well suffice the lasse greuously.—Chaucer. Boecius, b. i.

So that thou might well knowe and see,
There is no vice suche as hee.
Firste towarde God abhominable,
And to mankynde unprofitable.—Gower. Con. A. b. ii.

And with dede and worde I leue of and resygne theym, goo frome theym for euermore, sauynge alwey to my successoris, kynges of Englode, all the ryghtys, pryuylegeys

Fabyan. Chronycle, an. 1398.

Or any thyng contrary to the comon weale, or unprofitable to the peace, and to all Christente, and displeasat to God.
Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 212.

Also of euery worde spoken unprofytablely and in vain we shall gyue accounte before God.
Fisher. Seuen Psalmes, Ps. 38. pt. ii.

If she be so abandon'd to her sorrow
As it is spoke, she neuer will admit me.
Du. Be clamorous, and leape all ciuill bounds,
Rather then make *unprofit*ed returne.
Shakespeare. Twelfth Night, Act i. sc. 4.

They of the noble Licinian familie had for their additions Stolors (that is to say, the unprofitable water shoots that put forth from the root or tree itselfe, and never prove or come to any good.)—Holland. Plinie, b. xvii. c. 1.

The deep and judicious Verulam made the complaint, represented the defects and unprofitableness of the national way, proposed another to reform and inlarge knowledge by observation and experiment.—Glanvill. Ess. 3.

When Mill first came to court, the *unprofit*ing foole,
Unworthy such a mistress, such a schoole,
Was dull. B. Jonson. Epig. 90.

Is it not therefore infinitely better to prevent this being necessarily and unprofitably deprived of our goods, by seasonably disposing them so as may conduce to our benefit, and our comfort, and our honour.—Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 31.

[The faithful preachers] shewed them, that this judgment of the loss of their excellent king, was come upon them for their unprofitableness under those opportunities of grace and spiritual knowledge they enjoyed under him.
Strype. Eccles. Mem. 1 Mary, an. 1553.

Seventeen months had now elapsed since our departure from England, during which, we had not, upon the whole, been unprofitably employed.
Cook. Third Voyage, b. iii. c. 10.

UN-PROHIBITED. Not obstructed, prevented, forbidden.

Against a persisting stubbornness, or the fear of a reprobate sense, [will be required] a timely separation from the flock by that interdictive sentence, lest his conversation unprohibited, or unbranded, might breathe a pestilential murmur into the sheep.
Milton. Animad. upon the Remonst. Defence.

UN-PROJE/CTED. Not forecast; contrived or schemed.

And yet, as far and wide as such heresies have reigned and raged in their time, and as woful an havoc as they have made of souls, they have been often taken up at first by mere accident, or upon some slight, trivial, unprojected occasion; no less unperceivable in their rise, than afterward formidable in their progress.—South, vol. iv. Ser. 8.

UN-PROLIFICK. Not productive, fertile, or fruitful.

Great rains drown many insects, and render their eggs unproliffick, or destroy them.—Hale. Origin. of Mankind.

UN-PROMISED. } Not undertaken, or UNPROMISING. } pledged, or engaged to be done; not assured.

Unpromising,—not wearing an appearance of good.

Say, and do all, that may thereto preuaile;
Leaue nought unpromising, that may him perswade;
Life, freedome, grace, and gifts of great auaille,
With which the gods themselues are milder made.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 5.

Being now nearer in with the shore, we could discover that the broken craggy precipices, which had appeared so unpromising at a distance, were far from barren, being in most places covered with woods.
Anson. Voyages, b. ii. c. 1.

Whether it is the human figure, an animal, or even inanimate objects, there is nothing, however unpromising in appearance, but may be raised into dignity, convey sentiment, and produce emotion, in the hands of a painter of genius.—Reynolds, vol. i. Disc. 11.

UN-PROMPTED. Not reminded, dictated, urged.

Curse on that word so ready to be spoke,
For through my lips, unmeant by me, it broke,
Oh no, we must not, will not, cannot part,
And my tongue talks, unprompted by my heart.
Congreve. To Cynthia.

UN-PRONOUNCED. Not told or spoken; not declared or proclaimed.

Hail native language, that by sinews weak
Didst move my first endeavouring tongue to speak,
And mad'st imperfect words with childish trips,
Half unpronounc'd, slide through my infant-lips.
Milton. Vacation Exercises.

UN-PROPER. } Now Improper, (qv.) Un- UNPROPERLY. } becoming, unsuited; unadapted to, unfit.

To seie howe suche a man hath good
Who so that reasone understoode
It is unproperlicke sayde:
That good hath hym, and hold him taide
That he ne gladdeth nought withall,
But is unto his good a thrall.—Gower. Con. A.

Thus the elemente or outwarde creature bothe remaineth, and is changed: it remaineth in proper, & plaine kinde of speache: it is changed unproperly, that is to saie, by the waie of a sacramente, or a mysterie.

Jewell. A Replie vnto M. Hardinge, p. 247.

And upon this ground of having different substances, unproper and disproportioned accidents, what hinders them but they might have said so? and if they had, how should they have been confuted?—Bp. Taylor. Real Presence, § 10.

He nameth not unproperly and without good grace the fouke of an anchor resting lightly upon the loose sand, to signifie the feeble hold that reason hath, which is not resolute and firmly seated.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 58.

UN-PROPHE'TIC. } Not predicting, or UNPROPHE'TICAL. } foretelling, or presaging.

Swift as the word the parting arrow sings,
And bears thy fate, Antinous, on its wings:
Wretch, that he was of unprophetic soul!
High in his hands he rear'd the golden bowl!
Ev'n then to drain it lengthen'd out his breath;
Chang'd to the deep, the bitter draught of death.

Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. xxii.

How unprophetic would it be, to say they should some time know what they already knew.

Ellis. Knowledge of Divine Things, p. 305.

UN-PROPTIOUS. Not favouring, not gracious.

At Tenedos arriv'd, we there perform'd
Oblation to the gods, ardent to reach
Our native land; but unpropitious Jove,
Not yet designing our arrival there,
Involv'd us in dissension yet again.

Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. iii.

For should the mighty thund'rer in reply Commend your purpose, I will then advise Myself his death, and help you; but if he Give unpropitious answer, then forbear.—Id. Ib. b. xvi.

UN-PROPORTIONED. } Not having fit
UNPROPORTIONABLE. } parts, or portions;
UNPROPORTIONATE. } not fitted, suited, UNPROPORTIONATED. } adapted, in parts;
in number, or measure, quantity, quality, sort,
form, &c.

When I see these, I say, and view myself,
I wish the organs of my sight were crack'd;
And that the engine of my grief could cast
Mine eyeballs, like two globes of wild fire, forth,
To melt this unproportion'd frame of nature.

B. Jonson. Every Man out of his Humour, Act i. sc. 1.

No swelling member, unproportionate,
Grown out of form, sought to disturb the rest.

Daniel. Civil Wars, b. vi.

But although in respect of the measure of his perfection,
he be an object unproportionate to a created understanding,
a light too bright, and an ocean too large and too deep for it, yet there is so much of his knowledge attainable by us, as is sufficient for use, nature and everlasting happiness.

Hale. Origin of Mankind, c. 1.

I wish the present caution may be more attended to, not to bestow an unproportionable part of our time or value on this slight exercise of man's slightest faculty.

Government of the Tongue, p. 147.

The teaching school, an useful and virtuous occupation, even the teaching in a private family, was in every Catho-lick subjected to the same unproportioned punishment.

Burke. Speech at Bristol, (1780.)

UN-PROPPED. Not underset, upheld; supported or sustained.

— With hanging head I have beheld
A widow vine, stand, in a naked field,
Unhusbanded, neglected, all forlorn,
Brouz'd on by deere, by cattle cropt and torne,
Unpropt, unsuccoured, by stake or tree,
From wreakefull stormes' impetuous tyranny.

Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b. ii. s. 5.

See how he lies at random, carelessly diffus'd,
With languish't head unpropt,
As one past hope abandon'd,
And by himself given over.—Milton. Samson Agonistes.

— The nerves no more sustain
The bulk; the bulk unpropt'd, falls headlong on the plain.

Dryden. Ovid. Metam. b. viii.

UN-PROSPEROUS. } Not bearing or UNPROSPEROUSLY. } bringing (profit or UNPROSPEROUSNESS. } advantage); profit-less, useless, luckless, unfortunate, unhappy. See IMPROSPEROUS.

But the deceiver deceives himself in the unprosperous marriage, and therein is sufficiently punisht.

Milton. Tetrachordon.

Jackman and Pett, two famous pilots, being set out by the Londoners with two ships, sought as unprosperously to discover a nearer way to the East-Indies by the Cronian or frozen sea.—Camden. Hist. of Q. Elizabeth, an. 1580.

The sense of the ill master that we have drudg'd under so long, may make us seek out some more gainful service; that the unprosperousness of the arm of flesh, the several failings of the second causes which we have idolized so often, the many delusions and ill successes we meet with in the world, may make some forsake those atheistical colours, and bring in proselytes to heaven.

Hammond. Works, vol. iv. p. 492.

For some physicians will never exhibit a chymical remedy, till the patient's strength hath been almost tired, if not quite spent with the unprosperous use of divers others clogging and debilitating medicines.

Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 241.

Nor is it by us alone, that the process set down by Glauber hath been unprosperously attempted.—Id. Ib. p. 226.

That unprosperous race of men, commonly called men of letters, are pretty much in the situation which lawyers and physicians probably would be in, upon the foregoing supposition.—Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. i. c. 10.

UN-PROTE'CTED. Not sheltered, shielded, defended.

By woeful experience, they both did learn, that to forsake the true God of heaven, is to fall into all such evils upon the face of the earth, as men, either destitute of grace divine, may commit, or unprotected from above, endure.

Hooker.

UN-PROVED. } Not tried, not expe-UNPROVABLE. } rienced; not confirmed,
UNPROVING. } established, verified.

Then Philip left nothing unproved or undone y^t might serue for his purpose.—Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 30.

But vertue leaueth nothyng unproved.—Id. Ib. fol. 127.

It was my chaunce (my chaunce was faire and good)
There for to find a fresh unproved knight,
Whose manly hands imbrow'd in guilty blood
Had neuer been, ne euer by his might Had throwne to ground the unregarded right.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 7.

Our poets too left nought unproved hear.

B. Jonson. Horace. Art of Poetry.

A religion that depends only upon nice and poore uncertainties, and unprovable supposals: that Peter was bishop of Rome, &c.—Bp. Hall. Discursive from Popery.

Now then, this one litigious and unproving text is the onely place in the whole new-testament that can bear any pretence for the lay-presbytery.

Id. Episcopacy by Divine Right, pt. iii. § 2.

UN-PROVIDED. } Not foreseen, not fore-UNPROVIDENT. } cast, not prepared for, UNPROVIDENCED. } not guarded against; not furnished or supplied. See IMPROVIDENT.

Let vs order there ourselve as men of warr ought to do, so that whan oure enemies come, let the nat fynde vs unpro-vided.—Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. c. 33.

Oure men being taken unprovided vpon the sodein, were so troubled, that the cohorte was scars able to wythstand the fyrst brunt.—Goldinge. Caesar, fol. 170.

The shepheards God so well them guided,
That of nought they were unprovided.

Spenser. Shepheard's Calender. May.

— A boat, that's all
That's unprovided, and habits like to merchants,
The rest wee'l counsel as we goe.

Beaum. & Fletch. Island Princess, Act i.

I flung it overboard, slave that I was.
Lim. A most unprovided villain.

Id. Sea Voyage, Act iii.

My Lord has slighted me.
Mar. Oh no sweet lady.
Orr. Robb'd me of such a glory by his pity,
And most unprovided respect.

Id. Thierry & Theodoret, Act iv.

If those must be accounted unfortunate (which I in the true meaning of the word must interpret unprovided) who swim not in equal plenty with others, then that epithet may be fixed on the children of the clergy.

Fuller. Worthies. General.

Nor is it uncommon when the merchant to whom they sell their share is unprovided of a stock, for the converts to lend him considerable sums of money on bottomry.

Anson. Voyages, b. ii. c. 10.

UN-PROVOKED. Not called forth; not having the passions called forth, roused, excited.

When all on the sudden, the Smectymnuans, a strange generation of men, unprovoked, unthought of, cry out of hard measure, and fly in my face, as men wrongfully accused.—Bp. Hall. Ans. to the Vindication of Smectymnuus.

Nay, indeed the disguised smiling enemy is the more dangerous, as he is unsuspected; and the more wicked, as he is unprovoked.—Secker, vol. i. Ser. 24.

UN-PRU'DENT. } i. e. IMPRUDENT, (qv.)
UNPRUDE'NTIAL. }

For so is the wille of God, that ye do wel and make the unkunnyngness of unprudent men to be doumbe.

Wiclif. 1 Peter, c. 2.

The most unwise and unprudential act as to civil government.—Milton. In Todd's Johnson.

UN-PRUNED. Not cut away, cleared away, trimmed.

Her vine, the merry chearer of the heart,
Unpruned dyes.—Shakespeare. Hen. V. Act v. sc. 2.

Or must such minds be nourish'd in the wild,
Deep in the unpruned forest, 'midst the roar
Of cataracts, where nursing Nature smiled
On infant Washington?—Byron. Child Harold, c. 4.

UN-PUBLISHED. } Not made known UNPU'BLIC. } among the people;
not divulged.

Cord. All blest secrets,
All you unpublish'd virtues of the earth
Spring with my teares; be aydant, and remediate
In the good man's desires.

Shakespeare. Lear, Act iv. sc. 4.

Virgins must be retired and unpublic: for all freedom and looseness of society is a violence done to virginity, not in its natural, but in its moral capacity: that is, it loses part of its severity, strictness and opportunity of advantages, by publishing that person, whose work is religion, whose company is angels, whose thoughts must dwell in heaven, and separate from all mixtures of the world.

Bp. Taylor. Holy Living, c. 2. § 3.

UN-PULLED. Not plucked.

Vict. 'Tis indeed a fruit,
Seen and desir'd of all, while yet unpull'd,
But can be gather'd by one only hand.

Dryden. Love Triumphant, Act iii. sc. 1.

UN-PUNISHED. } Not pained, or afflicted
UNPU'NISHABLE. } with pain or penalty (sc.
UNPU'NISHABLY. } for acts, offences done, committed).

That ich were kyng w^t corone. to kepe eny reame
Shold nevere wronge in this worlde. that ich wite myghte
Be unpunysshed in my power. for pil of my soule.

Piers Ploukman, p. 71.

Nor that it shall be said that for slouth or faynte herte, that I shuld suffre vnder my sauegarde robbers to do villa-nyes and robories unpunysshed.

Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. c. 13.

And albeit that this ryot was after greuously shewyd agayne the commons of the cytie, yet it passyd unponysshed, for the great noumbre of the transgressours.

Fabyan. Chronycle, an. 1180.

As there could be in natural bodies no motion of any thing, unless there were some first which moved all things; and continued unmoveable; even so in politic societies there must be some unpunishable, or else no man shall suffer punishment.—Hooker. Life by Walton, App.

— He hath perused too

All dungeons in Portual, thrice seven years
Rowed in the galleys for three several murders,
Though I presume that he has done a hundred,
And scap't unpunisht.

Beaum. & Fletch. Custom of the Country, Act iv.

Their number to secure their feare is able,
Where all offend, the crime's unpunishable.

May. Lucan, b. v.

It were absurd to think that the anointment of God should be as it were a charm against law, and give them privilege, who punish others, to sin themselves unpunishably.

Milton. Answer to Eikon Basilike, § 28.

The centinel too, who had been thus grossly imposed upon, did not escape unpunished; since he was ordered to be severely whipt for being thus shamefully surprized upon his post.—Anson. Voyages, b. ii. c. 6.

UN-PURCHASED. Not obtained or acquired by payment of an equivalent; not bought.

While our old friends and neighbours feast and play,
And with their harmless mirth turn night to day,
Unpurchas'd plenty our full tables loads,
And part of what they lent, return t' our gods.

Denham. O' Old Age.

UN-PURE.
UNPURELY.
UNPURENESS.

Not pure or clean; foul, filthy. See IMPURE.

That no man should take meate w^t unpure hādes, which they called vnwashed, as who should say, the hādes dyd defyle the meate or the mā: or as who should say, the licour of the water should washe away the filthinesse of the mynde. Udal. Matthew, c. 15.

The prestes haue swerued frō the lordes testament, & with polluted herte & handes to their offyce unpurely. Bale. English Votaries, pt. ii.

For what poynt of unpurenes could that woman haue in bearing chyld, which without so much as once touchyng of any man, had conceiued by the onely power and vertue of God embracing her through the weorkyng of the Holy Ghost.—Udal. Luke, c. 2.

The prelate bishops in their printed orders hung up in churches, haue proclaim'd the best of creatures, mankind, so unpurify'd and contagious, that for him to lay his hat or his garment upon the chancel-table, they haue defin'd it no less heinous, in express words, than to prophane the table of the Lord.—Milton. Church Government, b. ii.

This active watchman of the Church militant will let nothing escape him, that he finds in my service; nor leave any thing unpurified that has once passed through my hands. Warburton. Divine Legation, b. vi.

UN-PURGED. Not cleansed or cleared; polluted.

Why do we not consider our unhumbled and unpurged condition; and tremble before the Lord? would we save him a labour, he would take it well. Let us purge our souls, that he may not be put to further purging by new judgments.—Leighton. Com. on 1 Peter, c. 4.

The sound of instruments sweeter than the unpurged ear ever heard, rang throughout Heaven's concave. Knox. Winter Evenings, Even. 12.

UN-PURPOSED. Not meant, intended or designed.

Be of good chear, this unpurposed reiteration of thy sin shall be no prejudice to thy salvation. Bp. Hall. Balm of Gilead, § 5.

If that law did well to reduce from liberty to bondage for an ingratitude not the greatest, much more became it the law of God to enact the restorement of a free-born man from an unpurpos'd and unworthy bondage, to a rightful liberty, for the most unnatural fraud and ingratitude that can be committed against him.—Milton. Tetrachordon.

UN-PURSED. Taken out of the purse, expended.

I wote the tyme is ofte cursed,
That euer was the golde unpursed.—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

UN-PURSUED. Not followed.
For in that pause compassion snatch'd from war,
The foe before retiring, fast and far,
With wonder saw their footsteps unpursued,
First slower fled—then rallied—then withstood. Byron. The Corsair, c. 2.

UN-PURVEYED. Not provided.

Tydynges came to Meroneus of the cōmyng of his fader w^t so great araye, and he as then [was] unpurveyed of strength of knyghtys to resiste his fader. Fabyan. Chronycle, p. 88.

Mean-while, the lower world, which nothing knew
Of all that chaunced heere, was darkned quite;
And eke the heauens, and all the heauenly crew
Of happy wights, now unpurvaied of light,
Were much afraid, and wondred at that sight. Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 6.

UN-PUTRIFIED. Not become rotten; not rotten, corrupted.

The first means of prohibiting or checking putrefaction, is cold: for so we see that meat and drink will last longer, unputrified, or unsoured, in winter, than in summer. Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 341.

I have known an embryo, wherein the parts have been perfectly delineated and distinguishable, preserved unputrified for several years.—Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 74.

UN-QUAILED. (Un, aug.) Quelled, or killed.

So grieffe, (that never healthy, ever sicke,
That froward scholler to arithmeticke,
Who doth deuision and subtraction flie,
And chiefly learnes to adde and multiply)
In longest journeyes hath the strongest strength,
And is at hand, suppress, unquail'd at length. Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b. i. s. 4.

UN-QUALIFY, v. To remove, to strip off, or divest, to deprive of, qualifications, of certain qualities fitting, enabling, or entitling.

It [sin] discomposes and disorders, and unqualifies a man for any good duty, either to God or man. Hale. Cont. The Folly & Mischief of Sin.

King Henry to save his pensions, preferred these abbots and priors of dissolved monasteries to bishopricks, and other good places in the church, however otherwise unqualified sometimes.—Strype. Eccles. Mem. Edw. VI. an. 1533.

Hatred and revenge, rancour and malice, eat out the very vitals of religion, estrange us mightily from God and goodness, unqualify us for the offices of devotion and piety and peaceful society of heaven.—Waterland, vol. ix. Ser. 1.

And what could they hope for by attempting to deceive? They must each of them know themselves to be every way unqualified for conducting a fraud of this nature. Secker, vol. iii. Ser. 18.

UN-QUALITIED. Destitute or deprived of qualities. See UNQUALIFY.

Iras. Go to him madam, speake to him,
Heere's unqualitied with very shame.
Shakespeare. Anthony & Cleopatra, Act iii. sc. 9.

UN-QUARRELEABLE. That cannot be contended or contested, disputed or disagreed with.

There arise unto examination no such satisfactory and unquarrelable reasons, as may confirm the causes generally received.—Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. vi. c. 10.

UN-QUEEN, v. To strip off, to divest of, the rank of queen.

— Embalme me,
Then lay me forth (although unqueen'd) yet like
A queene, and daughter to a king interre me.
Shakespeare. Hen. VIII. Act iv. sc. 2.

UN-QUELLED. Not subdued or subjected.

She gives the hunter horse, unquell'd by toil, Ardent, to rush into the rapid chase.—Thomson. Liberty.
So boasted he; but Diomed unquell'd
By that keen shaft, retreated, till arriv'd
In front of his own chariot, there he stood.
Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. v.

UN-QUE'NCHABLE. } A. S. Unacwenced-
UNQUE'NCHABLY. } lic, inextinguibilis, UNQUE'NCHABLENESS. } that cannot be UNQUE'NCHED. } quenched or put out, (Somner.)

That cannot be extinguished.

The pope, saith he, beinge diseased with a spiritual dropsie, that is to saie, with an unquencheable thirst of monie, shooke out al the priestes purses, & spoiled the abbeies of all their treasures. Jewell. A Replie vnto M. Hardinge, p. 735.

He was giuen to such unquencheable couetousnesse, that nothing might suffice him. Holinshed. Historie of Scotland. Mogall.

[Some] which employ their labour and travail about the public administration of justice, follow it only as a trade, with unquencheable and unconcionable thirst of gain. Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, b. v. § 1.

Our fire hath neede to be fed continually with wood and fewell, or else it goeth out, that burneth eternally without and is unquencheable; for that the breath of the Lord's own mouth doth blowe and nourish it. Hakewill. Apologie, b. iv. s. 4.

I was amazed to see the unquencheableness of this fire. Id. Ib.

Her husband Vulcan whylome for her sake,
When first he loued her with heart entire,
His precious ornament they say did make,
And wrought in Lemnos with unquenched fire. Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 5.

Let 'em be seas, and I will drink 'em off,
And yet have unquencht fire left in my breast.
Beaum. & Fletch. King and No King, Act iv.

— Yet, for you have been
So near me, as to bear the name of wife,
My unquencht charity shall tell you this much,
(Though you deserve it well) you shall not beg,
What I ordain'd your joynture, honestly
You shall have settled on you. Id. The Woman's Prize, Act iv. sc. 4.

If any spark from heav'n remain unquenched
Within her breast, my breath perhaps may wake it.
Rowe. Fair Penitent, Act ii.

And fire unquench'd, unquencheable,
Around, within, thy heart shall dwell. Byron. The Giaour.

In all save form alone, how changed! and who
That marks the fire still sparkling in each eye,
Who but would deem their bosoms burn'd anew
With thy unquenched beam, lost liberty!
Id. Child Harold, c. 2. s. 75.

Lo, warrior! now, the Cross of Red,
Points to the grave of the mighty dead;
Within it burns a wonderous light,
To chase the spirits that love the night:
That lamp shall burn unquencheably
Until the eternal doom shall be.
Scott. Lay of the Last Minstrel, c. 2.

UN-QUESTIONABLE. } That cannot be UNQUE'STIONABLY. } doubted, debated, UNQUE'STIONED. } disputed.
Unquestioned, (also)—not asked or interrogated.

Orl. What were his markes?
Ros. A leane cheek, which you haue not; a blew eie and sunken, which you haue not: an unquestionable spirit, which you haue not. Shakespeare. As You Like It, Act iii. sc. 2.

If things were disputable whether they might be done, I rather chose to forbear, because the lawfulness of my forbearance was unquestionable. Hale. Cont. vol. i. Account of the Good Steward.

At least that we take care, that the name of principles deceive us not, nor impose on us, by making us receive that for an unquestionable truth, which is really at best but a very doubtful conjecture. Locke. Hum. Underst. b. iv. c. 12.

Though virtue is unquestionably worthy to be chosen for its own sake, even without any expectation of reward; yet it does not follow that it is therefore intirely self sufficient, and able to support a man under all kinds of sufferings, and even death it self, for its sake; without any prospect of future recompence.—Clarke. Evidences of Religion, Prop. 1.

Pala. I bring the same unquestion'd honesty
And zeal to serve your majesty.
Dryden. Marriage a-la-Mode, Act i. sc. 1.

The disposition to it [cheerfulness] was unquestionably planted in us by our Maker, with intent that it should be gratified; and youth is plainly the natural season for it. Secker, vol. ii. Ser. 3.

This is so natural an account of the original of language, and so unquestioned by antiquity, that Gregory Nyssen a father of the church, and Richard Simon a priest of the oratory, haue both endeavoured to support this hypothesis. Warburton. Divine Legation, b. iv.

UN-QUICK. Not lively, or enlivened, or spirited, or animated; not active or sharp.

Lists not to eat; still muses; sleeps unsound,
His senses droop, his steady eye unquick;
And much he ails, and yet he is not sick. Daniel. Civil Wars, b. iii.

So every fœtus bears a secret hoard,
With sleeping, unexpanded issue stor'd;
Which numerous, but unquicken'd progeny,
Clasp'd and inwrapt within each other lie. Blackmore. Creation, b. vi.

UN-QUIET, v. } We now more usually write UNQUIET, adj. } Inquietude. See INQUIET, UNQUIETLY. } DISQUIET.
UNQUIETNESS. } To deprive of quiet or UNQUIETUDE. } repose, of ease, rest, peace, or tranquillity; to disease, to discompose, to disturb.

But among sondry lettes and impedimentes that hitherto haue chaunced, there hath none so muche enuyed me thys felicitie, as hath this troublous and unquiet world. Udal. Marke, Pref. of Erasmus.

To whom Ceballinus with a bashed countenance (well declaringe the unquietnes of his minde) reported al those thinges which he had heard of his brother, requiringe him that he would declare the same immediately vnto the king. Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 156.

Having weighed the matter, and deeply pondered the gravity thereof, wherewith they were greatly troubled and unquieted, resolved finally that the archbishop should reveal the same to the king's majesty.—Herbert. Hen. VIII.

But beeing now attacht with timely age,
And weary of this worlds unquiet waies,
He tooke himselfe vnto this hermitage,
In which he liu'd alone, like carelesse bird in cage. Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 6.

For almost all the world their service bend
To Phœbus, and in vain my light I lend,
Gaz'd on unto my setting from my rise
Almost of none, but of unquiet eyes. Beaum. & Fletch. Maid's Tragedy, Act i.

It was a true word of wise Bion, in Laertius, who when he was asked what man liued most unquietly, answered, he that in a great estate affects to be prosperous. Bp. Hall. Christian Moderation, b. i. § 2.

When it is forced to ask honestly and severely, then it wills so coldly, that God hates the prayer; and if it desires fervently, it sometimes turns that into passion, and that passion breaks into murmurs or unquietness. Bp. Taylor, vol. i. Ser. 4.

Being balanced in water, or in any other liquid substance where it may have a free mobility, [it] will bewray a kind of unquietude and discontentment till it attain the former position.—Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 57.

True or false, solid or sandy, the mind must have some foundation to rest itself upon; and it no sooner entertains any proposition, but it presently hastens to some hypothesis to bottom it on; till then it is unquiet and unsettled.

Locke. Conduct of the Understanding, § 6.

UN-RA'CKED. Not distracted, not drawn off, (sc.) the pure from the foul or lees.

And take another vessel of new beer, and rack the one vessel from the lees, and pour the lees of the racked vessel into the unracked vessel, and see the effect.

Bacon. Natural History, § 306.

UN-RAISED. Not placed or set up; not reared, lifted, elevated, exalted.

The knights of Englande offered themselves, and said, how they were in good mynde so to do, so y^t by their negligēce the siege shulde nat be unreysed.

Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 338.

— But pardon, gentles all:

The flat unraysed spirits, that hath dar'd,
On this vnworthy scaffold, to bring forth
So great an object.—Shakespeare. Hen. V. Prol.

UN-RA'KED. Not drawn together, gathered or collected.

But he who is Lord of all things, hath so ordain'd: trust him then; he doubtless will command the people to make good his promises of maintenance more honourably unask'd, unrak'd for.—Milton. On the Removal of Hirelings.

Where fires thou find'st unrak'd, and hearths vnswep't,
There pinch the maids as blew as bill-berry.

Shakespeare. Merry Wives of Windsor, Act v. sc. 5.

UN-RANSACKED. Not searched, plundered or pillaged.

For I will for none hast leue any corner of the matter unrasaked as farre as we can any doubt finde therein.

Sir T. More. Workes, p. 187.

UN-RANSOMED. Not redeemed, repurchased, or regained by purchase.

1 Gent. Do you grieve, we are come off?

Dem. Unransom'd was it?

2 Gent. It was, sir.

Beaum. & Fletch. Humorous Lieutenant, Act ii. sc. 4.

Mark me—I come ambassadress from Jove.

The gods, he saith, resent it, but himself

More deeply than the rest, that thou retain'st

Amid thy fleet, through fury of revenge

Unransom'd Hector.—Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. xxiv.

UN-RA'PTURED. Not borne or carried away; transported, entranced.

What heart of stone but glows at thoughts like these?

Such contemplations mount us; and should mount

The mind still higher: nor ever glance on man

Unraptured, uninfamed.—Young. Complaint, Night 4.

UN-RA'VEL, v. To ravel and to unravel, have by usage been greatly confused in their application. To ravel is to tear (reave) or pull asunder, (sc.) any thing involved or complicate; and thus,—to unfold, to disclose. And to unravel is—

1. To involve or complicate; to disorder.

But to ravel is also,—to tear or pull asunder, (sc.) any thing whole or entire, into shreds, into ragged particles; and hence,—to pull or put into disorder or confusion; to confuse, to perplex, to entangle. And to unravel,—

2. To remove the confusion or perplexity; to disentangle, to place in order; to make clear or plain, to evolve.

In each case un may be neg.; but see To UN-REAVE, and To UNRIP.

A religion that would change the face of things, and would also pierce into the secrets of the soul, and unravel all the intrigues of hearts, and reform all evil manners, and break vile habits into gentleness and counsel.

Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. i. c. 4.

If they shall retire to folly, and unravel all their holy vows, and commit those evils from which they formerly run as from a fire or inundation, their case hath in it so many evils, that they have great reason to fear the anger of God, and concerning the final issue of their souls.—Id. vol. ii. Ser. 8.

The catastrophe, the Grecians call'd deus, the French le denouement, and we the discovery or unravelling of the plot.—Dryden. Essay on Dram. Poesie.

— Old Penelope's tale

Inverted: has unravell'd all by day,

That he has done by night.—Id. Spanish Fryar, Act i.

In an eternity, what scenes shall strike!

Adventures thicken! novelties surprise!

What webs of wonder shall unravel, there!

Young. Complaint, Night 6.

We are fallen into so profane, and sceptical an age, which takes a pleasure and a pride in unravelling almost all the received principles both of religion and reason.

Tillotson, vol. i. Ser. 1.

The precept of Aristotle and Horace, that the unravelling of the plot should not proceed from a miracle, or the appearance of a God, has place only in Dramatic poetry not in the Epic.—Pope. Homer. Odyssey. View of the Epic Poem, s. 7.

A man might have seen, that the justness of unravelling depended on the reality of the clew: which, too, though dignified by the name of clew, is indeed no other than a number of odd ends, that wanted to be made consistent, rather than to be unravell'd.

Warburton. Divine Legation, b. iii. § 6.

That great chain of causes, which linking one to another even to the throne of God himself, can never be unravell'd by any industry of ours.

Burke. On the Sublime and Beautiful, pt. iv. § 1.

Vain thought! that hour of ne'er unravell'd gloom

Came not again, or Lara could assume

A seeming of forgetfulness.—Byron. Lara, c. 1.

UN-RA'ZORED. Not smoothened, scraped or shaped.

Com. Were they of manly prime, or youthful bloom?

Lad. As smooth as Hebe's their unrazor'd lips.

Milton. Comus.

UN-REACHED. Not touched, attained, or arrived at.

Labour with unequal force to climb

That lofty hill, unreach'd by former time.—Dryden.

Where are the charms and virtues which we dare

Conceive in boyhood and pursue as men,

The unreach'd paradise of our despair,

Which o'er-informs the pencil and the pen,

And overpowers the page where it would bloom again?

Byron. Child Harold, c. 4.

UN-READ. Not read or learned, not taught, not knowing, or acquainted with; not spoken from book, not perused in book.

Cā I both gather vp hys bookes & go hyde theim, & also make thē that haue red thē goe vnredde thē againe, or forget what they haue redde?

Sir T. More. Workes, p. 1025.

Agam. The finenesse of which mettall is not found

In fortunes loue: for then, the bold and coward,

The wise and foole, the artist and vn-read,

The hard and soft, seeme all affīn'd, and kin.

Shakespeare. Troyl. & Cress. Act i. sc. 3.

If to prevent sects and schisms, who is so unread or uncatechis'd in story, that hath not heard of many sects refusing books as a hindrance, and preserving their doctrine unmix'd for many ages, only by unwritten traditions?

Milton. Of Unlicensed Printing.

Disdain of fathers, which, the daunce began,

And last, uncertain who's the narrow span,

The clown unread, and half-read gentleman.

Dryden. The Hind and the Panther.

Not being solely unread in the authors, who had seen the most of those constitutions, and who best understood them, I cannot help concurring with their opinion, that an absolute democracy, no more than absolute monarchy, is to be reckoned among the legitimate forms of government.

Burke. On the French Revolution, (1790.)

— I saw

The humblest of all sepulchres, and gazed

With not the less of sorrow and of awe

On that neglected turf and quiet stone,

With name no clearer than the names unknown,

Which lay unread around it.—Byron. Churchill's Grave.

UN-RE'ADY. } Not prepared or fit for use; UNRE'ADINESS. } for any purpose; not dressed,
not prompt, quick, expedite.

Unready—is frequent in our old writers, as undressed.

The archebyssshop of Yorke, constrayned of pure necessity to defende that countre, gatheryd vnto hym an vnredy and dispurueyed hoost for the warre.

Fabyan. Chronycle, an. 1318.

What vntowardnes, what flincheing, what pinching, what vnredines.—Bp. Gardner. True Obedience. To the Reader.

Quisan. Sleep dwell upon your eyes, and fair dreams court ye.

Quisar. Come, where have you been wench? make me unready;

I slept but ill last night.

Beaum. & Fletch. Island Princess, Act iii.

[Enter seuerall wayes, Bastard, Alanson, Reignier, halfe ready, and halfe vnready.]

Alan. How now my Lords? what all vnreadie so?

Bast. Vnready? I am glad we scap'd so well.

Shakespeare. 1 Pt. Henry VI. Act ii. sc. 1.

Seneca, in one of his epistles, rejoyces much to tell with what patient temper he took it, that comming unexpectedly to his country-house, he found all things so discomposed, that no provision was ready for him; finding more contentment in his own quiet apprehension of these wants than trouble in that unreadiness.

Bp. Hall. Cont. Of Contentation, § 20.

UN-REAL. Not real; imaginary, phantastical.

Him I hold more in the way to perfection who forgoes an unfit, ungodly, and discordant wedlock, to live according to peace and love, and God's institution in a fitter choice, than he who debars himself the happy experience of all godly, which is peaceful conversation in his family, to live a contentious, and unchristian life not to be avoided, in temptations not to be liv'd in, only for the false keeping of a most unreal nullity, a marriage that hath no affinity with God's intention.—Milton. Tetrachordon.

In order to embellish the mistress, you should give a new education to the lover, and teach the men not to be any longer dazzled by false charms and unreal beauty.

Spectator, No. 53.

This done, adoring the unreal forms

And shadows of the dead, I vow'd to slay

In my own palace, should I safe return,

A heifer fairest of my num'rous herds.

Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. xi.

UN-RE'APED. Not cut; consequentially, not gathered, or collected.

— Had she dealt

But with that seeming modesty she might,

And flung a little art upon her ardor,

But 'twas forgot, and I forgot to like her,

And glad I was deceiv'd. No my Zenocia,

My first love here begun, rests here unreapt yet,

And here for ever.

Beaum. & Fletch. Custom of the Country, Act iv.

For the Britons not doubting but that their enemies on the morrow would be in that place which only they had left unreap'd of all their harvest, had plac'd an ambush; and while they were disperst and busiest at their labour, set upon them, kill'd som, and routed the rest.

Milton. History of England, b. ii.

UN-RE'ASONABLE. } Not according, or UNRE'ASONABLY. } agreeable to or con-
UNRE'ASONABLENESS. } sistent with (right)
UNRE'ASON, n. } reason, or sound UNRE'ASON, v. } sense, or understanding; not judicious, or prudent; well regulated or moderated.

But thei ben as unresounable beestis kyndeli into taking and into deeth, blasfemyng in these thingis that thei known not, and schulen perische in her corrupcioun and resseyue the hire of unrightwisnesse.—Wiclif. 2 Pet. c. 2.

Why han ye wrought this werk unresounable?

Chaucer. Frankeleines Tale, v. 11, 185.

Lo, than will and vnreason bringeth a man from the blisse of grace, whiche thing of pure kinde, euery man ought to shonne and to eschew, and to the knot of wil and reason confirme.—Id. Test. of Loue, b. iii.

In thelementes and eke also

Thei hadden a beleue tho,

And all that was vnresounable.—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

After this he resorteth againe to the vnresounableness of the lawes, & proueth theim vnresounable, by the sentence of hys owne conceite.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 1028.

I wolde gyue the realme of Fraunce so moche to do, that I wolde bringe theim that be vnresounable to reason.

Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. c. 181.

The kynges seruautys greued and pyll'd Englysshe men vnresounably.—Fabyan. Chronycle, c. 224.

For considerations, I'll propose such, as shew the unreasonableness of our enmities, and disagreements upon the account of different opinions; which will prove that our affections ought to meet, though our judgements cannot.

Glanvill, Ser. 2.

However a man may for a while please himself in such objections against his Creator, and seem to himself to unreason the equity of God's proceedings; yet there will be a time when the sinner shall stand clearly convinced of the righteousness of God's dealings in his final departure from him.—South, vol. xi. Ser. 10.

There are many cases, wherein we are by no means obliged to grant that to others, which we ourselves perhaps (were we in their circumstances and they in ours) might be willing enough, unreasonably willing, to obtain from them.

Atterbury, vol. i. Ser. 9.

In that general territory itself, as in the old name of provinces, the citizens are interested from old prejudices and unreasoned habits, and not on account of the geometrick properties of its figure.

Burke. On the French Revolution, (1790.

UN-REAVE. See UNRAVEL, UNRIP, and UNRIVE.

Un (in Spenser) appears to be the A. S. On, aug. and Unreave, (i. e. en- or un-reave.) to mean,—
To reave or rive, or tear into; tear in pieces.
In Hall, (un-neg.)—untorn, unrent.

Penelope for her Ulysses sake, deuiz'd a web her woovers to deceave:
in which the worke that shee all day did make,
the same at night she did againe unreave.
Spenser, Son. 23.

Couldst thou think that a cottage not too strongly built, and standing so bleak in the very mouth of the winds, could for any long time hold tight and unreaved?
Bp. Hall. Balm of Gilead, § 9.

UN-REBATED. Not beaten back, (sc.)
the edge; and, consequentially, not blunted. See REBATE.

C. Terentius a Lucan to doe honour unto his grand father who had made him his owne sonne by adoption, exhibited a shew for three daies together of thirtie paire of such fencers fighting with unrebated swords.
Holland. Plinie, b. xxxv. c. 7.

One other of his own family was called Celer, the quick lie, because a few days after the death of his father, he shewed the people the cruell fight of fencers at unrebated swords, which they found wonderfull for the shortness of time.—North. Plutarch, p. 199.

UN-REBU'KABLE. } That cannot or may UNREBU'KED. } not be chided, reprov'd, reprimanded.

That thou kepe the commaundemente, and be wythout spot & unrebukenable, vntyl the appearynge of our Lord Jesus Christ.—Bible, 1551. 1 Timothee, c. 6.

But he would rather suffer death (then see God so dis-honoured, by the breaking of his holy precept, and commaundement) then to suffer whoredome to be unrebuked, even in a king.—Homilies. Against Adultery.

UN-RECALLABLE. } That cannot be UNRECALL'ED. } called back; revoked, or retracted.

When a sin is past, grief may lessen it, but not unsin it.
That which is done is unrecallable; because a sin does intend in infinitum.—Feltham, pt. i. Res. 89.

O treacherous Conscience! while she seems to sleep
On rose and myrtle, lull'd with syren song;
While she seems, nodding o'er her charge, to drop
On headlong appetite the slacken'd rein,
And give us up to license, unrecall'd, Unmark'd.
Young. Complaint, Night 2.

UN-RECEIVED. Not taken or seized.

By the gift of eternall generation Christ hath receiued of the Father one and in number the selfe same substance, whiche the Father hath of himselfe unreceiued from any other.—Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, b. v. § 54.

UN-RECKONED. Not counted or computed; not counted, estimated, or valued.

And the receiv'd opinion of the thing,
For some unhallow'd string that vilely jarr'd,
Hath so unseason'd now the ears of men,
That he who doth touch the tenour of that vein,
Is held but vain; and his unreckon'd pen
The title but of levity doth gain.—Daniel. Musophilus.

— Add that falshood
To a long bill that yet remains unreckon'd
Dryden. Don Sebastian, Act iii. sc. 1.

UN-RECLAIMED. } See IRRECLAIMABLE.
UNRECLAIM'ABLE. } Not called back or re-UNRECLAIM'ABLY. } called (sc. from a wrong course); not restored, recovered, or reformed; not called or brought back (sc. to management or mansuetude); not tamed.

— But breath his faults so quaintly,
That they may seeme the taints of liberty;
The flash and out-broke of a fiery minde,
A saungenesse in unreclaim'd bloud of generall assault.
Shakespeare. Hamlet, Act ii. sc. 1.

Look, thirdly, below you; and see the horror of that dreadful place of torment, which is the unavoidable portion of careless and unreclaimable sinners.
Bp. Hall. Ser. 2 Pet. i. 10.

Those therefore who do pertinaciously and unreclaimably
maintain doctrines destructive to the foundation of Christian religion, must necessarily be avoided and suppressed.
Id. Peace-Maker, § 8.

Yet Galatea, harder to be broke,
Than bullocks, unreclaim'd to bear the yoke,
And far more stubborn, than the knotted oak.
Dryden. Ovid. Metam. b. xiii.

UNR

UN-RECLINING. Not bending or leaning against; not reposing or resting against, or upon.

Therefore the joyless station of this rock Unsleeping, unreclining, shalt thou keep,
And many a groan, many a loud lament
Throw out in vain, nor move the rig'rous breast
Of Jove, relentless in his youthful pow'r.
Potter. Æschylus. Prometheus Chain'd.

UN-RECOMMENDED. Not given into the hands, committed to the care, attention, favour;
not declared worthy of favour, trust.

Unknown by personal acquaintance, and unrecommended
by the solicitation of friends or the interposition of power, he [Jortin] was presented by archbishop Herring to a valuable benefice in London.—Knox. Ess. No. 113.

UN-RECOMPENSED. Not rewarded, remunerated or requited.

Heaven will not see so true a love unrecompenc'd.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Wild Goose Chase, Act iv. sc. 3.

It stands not with the munificence of a bountifull God to bee indebted to his creature, we cannot give him ought un- recompensed.—Bp. Hall. Cont. Solomon's Choice, &c.

UN-RECONCILEABLE. } See IRRECON-UNRECONCILEABLY. } CILEABLE. That UNRECONCILED. } cannot be brought again to peace, concord or agreement; that cannot be made to agree, or be consonant to,
or consistent with.

The whiche at the tyme of his fathers dethe, beyng, as about is sayd, unreconcyled in the prouynce of Burgoyne, & herynge of the deth of his father, with ayd of the foresayd duke Phylp shortly entryd ye realme of Fraunce.
Fabyan. Chronycle. Louis XI. an. 1.

Since therefore neither truth can ever yeeld, nor obstinacy will yeeld; let us serve cheerfully under the colours of our Heavenly leader, and both proclaime and maintaine an unreconcilable warre with these Romish heresies.
Bp. Hall. No Peace with Rome, § 21.

Naturall parents, know not how to retaine an everlasting anger towards the fruit of their loynes; how much lesse shall the God of mercies, bee unreconcilably displeased with his owne; and suffer his wrath to burne like fire that cannot be quenched?
Id. Cont. Absalom's Returne & Conspiracie.

Madam, I'm that man; I'm even he that once did owe unreconcil'd hate to you, and all that bear the name of women.—Beaum. & Fletch. Woman Hater, Act iii. sc. 2.

No coalition, which, under the specious name of independency, carries in its bosom the unreconcilable principles of the original discord of parties, ever was, or will be, an healing coalition.—Burke On a late State of the Nation.

UN-RECORDED. Not kept or retained in mind or memory; not commemorated, repeated, rehearsed.

With prosperous wing full summ'd to tell of deeds
Above heroic, though in secret done,
And unrecorded left through many an age,
Worthy t' have not remain'd so long unsung Milton. Paradise Regained, b. i.

In their baronial feuds and single fields,
What deeds of prowess unrecorded died!
Byron. Childe Harold, c. 3.

UN-RECOVERABLE. See IRRECOVERABLE.
That cannot be restored, or regained; obtained or procured again.

No common place will serve us when we go on God's message; the very losse of minutes may be unrecoverable.
Bp. Hall. Cont. Jehu & Jehoram

If I be long sick, and unrecoverably, I shall be the fitter and willing to die.—Id. Med. & Vowes, Cen. 2. § 48.

UN-RECOUNTED. Not told, related, repeated.

Marry this is yet but yong, and may be left
To some yeares unrecounted.
Shakespeare. Hen. VIII. Act iii. sc. 2.

UN-RECRUITABLE. } That cannot be UNRECRUITED. } grown again: recreated; added (to a number or quantity); in the army, enlisted to increase the number.

Judicious persons conceive that, had the royalists pursued this single enemy (as yet unrecruited with additional strength) they had finally worsted him.
Fuller. Worthies. Cheshire.

They would not suffer their empty and unrecruitable colonels of twenty men in a company to quaff out, or convey into secret hoards, the wages of a delusive list, and a miserable remnant.—Milton. Of Education.

UNR

UN-RECURRING. Not recovering or curing;
not healing.

Marc. Oh thus I found her straying in the parke, Seeking to hide herselfe as doth the deare
That hath receiue some unrecuring wound.
Shakespeare. Titus Andronicus, Act iii. sc. 1.

UN-REDEEMED. See IRREDEEMABLY. Not brought again, or repurchased.

Under his own borrowed person he describes the state of a carnal, unredeemed, unregenerate person.
Bp. Taylor, vol. iii. Ser. 2.

Certainly were it not for these two traits in the life of Sylla, alluded to in this stanza, we should regard him as a monster unredeemed by any admirable quality.
Byron. Childe Harold, c. 4. Note 43.

UN-REDRESSED. Not remedied, suc-coured or relieved.

Lo, hard behind his backe his foe was prest,
With dreadfull weapon aymed at his head:
That vnto death had doen him unredrest,
Had not the noble prince his ready stroke represt.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 8.

UN-REDUCIBLENESS. See IRREDUCIBLE.
That cannot be brought back, brought into.

A third property of matters belonging to Christianity, and which also renders them mysterious, is their strangeness and unreducibleness to the common methods and observations of nature.—South, vol. iii. Ser. 6.

UN-REFINED. Not cleared, purified, orightened, polished or polite.

The sugar of this country is much better than that which we bring home from our plantations: for all the sugar that is made here is clay'd, which makes it whiter and finer than our Muscovada, as we call our unrefin'd sugar.
Dampier. Voyages, an. 1699.

In those early and unrefined ages, the jarring parts of a certain chaotick constitution supported their several pretensions by the sword.
Burke. A Vindication of Natural Society.

UN-REFORMABLE. } That cannot be UNREFORM'ATION. } formed or framed, UNREFORMED. } made or fashioned,
again; cannot be made better, amended, corrected, improved.

To the end that those who thirst for the spoil of spiritual possessions may, till such time as they have their purpose, be thought to covet nothing but only the just extinguishment of unreformable persons.
Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, b. vii. § 24.

Yea, have not too many amongst us added to their un- reformation an impudence in sinning?
Bp. Hall. Ser. Eccl. iii. 4.

He that is a heretick in one article, hath no saving faith in the whole; and so does every vicious habit, or unre- formed sin, destroy the excellency of the grace of charity.
Bp. Taylor, vol. i. Ser. 12.

It is better to allow the evil, in order to correct it, than by endeavouring to forbid, what we cannot be able wholly to prevent, to leave it under an illegal, and therefore an unreformed, existence.—Burke. Let. to Henry Dundas

UN-REFRESHED. Not recreated, reanimated, or revived.

But when Penelope, the palace stairs
Re-mounting, had her upper chamber reach'd,
There, unrefresh'd with either food or wine,
She laid her down, her noble son the theme
Of all her musings.—Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. iv.

UN-REFUNDING. Not restoring, or repaying; not returning.

When horror universal shall descend,
And Heaven's dark concave urn all human race,
On that enormous, unrefunding tomb,
How just this verse! this monumental sigh!
Young. Complaint, Night 7.

UN-REFUSING. Not denying or rejecting.

Joyous, th' impatient husbandman perceives
Relenting Nature, and his lusty steers
Drives from their stalls, to where the well us'd plough,
Lies in the furrow, loosen'd from the frost.
There, unrefusing, to the harness'd yoke
They lend their shoulder, and begin their toil.
Thomson. Spring.

UN-REGARDED. } See DISREGARD. Not UNREGARDABLE. } respected, or attended UNREGARDING. } to; not noticed or cared for.

Since whose decease, learning lies unregarded,
And men of armes doe wander unrewarded.
Spenser. Ruines of Time.

Fame is uncertaine, who so swiftly flies
By th' unregarded shed where vertue lyes.
Broune. Britannia's Pastorals, b. ii.

What more unlike to God, what more like that God should hate, than that his law should be so curious to wash vessels, and vestures, and so careless to leave unwash'd, unregarded, so foul a scab of Egypt in their souls!
Milton. Tetrachordon.

Away then with those your unproving illustrations, and unregardable testimonies, which you (as destitute of all antiquity) shut up the scene withall.
Bp. Hall. The Remonstrants' Defence, § 13.

The mother's dissenting does not annul the marriage of her sons that are of age; and it is so far from that, that their not complying with their mothers in this affair is only then a sin when it is done with unregarding circumstances, or hath not in it a great weight of reason.
Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. iii. c. 5.

You are so much the business of our souls, that while you are in sight, we can neither look nor think on any else.
There are no eyes for other beauties: you only are present, and the rest of your sex are but the unregarded parts that fill your triumph.—Dryden. State of Innocence, Ep. Ded.

UN-REGENERATE.

UNREGENERATED.

UNREGENERATION.

UNREGENERACY.

Not born again.

Yet in the unregenerate there might be some good, such as are good desires, knowledge of good and evil, single actions of virtue, beginnings and dispositions to grace, acknowledging of our Saviour Jesus Christ, some lightnings and flashes of the Holy Ghost, a knowing of the way of righteousness; but sanctifying, saving good does not dwell, that is, does not abide with them, and rule.
Bp. Taylor. Of Repentance, c. 8. § 2.

That state from which we are redeemed by Jesus Christ, and freed by the Spirit of his grace, is a state of carnality, of unregeneration, that is, of sin and death.
Id. Ib. c. 8. § 4.

The sum is, we may overcome some sins, and turn from the grosser sorts of wickedness, and yet if endeavour not to subdue the rest, we are still in the condition of unregeneracy and death, and though we thus seek, we shall not enter.
Glanvill, Ser. 1.

All that he meant to prove against the Pelagians, by quoting John vi. was only this: that infants must have Christ, must have part in Christ, in order to eternal life, in or by their natural, unregenerate state, as the Pelagians pretended.—Waterland. Works, vol. ix. p. 483.

Now, we deny not that the state of the unregenerate carnal man is indeed represented in scripture under the images of captivity and bondage, and his sinful lusts under the images of chains and fetters.—Bp. Horsley, vol. ii. Ser. 20.

It is the peculiar glory of Christianity that it affords its worthy professors the enjoyment of heavenly grace; a gift which no other system could ensure, and of which man in his corrupt and unregenerated state, could never participate.
Knox, vol. vi. Ser. 3.

UN-REGISTERED. Not recorded or enrolled.

—Nay, you were a fragment
Of Gneius Pompey, besides what hotter houres
Unregistered in vulgar fame, you haue Luxuriously pickt out.
Shakespeare. Anthony & Cleopatra, Act iii. sc. 11.

UN-REGRETTED. Not wept for, bewailed, lamented, grieved.

The happiness of mankind is concerned in the preservation of works such as theirs, while those of the frothy declaimer are daily dropping unregretted into the gulf of oblivion.—Knox. Ess. No. 164.

UN-REINED. Not held in or retained; not checked or curbed; not guided or controlled.

For whilst this wild, unreined multitude
(Led with an unforeseeing, greedy mind,
Of an imagin'd good, that did delude
Their ignorance, in their desires made blind)
Ransackt the city.
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. vi.

We shall not fear to have our wives distain'd,
Nor yet our daughters violated here
By an imperial lust, that b'ing unrein'd,
Will hardly be resisted any where.
Id. A Panegyrick to King James.

—With like safetie guided down
Return me to my native element:
Least from this flying steed unrein'd (as once Bellerophon, though from a lower clime)
Dismounted, on th' Aleian field I fall
Erroneous there to wander and forlorne.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. vii.

UN-REJOICING. } Not pleasing, gladden-UNREJOICED. } ing, delighting.

Thron'd in his palace of cerulean ice,
Here Winter holds his unrejoicing court;
And through his airy hall the loud misrule
Of driving tempest is for ever heard.—Thomson. Winter.

Not unrejoiced to see him once again,
Warm was his welcome to the haunts of men;
Born of high lineage, link'd in high command,
He mingled with the magnates of his land.
Byron. Lara, c. 1.

UN-RELATED.

UNRELATIVE.

UNRELATIVELY.

See IRRELATIVE. Not told or narrated; not pertinent; not connected or allied.

But let others unrelated unto him write his character, whose pen cannot be suspected of flattery.
Fuller. Worthies. London.

They confined the precept of loving their brother to the descendants of their fraternal tribes; and neglected and despised the rest of the sons of Adam, who, because ritually unholy and profane, were deemed to be naturally unrelated to them.—Waburton, vol. ix. Ser. 5.

The events we are witnesses of, in the course of the longest life, appear to us very often original, unprepared, single, and unrelative, if I may use such an expression for want of a better in English.
Bolingbroke. On the Study of History, Let. 2.

They saw the measures they took singly and unrelatively, or relatively alone to some immediate object.—Id. Ib.

I think I may as well now, as at any other time, speak to a certain matter of fact, not wholly unrelated to the question under your consideration.
Burke. On American Taxation.

UN-RELAXED. Not slackened or loosened.

For never yet was wool or feather,
That could stand buff against all weather;
And unrelax'd, like this, resist
Both wind and rain, and snow and mist.
Congreve. Impossible Thing.

UN-RELENTING. Not being or becoming lenient, mild, gentle; not softening or mollifying.

Wherewith the king betakes him to some peace;
Yet to a peace much like a sick man's sleep, (Whose unrelenting pains do never cease,
But always watch upon his weakness keep.)
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. iv.

Methinks suspicion and distrust dwell here,
Starting with meagre forms thro' grated windows;
Death lurks within, and unrelenting punishment;
Without, grim danger, fear, and fiercest pow'r
Sit on the rude old tow'rs, and Gothic battlements.
Rowe. Lady Jane Gray, Act iii.

He [Oldham] has lashed the Jesuits with deserved and unrelenting rigour; but though severe punishment is often necessary, yet to see it inflicted with the wanton cruelty of an assassin, is not agreeable.—Knox. Ess. No. 137.

UN-RELIEVED. } Not raised, sustained,

UNRELIEVABLE. } succoured, helped, aided;

not raised or lightened.

And if he found that friendship here were feign'd,
Yet at the worst, it better should him please,
Far out of sight to perish here unknown,
Than unreliev'd be pitied of his own.
Drayton. Legend of Thomas Cromwell.

The tenth, Achilles, by the queen's command,
Who bears Heav'n's awful sceptre in her hand,
A council summon'd: for the goddess griev'd
Her favour'd host shou'd perish unreliev'd.
Dryden. Homer. Iliad, b. i.

Which manifests, that as no degree of distress is unre- lievable by his power, so no extremity of it is inconsistent with his compassion, no not with his friendship.
Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 258.

For the fact is, that after the law hath done its utmost, that most interesting species of distress which should be the especial object of discretionary bounty goes unrelieved.
Bp. Horsley, vol. iii. Ser. 35.

UN-RELIGIOUS. Not godly, holy, pious.

See IRRELIGION.

So that none of vs ought to take grievously to bee reuiled or railled at for the woordes of the gospell, or to suffre affliccion and euill turnes at the handes of suche persones, as serue the myndes of unreligious bishops.—Udal. Luke, c. 22.

And to leat vs know y^t nothing is more unreligious thē
Jewish religion, which consisteth in visible thinges.
Id. John, c. 11.

UN-RELINGUISHABLY. So as not to be left, forsaken, resigned.

As if this single respect of male and female were sufficient against a thousand inconveniences and mischiefs, to clog a rational creature to his endless sorrow unrelinguishably, under the guileful superscription of his intended solace and comfort.—Milton. Doct. & Disc. of Divorce, b. ii. c. 9.

UN-RE/LISHING. Not retaining, not having a pleasing taste or savour.

They can form no idea of any thing agreeable to them in the other world; all things there are uneasy and unrelishing at the best; and the worst is not to be endured.
Glanvill, Ser. 6.

UN-RELUCTANT. } Not struggling or

UNRELUCTANTLY. } striving against; not opposing; not acting with or feeling unwilling-ness.

So he, whom, unreluctant, all obey'd.
Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. xiv.

Nor is it claimed as a privilege, but submitted to as a burthen unreluctantly upon a motive of public spirit.
Search. Light of Nature, vol. ii. pt. ii. c. 23.

They now begin with a villa, as if it were as necessary as a warehouse; and end with bankruptcy as naturally, as unreluctantly, and as unblushingly, as if it had been the honourable object of their mercantile pursuit.
Knox. Ess. No. 8.

UN-REMARKABLE. That may not be noted, heeded, or regarded.

Nor is this unremarkable, and perhaps conducing to the same, that the Kings-fisher being dead and hung up by the neb, turnes alwaies her belly to the wind.
Sandys. Ovid. Metam. b. xi. Notes.

UN-REME/DIABLE. } See IRREMEDIABLE.

UNRE/MEDIED. } That cannot be healed

again, or recovered; that cannot be cured.

As they lay an unnecessary load upon their own shoulders, so they draw upon themselves the miseries of an un- remediable disappointment.—Bp. Hall. Contentation, § 20.

'Tis not a matter of any kind of evil report, really to have suffered, to have been squeez'd to atomes by an unremediable evil, especially if it be for well-doing.
Hammond, vol. iv. Ser. 3.

Shall I vnto the heavenly powres it show?
Or vnto earthly men, that dwell below?
To heavens! ah! they alas the authors were,
And workers of my unremedied wo.
Spenser. Colin Clout's come home againe.

Yet marriage the ordinance of our solace and contentment, the remedy of our loneliness, will not admit now either of charity or mercy, to come in and mediate, or pacify the fierceness of this gentle ordinance, the unremedied loneliness of this remedy.
Milton. Doct. & Disc. of Divorce. To the Parliament.

Waste will continue and disorder foul Unremedied, so long as she shall hold
The suitors in suspense, for, day by day,
Our emulation goads us to the strife.
Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. ii.

UN-REME/BERED. } Not brought back

UNREME/BERING. } or recalled to mind

UNREME/BRANCE. } or memory; not retained in memory; not recollected.

For in olde storyes or cronycles is nat founde that any suche kynge of that name reigned ouer the Syriens or Assiryens, nor yet that any suche storye that his xxx.
doughters shulde slee theyr xxx. husbendes, as there is surmysed was put in execucion; whiche if any suche wonder had ben there wroughte, shuld nat haue ben unre- membred the wryters and auctours of that parties.
Fabyan. Chronycle, c. 1.

Nor must the patience, the fortitude, the firm obedience of the nobles and people of Scotland, striving against manifold provocations; nor must their sincere and moderate proceeding hitherto be unremember'd, to the shameful conviction of all their detractors.
Milton. Of Reformation in England, b. ii.

Whole droves of minds are, by the driving God,
Compell'd to drink the deep Lethæan flood;
In large forgetful draughts to steep the cares
Of their past labours, and their irksom years.
That, unrememb'ring of its former pain,
The soul may suffer mortal flesh again.
Dryden. Virgil. Æneis, b. vi.

There are some words which are negative in their original language, but seem positive to an Englishman, because the negation is unknown; as abyss, a place without a bottom;
anodyne, an easing medicine; amnesty, an unremembrance, or general pardon, &c.—Watts. Logick, pt. i. c. 4.

UN-REMITTING. } Not falling back; not UNREMITTED. } yielding, relaxing, abating, ceasing.

What is this mighty breath, ye sages, say
That in a powerful language, felt, not heard,
Instructs the fowls of heaven; and through their breast
These arts of love diffuses? what, but God?
Inspiring God! who, boundless Spirit all,
And unremitting energy, pervades,
Adjusts, sustains, and agitates the whole.
Thomson. Spring.

So urg'd he Pallas of herself prepar'd,
And from the heights Olympian down she flew.
With unremitting speed Achilles still Press'd Hector.
Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. xxii.

They have no project which is to be pursu'd from day to day, the subject of unremitting anxiety and solicitude, that first rushes into the mind when they awake in the morning, and is last dismissed when they sleep at night.
Cook. First Voyage, b. i. c. 10.

UN-REMO'RSELESS. Used by Cowley as more than equivalent to Remorseless; with the prefix un, augmenting the force of the termination less.

The Roman Tully's pleasing eloquence,
Which in the ears did lock up every sense
Of the rapt hearer; his mellifluous breath
Could not at all charm unremorseless death.
Cowley. Elegy on Mr. Richard Clarke.

UN-REMOVABLE. } See IRREMOVABLE.
UNREMOVABLENESS. } That cannot be UNREMOVED. } moved back or away;
that cannot be stirred; made to change place.

We must set our selves before him, who is ever unremovable before us, with us, in us; acknowledging him with no lesse assurance of our faith, then we acknowledge the presence of our own bodies by the assurance of sense.
Bp. Hall. Cont. The Remedy of Prophaneness, b. i. § 4.

When he [Socrates] might easily have escaped and saved himself, by the means that his friends had prepared and made for him, he would neither be remov'd, nor yield unto their prayers, nor desist from his manner of merry and jesting speeches, though death were presented unto him, but held his reason firm and unremovable in the greatest peril that was.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 986.

When they were rolling that other weighty stone (for such we probably conceive) to the mouth of the vault with much toyle and sweat, and breathlessness, they brag'd of the sureness of the place, and unremovableness of that load.
Bp. Hall. Cont. The Resurrection.

— But your noble heart
Prepar'd to act so difficult a part,
With unremoved constancy is still
The same it was.—Drayton. Elegy on the Lady J. S.

— As yonder mill,
Though in his turning it obey the streame,
Yet by the head-strong torrent from his beame
Is unremov'd, and till the wheele be tore,
It dayly toyles; then rests, and works no more,
Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b. i. s. 4.

This acquitted the Christians of Polytheism, and left the charge fixed and unremovable upon the pagans.
Waterland. Works, vol. iii. p. 70.

— Two alone,
Automedon and Alcimus the brave,
Attended his commands; he had himself
Supp'd newly, and the board stood unremov'd.
Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. xxiv.

UN-RENAVIGABLE. That cannot be sailed back or repassed in ship, (navi.)

— How faine would they again
Returne to want and toyle! but fates restraine;
And the unrenavigable Stygian sound,
Whose nine times winding streams their mansions bound.
Sandys. Virgil. Aeneis, b. vi.

UN-RENEWED. Not renovated or made new again; not refreshed or revived.

As the sun is the cause of night and darkness, not by any casual influence producing it, but only by withdrawing his light; the corruption of a man's heart, unrenewed by grace, is the cause of its own hardness: as, when you melt wax, remove but the fire, and the wax will harden itself.
South, vol. ix. Ser. 2.

UN-RENT. Not torn asunder.

Tho all in rage he on him streight did seaze
As if he would in peeces him have rent;
And, were not that the prince did him appeaze
He had not left one limbe of him unrent:
But, streight he held his hand at his commaundement.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 6

UN-REPAID. Not requited or recompensed.

Yet what cou'dst thou, Tormentor, hope to gain?
Thy loss continues, unrepaid by pain,
Inglorious comfort thou shalt poorly meet,
From his mean blood. But oh revenge is sweet.
Dryden. Juvenal, Sat. 13.

— Corsair! 'tis but a blow!
Without it flight were idle—how evade
His sure pursuit? my wrongs too unrepaid,
My youth disgraced—the long, long wasted years,
One blow shall cancel with our future fears.
Byron. The Corsair, c. 3.

UN-REPAIRED. See IRREPARABLE. Not restored, recovered or amended; not compensated for.

Whan the Frenche kynge wente out of that country it was unrepayred, and fewe folkes abode therin, for all was brent and beaten down.
Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 434.

— Paul's steeple was unto us
'Bove all your fire-works had at Ephesus,
Or Alexandria; and though a divine
Loss, remains yet as unrepair'd as mine.
B. Jonson. An Execution upon Vulcan.

UN-REPEALABLE. } See IRREPEALABLE.
UNREPEALED. } That cannot be recalled or revoked.

Wilt thou (quoth he) that art but a bottle of vicious and harden'd excrements, contend with the lawful and free-born members, whose certain number is set by ancient, and unrepealable statute?—Milton. Of Reform. in England, b. ii.

For say a man did abolish laws, and yet withall leave behind unrepealed and uncondemned the doctrines and books of Parmenides, Socrates, Heraclitus, and Plato, we should be far for all that from devouring one another, or living a savage life.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 919.

If the people laying aside prejudice and impatience, will seriously and calmly now consider their own good, both religious and civil, their own liberty, and the only means therof, as shall be here laid down before them, and will elect their knights and burgesses, able men and according to the just and necessary qualifications (which, for aught I hear, remain yet in force unrepeal'd, as they formerly were decreed in parliament) men not addicted to a single person or house, the work is done.
Milton. Way to establish a Free Commonwealth.

Such then will be insisted upon as new ways of expressing and exercising that love of God, which is the foundation of all [duties,] and which is unrepealable, abiding for ever.
Waterland. Works, vol. v. p. 513.

To whom thus beauteous Juno, sore displeas'd:
God of the silver bow! stand unrepeal'd
This word of thine, if in the gods' account
Achilles' worth and Hector's be the same.
Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. xxiv.

UN-REPEATED. Not said or told again.

The further mention of his deeds, not so much unfortunate as faulty, had in tenderness to his late sufferings been willing'y forborn; and perhaps for the present age might have slept with him unrepeated.
Milton. Answer to Eikon Basilike, Pref.

UN-REPE'NTANT. } Not having or feel-
UNREPE'NTANCE. } ing pain, grief, or sor-UNREPE'NTED. } row, for any act, for a UNREPE'NTING. } fault, for sin or the consequences of sin; not feeling (penitence), contrition, or remorse.

But after thin hardnesse and unrepentaunt herte thou tresorist to the wraththe in the daie of wraththe and of schewing of the rightfull doom of God, that schal ghelde to ech man aftr hisse werkis.—Wiclif. Romayns, c. 2.

His own high court of justice; being more merciful than ours below, there is a little room yet left for the hope of his friends, if he have any; though the outward unrepentance of his death afford but small materials for the work of charity.—Cowley. On the Government of Oliver Cromwell.

There is in unrepenting or habitual sinners an eternal spring or principle of evil, and they were ready for ever to have sinned.—Bp. Taylor. Of Repentance, c. 5. § 3.

If it [affliction] meet with a person under the guilt of some great unrepented sin, it brings him an errand of humiliation, repentance, amendment, and thankfulness.
Hale. Cont. vol. i. Of Afflictions.

Call back your thoughts from each deluding passion,
And wing your parting soul for her last flight;
Call back your thoughts to all your former days,
To every unrepented act of evil;
And sadly deprecate the wrath divine.
Rowe. Royal Convert, Act v.

Short was her joy; for soon th' insulting maid
By Heav'n's decree in the cold grave was laid,
And as in unrepenting sin she dy'd,
Doom'd to the same bad place, is punish'd for her pride.
Dryden. Theodore & Honoria.

But from his visage little could we guess,
So unrepentant, dark, and passionless,
Save that when struggling nearer to his last,
Upon that page his eye was kindly cast.
Byron. Lara, c. 2. s. 19.

UN-REPINED. } Not sorry, regretting, UNREPI'NING. } fretting.
UNREPI'NINGLY.

How ever it might be envious to raise new taxations, yet to continue those he found unrepined at, had been out of the reach of exception.

Bp. Hall. Cont. Nehemiah's Redressing, &c.

How much warm water doth it cost him ere he can recover his wonted state? what anxiety, what strife, what torture, what self-revenge, what ejaculations and complaints, what unrepining subjection to the rod?
Id. The Rem. of Prophaneness, b. ii. § 11.

What a wound it is to my heart, you will easily believe: but his undisputable will must be done, and unrepiningly received by his own creatures, who is the Lord of all nature, and of all fortune.—Reliquiae Wottonianae, p. 322.

Yet silent still she pass'd and unrepining
Her streaming eyes bent ever on the earth,
Except when in some bitter pang of sorrow,
To Heaven she seem'd in fervent zeal to raise them,
And beg that mercy man denied her here.
Rowe. Jane Shore, Act v.

UN-REPRIE'VABLE. } That cannot be UNREPRIE'VED. } taken back, held back, withheld, (sc. from punishment.)

Thou unreprieveable dunce! that thy formal bandstrings, thy ring, nor pomander cannot expiate for, dost thou tell me I should?

Beaum. & Fletch. The Elder Brother, Act ii. sc. 1.

Within me is a hell, and there the poyson
Is, as a fiend, confin'd to tyrannize,
On unrepreeuable condemned blood.
Shakespeare. King John, Act v. sc. 7.

— Or for ever sunk
Under yon boyling ocean, wrapt in chains
There to converse with everlasting groans,
Unrespited, unpitied, unrepreevd,
Ages of hopeless end; this would be worse.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ii.

UN-REPROA'CHABLE. } See IRREPROACH-UNREPROA'CHED. } ABLE. That cannot be charged with any fault or crime.

Let the same never trouble us, but contrariwise cheere up our hearts and make us glad in regard of our own liberty, the purenesse of our life and innocency unreproachable.
Holland. Plutarch, p. 201.

Sir John Hotham, unreproached, uncurs'd by any imprecation of mine, pays his head.—King Charles.

And we must comfort ourselves, that the fault is not on our side; take care to continue still equally unreproachable.
Secker, vol. iii. Ser. 9.

UN-REPRO'VABLE. } That cannot be re-UNREPRO'VED. } jected or disallowed; cannot be condemned, blamed, reprehended, reprimanded.

And in my selfe this covenaut made I tho,
That right such as ye felten wele or wo,
As ferforth as it in my power lay,
Unreprovable unto my wifehood aye,
The same would I felen, life or death.
Chaucer. Legend of Cleopatra.

The Germanes and the French men ded myghtely resyst this decre by the stronge authorityes of Christ and of Paule, and by the unreprovable examples of the apostles and other holy fathers in the prymatyue church.
Bale. English Volaries, pt. ii.

Those objections, which have beene made by many seeming wise, and the impediments likely to arise, as they have supposed, are best answered by the unreproved witness of those men's actions.—Hakluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 684.

Being oft times called judicially to his answer, and to render an account of his government and administration in a free city, and governed by a popular state, he was also found innocent and unreproveable.
Holland. Plutarch, p. 771.

Drusus once gone, Germanicus' three sons
Would clog my way; whose guards have too much faith
To be corrupted; and their mother known
Of too, too unreproved a chastity
To be attempted, as light Livia was.
B. Jonson. Sejanus, Act ii. sc. 2.

The antique world, in his first flourishing youth,
Found no defect in his Creator's grace;
But with glad thanks, and unreproved truth
The gifts of soueraine bountie did embrace.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 7.

UN-REQUE/STED. Not asked or sought for; besought, intreated, petitioned, solicited.

The centurion comes to him for a servant, the ruler for a son, Jarius for a daughter, the neighbours for a paralytic; here he seeks up the patient, and offers the cure unrequested.—Bp. Hall. Cont. The Widows Sonne raised.

Without this [speech] no person would have more knowledge of any thing than he could attain of himself; or more assistance in distress from his neighbour, than mere conjecture would direct him to think needful, and unrequested goodness incline him to bestow.—Secker, vol. iii. Ser. 7.

UN-REQUIRED. } Not sought, or de-UNRE/QUISITE. } manded. See UNRE-QUESTED.

Let him take up his crosse, as his free burden, free, in respect of his heart, not in respect of his hand; so free, that he shall willingly undergoe it, when it is laid upon him; not so free as that he shall lay it upon himselfe, unrequired.—Bp. Hall. Cont. The Crucifixion.

And (Isa. vii. 10—13.) it is observable to this purpose, that clearest promise of the virgin's son is given, not only unrequired, but being refused by that profane king, Ahaz. Leighton. Com. on 1 Peter, c. 2.

Vnto the complete forme of church-politie much may be requisite which the scripture teacheth not, and much which it hath taught, become unrequisite, sometime because wee need not vse it, sometimes also because wee cannot. Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, b. iii. § 11.

UN-REQUI/TABLE. } That cannot be re-UNREQUI/TED. } paid, rewarded, recompensed.

Yet if, as some will have it, all mediocrity of folly is foolish, and because an unrequitable evil may ensue, an indifferent convenience must be omitted; we shall not urge such representments. Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. v. c. 21.

Where is that man that can challenge God to be in his debt? who can ever say, Lord, this favour I did to the least of thine, unrequited?—Bp. Hall. Cont. Zacheus.

So unrequitable is God's love, and so insolvent are we, that that love vastly improves the benefit, by which we alone might have pretended to some ability of retribution. Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 274.

— Though branch and leaf
Are stamp'd with an eternal grief,
Like early unrequited love. Byron. Bride of Abydos, c. 2.

UN-RESEAR/CHABLE. That cannot be searched, examined, investigated.

Which hys hygge goodnes and unresercheable wisdom dothe dyuers tymes, for moe causes then menne haue the wytte to spy.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 591.

UN-RESENTED. Not without feelings or sensations, or sentiments in return, (sc. feelings of anger, indignation.)

One may tell another he drinks, blasphemes, and it may pass unresented; but to say he lies, though but in jest, is an affront that nothing but blood can expiate. Spectator, No. 99.

Alv. Nor have I more to say to you than this, that you must not think so daring an affront to my family can go long unresented.—Vanburgh. The Mistake, Act iii. sc. 1.

UN-RESERVED. } Not kept or held back;
UNRESE/RVEDLY. } not restrained, or re-UNRE/SERVE, n. } stricted.

And for that purpose the said Sir Thomas Wyatt and Hobby shall most heartily desire his majesty, that for avoiding of details, which be always suspicious, he will send to my lady regent his sister full and unreserved power to conclude the same upon reasonable conditions, &c. Henry VIII. to Wyatt, App. § 17.

The tenderness and unreservedness of his love, made him think those his friends or enemies, that were so to God. Boyle.

John's was a life of austerity; his [Jesus] more free and unreserved; but both gave equal offence. Gilpin, vol. iv. Ser. 20.

— I will not, ent'ring here,
Stand in Achilles' sight; immortal pow'rs
May not so unreservedly indulge Creatures of mortal kind.—Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. xxiv.

With these he [Dr. Bathurst] lived in the freedom of social unreserve, tempering the rigour of an authoritative character with the affability of a companion, and the graces of an agreeable conversation. Warton. Life of Bathurst, p. 86.

If other princes forswore the good occasions offered, and suffer him to adde this empire to the rest, which by farre exceedeth all the rest; if his golde now indanger vs, hee will then be unresistible.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 635.

But he was streightwaies taken from the same sir Denise by other that came in the meane season, better provided [beelike] of strength, and lead him awaie unresisted. Holinshed. Chronycles of England. Edw. III. an. 1356.

What though he have the power to possess ye,
To pluck your maiden honour, and then slight ye,
By custom unresistible to enjoy you.
Beaum. & Fletch. Custom of the Country, Act i.

How do they [dumb creatures] bear our stripes with a trembling unresistance?—Bp. Hall. Soliloquies, § 66.

We have by our evil customs given hostages to the devil, never to stir from the enemy's quarter; and this is the greatest bondage that is imaginable, the bondage of conquered, wounded, unresisting people. Bp. Taylor, vol. i. Ser. 20.

These [corporeal admissions] pass unresistedly thorough the pores of all solid bodies, and even glass itself, which neither the subtillest odours, nor electrical exhalations are observed to do.—Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 685.

Ev'n tho' th' offence they seemingly digest,
Revenge, like embers, rak'd within their breast,
Bursts forth in flames; whose unresisted pow'r
Will seize th' unwary wretch and soon devour.
Dryden. Homer. Iliad, b. i.

Till floating broad upon his breathless side,
And to his fate abandon'd, to the shore
You gaily drag your unresisting prize.—Thomson. Spring.

They hope by depressing our minds with a despair of our means and resources, to drive us, trembling and unresisting, into the toils of our enemies.—Burke. Regicide Peace, Let. 3.

UN-RESOLVABLE. } See INSOLUBLE, and UNRESOLVED. } IRRESOLUTE. That UNRESOLVEDNESS. } cannot be disjoined or UNRESOLVING. } disunited, loosened or relaxed; loosened or freed; made clear or plain.

Unresolved, (met.)—
Not determined or decided; not constant or settled.

Thier. I have stood Silent thus long, and am yet unresolved
Whether to entertaine thee on my sword,
As fits a parricide of a mother's honor;
Or whether being a prince, I yet stand bound (Though thou art here condemn'd) to give thee hearing Before I execute.
Beaum. & Fletch. Thierry & Theodoret, Act ii.

If in the midst of this unresolvedness and hesitancy of mind, our Saviour should in any one answer of his have sent forth that majesty and strength of conviction, that he could easily, and upon former occasions have done, certainly the Jews must have expected the coming of another deputy, to have been the executioner of this purpose. Hale. Cont. vol. i. Of the Knowledge of Christ Crucified.

For to confesse in plaine truth mine ignorance, or rather unresolved doubt herein I can not satisfie my selfe with any thing that I haue read. Holinshed. Chronycles of England. Hen. II. an. 1176.

For could any thing be imagined more monstrous, and by all rational principles unresolvable, than upon a most rich and fertile soil, fenced and enclosed against all injuries from abroad, dressed and manured by the finger of God himself, and watered with all the influences of a propitious heaven? I say could any thing be more prodigious than in such a place to see a fig tree bear a thistle, or the fruit of the bramble load the branches of the vine? South, vol. v. Ser. 9.

By no one measure bound, her numbers range,
And unresolved in choice, delight in change;
Her songs to no distinguish'd fame aspire,
For, now, she tries the reed, anon, attempts the lyre.
Congreve. Epistle to Lord Halifax.

Conquest and triumph, now, are mine, no more;
Nor will I Victory in camps adore;
For, lingering there, in long suspense she stands,
Shifting the prize in unresolving hands.
Id. Mourning Bride, Act i.

Prejudice is of ready application in the emergency; it previously engages the mind in a steady course of wisdom and virtue, and does not leave the man hesitating in the moment of decision, sceptical, puzzled and unresolved. Burke. On the French Revolution.

It was a fault, she durst presume to question our Saviour of some kinde of unrespect to her toyle, Lord dost thou not care?—Id. Ib. Martha & Mary.

"Which wounds, with grief, poor unrespected zeal,
When grace holds no proportion in the parts."
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. ii.

Celestial fire, and unrespecting pow'rs!
Which pity not the wounds made by their might;
Show'd in these lines the work of careful hours,
The sacrifice here offer'd to her sight. Id. Son. 56.

Rich. I will converse with iron-witted fooles,
And unrespective boyes.
Shakespeare. Rich. III. Act iv. sc. 2.

How unjustly hath the presumption of blasphemous cavillers been wont to cast the envy of their condemnation meely upon the absolute will of an unrespective power, as if the damnation of the creature where onely of a supream will, not of a just merit.—Bp. Hall. Select Thoughts.

Full sixty years the world has been her trade,
The wisest fool much time has ever made.
From loveless youth to unrespected age,
No passion gratify'd except her rage.
Pope. Moral Essays, Ep. 2.

But where gay palaces in pomp arise,
And gilded theatres invade the skies,
Nations shall wake, whose unrespected bones
Support the pride of their luxurious sons.
Young. The Last Day, b. ii.

UN-RE/SPITED. Not stayed, or delayed, postponed, prolonged, or prorogued.

— Or for ever sunk
Under yon boyling ocean, wrapt in chains;
There to converse with everlasting groans,
Unrespited, unpitied, unreprieved.
Ages of hopeless end; this would be worse.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ii.

— Some o'erturn'd
In the fierce shock, lie gasping, and expire, Trampled by fiery coursers: Horror thus,
And wild uproar, and desolation, reign'd Unrespited. J. Philips. Cider, b. ii.

Vnto unresty, both rest and remedy,
Fruitful to all tho' that in her afflie.
Imputed to Chaucer. A Ballade in Com. of our Lady.

And sometime be we suffered for to seke
Upon a man, and don his soale unreste
And not his body.—Id. The Freres Tale, v. 7078.

But when I made my count, with how great care of mind
And hearts unrest, thus I had sought so wasteful fruit to find;
Then was I stricken straight with that abused fire,
To glory in that goodly wit that compass'd my desire.
Surrey. Paraphrase on Ecclesiastes, c. 2.

He shal with his peaceable order (if it wer observed) bryng the worlde in that case, yt good peaceable folke that fayn wold liue in peace, should not for suche inquiete & unrest-full wretches without some ruffle liue in peace long.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 961.

Whiche put the said Vortiger to great unrestfulness, & y^e more for that, yt he wist nat, nor knew nat in whom he myght put his trust & cofydence in. Fabyan. Chronycle, c. 82.

There looking forth, she in her hart did find
Many vaine fancies, working her unrest;
And sent her winged thoughts, more swift then wind,
To beare vnto her loue the message of her mind.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 6.

And let unresting Charity believe
That then thy oath with thy intent agreed.
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. i.

—Th' affront we have met here
We'll think upon hereafter, 'twere unfit
To cherish any thought to breed unrest,
Or to our selves, or to our nuptial feast.

Beaum. & Fletcher. Little French Lawyer, Act i.

But ay the ruthless driver goads them on,
And ay of barking dogs the bitter throng
Makes them renew their unmelodious moan;
Ne ever find they rest from their unresting fone.

Thomson. Castle of Indolence, c. 2.

But fover'd in her sleep she seems,
And red her cheek with troubled dreams,
And mutters she in her unrest
A name she dare not breathe by day.

Byron. Parisina, s. 5.

UN-RESTORED. Not reinstated, replaced or resumed, not recovered or renewed.

—Then does he say, he lent me
Some shipping unrestor'd.

Shakespeare. Anthony & Cleopatra, Act iii. sc. 6.

Fly, ye prophane! If not draw near with awe,
Receive the blessing, and adore the chance,
That threw in this Bethesda your disease;
If unrestor'd by this, despair your cure.

Young. Complaint, Night 2.

The spouseless Adriatic mourns her lord;
And, annual marriage now no more renew'd,
The Bucentaur lies rotting unrestored,
Neglected garment of her widowhood!

Byron. Childe Harold, c. 4.

UN-RESTRAINED. Not repressed, withheld, or held in, confined or limited.

It was natural compassion which caused them, where they saw undeserved miseries, there to pour forth unre- strained tears.

Hooker. A Remedy against Sorrow & Feare.

So should, with an unrestrained exuberance, both our charity to men, and our gratitude to God, abound.

Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 9.

The emulation which an unrestrained competition never fails to excite, appears to have brought that talent to a very high degree of perfection.

Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. v. c. 1.

UN-RETA'RD. Not delayed, hindered or impeded.

There be some that are forward and bold; and these will do every little thing easily; I mean that is hardby and next them, which they will utter unretarded without any shamefastness.—B. Jonson. Discoveries.

Then go on in your virtuous progress, unretarded by those who say that our fears are groundless, or by those who laugh at your virtuous solicitude.

Knox. Letter to a Young Nobleman.

UN-RETRA'CTED. Not drawn back or withdrawn; not recalled.

The penitence of the criminal may have numbered him amongst the saints, when our unretracted uncharitableness may send us to unquenchable flames.

Government of the Tongue.

Nothing but plain malevolence can justify disunion;
malevolence shewn in a single, outward act, unretracted, or in habitual ill-nature.—Collier. On Friendship.

UN-RETU'RNED. } Not given back, in UNRETU'RNING. } response, in reply, in reciprocation.

Not rendered back, not moved or come back.

And [I] do hereby invite all such as have suffered injuries and affronts, that are not to be redressed by the common laws of this land, whether they be short bows, cold salutations, supercilious looks, unreturned smiles, distant behaviour, or forced familiarity.—Tatler, No. 250.

And Ardennes waves above them her green leaves,
Dewy with nature's tear-drops, as they pass,
Grieving, if aught inanimate e'er grieves,
Over the unreturning brave,—alas!

Byron. Childe Harold, c. 3.

UN-REVEALED. Not discovered or uncovered, disclosed, shewn openly or manifestly.

If there were any thing that was peradventure such, that in the church sometime was doubted and reputed for un- revealed and unknown.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 167.

Ye realms, yet unreveald to human sight,
Ye gods, who rule the regions of the night,
Ye gliding ghosts, permit me to relate
The mystic wonders of your silent state.

Dryden. Virgil. Æneis, b. vi.

UN-REVEN'GED. Not pained or punished in retaliation of wrong; in resentment of wrong or injury; with malice or malignity.

Let not his loue, let not his restlesse spright
Be unreuegd, that calls to you aboue
Frō wandring Stygian shores, where it doth endless moue.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 4.

Mast. 'Tis not to dye sir,
But to dye unreuegd, that staggers me:
For were your ends serv'd, and our countrey free,
We would fall willing sacrifices.

Beaum. & Fletcher. The Double Marriage, Act iv.

Did they therefore suffer the death of one poor woman to be unreuegd?

Milton. Defence of the People of England, c. 5.

But though we gratified our curiosity at their expence, the injury did not go unreuegd; for thousands immediately threw themselves upon us, and gave us intolerable pain with their stings.—Cook. First Voyage, b. iii. c. 6.

UN-REVENUED. Having no revenue or income.

But he that would mould a modern bishop into a primitive, must yield him to be elected by the popular voice, undiocest, unreuegd, unlorded, and leave him nothing
but brotherly equality, matchless temperance, frequent fasting, incessant prayer and preaching, continual watchings and labours in his ministry.

Milton. Of Reformation in England, b. i.

Fabyan. Chronycle, c. 194.

[They] toke ye sayde bysshoppe, the xlii. day of Octobre, and hym with ii. of his howsholde esquieres, behedyd unre- uerelly at ye stadard in Weschepe.—Id. Ib. an. 1324.

Moreouer he forbad the crosse to be grauen or painted vpon anie pauement, least anie man should unreuerently
tread vpon it.—Holinshed. Historie of Scotland. Conuall.

O pardon me dear father for all the idle and unreuerent words that I have spoke in idle moods to you.

Beaum. & Fletcher. A King & no King, Act v.

—Although
We are but young, no action shall forfeit
Our royal privilege, or encourage any Too unreuerent boldness.

Beaum. & Fletcher. The Coronation, Act ii.

I did unreverently to blame the gods,
Who wake for thee, though thou snore to thy self.

B. Jonson. Catiline, Act iii. sc. 2.

UN-REVE'RSED. Not turned back or returned; not changed or altered to the contrary.

Pro. I, I: and she hath offered to the doome (Which un-reuers stands in effectually force)
A sea of melting pearle, which some call teares.

Shakespeare. Two Gentlemen of Verona, Act iii. sc. 1.

UN-REVO'KED. Not recalled, repealed, countermanded.

Hear all ye angels, progenie of light,
Thrones, dominations, principedoms, vertues, powers,
Hear my decree, which unrevok't shall stand.

Milton. Paradise Lost, b. v.

UN-REWA'RD. } Not remunerated, re-UNREWA'RDING. } paid, requited, recompensed.

Petill. I am disgrac'd, my service
Slighted, and unrewarded by the general,
My hopes left wild and naked.

Beaum. & Fletcher. Bonduca, Act v. sc. 3.

He that dies, dies for that which is not; and in the very little present he finds it an unrewarding interest, to walk seven days together over sharp stones only to see a place from whence he must come back in an hour.

Bp. Taylor, vol. i. Ser. 19.

UN-RID'DLE, v. } To remove, to free from, UNRID'DLER. } involution, entanglement or perplexity.

Many justly admired, that either a bishop could be so small in person, or a child so great in clothes; though since all is unriddled.—Fuller. Worthies. Wiltshire.

It is excellent to hear a man discourse the hidden things of nature, and unriddle the perplexities of human notices and mistakes.—Bp. Taylor, vol. i. Ser. 11.

Ye safe unriddlers of the stars, pray tell,
By what name shall I stamp my miracle?

Lovelace. Lucasta. To Mr. E. R.

Lys. Still more and more mysterious: but I have gain'd one of her women that shall unriddle it.

Dryden. Secret-Love, Act i. sc. 3.

Por. Placidius here
And fair Valeria, new depriv'd of breath?
Who can unriddle this dumb show of death?

Id. Tyrannick Love, Act v.

This design once admitted, unriddles the mystery of the whole conduct of the emperor's ministers with regard to France.—Burke. On the French Revolution.

UN-RIDI'CULOUS. Not causing or exciting to laughter, to mockery, jeering or raillery.

The relation of Lucilius, and now become common, concerning Crassus the grandfather of Marcus the wealthy Romane, that he never laughed but once in all his life, and that was at an asse eating thistles, is something strange.
For, if an indifferent and unridiculous object could draw his habitual austerenness unto a smile; it will be hard to believe he could with perpetuity resist the proper motives thereof.—Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. vii. c. 16.

UN-RIFLED. Not reaved or robbed, spoiled, pillaged or plundered.

Indeed they cannot longer dwell upon the estate, but that remains unrifled, and descends upon their heir, and all is well till the next generation.—Bp. Taylor, vol. i. Ser. 19.

UN-RIG, v. To take away, to strip off, to divest of—the rigging, clothing, or covering.

But it [the shrine of Castor] was lin'd with a strong guard of souldiers, who had an eye to their god as well as their moneys, lest he should be stoln, or unrigg'd as Mars was.

Dryden. Juvenal, Sat. 14. Note 24.

Tell him, that, charg'd with deluges of rain,
Orion rages on the wintry main;
That still unrigg'd his shatter'd vessels lie,
Nor can his fleet endure so rough a sky.

Pitt. Virgil. Æneid, b. iv.

It was with infinite sorrow I heard that in taking the king of France's fleet in trust, we instantly unrigged and dismasted the ships, instead of keeping them in a condition to escape in case of disaster.

Burke. On the Policy of the Allies, (1793.)

UN-RIGHT. } Unright is used by our UNRI'GHTFUL. } old authors adjectively, UNRI'GHTFULLY. } adverbially, substantively,
UNRI'GHTFULNESS. } and verbally; equiva-UNRI'GHTEUS. } lent to—
UNRI'GHTEUSLY. } Wrong, unjust, wrong-UNRI'GHTEUSNESS. } ly, unjustly. Wrong, in-UNRI'GHTWISENESS. } justice. To do wrong, to injure.

Unrightwise, or (wise corrupted into eous) vn- righteous, is—not rightly wise, just, or pious;
not holy or godly;—or unjust, impious, unholy, ungodly.

He nom verst myd vnrygt, & brogte that lond in wo.

R. Gloucester, p. 196.

And seide he myghte me nat a soile. bote ich sulver hadde
To festitue resonabliche. for al unryghtful wynnynge.

Piers Plouhman, p. 202.

And some to ryde and reckevere. that unryghtfulliche was wonne.

Id. p. 378.

For the wraththe of God is schewid fro heuene on al unpatee & wickidnesse of tho men that with holden the treuthe of God in unrightwysnesse.—Wiclif. Romayns, c. 1.

For the wrath of God appeareth frō heauen agaynst al vngodlynes and an vnryghteousnes of men whyche wytholde the truthe in vnryghteousnes.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

But these ben as unresounable beestis kyndeli into taking and into deeth, blasfemyng in these thingis that thei known not, and schulen perische in her corrupcioun and resseyue the hire of unrightwysnesse.—Wiclif. 2 Pet. c. 2.

But these as brute beastes, naturally made to be takē and destroyed, speake euil, of that they know not, and shal perish through their owne destruction, and receaue the rewards of vnryghteousnes.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

He that spekith of hymself, sekith his owne glorie: but he that sekith the glorie of him that sente him, is sothfast, and unrightwysnesse is not in him.—Wiclif. Jon, c. 7.

He that speaketh of him self, seketh his owne prayse.
But he that seketh his prayse that sent him, the same is true, and no vnrightwysnesse is in him.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

As king royall, he [Phebus] rode vpon a chare,
The which Pheton sometime gided vnright,
The brightnesse of his face whan it was bare,
Non might behold, for persing of his sight.
Chaucer. Testament of Creseide.

Right so, though that her forme were absent,
The pleasaunce of her forme was present,
But nathelesse, nat pleasaunce, but delite,
Or an vnrightfull talent with despite,
"For maugre her, she shall my lemman be."
Id. Legende of Lucrece.

And eke the same Plato liuyng, his maister Socrates, deserued victorie of vnrightfull death in my presence.
Id. Boecius, b. i.

And folke of wicked maners, sitten in high chaires, and ennoyng folke treden (and that vnrightfully) on the neckes of holy men.—Id. Ib.

Wherefore I saie, euery wight hauynge this rightwise-nesse, rightfull is, and yet therefore I feele not in my conscience, that to all rightfull is behoten the blisse euerlasting, but to hem that been rightfull, withouten any vnrightfulness.—Id. Testament of Loue, b. iii.

Yet rather than he shulde spede,
I wolde suche tales sprede
To my ladie, if that I might,
That I shuld all his loue vnright.—Gower. Con. A. b. ii.

— All though it were vnright
There is no peine for him dight.
Id. Ib.

— Better it were to redresse
At home the great vnrightwiseness,
Than for to warre in strange place,
And lese at home her owne grace.
Id. Ib. b. vi.

He was so faithfull and iust that no fawlt or vnright coude thei fynde in him.—Joye. Exposition of Daniel, c. 12.

[John] did repell the false suspicion that thei had touching himself, whiche might haue hindered the glorie of Christe among the people: & boldly contemning the glorie of an vnrightfull title, did confesse y^t he was not Messias (as many thought he had been).—Udal. John, c. 1.

Which was not only entended by wisdom, but also set on with speede, & so entred into a due considering of al states, that none should haue iust cause to grudge against the other, when as euery thing rightfully had, nothing coude be but vnrightfully grudged at.
Sir J. Cheeke. The Hurt of Sedition.

All the chylde of men are vnryghteous, and all their wurkes are wycked, and there is no truthe in them.
Bale. Apologie, fol. 58.

But that euery thing that we haue done, as farre foorth as it hath proceded onely of our selues, is more worthy to be called synne and vnryghteousnes, than any acte of vertue and godlyness.—Fisher. A Godlie Treatise, &c.

For what in most English writers vseth to be loose, and as it were vnright, in this author is well grounded, finely framed, and stronglie trussed vp together.
Spenser. Shepheard's Calender, Epistle.

He shall thinke, that thou which know'st the way
To plant vnrightfull kings, wilt know againe,
Being ne're so little vrg'd another way,
To pluck him headlong from the vsurped thrones.
Shakespeare. Rich. II. Act v. sc. 1.

Octavius here lept into his room,
And it vsurped by vnrighteous doome.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 10.

Or else it [the soul] sits repining, even to atheism, finding itself hardly dealt with, but misdeeming the cause to be in God's law, which is in man's unrighteous ignorance.
Milton. Doct. & Dis. of Divorce, b. i. c. 9.

As the inherent unrighteousness consequent upon Adam's sin is not included in God's condemning, so neither is the inherent righteousness proceeding from our Saviour's obedience contained in God's justifying men.
Barrow, vol. ii. Ser. 5.

And whether they do not by false imputations, and cruel mockings, the only weapons which they have at command, persecute most unrighteously, (without any pretence of conscience to oblige them to it) both Christian faith, and natural piety, without sparing in several instances even moral virtue.—Secker, vol. iii. Ser. 18.

UN-RINGED. Not having a ring, (sc. through the nose.)

Be fore'd t' impeach a broken hedge,
And pigs unring'd at vis. franc. pledge?
Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 2.

UN-RIOTED. Not disorderly, tumultuous, or licentious, or luxurious (to excess).

A chast unriotted house, and neuer stain'd
With her lord's fortune; to all lands remain'd
His name renown'd; which much auailed Rome.
May. Lucan. Pharsalia, b. ix.

UN-RIP, v. Un, negative, is here improper.
It may be as in un-less, the A. S. On,—though the verb on-hrypp-an, (to enrip), is not found in our
A. S. lexicons; and thus to un-rip, will be—

To rip into; to tear, cut, or slit into; and, consequently, to lay open or bare.

And of federbeddes ryped the tekys & helde theym in the wynde, y^t the fethers myght be blowyn away and loste for euer, & vnryppyd the howse in dyuers places that the rayne and other wederynge myght entre.
Fabyan. Chronycle. Philip IV. an. 20.

This told, yet more I urge him to reveal,
To lose no time, whilst I unrip'd the seal.
Drayton. Henry II. to Rosamond.

— Now, though thy breath doth strike me dead (Which know it may) I have unript my breast.
Beaum. & Fletch. Philaster, Act i.

UN-RIPE. } Not fit for reaping, gathering;
UNRI'PENESS. } not mature.
UNRI'PENED. }

And the steris of heuene felden down on the erthe, as a fige tree sendith hise unripe figs, whanne it is moued of a greet wynd.—Wiclif. Apocalips, c. 6.

That same stemme of the Judaical fig-tree brought furthe grosse, vnsauourie, & unripe people.—Udal. Luke, c. 19.

I, whose vnriper yeeres are yet vnfit
For thing of weight, or worke of greater care,
Do spend my dayes, and bend my carelesse wit
To saluage chace.—Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 2.

Ha. Th' art a dissembling boy,
Some one hath sent thee to mock me; though my anger
Stoop not to punish thy green years unripe
For malice.—Beaum. & Fletch. Night-Walker, Act iv.

The ripenesse, or unripenesse of the occasion (as we said) must ever be well weighed; and generally, it is good, to commit the beginnings of all great actions, to Argos with his hundred eyes: and the ends to Briareus with his hundred hands; first to watch, and then to speed.
Bacon. Ess. Of Delayses.

The sun that rolls his chariot o'er our heads Works up more fire and colour in their cheeks.
Were you with these, my prince, you'd soon forget
The pale unripen'd beauties of the north.
Addison. Cato, Act i. sc. 4.

UN-RIVALLED. Not emulated, having no competitor; not matched, having no match or equal.

What lofty looks th' unrival'd monarch bears!
How all the tyrant in his face appears!
What sullen fury clouds his scornful brow!
Gods! how his eyes with threat'ning ardour glow!
Pope. Statius. Thebaid, b. i.

Had Aquinas been born two centuries later, there is scarcely any work which we might not have expected, in polite and solid literature, from such activity, combined with force, subtilty, and penetration unrivalled.
Knox. Ess. No. 65.

UN-RIVED, i. e. Un-reaved or En-reaved, (qv.)

Yet it pleased God to calme the storme, and wee vnriued our sheates, tackes, halliers, and other ropes, and mored our ship to the trees close by the rockes.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 847.

UN-RIVET, v. To remove or destroy that which rivets or clenches firmly:—in armour, the points by which the arms are fitted and fastened, (Minshew.)

Their cuirates are unriveted with blows,
With horrid wounds their breasts and faces slasht;
There drops a cheek, and there falls off a nose,
And in one's face his fellow's brains are dasht.
Drayton. Battle of Agincourt.

No man can blame a captive if he would be free; and if he may untie the knot of a cord wherewith he was bound;
why may he not unrivet, or grate an iron wherewith he is fettered.—Bp. Hall. Cases of Conscience, Dec. 2. Case 5.

UN-ROASTED. Not burnt, parched, by heat; heat of fire.

Unso'd, i. e. unseethed,—not seethed or boiled.

The plentie wherof [lambes] was so abundant, that the worst in the ship thought scorne not onely of mutton, but also of sodden lambe, which they disdain'd to eate unroasted.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 511.

Lam. Whom should we consume thus, and starve,
Have nothing to relieve us;
And she live there that bred all our miseries.
Unrosted, or unso'd?
Beaum. & Fletch. Sea-Voyage, Act iii.

UN-ROBBED. Not reaved or bereaved, deprived, plundered, despoiled.

Although you haue set so many eyes to looke there for your benefit, that you escape vnrobbed of the slaues, a man cannot choose but that he must be robbed of the officers of the custome house.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. p. 238.

Take away kings, princes, rulers, magistrates, judges, and such estates of God's order, no man shall ride or goe by the high way vnrobbed, no man shall sleepe in his owne house or bedde unkill'd.—Homilies. Exhortation to Good Order.

He is, and ever hath been, so reserved in bestowing those ready jewels of honour (the only treasure he is or can be unrob'd of), that it is not any way probable he should squander one away for a letter.
Evelyn. News from Brussels unmasked.

UN-ROBE, v. To divest, to unclothe, to undress.

When on their exit, souls are bid unrobe,
Toss fortune back her tinsel, and her plume,
And drop this mask of flesh behind the scene.
Young. The Complaint, Night 4.

UN-ROLL, v. To turn or fold back; to evolve; to lay open.

Howbeit, like a gode hardy knight and of good coforte [he] rested on the felde, and caused his banerr to be vnrolled, to drawe togyder his people.
Berners. Froisart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 241.

If I make not this cheat bring out another, and the sheer-ers proue sheepe, let me be vnrold, and my name put in the booke of vertue.—Shakespeare. Winter's Tale, Act iv. sc. 2.

What signifies my deadly standing eye,
My silence and my cloudie melancholie,
My fleecce of woolly hair that now vncurles
Euen as an adder when she doth vnroull
To do some fatall execution?
Id. Titus Andronicus, Act ii. sc. 3.

Serap. O horror, horror!
Ægypt has been; our latest hour is come:
The queen of nations from her ancient seat,
Is sunk for ever in the dark abyss:
Time has unroul'd her glories to the last,
And now clos'd up the volume.
Dryden. All for Love, Act v.

In history, a great volume is unrolled for our instruction, drawing the materials of future wisdom from the past errors and infirmities of mankind.
Burke. On the French Revolution.

UN-ROOF, v. The first folio reads unroost.
Rowe altered to unroof.
To take off the roof or covering.

— Sdeath,
The rabble should haue first vnrooft the city
Ere so peruayl'd with me.
Shakespeare. Coriolanus, Act i. sc. 1.

UN-ROOSTED. Removed from the roost or place of rest.

Thou dotard, thou art woman-tyr'd: vnroosted
By thy dame Partlet heere.
Shakespeare. Winter's Tale, Act ii. sc. 3.

But I must lose no time; the pass is free;
Th' unroosted fiends have quitted this abode.
Dryden. King Arthur, Act iv. sc. 1.

UN-ROOT. To tear up from the roots; to eradicate.

— Thorow their phalanx
Strike, as thou strik'st a proud tree; shake their bodies,
Make their strengths totter, and their topless fortunes
Unroot and reel to ruine.
Beaum. & Fletch. Bonduca, Act iii. sc. 2.

— No doubt his heart,
Though sad, retains a noble will to meet it,
His love was firm to you, and cannot be Unrooted with one storme.—Id. The Coronation, Act iv.

Some strike from flints the sparkling seeds of flame;
Some storm the coverts of the savage game;
To feed the fires, unroot the standing woods,
And show with joy the new-discover'd floods.
Pitt. Virgil. Æneid, b. vi.

UN-RO'TTEN. Not putrefied, corrupted.

But since friends grow not thick on every bough,
Nor every friend unrotten at the core;
First, on thy friend, deliberate with thyself.
Young. The Complaint, Night 2.

UN-ROUGH. Without the roughness of beards; unbearded.

— I haue a file
Of all the gentry; there is Seywards sonne,
And many vnruffe youths, that euen now
Protest their first of manhood.
Shakespeare. Macbeth, Act v. sc. 2.

UN-RO'UNDED. Not formed in a circle, orb, or globe or sphere.

Which, negligently left unrounded, look Like many angled figures in the book
Of some dread conjurer. Donne, Elegy 12.

Thus in a stupid military state,
The pen and pencil find an equal fate,
Flat faces, such as wou'd disgrace a skreen,
Such as in Bantam's embassy were seen,
Unrais'd, unrounded, were the rude delight
Of brutal nations, only born to fight.
Dryden. To Sir G. Kneller.

UN-ROUTED. Not defeated, dispersed, put to flight.

Of all the Persian forces, one strong squadron,
In which Cosroe in his own person fights, Stands firm and yet unrouted; break thorow that,
The day, and all is ours.
Beaum. & Fletch. Prophetess, Act iv. sc. 5.

UN-RO'YAL. Not regal or kingly.

His envious counsellor, now hated them so much the more, as he foresaw their happiness in having such, and so fortunate masters, and sent them with unroyal reproaches to Musidorus and Pyrocles, as if they had done traiterously, and not heroically.—Sidney. Arcadia, b. ii.

UN-RUDE. Un seems here to be used as in unrip, (A. S. On.) augmentatively and not negatively, unless we are to take the speaker and not poet as authority.

Because my husband put him into a few rags, and now see how the unrude rascal backbites him!
B. Jonson. Every Man out of his Humour, Act iv. sc. 1.

They have need o'mending: unrude people they are, your courtiers.—Id. Masque of Christmas.

UN-RUFFLE, v. To smoothen, to level or become level or smooth, calm, tranquil.

— Where e're he guides
His finny coursers, and in triumph rides,
The waves unruffle and the sea subsides.
Dryden. Virgil. Æneis, b. i.

That gentleman perceiving that after they had dispatched four or five bottles of Frontinac, the Mandarin still continued unruffled, he ordered a bottle of citron water to be brought up, which the Chinese seemed much to relish.
Anson. Voyages, b. iii. c. 8.

The sea was at this time quite unruffled; and the sun, shining bright, exposed the various sorts of coral, in the most beautiful order.—Cook. Third Voyage, b. ii. c. 3.

UN-RU'INED. } Not fallen, destroyed or UNRU'INABLE. } demolished.
UNRU'INATED. }

Where (say you) are those proud towers of their universal hierarchy? one in Lambeth, another in Fulham: and wheresoever a pontifical prelate is, or his chancellor, commissarie, or other subordinate, there is a tower of Babel unruinated.—Bp. Hall. An Apologie against Brownists, § 30.

But these you will prove unruinated towers of that Babel.
Id. Ib.

Could thou think that a cottage not too strongly built, and standing so bleak in the very mouth of the winds, could for any long time hold right and unreaved? Yea, dost thou not rather wonder that it hath out-stood so many blustering blasts, thus long, utterly unruined?
Id. Balm of Gilead, § 10.

May the unruinable world be but my portion, and the heaven of heavens my inheritance, which is built for an eternal mansion for the sons of God.
Watts. Remnants of Time, Ess. 9.

UN-RU'LED. } Not regulated, ordered,
UNRU'LY. } governed, tempered, mode-
UNRU'LILY. } rated, directed, commanded.
UNRU'LINESS. }
UNRU'LIMENT. }

Theyse unrulyd cōpany gatheryd vnto them great multitude of the cōmons.—Fabyan. Chronicle, p. 530.

Doe you vnderstande, you step-mothers that bee such, that your unruly ire and hate commeth but of the dreams of your owne follie. For why do not step-fathers haue their wiues children in like manner.
Vives. Instruc. of a Christian Woman, b. ii. c. 12.

Ye haue sent oute in the kinges name, against the kings wish, precepts of all kindes, and without commaundement, commaunded his subiectes, and unrulyly haue ruled, where ye listed to commaund.—Sir J. Cheeke. The Hurt of Sedition.

After riches, foloweth pryde and unrulines. And among unruly persones, oftentimes arise sectes, whiles neither will geue place vnto an other, but eche man thinketh hymselfe beste.—Udal. 1 Cor. The Argument.

[Aulus Atticus] being mounted on horsebacke (through his owne too much youthfull courage, and fierce unrulines of his horse) was carried into the middle throng of his enemies, and there slaine.
Holinshed. Historie of England, b. iv. c. 17.

But say that one bee so bold as to charge them with any untoward dealing; out they crie presently upon the poore patients, at them they raile with open mouth, they are found fault with for their unrulinesse, distemperature, wilfulness, and I know not what.
Holland. Plinie, b. xxix. c. 1.

They breaking forth with rude unruliment
From all fore parts of heauen, doe rage full sore
And tosse the deepes, and teare the firmament,
And all the world confound with wide vprore,
As if in stead therof, they Chaos would restore.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 9.

And when that plenty had pampered them into such an unrulines and rebellion, as soon followed it; yet still the justness of his government left them at a loss for an occasion.—South, vol. v. Ser. 2.

By our shunning to consider, we are so ill-natured to our selves, as to lengthen the sickness, we are so impatient of; which is in us as foolish, as it would be in a nice patient, after having been made to take a bitter, but a salutary potion, to send unseasonably for cordials and juleps to hinder the working of it, and so by such unrulines lose the benefit of the operation, and lengthen his pain and sickness.
Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 374.

Young men, like the spirited and unruly steed, require to be curbed and guided by a strong bridle.
Knox, vol. vi. Ser. 13.

UN-RUM'PLE, v. To remove or take away, the roughness, ruggedness, or unevenness.

Nor would I pass the soft acanthus o'er,
Ivy nor myrtle-trees that love the shore;
Nor daffodils, that late from earth's slow womb
Unrumple their swoln buds, and show their yellow bloom.
Addison. Virgil. Georgics, b. iv.

UN-SA'CKED. Not pillaged or plundered.

For lo! from yonder turrets yet unsack'd,
Your valiant fellows stand, your worth to see.
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. vi.

UN-SAD. } See SAD. Unsad is—UNSA'DDEN, v. } unsteady; consequentially, UNSA'DNESS. } fickle.
Unsadness, (Wiclif)—infirmity, or infirmness; consequentially, weakness (as in the Mod. Ver.)

For he witnesseth, that thou art a preeste withouten ende bi the ordre of Melchisedech: that preeuynge of the maundement bifore goynge is maad for the unsadnesse [infirmity] and unprofyt of it.—Wiclif. Ebrewis, c. 7.

O stormy peple, unsad, and ever untrewed,
And undiscrete, and changing as a fane,
Delighting ever in rombel that is newe,
For like the mone waxen ye and wane.
Chaucer. The Clerkes Tale, v. 8872.

Musick unsaddens the melancholy, quickens the dull, awaketh the drowy.
Whitlock. Manners of the English, p. 483.

UN-SA'DDLED. A. S. Un-ge-sadelad. Not seated or sat upon; not having the saddle or seat on, placed on.

In which repose it seemeth to take no small contentment and refreshing; like as draught horses, when they be out of their geeres, and hackneis unsaddled.
Holland. Plinie, b. xvii. c. 3.

Bel. Read that, and tell me so: or if thy spectacles be not easie,
Keep thy nose unsad'd, and ope thine ears;
I can speak thee the contents, I made 'em.
Beaum. & Fletch. Maid in the Mill, Act iv. sc. 2.

UN-SAFE. } Not removed from harm, ill,
UNSA'FELY. } or danger; not secure.
UNSA'FETY. }

The topik of traditions, after the consignment of the canon of scripture, was not only of little use in any thing, but false in many things, and therefore unsafe in all questions.—Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. ii. c. 3.

But if it [ostentation] be carried with decency and government, as with a natural, pleasant, and ingenuous fashion, or at times when it is mixed with some peril and unsafety, as in military persons, or at times when others are most envied.—Bacon. Advancement of Learning, b. ii.

But wiser men, perceiving the unsafety and vanity of these, and all external things, haue cast about for some higher course.—Leighton. Com. on 1 Peter, c. 3.

The bottom of this road is full of sharp pointed coral rocks, which, during four months of the year, that is from the middle of June to the middle of October, render it a very unsafe anchorage.—Anson. Voyages, b. iii. c. 2.

Where, ev'n to draw the picture of thy mind,
Is satyr on the most of humane kind:
Take it, while yet 'tis praise; before my rage
Unsafely just, break loose on this bad age.
Dryden. Eleonora.

UN-SA'ILABLE. That cannot be sailed over, glided, floated, swam over, in ship, on wings.

Cæsar departing thence runs forward right
Swifter then whelpe-rob'd tyger, or the flight
Of lightening ore Apulia, where the field
Vnplow'd no corne, but slothfull grasse does yeild.
And come to Cretan crookt Brundisium findes
The sea unsailable for dangerous windes.
May. Lucan. Pharsalia, b. v.

UN-SA'LTED. Not seasoned or savoured.

Touching their victuals, they eate good meate, but all unsalted, but they drye it, and afterward they broyle it, as well fish as fleshe.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 242.

Some one of whose tribe, rather than a king, I should take to be compiler of that unsalted and simonical prayer annex'd.—Milton. Answer to Eikon Basilike, § 14.

UN-SA'LVED. Not mollified, assuaged, relieved, aided, or helped.

Inclining rather to make this phantasm an expounder, or indeed a depraver of Saint Paul, than Saint Paul an examiner, and discoverer of this impostorship; nor caring how slightly they put off the verdict of holy text unsalv'd, that says plainly there be but two orders, so they maintain the reputation of their imaginary doctor that proclaims three.—Milton. Of Prelatical Episcopacy.

UN-SALU'TED. Not hailed, welcomed, greeted.

Cloe. How have I wrong'd the times, or men, that thus After this holy feast I pass unknown
And unsaluted? 'twas not wont to be Thus frozen with the younger companie
Of jolly shepherds.
Beaum. & Fletch. Faithful Shepherdess, Act ii.

I shall not leave you unsaluted long Either by pen or person.
Id. Maid in the Mill, Act ii. sc. 2.

The ambassador saluted them, but by them unsaluted pass'd on with his head cover'd.
Milton. Hist. of Muscovia, c. 5.

UN-SA'NCTIFIED. Not hallowed or made holy; not consecrated; not made or kept pure or inviolate.

Some few themselves in sanctuaries hide,
Which, though they have the mercy of the place,
Yet are their bodies so unsanctify'd,
As that their souls can hardly hope for grace.
Drayton. Barons' Wars, s. 61.

He then who by that law brings tithes into the gospel, of necessity brings in withal a sacrifice, and an altar; without which tithes by that law were unsanctify'd and polluted.
Milton. On the Removal of Hirelings.

Our Saviour who knew the duties of a teacher far better than the proudest of the sophists or philosophers, professedly and particularly preached his gospel to the poor; that is to the many, the vulgar, the ignorant, the miserable, those whom worldly grandeur, worldly wisdom, and unsanctified science were, at all times, apt to neglect and despise.
Knox. Winter Evenings, Even. 28.

UN-SA'NCTIONED. Not authorized, or ratified.

The boldest efforts unsanctioned by reason, cannot be acceptable to reasonable beings. They generate into extravagancies that displease and disgust.
Cogan. Ethical Treatise on the Passions, Note M.

UN-SA'NDALED. Not having or wearing sandals, shoes to the soles of the feet.

— In thy fair domain,
Yes, my loved Albion! many a glade is found,
The haunt of wood-gods only: where if art
E'er dar'd to tread, 'twas with unsandal'd foot,
Printless, as if the place were holy ground.
Mason. The English Garden, b. i.

UN-SA'NGUINE. Not ardent, animated, hopeful.

"Prophetic schemes,
And golden streams,
May I, unsanguine, cast away!
Have, what I have!
And live, not leave,
Enamour'd of the present day?"—Young. Ocean.

UN-SA'TIABLE. } See INSATIABLE. That UNSA'TIABLY. } cannot be filled, sufficed, UNSA'TIABLENESS. } or contented; that can-
UNSA'TIATE. } not have enough.
UNSA'TED. }

Which would if they could bring it to passe, haue all women naught, that they might the more easily fullfill their unsaliable lustes.

Vives. Instruction of a Christian Woman, b. i. c. 12.

As thys wēche ones grewe to conuenient age, her bewtie so tagled his fleshely harte, that he unsatyably brent in her concupiscens.—Bale. English Volaries, pt. ii.

Then followed this sentence, "Four things follow cove-tousness. 1. Unsatiableness, being never contented," &c. Strype. Eccles. Mem. Edw. VI. an. 1548.

There is an innumerable young frie of the flying fishes, which commonly keepe about the ship, and are not so big as butter-flies, and yet by flying do auoid the unsatiableness of the bonito.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 521.

Now since in thee is none other reason,
Displease thee not if that I do refrain;
Unsatiat of my woe, and thy desire!

I was content thy servant to remain,
But nor to be payed under this fashion.

Wyatt. The Lover forsaketh his unkind Love.

Sir Gr. Is this in earnest, lady?

Neece. Oh unsatiat!

Dost thou count all this but an earnest yet?

I'd thought I'd paid thee all the whole sum, trust me.

Beaum. & Fletch. Wit at Several Weapons, Act iii.

Though it be dangerous to raise too great an expectation, especially in works of this nature, where we are to please an unsatiat audience, yet 'tis reasonable to prepossess them in favour of an author.—Id. Oedipus, Pref.

From plots and seasons Heav'n preserve my years,
But save me most from my petitioners.

Unsatiat as the barren womb or grave;

God cannot grant so much as they can crave.

Dryden. Absalom & Achitophel.

Tir'd with the toyl, *unsat*ed with the sin.

Id. Juvenal, Sat. 6.

Her step, though light, less fleet among
The pairs, on whom the morning's glance
Breaks, yet *unsat*ed with the dance.

Byron. Siege of Corinth, s. 8.

If he finde not this passage of repentance and hearty sorrow 'twixt God and his own soul, let him know that God is yet unsatisfied, that he is yet in his sin.

Hales. Rem. Ser. Matt. xxvi. 75.

Our blessed Saviour, knowing the unsatisfiable angers of men if their money or estates were meddled with, refused to divide an inheritance amongst brethren.

Bp. Taylor, vol. iii. Ser. 7.

That they do so understand also the vanity and the unsatisfyingness of the things of this world, so that the relish, which could not be great but in a great understanding, appears contemptible, because its vanity appears at the same time.—Id. vol. ii. Ser. 18.

[The Holy Ghost] hath represented the vanity of worldly desires, the unsatisfyingness of earthly possessions, the blessing of being denied our impertinent, secular, and indiscreet requests.—Id. Forms of Liturgie, § 38.

He that sets his love upon the creature, or any result from it, as honour, wealth, reputation, power, wife, children, friends, cannot possibly avoid discontent or impatience, for they are mutable, uncertain, unsatisfactory good, subject to casualities.—Hale. Cont. Of Contentedness & Patience.

We have laid all these things together, and have seriously considered of the mean valuation of all these earthly things, for their transitoriness, unsatisfaction, danger.

Bp. Hall. Of Contentation, § 16.

Dost thou complain, who hast enjoy'd my store?

But this is still th' effect of wishing more!

Unsatisfy'd with all that nature brings;

Loathing the present, liking absent things.

Dryden. Lucretius, b. i.

We may elsewhere, by the assistance of that [divine] author, have an opportunity to give you an account of our unsatisfiedness with the attempts made by some bold wits in favour of such pretensions.—Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 36.

Nor is fame also unsatisfying in itself, but the desire of it lays us open to many accidental troubles, which those are free from who have not such a tender regard for it.

Spectator, No. 256.

Yet even he with pathetical reiteration pronounces all to be vanity and vexation of spirit; altogether unprofitable and unsatisfactory to the mind of man.

Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 14.

The unsatisfactoriness and barrenness of the school-philosophy have persuaded a great many learned men, especially physicians, to substitute the chymists three principles instead of those of the schools.

Boyle. Works, vol. iii. Pref.

Those, lastly, which are found in the possession of well-directed tastes and desires, compared with the dominion of tormenting, pernicious, contradictory, unsatisfied, and unsatisfiable passions.—Paley. Natural Theology, c. 26.

When he [an evil man] is observed, he is ashamed; and when he has done, he is unsatisfied; and when he pursues his sin, he does it in the dark.—Knox. Christian Phil. § 6.

But ye thought not of heavenly things; ye were ingulphed in earthly things, and ye have found them, as all others have done who have trusted in them, delusive and unsatisfactory.—Knox, vol. vi. Ser. 5.

UN-SA'VOURY.

UNSA'VOURILY.

UNSA'VOURINESS.

Not agreeable or pleasing to the taste or smell; not well flavoured or relishing.

In a mortar post mortem. of meny bitere peynes.

Piers Plouhman, p. 244.

But the bread they make there, is certaine cakes made of rootes called Cassau, which is something substantiall, but it hath but an ensauorie taste in the eating thereof.

Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 448.

With these and such like, they plaister all the hive within throughout, as it were with a coat or parget, entermingling withall other juices that are more unsauorie.

Holland. Plinie, b. xi. c. 6.

Nor would I, you should melt away yourself

In flashing bravery, lest, while you affect

To make a blaze of gentry to the world,

A little puff of scorn extinguish it;

And you be left like an unsauvoury snuff,

Whose property is only to offend.

B. Jonson. Every Man in his Humour, Act i. sc. 1.

So often and so unsauvourily has it been repeated, that the reader may well cry, down with it, down with it for shame.—Milton. Animad. on the Remonstrants' Defence.

If we conceive a national unsauvouriness in any people, yet shall we find the Jewes less subject hereto than any, and that in those regards which most powerfully concur to such affects, that is, their diet and generation.

Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. iv. c. 10.

The flesh of both young and old is lean and black, yet very good meat, tasting neither fishy, nor any way unsavory.

Dampier. Voyages, an. 1683.

Hard fare! but such as boyish happiness

Disdains not; nor the palate, undeprav'd

By culinary arts, unsav'ry deems.—Couper. Task, b. i.

UN-SAY, v. Not to utter, or give utterance to; not to speak or tell, relate or rehearse; to gainsay; to deny anything before said.

Though thei be content to saye sometime the fyftene psalmes, and ouer that the psalmes of the passion to, if they finde them all faire sette out in order at length: yet wil they rather leaue the all ensayed, then turne backe to seke them out in other parties of their primer.

Sir T. More. Workes, p. 931.

Death, I recant, and say, unsaid by me

Whate'er hath slipt, that might diminish thee:

Spiritual treason, atheism 't is to say,

That any can thy summons disobey.

Donne. On Mistress Boulstred.

[My contemporaries have] a most happy art in saying and unsaying, giving hints of intelligence, and interpretations of indifferent actions, to the great disturbance of the brains of ordinary readers.—Tatler, No. 178.

It means that you can say and unsay things at pleasure.

Goldsmith. She Stoops to Conquer, Act v.

UN-SCA'LY.

UNSCA'LEABLE.

Unscaly,—having no scales,

i. e. small separate pieces, forming the cover or coat of a fish.

Unscaling (Milton),—removing, clearing away, the scales or small particles growing over the eye and impeding vision.

Unscaleable,—that cannot be climbed (by ladder, of separate slides;) that cannot be ascended.

Now had the king appointed for euerie one of their chambers one man apparelled in garments prettily deuised and made of fish skins unskaled.

Holinshed. Historie of Scotland. Alpine.

—Your isle, which stands

As Neptune's parke, ribb'd, and pal'd in

With oakes unskaleable, and roaring waters,

With sands that will not beare your enemies boates,

But suck them vp to th' top-mast.

Shakespeare. Cymbeline, Act iii. sc. 1.

Methinks I see her as an eagle muing her mighty youth, and kindling her undazl'd eyes at the ful mid-day beam;
purging and unscaling her long-abused sight at the fountain itself of heavenly radiance.—Milton. Areopagitica.

Red speckled trouts, the salmon's silver jowl,

The jointed lobster, and unscaly soal.—Gay. Trivia, b. 11.

UN-SCA'NNED. Not told, counted, measured.

But as a dream that vanish'd with the light:

The day-designs, and what he had in hand

Left it to his diverted thoughts unscann'd.

Daniel. Civil Wars, b. 1.

Menen. One word more, one word:

This tiger-footed-rage, when it shall find

The harme of unskan'd swiftnesse, will (too late)

Tye leaden pounds too's heeles.

Shakespeare. Coriolanus, Act iii. sc. 1.

UN-SCA'NTED. Not curtailed, shortened, or deficient.

Shining with all her beams, with all her rays;

Unscanted of her parts, unshadowed

In any darken'd point. Daniel. Musophilus.

UN-SCA'RED. Not terrified or affrighted.

Time was when in the pastoral retreat

Th' unguarded door was safe; men did not watch

T' invade another's right, or guard their own.

Then sleep was undisturb'd by fear; unscar'd

By drunken howlings. Cowper. Task, b. iv.

UN-SCA'RRED. Not sheared, cut, or divided; not wounded, or lacerated, or pierced.

So she may liue unscarr'd of bleeding slaughter,

I will confesse she was not Edward's daughter.

On foams the bull, but not unscathed he goes;

Streams from his flank the crimson torrent clear.

Byron. Child Harold, c. 1.

UN-SCA'TTERED. Not shed; dispersed, dissipated.

For at that tyme no lyttell murmur, and sedition was moud in the hoste of the Grekes, whiche notwithstandinge was wonderfully pacified: and the armie unscattered, by the maiestie of Agamennon, ioyninge to him counsaillours, Nestor and the witty Ulisses.

Sir T. Elyot. The Governour, b. i. c. 2.

UN-SCHO'OLED. } Not taught, instructed,

UNSCHOLA'STIC. } educated, disciplined, trained.

—'Tis vnmanly greefe,

It shewes a will most incorrect to Heauen,

A heart vnfortified, a minde impatient,

An vnderstanding simple, and unschool'd.

Shakespeare. Hamlet, Act ii. sc. 2.

—But the full summe of me

Is sum of nothing: which to terme in grosse,

Is an vnlessoned girle, unschool'd, unpractiz'd,

Happy in this, she is not yet so old

But she may learne.

Id. Merchant of Venice, Act iii. sc. 2.

I grant they were (Paul excepted) the rest, ignorant, poore, simple, un-schooled altogether and vnlettered men.

Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, b. iv. § 14.

Notwithstanding these learned disputants, it was to the unscholastick statesman, that the world owed their peace and liberties.—Locke.

UN-SCIENCE. Not knowledge; ignorance.

If that any wighte wene a thyng, to been otherwise than it is, it nis not onely unscience [non modo scientia non est] but it is deceivable opinion. full diuers and farre fro the sothe of science.—Chaucer. Boecius, b. v.

UN-SCORCHED. Not having (the surface or skin) burnt.

Though thou could'st buzze about the flame,

And keepe unskorcht thy wings,

Few safely play with edge-tooles.

Warner. Albion's England, b. xi. c. 68.

Cask. A common slaue, you know him well by sight,
Held vp his left hand, which did flame and burne
Like twentie torches ioynd; and yet his hand,
Not sensible of fire, remain'd unscorch'd.
Shakespeare. Julius Caesar, Act i. sc. 3.

UN-SCI'SSARED. Not sheared or cut.

— Till she be married, madam,
By bright Diana, whom we honour all,
Unscissar'd shall this hair of mine remain,
Though I show will in't.—Shakes. Pericles, Act iii. sc. 3.

UN-SCOUR'ED. Not rubbed, cleared or cleansed by rubbing.

Awakes me all the inrolled penalties
Which haue (like unscour'd armor) hung by th' wall.
Shakespeare. Measure for Measure, Act i. sc. 3.

UN-SCRA'TCHED. Not having the surface broken or torn by rubbing or scraping.

But on the sight of vs your lawfull king,
We painefully with much expedient march
Haue brought a counter-checke before your gates,
To saue unscratch'd your citties threatned cheekes.
Shakespeare. K. John, Act ii. sc. 1.

And although they have done no good, yet they are all that which God loves, they are his image undefiled, un- scratch'd, unbroken by any act or consent of their own.
Bp. Taylor. Liberty of Propheying, § 18.

UN-SCREW, v. The dramatist means,—to loosen that which is wound or twisted close or tight.

— I should curse my fortune
Even at the highest, to be made the ginne
To unscrew a mother's love unto her son.

Another mystery.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Coronation, Act ii.

Cet. Are your eyes yet unseel'd? dare they look day
In the dull face?—B. Jonson. Catiline, Act i. sc. 1.

Thrice warn'd awake, said he; relief is late,
The deed is done; but thou revenge my fate;
Tardy of aid, unseal thy heavy eyes,
Awake, and with the dawning day arise.
Dryden. Cock & the Fox.

Now gentle spirit, use thy utmost art;
Unseal her eyes; and this way lead her steps.
Id. King Arthur, Act iii.

Whom Nestor welcom'd, charging high the cup
With wine of richest sort, which she, who kept
That treasure, now in the eleventh year
First broach'd, unsealing the delicious juice.
Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. iii.

UN-SE'AMED, v. To destroy, to sever, the juncture formed by sewing; generally—to sever, to slit, to cut open.

They unseam'd him from the naue to th' chops,
And fix'd his head vpon our battlements.
Shakespeare. Macbeth, Act i. sc. 2.

But look thee Martius, nor a vein runs here
From head to foot, but Sophocles would unseame, and Like a spring garden shoot his scornfull blood
Into their eyes, durst come to tread on him.
Beaum. & Fletch. Moral Representations.

One gallant steed is stretch'd a mangled corse;
Another, hideous sight! unseam'd appears,
His gory chest unveils life's panting source;
Though death-struck, still his feeble frame he rears;
Staggering, but stemming all, his lord unharm'd he bears.
Byron. Childe Harold, c. 1.

UN-SE'ARCHABLE. That cannot be UNSE'ARCHABLENESS. looked or inquired UNSE'ARCHED. into; that cannot among hethen men the unsearchable richessis of Crist.

Id. Effesies, c. 3.

Unto me the leest of all sayntes is thys grace giuē, that I should preach amonge the Gentyls the unsearchable ryches of Chryst.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

Therefore thinke they y^t God did not appoynte him to suffer so much paine as euer any martir did, but euen so much as his unsearcheable wisedome demed to be most conueniente.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 1368.

Neither was there any yce towards the North, but a great sea, free, large, very salt and blew, & of an unsearchable depth.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 220.

Richard Gray, chattelaine of Douer castell, a right valiant man and a faithfull, suffered no man to passe that waie un- searched.
Holinshed. Chron. of England. Hen. III. an. 1258.

He who without warrant, but his own fantastic surmise, takes upon him perpetually to unfold the secret and un- searchable mysteries of high providence, is likely for the most part to mistake and slander them.
Milton. Answer to Eikon Basilike, § 26.

The unsearchableness of God's ways should be a bridle to restrain presumption, and not a sanctuary for spirits of error.
Bramhall. Answer to Hobbs.

— And the friendship Between him and your noble brother known,
His house in reason cannot pass unsearcht,
And that's the principal cause that drew me hither,
To hasten his remove.
Beaum. & Fletch. Lover's Progress, Act iv.

Then would they only labour to extend Their now unsearching spir't beyond these bounds
Of others' pow'rs, wherein they must be pen'd.
Daniel. Musophilus.

'Tis all the mighty working of the gods,
Unsearchable and dark to human eye.
Rowe. Ulysses, Act iv.

And though it is a laudable ambition to search what may be known of these matters, yet it is a vast hindrance to the enrichment of our understandings, if we spend too much of our time and pains among infinities and unsearchables.
Watts. Logick, pt. i. c. 6. § 1.

UN-SE'ASONABLE. That cannot be,
UNSE'ASONABLENESS. that is not, fitted or UNSE'ASONABLY. suited to the time, UNSE'ASONED. to the occasion; not timely, not opportune.

Unseasoned,—not fitted or prepared for use, for keeping; not matured or inured by time, or exercise, or habit.

Take measure in langage, wisdome in grose,
For mesure as right well proued is by reason
Things unseasonable setteth in season.
Imputed to Chaucer. The Craft of Lovers.

How onely by meanes of the unseasonable times in the returne from the voyage home. many thereby haue decayed, to the great misery and calamity of the rest, and also to the great slander of the voyage (which I much respect) the last and other voyages haue declared.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. p. 53.

And so ready was the Lord to dooe good & to help al men, that he neuer did so much as laie for his excuse the importunitie or unseasonableness of time.—Udal. Luke, c. 4.

Wherefore the hinderance by rot is rather to be ascribed to the unseasonableness & moisture of the weather in summer.
Holinshed. Description of England, b. iii.

Bad is that housholder and master of a family, who doth that in the day which might be don by night, unlesse un- seasonable weather drive him to it.
Holland. Plinie, b. xviii. c. 6.

He repented him too late of what he had begun, who had unseasonably made the wound to fester, which in the beginning might easily have been healed.
Camden. Hist. of Q. Elizabeth, (1560.)

Sir, 'tis a sign you make no stranger of me,
To bring these renegados to my chamber,
At these unseason'd hours.
Beaum. & Fletch. Philaster, Act ii.

Seriousness has its beauty whilst it is attended with cheerfulness and humanity, and does not come in unsea- sonably to pall the good humour of those with whom we conuerse.—Spectator, No. 598.

Neither do men more naturally drive away flies that buz about their ears, and molest them in their employments, than they with disdain repel such immodest and unseason- able meddlers in their affairs.—Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 3.

They [Fielding's works] are highly entertaining, and will always be read with pleasure; but they likewise disclose scenes which may corrupt a mind unseasoned by experience.
Knox. Ess. No. 14.

UN-SEAT, v. To remove, to throw from, the seat or saddle.

His horse, as he had caught his master's mood,
Snorting, and starting into sudden rage,
Unbidden, and not now to be controll'd,
Rush'd to the cliff, and, having reach'd it, stood.
At once the shock unseated him: he flew Sheer'd o'er the craggy barrier.—Cowper. Task, b. vi.

UN-SE'CONDED. Not assisted, supported, aided or assisted by another (a second person).

— And him, O wondrous! him,
O miracle of men! Him did you leaue
(Second to none) un-seconded by you,
To look vpon the hideous god of warre,
In dis-advantage.—Shakespeare. 2 Pt. Hen. IV. Act ii. sc. 3.

You may not hope that so many learned and eminent divines, who find themselves equally interesad in this quarrell, can suffer either so just a cause unseconded, or so high insolence unchastised.
Bp. Hall. Answer to Vindic. of Smeectymnuus, § 3.

Unseconded by art, the spinning race
Draw the bright thread in vain, and idly toil.
Thomson. Liberty.

UN-SE'CRET. } Not kept apart, out of UNSE'CRETING, n. } sight or knowledge; not private, concealed, hidden.

My thoughts were like vnbrideled children grow
Too head-strong for their mother; see we fooles,
Why haue I blab'd: who shall be true to vs
When we are so unsecret to our selues?
Shakespeare. Troyl. & Cres. Act iii. sc. 2.

Let princes beware, that the unsecreting of their affaires, comes not from themselves.—Bacon. Ess. Of Counsell.

fluous and unsemyng desyres.—Udal. Romaines, c. 12.

And [he] prayed his wyfe of help in y^t tyme of nede, &
y^t she wold, i al y^t she myghte, make her selfe as fowle & as unseemly as she coude.—Fabyan. Chronycle, c. 194.

Lette them quietly worke also, getting their liuyng with their owne handes, rather than to be greuous vnto other with shameles crauinges & unsemeelines.—Udal. 2 Thess. c. 3.

O! all is gone: and all that goodly glee,
Which wont to be the glory of gay wits,
Is layd abed, and no where now to see;
And in her roome unseemly sorrow sits.
Spenser. Teares of the Muses.

Here he [Gardiner] fel into such a great rage, as was told me [Mountain] by one of his own men, as was unseemly for a bishop; and with great speed sent for the knight marshal.—Strype. Eccles. Mem. Q. Mary, (1554.)

Prin. You doe the king my father too much wrong,
And wrong the reputation of your name,
In so unseemly to confesse receyt
Of that which hath so faithfully beene paid.
Shakespeare. Loues Labour Lost, Act ii. sc. 1.

There is an unseemly accident happening otherwiles to the head, and disgraceth it much, called Alopecia, when as the haire unnaturally falleth off.

Holland. Plinie, b. xxv. c. 11.

An unseemly reflection upon what are emphatically called the sacrifices of God, in that very place, as vastly preferable to material sacrifices.—Waterland. Works, vol. viii. p. 183.

— He city-ward his king
Led on, in form a squalid beggar old,
Halting, and in unseemly garb attir'd.

Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. xvii.

UN-SEEN. } Not beheld, observed, perceived, UNSEE'ING. } discerned (sc. by the eye), met.
by the mind.

And ouer that she gan to seyne,
That if a man wil ben unseyne,
Within his honde holde close the stone,
And he maie inuisible gone.—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

Now for asmuch as the thing was done in the sight of all men, and that nothing whether it were valiantly or cowardly done, could escape unseene, the desier of prayse and feare of reproche, enforced either part to valiantnesse.

Goldinge. Cæsar, b. vii.

Ile vse thee kindly, for thy mistris sake
That vs'd me so; or else by Joue, I vow,
I should haue scratch'd out your unseeing eyes,
To make my master out of loue with thee.

Shakespeare. Two Gentlemen of Verona, Act iv. sc. 4.

Take heed you steer your vessel right, my son,
This calm of Heaven, this mermaid's melody,
Into an unseen whirl-pool draws you fast.

Dryden. Spanish Fryar, Act iv.

But if the conqueror of whom I speak
Be Diomedes, not uninspir'd from Heav'n
He rages thus, but, at his side, unseen,
Some guardian pow'r protects his threaten'd life.

Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. v.

UN-SE'IZED. Not taken or caught, or held fast.

Our fortune rolls as from a smooth descent,
And, from the first impression, takes the bent;
But, if unseiz'd, she glides away like wind;
And leaves repenting folly far behind.

Dryden. Absalom & Achitophel.

UN-SE'LFISH. Not pertaining or relating to self; not partial to, subservient to—self, or the interests or pleasures of self.

He twits them with his acts of grace; proud, and un-self-knowing words in the mouth of any king who affects not to be a God, and such as ought to be as odious in the ears of a free nation.—Milton. Answer to Eikon Basilike, § 9.

The most interested cannot purpose any thing so much to their own advantage, notwithstanding which the inclination is nevertheless unselfish.—Spectator.

UN-SE'LY. See UNSILLY.

UN-SE'MINARED. Without seed.

— 'Tis well for thee,
That being unseminar'd, thy freer thoughts
May not flye forth out of Egypt.

Shakespeare. Anthony & Cleopatra, Act i. sc. 5.

UN-SENSED. } Not having sense, or feel-UNSEN'SIBLE. } ing, or perception; sense or UNSEN'SIENT. } meaning. See INSENSATE.

The tother, an inwarde sacramente or sacramentall sygne unsensible, whyche none of the remnaunt haue.

Sir T. More. Workes, p. 1332.

But to avoid the trial there, they tell you the scripture is but a dead letter, unsenced characters, words without sense, or unsenced.—Bp. Taylor. Diss. from Popery, pt. ii. b. i. § 2.

And against their own discipline, which they boast to be the throne and scepter of Christ, [they] absolve him, unfound him, though unconverted, unrepentant, unsensible of all their precious saints and martyrs whose blood they have so oft laid upon his head.

Milton. Tenure of Kings & Magistrates.

We do not mean by mysteries, positions altogether unintelligible, or that carry no idea at all with them: we do not mean unsenced characters, or empty sounds: but we mean propositions contained in general terms, which convey as general ideas, not descending to particulars.

Waterland. Works, vol. v. p. 14.

But if we take along with us our foregoing distinction between percipiency and perceptivity, we may admit a sentient composed of unsentient parts, yet deny that such composition could consist solely of matter, but must contain one perceptive ingredient to receive the notices brought by the rest.—Search. Light of Nature, vol. ii. pt. i. c. 6.

UN-SENT. Not caused to go or come; not required or commanded to go or come.

Gov. Take heed to your safety,
I but forewarn ye king; if you mistrust me,
Or think I come un-sent.

King. No, I'll go with you.

Beaum. & Fletcher. Island Princess, Act iv.

[He advised him] that he should send for all the council that remained unsent abroad, and six other of the gravest and most experienced men in the realm, and consult what was best to be done.

Strype. Eccles. Mem. Edw. VI. b. i. c. 21.

UN-SENTENCED. Not doomed, or adjudged.

— But I
Am guiltless of election of mine eyes,
Were I to lose one, they are equal precious,
I could doome neither, that which perish'd should Goe to't unsentenc'd.

Beaum. & Fletcher. Two Noble Kinsmen, Act v. sc. 1.

UN-SEPARABLE. } See INSEPARABLE. That UNSEPARABLY. } cannot be put alone;
that cannot be divided, disjoined, disunited, disassociated.

For he is not onely man but also God, and with his holye bodye and bloude is also his holy soule, and with both hys bodye and soule, ioyned his unseperable godheadde, and of hym hys father and their holy spirite is all one godheadde, and therefore there present all three.

Sir T. More. Workes, p. 1337.

And to entertain a little their overweening arrogance as best befitted, and to amaze them yet further, because they thought it no hard matter to fulfil the law, he draws them up to that unseparable institution which God ordain'd in the beginning before the fall, when man and woman were both perfect, and could have no cause to separate.

Milton. Doct. & Disc. of Divorce, b. ii. c. 9.

And we shall find there his own authority, giving other manner of reasons why such firm union is to be in matrimony; without which reasons, their being male and female can be no cause of joining them unseparably: for if it be, then no adultery can sever.—Id. Tetrachordon.

It is easily seen, that those things which a man useth himself unto, so that they seem to become another nature; yet some desuetude from them evidences to him, that they are not so necessary and unseperable as he once thought them.—Hale. Cont. Of Self-Denial.

Though there be several ways, besides precipitations, of divorcing substances, that seem very strictly, if not unseparably united; yet by precipitation alone, if a man have the skill to choose proper precipitants, several separations may not only be made, but be easily and thoroughly made, that every one would not think of.

Boyle. Works, vol. iv. p. 198.

UN-SE'PULCHRED. Not buried.

— But why I use a word
Of any act, but what concerns my friend? dead, undeplor'd, Unsepulcher'd, he lies at fletee, unthought on.

Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. xxii.

Here Burgundy bequeath'd his tombless host,
A bony heap, through ages to remain,
Themselves their monument:—the Stygian coast
Unsepulchred they roam'd, and shriek'd each wandering ghost.

Byron. Childe Harold, c. 3.

UNSERV'ICEABLE. } mitted to; not attended UNSERV'ICEABLENESS. } upon with offices, or the performance of offices; not duly performed;
not aided, assisted, benefited, profited.

The church is brent, the priest is slaine,
The wife, the maide is eke forlaine,
The lawe is lore, and God unserved.

Gower. Con. A. b. iii.

Nor sait Paule, though he would haue them labour for knowledge, meaneth not yet they shall leaue the sacramentes unserved which God hath taught, till he teach them the knowledge why he taught the, & what speciall signification euery sacrament and ceremony had.

Sir T. More. Workes, p. 496.

Immediately the duke sendeth forth to inquire of his wealth: and if it be so proued, he shall be called before the duke, and it shall bee sayd vnto him, friend, you haue too much liuing, and are unservicable to your prince, lesse will serue you, and the rest will serue other men that are more able to serue.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 240.

The beast impatient of his smarting wound,
And of so fierce and forcible despiht,
Thought with his wings to flie aboue the ground;
But his late wounded wing unservicable found.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 11.

The great ships, set forth at vast charges, when the wind failed, were wholly unservicable, and lay exposed to the shot of the enemy.

Camden. History o^r Q. Elizabeth, an. 1599.

At this time died many priests, that a great number of parish churches in diuers places of the realm were unserved.
Strype. Eccles. Mem. Q. Mary I. an. 1558.

The supposition of essences that cannot be known, and the making of them nevertheless to be that which distinguishes the species of things, is wholly useless, and unservicable to any part of our knowledg.

Locke. Hum. Underst. b. iii. c. 3.

It does not enlarge the dimensions of the globe, or lie idly and unservicably there, but part of it is introduced into the plants which grow thereon, and the rest either remounts again, with the ascending vapour, or is wash'd down into rivers.—Woodward. Natural History.

It [pleasure] is more transitory than the shortest life, it dies in the very enjoyment, yet it may conduce to our wise and good practice in respect thereto, by tempering the sweetness thereof, yea souring its relish to us; minding us of its insufficiency and unservicableness to the felicity of a mortal creature.—Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 14.

UN-SET. Removed from, out of, its place or position; not put, or placed, or stationed, in its natural or appropriate place or position.

They vrge that God left nothing in his word vndescribed, whether it concerned the worship of God or outward politie, nothing unset-downe, and therefore charged them strictly to keepe themselves vnto that, without any alteration.

Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, b. iii. § 11.

An unset bone is better than a bone so ill set that it must be broken again to double the pain of the patient.

Fuller. Worthies. General.

UN-SETTLE, v. } To remove from its place UNSETTLEDNESS. } or position; to loosen from UNSETTLEMENT. } its hold, from its firmness; to shake its stedfastness or constancy, or equality, (met.) the firmness, resolution, decision.

The Spaniard is not so simple, unsettled & vncertaine in his determinations, as to build them on our breath, or to make our papers our bulwarks.

Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 667.

Dauid supposed that it could not stand with the duetie which he owed vnto God, to set himselfe in an house of cedar trees, and to behold the arke of the Lord's couenant unsettled.—Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, b. ii. § 6.

They [transitory parliaments] are much likelier continually to unsettle rather than to settle a free government, to breed commotions, changes, novelties and uncertainties.

Milton. Way to estab. a Free Com.

The difficulty was not in the stile, but in the subject matter; nor there indeed, as they are in themselves, so much as by the ignorance and instability, or unsettledness of foolish people.

Bp. Taylor. Dissuasive from Popery, pt. ii. § 2.

This news made our unsettled crew wish, that they had been persuaded to accept of Captain Eaton's company on reasonable terms.—Dampier. Voyages, an. 1684.

[I leave it to be considered] whether it would not be well that the use of words were made plain and direct, and that language, which was given us for the improvement of knowledge and bond of society, should not be employed to darken truth, and unsettle people's rights; to raise mista, and render unintelligible both morality and religion?

Locke. Hum. Underst. b. iii. c. 10.

[St. Paul] whose life was spent in continual agitation and unsettledness, in all hardships of travel and labour and care, in extreme sufferance of all pains both of body and mind.

Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 15.

There is a great unsettlement of mind and corruption of manners, generally diffused over people.—Id. vol. i. Ser. 17.

The not doing of which, I am sure, has ruined the peace of this poor church, and shook it into such unsettlements, that the youngest person alive, is not like to see it recovered to its full strength, vigour and establishment.

South, vol. x. Ser. 9.

What the prophet Elijah said to the Israelites belongs equally to all of this unsettled character: How long halt ye between two opinions? if the Lord be God, follow him: but if Baal, then follow him.—Secker, vol. ii. Ser. 18.

UN-SEVERE. Not rigid or rigorous; not austere or strict.

Some sects of men are very angry against servants for recreating and easing their labours with a less prudent and unsevere refreshment.—Bp. Taylor, vol. ii. Ser. 22.

UN-SE'VERED. Not sundered or divided, disunited, disjoined, disparted.

— I haue heard you say,
Honor and policy, like unseuer'd friends,
I' th' warre do grow together: Grant that, and tell me
In peace, what each of them by th' other loose,
That they combine not there?

Shakespeare. Coriolanus, Act iii. sc. 2.

He gave, with previous pray'r, to Maia's son
And to the nymphs one portion, and the guests Serv'd next, but, honouring Ulysses most,
On him the long unsever'd chine bestow'd.
Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. xiv.

UN-SEX, v. To remove or destroy the distinguishing characteristic of sex.

— Come you spirits
That tend on mortall thoughts, unsex me here,
And fill me from the crowne to the toe, top-full
Of direst crueltie : make thick my blood,
Stop vp th' accesse, and passage to remorse,
That no compunctious visitings of nature
Shake my fell purpose, nor keepe peace betweene
Th' effect, and hit [it].—Shakespeare. Macbeth, Act i. sc. 5.

Is it for this the Spanish maid, aroused,
Hangs on the willow her unstrung guitar,
And, all unsex'd, the anlace hath espoused,
Sung the loud song, and dared the deed of war?
Byron. Child Harold, c. 1.

UN-SHA'CKLE, v. To free from fetters, from impediment or obstruction.

A laudable freedom of thought unshackles their minds from the narrow prejudices of education, and opens their eyes to a more extensive view of the publick good.
Addison.

No—yours my forfeit blood and breath—
These hands are chain'd—but let me die
At least with an unshackled eye.—Byron. Parisina.

UN-SHA'DED. } Not secluded, obscured, UNSHA'DOWED. } darkened.

Faire as unshaded light, or as the day
In its first birth, when all the year was May :
Sweet as the altar's smoke, or as the new Unfolded bud, sweld by the early dew.
Davenant. To the Queen.

Shining with all her beams, with all her rays;
Unscanted of her parts, unshadowed
In any darken'd point. Daniel. Musophilus.

UN-SHA'KEABLE. } That cannot be agi-
UNSHA'KED. } tated; moved quickly UNSHA'KEN. } to and fro; caused to UNSHOOK. } totter, or tremble;

have the firmness or fixedness loosened or disturbed.

But hereafter when this feith shall haue gathered strength, that it maie be hable to stande stable and unshaken againste all temptacions of the deuill, thou shalt be called Cephas, which in Greke is as muche to saie as Petre, in Latine, Saxum, and in English, a stone.—Udal. John, c. 1.

Yet in the number, I do know but one
That vnassayleable holds on his ranke,
Unshak'd of motion.
Shakespeare. Julius Cæsar, Act iii. sc. 1.

[We have] by a due and impartial distribution, assigned to God the prerogative of God, and to Cæsar the prerogative that is Cæsar's; and withall, pitched the obligation of human laws upon a firm, and unshakeable basis.
South, vol. v. Ser. 5.

A bottom so firm and sure for Christianity to rest upon, that it cannot be placed upon a surer and more unshakable.
Id. vol. iv. Ser. 8.

But should that most unshaken rule of morality, and foundation of all social virtue, "that one should do as he would be done unto," be proposed to one that never heard it before, but yet is of capacity to understand its meaning, might he not without any absurdity ask a reason why?
Locke. Hum. Underst. b. i. c. 3.

Let peals of laughter, Codrus! round thee break,
Thou unconcern'd canst hear the mighty crack :
Pit, box, and gall'ry in convulsions hurl'd,
Thou stand'st unshook amidst a bursting world.
Pope. Prologue to Satires.

Chief for their fearless hearts the glory waits,
Long months from land, while the black stormy night
Around them rages, on the groaning mast
With unshook knee to know their giddy way.
Thomson. Liberty, pt. iv.

We will walk by faith, not by sight; and preserve our loyalty to our Lord and our God, unshaken by the false opinions and bad customs of a thoughtless world, by the cravings of sensual appetites, and the tumults of irregular passions and fancies.—Secker, vol. ii. Ser. 26.

UN-SHA'MED. } Feeling no abashment
UNSHA'MEFACED. } or debasement; degrada-UNSHA'MEFAST. } tion or disgrace.
UNSHA'MEFASTNESS. }
UNSHAMEFULNESS. }

But what feeble they, whose heartes so deepe mischief hath hardened, and by vehemencie of affection be made unshamefast, & stop al discourse of reason, to let at large the full scope of their vnmeasurable madnesse.
Sir J. Cheeke. The Hurt of Sedition.

But who may expresse the unshamefaced arrogat boldenes and serpentine fraudes of anticryste.
Joye. Exposition of Daniel, p. 145.

But ye high mass to be veri like ye same harlot which doeth craftely abuse the honest name of an husbād, to hide her vnshamefastnes, & to reteyn & defend the estimaciō of an honest & chaste wife.
Caluin. Fovre Godlye Sermons, Ser. 1.

For the lacke of maners in the state of a lord Ingendreth vnshamefastnesse in him, and boldnesse to the seruaunt.
Golden Boke, c. 45.

But oh Lord God, what vnshamefulness is this? thus to delude with wordes all the whole worlde?
Barnes. Workes, p. 201.

We are not yet become impudent, neither altogether haue cast off vnshamefastnesse, sith that in a great manie some remainder of our ancient sobernesse and manhood dooth yet appeare.—Holinshed. Description of Scotland, c. 13.

The brave man seeks not popular applause,
Nor overpow'r'd with arms, deserts his cause;
Unsham'd, though foil'd, he does the best he can Force is of brutes, but honour is of man.
Dryden. Palamon & Arcite, b. iii.

Minicio's and Manto's glorious son behold,
Th' immortal Virgil, sheath'd in foreign gold,
Shines out unsham'd, and towers above the rest,
In the rich spoils of godlike Homer drest.
Pitt. Vida. Art of Poetry, b. ii.

UN-SHAPE, v. To put out of shape, or form, or order; to deform, to disorder, to dis-compose.

She groneth dailye in bringing forth children yet vn-shapen, and vnperfeite, vntil thei shall haue receiued the spirite of the gospel, and vntil Christ bee brought to perfect shape in them.—Udal. Luke, c. 7.

Ang. Good night.
This deede vnshapes me quite, makes me vnpregnant
And dull to all proceedings.
Shakespeare. Meas. for Meas. Act iv. sc. 4.

— Her speech is nothing,
Yet the vnshaped vse of it doth moue
The hearers to collection.—Id. Hamlet, Act iv. sc. 5.

UN-SHA'RED. Not divided, parted, partaken or apportioned.

Under this sable marble of thine own,
Sleep, rare tragedian, Shakespeare, sleep alone :
Thy unmolested peace, in an unshared cave,
Possess as lord, not tenant of thy grave.
W. Basse. Elegy on Shakespeare.

— Godhead for thee
Chiefly I sought, without thee can despise.
For bliss as thou hast part, to me is bliss,
Tedious, unshar'd with thee, and odious soon.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ix.

UN-SHA'TTERED. Not scattered, separated, or dispersed.

Vaine fooles, what is a finite power in the hands of an infinite? where there is an equality of force, there may be hard tugging; but where brasse meets with clay, how can that brittle stuffe escape unshattered?
Bp. Hall. Ser. Ps. lxxviii. 30.

UN-SHA'VEN. Not cut or sheared.

And therefore, though beefore those ceremonies vsed, priestes myghte consecrate vnshauen & vnannoyned when shauynge and annoynynge was not yet instituted: yet nowe can there none dooe so, syth there is no priest made vnshauen and vnannoyned.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 430.

And we find the statua of the sun was framed with raies about the head, which were the indeciduous and unshaven locks of Apollo.
Sir T. Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. v. c. 21.

UN-SHEATH, v. To remove from, to draw out of, the case or cover, the scabbard.

This sword, which fate commands me to unsheath,
I would not draw on Pompey, if not vanquish'd.
Beaum. & Fleich. The False One, Act i. sc. 1.

Yet never was king less in danger of any violence from his subjects, till he unsheath'd his sword against them; nay after that time, when he had spilt the blood of thousands,
they had still his person in a foolish veneration.
Milton. Answer to Eikon Basilike, § 9.

The minute ended that began the race,
So soon he was betwixt 'em on the place;
And with his sword unsheath'd, on pain of life
Commands both combatants to cease their strife.
Dryden. Palamon & Arcite, b. ii.
2118

Hither Ulysses hastes (so fates command)
And bears the pow'rful moly in his hand;
Unsheaths his scimeter, assaults the dame,
Preserves his species, and remains the same.
Garth. Ovid. Metam. b. xiv

It is an alarming proof of the spirit of despotism, when the great are eager to rush into war, when they listen to no terms of accommodation, and scorn to negotiate, in any mode or degree, previously to unsheathing the dreadful instrument of slaughter.—Knox. Spirit of Despotism, § 30.

UN-SHED. In Spenser,—On-shed, or En-shed, (see UNRIP, UNREAVE.) In Byron,—not dispersed, not spilt.

And his faire locks, that wont with oytment sweet
To be embaum'd, and sweat out dainty deaw,
He let to growe, and griesly to concrew,
Vncomb'd, vncurl'd, and carelesly vnshed.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 7.

Upon her face there was the tint of grief,
The settled shadow of an inward strife,
And an unquiet drooping of the eye
As if its lid was charged with unshed tears.
Byron. The Dreams.

UN-SHE/LLED. Not protected by a shell;
newly hatched.

On iron pennons borne, the blood stained vulture cleaves the storm—yet is the plumage closest to her heart soft as the sygnet's down, and o'er her unshelled brood the murmuring ring-dove sits not more gently.
Sheridan. Pizarro, Act iv. sc. 1.

UN-SHE/LTERED. Not covered, protected, or defended. See UNSHIELDED.

For this it practices to dissipate
Th' unshelter'd troops, till all be made away.
Daniel. Musophilus.

— Distressful Nature pants.
The very streams look languid from afar;
Or, through th' unshelter'd glade, impatient seem
To hurl into the covert of the grove.—Thomson. Summer.
For well may maids of Helle deem,
That this can be no earthly flower,
Which mocks the tempest's withering hour,
And buds unshelter'd by a bower.
Byron. Bride of Abydos, c. 2.

UN-SHE/RIFFED. Removed from, deprived of, his office of sheriff.

But he was soon unsheriffed by the king's death, and another of more true integrity substituted in his room.
Fuller. Worthies. Kent.

UN-SHEWN. Not held forth or exhibited, presented to view; not discovered, or displayed.

— But you are come
A market-maid to Rome, and haue preuented
The ostentation of our loue; which left vnshewne,
Is often left vnshew'd.
Shakespeare. Anthony & Cleopatra, Act iii. sc. 6.

UN-SHIE/LDED. Not covered, protected, or defended.

He try'd a third; a tough well chosen spear,
Th' inviolable body stood sincere;
Though Cygnus then did no defence provide,
But scornful offer'd his unshielded side.
Dryden. Ovid. Metam. b. xii.

UN-SHIP, v. To remove from, bear or carry out of, a ship, (qv) or vessel.

Than the kynge of Cyper passed the see, and arryued at Doner, and there taried two dayes and refreshed hym tyll all hys cariage was vnshypped.
Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 218.

But when wee would haue entred into an harbour, the land being very high on euery side, there came such flaws of winde and terrible whirlewinds, that we were not able to beare in, but by violence were constrained to take the sea agayne, our pinnesse being vnshipt.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 235.

They anchoring there at first but to refresh their fleet,
Yet saw those savage men so rudely them to greet,
Unshipt their warlike youth, advancing to the shore.
Drayton. Poly-olbion, s. 1.

The people in the boats made several attempts to lay hold of him; but he, as often, dived under the boat, and at last having unshipped the rudder, which rendered her ungovernable, by this means he got clear off.
Cooke. Second Voyage, b. ii. c. 2.

UN-SHIVERED. Not made to tremble, quake or quiver.

For now our eares beene of more brittle mold,
Than those dull earthen eares that were of old :
Sith theirs, like anvilles, bore the hammer's head,
Our glasse can never touch unshivered.
Bp. Hall, b. v. Sat. 3.

UN-SHOCKED. Not shaken, or caused to tremble or shudder; (met.) with some strong mental feeling; horror, dislike, &c.

"True, a corrupted state, with every vice,
And every meanness foul, this passion damps.
Who can, unshock'd, behold the cruel eye?
The pale inveigling smile?—Thomson. Liberty.

And then the very rock hath rock'd,
And I have felt it shake, unshock'd,
Because I could have smn'd to see
The death that would have set me free.

Byron. Prisoner of Chillon, s. 6.

UN-SHOD. Not having the foot under-placed, (sc.) with aught to tread on; covered, protected.

Nor they had nat wherewith to shoo them, that were en-shodde.—Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 18.

There follow'd fast at hand two wicked hags,
With hoarie locks all loose, and visage grim;
Their feet enshod, their bodies wrapt in rags,
And both as swift on foot, as chased stags.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, c. 11.

Unshod and without stockings are the best,
And those by winter miserably oppress.

Drayton. Battle of Agincourt.

UN-SHOOK. See UNSHAKEN.

UN-SHORN. Not cut, not shaven.

His careless locks, vncombed and enshorne,
Hung long adowne, and beard all ouer-grown,
That well he seem'd to be some wight forlorne.

Spenser. Daphnaida.

The Lignes now shorne, once like the rest
Long hair'd, of all the enshorne Gauls the best.

May. Lucan. Pharsalia, b. i.

Three Henchmen were for ev'ry knight assign'd,
All in rich livery clad, and of a kind:
White velvet, but unshorn, for cloaks they wore,
And each within his hand a truncheon bore.

Dryden. Flower & the Leaf.

UN-SHOT, v. Not stricken by any thing cast or thrown, emitted or ejected.

He that on her his bold hand lays,
With Cupid's pointed arrow plays;

My boskie acres, and my enshrubd downe.

Shakespeare. Tempest, Act iv. sc. 1.

UN-SHUNNABLE. } That cannot be UNSHUNNED. } avoided or evaded, or escaped.

— Yet 'tis the plague to great ones,
Prerogatiu'd are they lesse then the base,
'Tis destiny unshunnable, like death.

Shakespeare. Othello, Act iii. sc. 5.

An unshun'd consequence, it must be so.

Id. Meas. for Meas. Act iii. sc. 2.

UN-SHUT, v. To throw open; to open.

This noble knight, this January the old
Swiche deintee hath in it to walke and pley,
That he wol suffre no wight bere the key,
Sauf he himself, for of the smal wicket
He bare alway of silver a cliket,
With which whan that him list he it unshette.

Chaucer. The Marchantes Tale, v. 9922.

— For he the dore enshette
So priuely, that none it herde.—Gower. Con. A. b. vi.

Goe say that the plaguy—spirituall—leprousie of sinne rising up in the foreheades of many in that church, unshut up, uncovered, (yea, wil ally let loose) infects all both persons and things amongst them.

Bp. Hall. An Apologie against Brownists, § 55.

UN-SICK. Not weak, ailing, diseased, disordered.

The ground one year at rest, forget not thou
With richest dung to hearten it again,
Or with unsifted ashes.

May. Virgil.

Polon. Affection, puh. You speake like a greene girle, Vnsifted in such perillous circumstance.
Dooe you beleue his tenders, as you call them?

Shakespeare. Hamlet, Act i. sc. 3.

UN-SIGHT.

UNSI'GHTLY. } Not seeming good, or of UNSI'GHTLINESS. } good seeming or appear-UNSI'GHTED. } ance to the eye.

Un sighted,—not insight.

And also fearing leste beeyng a slouenly felowe and en-sightly in his geare, and a common begger by the high waies side, he should haue been somewhat noifull or troublesome vnto the Lorde.—Udal. Luke, c. 18.

I bear a heart as loyal unto you
In this unsightly body (which you please
To make your mirth) as many others do
That are far more befriended in their births.

Beaum. & Fletch. Cupid's Revenge, Act i.

If they fall short, then must a superficial colour of reputation by all means, direct or indirect, be gotten to wash over the unsightly bruise of honour.

Milton. Reformation in England, b. ii.

When, dearest, I but think of thee,
Methinks all things that lovely be
Are present, and my soul delighted;
For beauties that from worth arise,
Are like the grace of deities,
Still present with us, tho' unsighted.—Suckling. Song.

So that were it not for leaving an unsightly gap so neer to the beginning, I should have judg'd this labour, wherein so little seems to be requir'd above transcription, almost superfluous.—Milton. Hist. of England, b. ii.

There was a great confluence of chapmen, that resorted from every part, with a design to purchase, which they were to do "unsight, unseen."—Spectator, No. 511.

It must have been a fine genius for gardening that could have thought of forming such an unsightly hollow into so beautiful an area, and to have hit the eye with so uncommon and agreeable a scene as that which it is now wrought into.

Id. No. 477.

The unsightliness in the legs may be helped by wearing a laced stocking.—Wiseman. Surgery.

That fortitude of reason, which led you to liberty, hath betrayed you in the pursuit of truth: and those unsightly errors you have embraced in its stead, suffer you not to enjoy the blessing you had so greatly purchased.

Warburton, vol. ix. Ser. 16.

UN-SIGNED. Not marked, noted, or notified (by name subscribed), not subscribed by name.

Vpon paine to be forfayted, applyed, and confiscated to vs

UN-SIGNIFICANT. } i. e. Insignificant, UNSIGNIFICANTLY. } making no sign, or UNSIGNIFYING. } note, or mark; denoting nothing; meaning nothing.

For if so be there are some few ignorant and unlettered persons, among many learned and skilful clerks, yet will they like unto mute letters, and consonants between vowels, participate with them in a kind of voice, not altogether inarticulate and insignificant.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 527.

The temple of Janus, with his two controversial faces, might now not unsignificantly be set open.

Milton. Areopagitica.

Such a faith as this is that which St. James writes so earnestly against, as dead, and unsignifying (of it self alone) to the purpose of justification, and acceptance with God.

Glanvill, Ser. 11.

UN-SILLY. Not blessed or happy; and, consequentially,—wretched, miserable.

I am an unceli [miser] man, who schal delyuer me fro the bodi of this synne?—Wiclif. Romayns, c. 7.

I wol arise, and aunte it by my say:

Unhardy is unsely, thus men say.
Chaucer. The Reves Tale, v. 4209.

This I see (quod I) either what blisfulnesse, or els what unselines [miseria] is established in the desertes of good men, and of shrewes.—Id. Boecius, b. iv.

— And therefore I
Will write and shewe all openly,
Howe loue and I togedre mette
May after this, whan I am go
Of thilke unsely iolife wo.

Gower. Con. A. b. i.

UN-SIN, v. } Unsinning,—not doing or act-UNSI'NNING. } ing wrong or in disobedience to the laws of God; (not violating or neglecting them.)

Sometimes it [works] is taken for a perfect, actual, un-sin- ning obedience, sometimes for a sincere endeavour to please God.—Bp. Taylor, vol. iii. Ser. 3.

But it is to be wondered at, how repentance can again in favour as with an offended God; since when a sin is past, grief may lessen it, but not unsin it.—Feltham, pt. i. Res. 89.

UN-SINCERE. } i. e. In-sincere. Not free UNSI'NCERITY. } from alloy, from the mixture of impurity, of any thing foul, polluted, corrupt.

But clogg'd with guilt, the joy was unsincere.
Dryden. Ovid. Metam. b. x.

And therefore if a man bemoan his lot,
That after death his mouldring limbs shall rot,
Or flames, or jaws of beasts devour his mass,
Know, he's an unsincere, unthinking ass.

Id. Lucretius, b. iii.

I am now satisfied, that a spirit of sea salt may without any unsincerity be so prepared, as to dissolve the body of crude gold.—Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 350.

UN-SINNEW, v. } To deprive of strength, UNSI'NEWY. } might, firmness, vigour, energy.

In case any thing is excusable in them, it is not in regard of themselves, but in comparison with some other formless, unsinnewy writings.

Strype. Eccles. Mem. Edw. VI. (from Hayward.)

This skill wherewith you have so cunning been,
Unsinnew all your pow'rs, unmans you quite.

Daniel. Musophilus.

King. O for two special reasons,
Which may to you [perhaps] seeme much unsinnewed,
And yet to me they are strong.

Shakespeare. Hamlet, Act iv. sc. 7.

I said before, and I repeat it that the affected purity of the French, has unsinnew'd their heroic verse.

Dryden. Virgil, Ded.

We never knew this vain expence, before
Th' effeminated Grecians brought it o're:
Now toys and trifles from their Athens come,
And dates and pepper have unsinnew'd Rome.

Id. Persius, Sat. 6.

UN-SINGED. Not scorched or burned deeper than the surface.

— Whole woods of unctuous pine
Are fell'd for thee, and to thy glory shine;
By thee protected, with our naked soles,
Thro' flames unsing'd, we march, and tread the kindled coals.

Dryden. Virgil. Aeneis, b. xi.

UN-SINGLED. Not selected one by one; not selected or separated.

Quite otherwise the stags, a trembling train,
In herds unsingl'd, scour the dusty plain;
And a long chase, in open view maintain.

Dryden. Virgil. Aeneis, b. iv.

UN-SINKING. Not settling, or subsiding, or submerging.

Ye warbling fountains, and ye shady trees
Where Anxur feels the cool refreshing breeze
Blown off the sea, and all the dewy strand Lies cover'd with a smooth, unsinking sand.

Addison. Italy, (from Martial.)

UN-SITTING. (Perhaps) unsuited, or not sitting easily, becomingly, gracefully.

Ageyn a towne with walles stronge.

Gower. Con. A. b. vi.

The whyche pollicie, though it hadde taken place agaynst sauage and unskilfull people, yet was not Ariouistus so folysh to loke that it should preuaile against oure army too.

Goldinge. Cæsar, fol. 32.

It came to passe by meanes of thaduauntage that we had of the groud, through thunskylfulness of our enemyes that had ouerweried theselues before, and through the prowessse of our owne souldiors practysed in former conflicts, they were not able to abyde one pushe of vs, but by and by toured their backs.—Id. Ib. fol. 78.

When here and there we did them overthrow,
Striken with dread, unskilful of the place.

Surrey. Virgile. Æneis, b. ii.

Some with their nimbler joints that struck the warbling string,

In fingering some unskill'd, but only us'd to sing
Unto the other's harp.—Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 4.

But this makes us instead of running to God, to trust in unskilful physicians, or, like Saul, to run to a Pythonisse.

Bp. Taylor, vol. ii. Ser. 13.

The soldier then, in Græcian arts unskill'd
Returning rich with plunder from the field;
If cups of silver, or of gold be brought,
With jewels sett, and exquisitely wrought,
To glorious glittering straight the plate he turn'd,
And with the glittering spoil his horse adorn'd.

Congreve. Juvenal, Sat. 11.

This way of using a man's words, according to the propriety of the language, though it have not always the good fortune to be understood: yet most commonly leaves the blame of it on him, who is so unskilful in the language he speaks, as not to understand it, when made use of as it ought to be.—Locke. Hum. Underst. b. iii. c. 11.

The doctor is here confounded between two schemes, Socinian and Arian, and very unskilfully endeavours to tack both together; which is utterly impracticable.

Waterland. Works, vol. iii. p. 375.

In Muscovia itself, notwithstanding the unskilfulness of that rude people, Olearius informs us, that the ambassadors, to whom he was secretary, were presented at one time with two and twenty several sorts of drink.

Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 104.

She was clumsy in figure, and, to appearance, unskilfully managed; yet she outsailed us exceedingly.

Cook. Third Voyage, b. vi. c. 11.

UN-SKIRMISHED. Not fought or battled in parts or divisions; not engaged in slight or partial conflicts.

And ev'ry thing, if fit for human food,

Caus'd to be forag'd, to a wond'rous mass;

And more than this, his journies to foreslow,

He scarce one day unskirmish'd with doth go.

Drayton. Battle of Agincourt.

UN-SLAIN. Not stricken or beaten (sc. to death); not killed, or quelled, or put to death.

They leaue no cattaille unslain, no gardeigne vnrobbed, no wyld beaste vnchased, no nor maide vnfloured, and yet which is worse, they eat without payment, and they will not serue without paiement, nor no man can conuerse and endure among them.—Golden Boke, Let. 2.

At this, resumng heart, the prophet said:

Nor hecatombs unslain, nor vows unpaid,

On Greeks, accurs'd, this dire contagion bring.

Dryden. Homer. Iliad, b. i.

UN-SLAKED. Not slowed or caused to be sluggish; not retarded, relaxed, abated, damped.

— A man

Made up like Hercules, unslak'd with service.

Beaum. & Fletch. The Chances, Act ii. sc. 2.

Men for the most part are like unto the unslak't lime, which never heats till you throw water upon it; so they never grow warm in devotion till somewhat contrary to their wishes and disposition begins to afflict them.

Hales. Rem. Ser. on Luke, xviii. 1.

We wither from our youth, we gasp away—

Sick—sick; unfound the boon—unslak'd the thirst,

Though to the last, in verge of our decay,

Some phantom lures, such as we sought at first.

Byron. Child Harold, c. 4.

UN-SLAUGHTERED. i.e. Unslain, (qv.)

She feasts her young with blood; and, hovering o'er

Th' unslaughter'd host, enjoys the promis'd gore.

Young. Paraphrase on Job, v. 230.

— I shall not spare to unfold,

More pitiable still, the woful end

Of other Grecians, after mine destroy'd,

Who, 'scap'd, indeed, unslaughter'd from the field

Of Ilium. Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. xi.

UN-SLEEPING. } Not lulled, or reposed UNSLIPT. } in that drowsiness, or stupor of bodily and mental faculties, called sleep.

Till at the last an aged knight,

Which seemed a man in great thought,

Like as he sat all thing at nought,

With visage and ein all forwept,

And pale, as man long unslept.—Chaucer. Dreame.

— Roseat dew's dispos'd

All but the unsleeping eyes of God to rest,

Wide over all the plain, and wider farr

Than all this globous earth in plain outspread.

Milton. Paradise Lost, b. v.

— And the Spartan monarch

From the Byzantine maid's unsleeping spirit drew

An answer and his destiny—he slew

That which he loved, unknowing what he slew,

And died unpardon'd.—Byron. Manfred, Act ii. sc. 2.

UN-SLIPPING. Not moving from its firmness or fastness, entireness, security, uprightness, equipoise.

Agri. To hold you in perpetuall amitie,

To make you brothers, and to knit your hearts

With an unslipping knot, take Anthony,

Octavia to his wife.

Shakespeare. Anthony & Cleopatra, Act ii. sc. 2.

UN-SLUICE, v. To open the sluice (clausus), that which closes or shuts up. See SLUICE.

Now lofty Calidon in ruines lies;

All ages, all degrees unsluice their eyes;

And heav'n and earth resound with murmurs, groans and cries.

Dryden. Ovid. Metam. b. viii.

UN-SMIRCHED. Not smutted, dirtied, or defiled.

Laer. That drop of blood, that calmes

Proclames me bastard:

Cries cuckold to my father, brands the harlot

Euen heere betwene the chaste unsmirched brow

Of my true mother.—Shakespeare. Hamlet, Act iv. sc. 5.

UN-SMITTEN. Not struck, or beaten; not afflicted.

Ah me! too long I set at nought the swarm
Of friendly warnings, which around me flew;
And smil'd unsmitten.—Young. Complaint, Night 4.

UN-SMOOTH. Not plain; even, level, easy.

Thier. Can there be any way unsmooth, has end
So fair and good.

Beaum. & Fletch. Thierry & Theodoret, Act iii.

How may weak mortal ever hope to fill
His unsmooth tongue, and his depostrate style?

G. Fletcher. Christ's Victory & Triumph.

Pray how do you reconcile your—what shall I call it—your unsmooth address to those rules of decorum, that gentleness of manners, of which you say you know and teach the propriety as well as myself.—Knox. Ess. No. 161.

UN-SMOTE. Not stricken or beaten.

And the might of the Gentile, unsmote by the sword,
Hath melted like snow in the glance of the Lord!

Byron. Destruction of Sennacherib.

UN-SO'BER. } Not abstaining from drink UNSO'BERLY. } or drunkenness; from ebriety;
from intoxication; from any excess, or intemperance.

Her eyes, her talke, her pase, all were unsober, wyld, and wanton.—Bale. English Votaries, pt. ii.

And [too many there be] so unsoberly to reason and dispute, that when neyther part will give place to other, they fall to chiding and contention.

Homilies. Against Contention.

UN-SO'CIABLE. } Used actively. Not UNSO'CIABLY. } having, or holding, or UNSO'CIABILITY. } keeping, society, or com-UNSO'CIAL. } pany; not seeking company; not friendly; not participating in the feelings of others.

They that detract and hale him away to other themes, interposing interrogations and demands or otherwise move doubts or make oppositions as he speaketh, are troublesome and unfortunate hearers, such as be unso'ciable and accord not with an auditory: who besides that they receive no profit themselves, disturbe both the speaker and the speach also.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 47.

And he again, who is too sober, and abstinent altogether, becommeth unpleasant and unso'ciable, meeter indeed to be a schoole-master, and to have the bringing up of boies, than a president of a feast to other guests.—Id. Ib. p. 534.

Knowledge, softened with complacency and good-breeding will make a man equally beloved and respected; but when joined with a severe, distant, and unso'ciable temper, it creates rather fear than love.—Tatler, No. 149.

These are pleased with nothing that is not unso'ciablely sour, ill-natured, and troublesome.—L'Estrange.

Our critic confounds the nature and order of things, to make paganism passive and unprovoked at a principle which subverted the whole system of their religion, namely, the unso'ciability of the Christian faith; and yet mortally offended with a practice the most sacred and universal in paganism, namely, mysterious and nocturnal rites.

Warburton. Divine Legation, Pref. (ed. 1750.)

And bare, at once, Captivity display'd Stands scoffing through the never open'd-gate,
Which nothing through its bars admits, save day
And tasteless food, which I have eat alone,
Till its unso'cial bitterness is gone.

Byron. Lament of Tasso.

UN-SO'DDEN. Not seethed or boiled.

Than I will that the said xxiii. peces of fleshe be altered unto saltfiche, or stokfiche, unwatered and unso'deyn.

Fabyan. Chronycle. The Wall.

Lam. Why should we consume thus, and starve,
Have nothing to relieve us;
And she live there that bred all our miseries.
Unrosted, or unso'd?

Beaum. & Fletch. Sea-Voyage, Act iii.

UN-SOFT. } Not gentle, soothing, delicate, UNSOFTENED. } pliant.
Unsoftened,—Not mollified, soothed, assuaged, melted.

Whiche thicke bristles of his berd unsoft,
Like to the skin of houndfish, sharp as brere.

Chaucer. The Marchantes Tale, v. 9699.

My wofull herte is so to beate,
That all my wittes ben unsofte.—Gower. Con. A. b. iii.

Ah, God shield, man, that I should clime,
and learne to looke aloft:
This reade is rife, that oftentime great numbers fall vnsoft.

Spenser. Shepheard's Calender. July.

Even this infamous person is thought a fitter object of mercy, than Jesus: and now, impatient of delay, and un-softened by all these applications, they cry out, more vehemently than ever, Crucify him, crucify him.

Atterbury, vol. iii. Ser. 5.

UN-SO'ILED. Not dirtied, filed or fouled, defiled or defouled, polluted.

For every man judged him [Cleomenes] to be a skillful souldier, and a valiant captain, that with the power of one only city, did maintain war against the kingdom of Macedon, against all the people of Peloponnesus, and against the treasure of so great a king: and withall, not only to keep his own countrey of Laconia unsoiled, but far otherwise to hurt his enemies countries, and to take so many great cities of theirs.—North. Plutarch, p. 677.

Ang. Who will beleue thee Isabell?

My unsoild name, th' austerenesse of my life,
My vouch against you, and my place i' th' state,
Will so your accusation ouer-weigh,
That you shall stifle in your owne report,
And smell of calumnie.

Shakespeare. Meas. for Meas. Act ii. sc. 4.

Time, as he passes us, has a dove's wing,
Unsoild and swift, and of a silken sound.

Cowper. Task, b. iv.

UN-SOLD. Not given or delivered in exchange for money,—as distinguished from barter or an exchange of goods for goods.

And Petir seide to him, Anany, whi hath Sathanas temptid thin herte that thou lie to the Hooli Goost and to defraude of the prys of the feeld? whether it vnseeld was not thin, and whanne it was seeld it was in thi power? whi hast thou putt this thing in thin herte? thou hast not lied to men but to God.—Wiclif. Dedis, c. 5.

And if any remayned vnsoilde at the sayd xl. dayes ende, that then all suche marchaūdyce, beyng than vnsoilde, to be forfayted vnto the kyng.—Fabyan. Chronycle, an. 1424.

And because they should not be suspected, they left their house and shoppe, with some wares therein vnsoilde, in custody of a Dutch boy.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. p. 267.

UN-SO'LDIERED. } Not accoutred, ar-UNSO'LDIERLY. } rayed, like soldiers, in a soldier-like or military manner; not having a military appearance.

Who (to be short) put all his power to practise;
Fashion'd, and drew 'em up: but alas, so poorly,
So raggedly and loosely, so unsouldier'd,
The good duke blush'

Beaum. & Fletch. Loyal Subject. Act i. sc. 2.

It griev'd him to the guts, that they
For whom he 'ad fought so many a fray,
And serv'd with loss of blood so long,
Should offer such inhuman wrong;
Wrong of unsouldier-like condition,
For which he flung down his commission.

Hudibras, pt. i. c. 2.

The general should have turned his eyes away from so unsoldierly an action.—Rymer. On Tragedy, p. 134.

UN-SO'LEMN. Not serious, grave, devout, (as at the performance of ritual or ceremonious observances.)

Of whiche folke, the renome is neither ouer olde ne vnsolempne.—Chaucer. Boecius, b. i.

The evils that may be consequent to the strict adherence to the forms and proofs of law against the judges conscience, may be so great as to be intolerable, and much greater than can be supposed to be consequent to the following a certain unsollemn truth.—Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. i. c. 2.

Hither also are to be reduc'd, obligations by unsollemn stipulations, by command of parents.—Id. Ib. b. ii. c. 1.

UN-SOL'ICITED. } Not entreated, implored, UNSO'LICITOUS. } sued, urged earnestly, importunately or anxiously.

*Kin. I then mou'd you,
My Lord of Canterbury, and got your leaue
To make this present summons unsolicited.*

Shakespeare. Hen. VIII. Act ii. sc. 4.

How many unsollicitous hours should I bask away, warmed in bed by the sun's glorious beams, could I, like them, tumble from thence in a moment, when necessity obliges me to endure the torment of getting upon my legs.

Idler, No. 9.

Thus he became the founder and author of philosophy, and his descendants for a while preserved the same tenour of conduct and temper of mind; always inquisitive, always improving, sensible their greatest wisdom lay in the knowledge of their ignorance and unsollicitous to conceal it.

Search. Light of Nature, vol. ii. pt. ii. c. 23.

Whoever pays attention to minute circumstances of this kind, will perceive a correspondence between these, and the thoughts which suggest themselves to the mind, not only unsolicited, [?] but completely unexpected, and totally foreign from the particular subject which may be engaging our attention.—Cogan. Ethical Treatise, Note 11.

UN-SO'LID. } Not firm, strong, weighty, UNSO'LIDNESS. } grave, important.

Perhaps there would be found among them as many un-solid and corrupted judgments both in doctrine and life, as in any other two corporations of like bigness.

Milton. Apology for Smectymnus, § 10.

How few of us have that spiritualness that becomes the temples of the Holy Ghost or the stones of it! Base lusts are still lodging and ruling within us, and so our hearts are as cages of unclean birds and filthy spirits. Consider this as your happiness, and the unsolidness of other comforts and privileges.—Leighton. Com. on 1 Peter, c. 2.

And the extension of space (being nothing) but the continuity of unsolid, inseparable and immoveable parts.

Locke. Hum. Underst. b. ii. c. 4.

— Ah! whither now are fled,
Those dreams of greatness? those unsolid hopes
Of happiness? those longings after fame?
Those restless cares? those busy bustling days?

Thomson. Winter.

UN-SO'LVED. } Not loosened, or relaxed,
UNSO'LVIABLE. } explained or cleared.

If unsolvable otherwise, there is still the more assurance of undeniable demonstration.

More. On the Seven Churches, c. 10.

But as Virgil propounds a riddle which he leaves unsolv'd:
so I will give your Lordship another, and leave the exposition of it to your acute judgment.—Dryden. Virgil, Ded.

UN-SOOT, i.e. Unsweet.

All be that some found it full vnsoot.

Lidgate. Story of Thebes, pt. i.

And I, that whilome wont to frame my pipe,
Vnto the shifting of the shepheard's foote:
Sike follies now haue gathered, as too ripe,
And cast em out, as rotten and vnsoote.

Spenser. Shepheard's Calender. December.

UN-SOO'THED. Notallayed, assuaged, lulled, calmed.

And though his lonely habits threw of late Gloom o'er his chamber, cheerful was his gate;
For thence the wretched, ne'er unsoothed withdrew,
For them at least, his soul compassion knew.

Byron. Lara, c. 2.

UN-SOPH'ISTICATE. } Not counterfeited,
UNSOPH'ISTICATED. } falsified, adulterated.

If we will but with diligence search, we may surely finde the foot-steps of unsophisticate policy in all the passages of the whole pentateuch.

More. Defence of the Philosophical Cabbala, Introd.

And yet they, by obeying the unsophisticated dictates of nature, enjoyd the most valuable blessings of life; a vigorous health of body, with a constant serenity, and freedom of mind.—Dryden. Virgil. Georgics, Pref.

We preserve the whole of our feelings still native and intire, unsophisticated by pedantry and infidelity.

Burke. On the French Revolution.

UN-SO'RROWED. Not grieved, not regretted—painfully.

Val. What shall I do?

Cel. Dye like a fool unsorrow'd,

A bankrupt fool, that flings away his treasure.

Beaum. & Fletch. Monsieur Thomas, Act ii. sc. 4.

O Lord what heapes of grievous transgressions haue we committed, the best, the perfectest, the most righteous amongst vs all, and yet cleane passe them ouer unsorrowed for, and vnrepented of.

Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, b. v. § 73.

UN-SO'RTED. Not well disposed or appropriate, adapted, accommodated, suited.

The friends you haue named vnertaine, the time it selfe vnsorted, and your whole plot too light.

Shakespeare. 1 Pt. Hen. IV. Act ii. sc. 3.

Their ideas, which must be ever indistinct and repugnant, will lie in the brain vnsorted, and thrown together without order or coherence.—Watts. On the Mind, c. 19.

UN-SOUGHT. Not asked, searched, inquired, looked after.

So verily, each thyng vnsought,

He said as he had knowe my thought.—Chaucer. Dreame.

As Aristotle vpon Caldee
Ensampler of great auctoritee Unto kynge Alisaunder taught
Of thilke folke, that were vnsought Towarde her kyng for his pillage.—Gower. Con. A. b. vi.

And peradventure the man had amended and standen still in grace, if some euyl counsaile had not cūmen at hym, of which there was left vnsought no deuclishe inuencion or meane to send him.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 347.

Oft times it haps, that sorrowes of the mind
Find remedy vnsought, which seeking cannot find.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 4.

Is there a remedy in human wisdom,
My mind has left vnsought, to help this evil?

Rowe. Royal Convert, Act iii.

UN-SOUL. Not having soul or spirit or breath of life, animating or vital principle.

Death with most grim and griesly visage seene,
Yet is he nought but parting of the breath,
Ne ought to see, but like a shade to weene,
Vnbodied, vnsould, vnheard, vnseene.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vii. c. 7.

I know not what unsouled creatures they be, and so without conscience.—Skelton. Hist. of Don Quixote, pt. iv. c. 5.

UN-SOUND. } Not whole or wholesome,
UNSO'UNDNESS. } healthy, robust, strong, firm, UNSO'UNDLY. } well founded, or established;
not sane, wise, judicious.

Nor how that they, whereto should I write,
Embraced him in hir armes white,
Nor the gadering about him, or the prees,
Nor the sorrow that Polimites
Made in himselfe, to see him sore wounded,
His greeuous hurts, his sores eke vnsoounded.

Lidgate. Story of Thebes, pt. ii.

When all unsound, her sister of like mind
Thus spake she too: "O sister Anne, what dreams
Be these, that me, tormented thus afay?
What new quest this, that to our reafm is come?
What one of chere? how stout of heart in arms?"

Surrey. Virgile. Aeneis, b. iv.

So as ere long he had that knightes wound
Recured well, and made him whole againe:
But that same ladies hurt no herbe he found,
Which could redresse, for it was inwardly vnsoound.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 4.

[Ye have ever professed] all such partes of the word of God as doe any way concerne that discipline, no lesse unsoundly taught and interpreted by all authorized English pastors, then by antichrists factors themselves.

Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, § 8. Pref.

In his prayer he prays that the disloyalty of his protestant subjects may not be a hindrance to her love of the true religion; and never prays that the dissoluteness of his court, the scandals of his clergy, the unsoundness of his own judgment, &c. may not be found in the sight of God far greater hindrances to her conversion.

Milton. Answer to Eikon Basilike, § 7.

And if there be any thing weak and unsound in them [they] are willing to have it detected, that they themselves as well as others, may not lay any stress upon any received proposition beyond what the evidence of its truths will warrant and allow.—Locke. Conduct of the Underst. § 41.

The unsoundness of this principle has been so often exposed, and is so universally acknowledged, that a man must be an utter stranger to the principles, either of natural religion or Christianity, who suffers himself to be guided by it.—Spectator, No. 508.

UN-SO'UNDABLE. } That cannot be UNSO'UNDED. } searched, proved, tried, felt, searched to the depth or bottom of.

For Orpheus lute, was strung with poets sinewes,
Whose golden touch could soften steele and stones;
Make tygers tame, and huge leuiathans
Forsake vnsoounded deepes, to dance on sands.

Shakespeare. Two Gentlemen of Verona, Act iii. sc. 2.

So fled the swaine, from one, had Neptune spide
At halfe an ebbe, he would haue fac'd the tyde
To swell anew; whereon his carre should sweepe, Deckt with the riches of th' vnsoounded deepe.

Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b. ii. s. 1.

The fox barks not when he should steale the lambe,
No, no, my Soueraigne, Gloucester is a man
Vnsoounded yet, and full of deepe deceite.

Shakespeare. 2 Pt. Hen. VI. Act iii. sc. 1.

This is certain, that the thoughts of God are all no less just in themselves than deep and unsoundable by us.

Leighton. Com. on 1 Pet. c. 2.

UN-SOURED. Not being or becoming harsh, unpleasing, morose, severe; applied to the palate,
—not acid.

The first means of prohibiting or checking putrefaction, is cold: for so we see that meat and drink will last longer, unputrefied or unsoured, in winter, than in summer.

Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 341.

Secure those golden early joys,
That youth unsow'd with sorrow bears,
Ere withering time the taste destroys,
With sickness and unweildy years.
Dryden. Horace, b. i. Ode 9.

UN-SOW, or } This very old word is very UNSE'W, v. } common in speech, though not till now received into an English dictionary.

To remove; to destroy that which is sowed or joined together by intersertion, (sc. of string, thread, &c.)

Hue sholde unsuwe hure smok. and sette ther an heire
To afaiten hure flesch. that fers was to synne.
Piers Plouhman, p. 87.

Unsowed was the body soone,
As he that knewe, what was to doone.
Gower. Con. A. b. viii.

But the bare ground, with hoary mosse bestrowed,
Must be their bed, their pillow was unsowed,
And the fruits of the forrest was their feast:
For, their bad Stuard neither plough'd nor sowed,
Ne fed on flesh.—Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 4.

UN-SO'WED. } Not set or placed (applied UNSO'WN. } to seed set) to grow, germinate, vegetate.

If we have scarcity and dearth by the reason the ground is untilld and unsown, when God sendeth us rain and seasonable times, in what misery and calamity shal we be,
when he shal send us the contrary?
Styrpe. Eccles. Mem. Bp. of Rochester to Charles II.

— Didst not thou
Water with heav'nly show'rs her womb unsown,
And drop down clods and flow'rs?
G. Fletcher. Christ's Victory & Triumph.

They, trusting to the gods, plant not, or plough;
But earth unsow'd, untill'd, brings forth for them
All fruits, wheat, barley, and the vinous grape
Large-cluster'd, nourish'd by the show'rs of Jove.
Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. ix.

UN-SPA'RED. } Not preserved or re-
UNSPA'RING. } served, kept or withheld UNSPA'RINGLY. } from, abstained or forborne;
not used with parsimony.

Thou therefore on these herbs, and fruits, and flours
Feed first, on each beast next, and fish, and fowle,
No homely morsels, and whatever thing
The sithe of time mowes down, devour unspar'd.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. x.

No, no; unsparing Time will proudly send
A warrant unto wrath, that with one frown
Will all these mock'ries of vain-glory rend,
And make them (as before) ungrac'd, unknown.
Daniel. Musophilus.

The Lord unsparingly hath swallow'd
All Jacob's dwellings, and demolished
To ground the strength of Juda, and profan'd
The princes of the kingdom and the land.
Donne. Lamentations of Jeremy, c. 2.

What a pity it is, that he, [Frederick the great] who loved France so well as to chastise it, was not now alive, by an unsparing use of the rod (which indeed he would have spared little,) to give them another instance of his paternal affection.—Burke. On a Regicide Peace, Let. 4.

UN-SPA'RRED. Not closed, shut, stopped or made fast (with a spar,—usually a bar or beam.)

Looke if the gate be unsperde.—Chaucer. Rom. of the Rose.

Like as the bird within the cage inclosed,
The door unsparred, and the hawk without,
'Twixt death and prison piteously oppressed,
Whether for to choose, standeth in doubt.
Surrey. Whether Liberty by Loss of Life, &c. be preferred.

UN-SPEAK, v. } To recant any thing
UNSP'EAKABLE. } spoken.
UNSP'EAKABLY. } Unspeakable,—that may not be spoken, uttered, or told, or expressed;
above or beyond the powers of speech or utterance.

Leat it come to your remembraunce again, how that of al these things which have now been doen, he leaft not any one point unspeke of, or vtold aforehand whan he was yet in Galilee.—Udal. Luke, c. 24.

And the morow after brought them with great honor to Canturburie, where they were with due reuerence and unspeakable joy receiued of archbishop Richard.
Holinshed. Chronicles of England. Hen. II. an. 1129.

And therefore if a mai wyll ryghtly thynke of God him selfe, let his mynde ouerrunne all worldly creatures, and conceiue him onely alone whiche is highest, best, most excellent, most mightie, and him that, without exception, doth unspeakably excede all other thinges.
Fisher. A Godlie Treatise, &c.

— For euen now
I put mysele to thy direction, and Unspeake mine owne detraction.
Shakespeare. Macbeth, Act iv. sc. 3.

O huge and most unspeakable impression
Of loues deepe wound, that pierst the pitious hart
Of that deare Lord with so entire affection,
And sharply launching euery inner part,
Dolours of death into his soule did dart.
Spenser. An Hymne of Heauenly Loue.

What is this, besides tyranny, but to turn nature upside down, to make both religion, and the mind of man wait upon the slavish errands of the body, and not the body to follow either the sanctity or the sovereignty of the mind, unspeakably wrong'd, and with all equity complaining?
Milton. Tetrachordon.

It must be certainly a state unspeakably anxious and uncomfortable to find one's self dragged to the grave, without knowing whether the last trumpet shall call him thence to heaven, or to hell.—Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 380.

Nevertheless the very sound of a miserable or an insensible Deity is shocking to the ear and repugnant to all our notions, nor was there ever any one who admitted the Being of a God that did not conceiue him unspeakably happy.—Search. Light of Nature, vol. ii. pt. i. c. 15.

Well Madam, what if, after all this sparring,
We both agree, like friends, to end our jarring?
And that our friendship may remain unbroken,
What if we leave the epilogue unspeken?
Goldsmith. Epilogue to the Sisters.

UN-SPE'CIFIED. Not named particularly;
not distinctly set forth; not particularized.

Now neighbour Turfe, the cause why you are call'd
Before me by my warrant, but unspecified,
Is this.
B. Jonson. Tale of a Tub, Act iv. sc. 1.

Surely were it not requisite to have been concealed, it had not passed unspecified.
Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. vii. c. 1.

UN-SPE'CULATIVE. Who cannot, who do not look, view, take a view, of general consequences, or inferences; who do not form theories.

Some unspeculative men may not have the skill to examine their assertion.—Government of the Tongues.

UN-SPED. } Not having proceeded or ad-UNSP'EDFUL. } vanced to a prosperous issue;
not having succeeded or prospered.

Ne in ydel ne in vaine ne ben ther not put in God hope and praiers, that ne mowen not ben unspedeful ne without effecte, whan they ben rightfu. —Chaucer. Astrolabie.

And to the kynge whan he cam nigh,
He tolde of that he herde and sigh,
Howe that the pryncce of Tyre is fled.
So he was come ageyn unsped. —Gower. Con. A. b. viii.

His heart was so agreeable to hym, that neyther the highe businesses of them: nor for all the affayres of his house, he would not leue one of thempire unsped. —Golden Boke, c. 38.

Thus Diomedes, Venulus withdraws:
Unsped the service of the common cause.
Garth. Ovid. Metam. b. xiv.

UN-SPENT. Not distributed, disposed of, disbursed, parted with, exhausted, consumed.

But of thys frugall, and sparyng feast of Jesus, there are leaft seuen baskettes full of broken meate, unspent.
Udal. Marke, c. 8.

The thirtieth [escuage] within foure yeares last past, or thereabouts, granted to him, they thought remained unspent, because it could not be vnderstood about what neces-sarie affaires for the common-wealthe it should be laid forth and imploied.—Holinshed. Chron. Hen. III. an. 1242.

Thy curse on Piercy angry Heavens prevent,
Who have not one curse leaft, on him unspent.
Drayton. Rich. II. to Q. Elizabeth.

UN-SPHERE, v. To remove, to withdraw from the sphere, orb, or globe.

Her. Verely?
You put me off with limber vowes: but I.
Though you would seek t' unsphere the stars with oaths,
Should yet say, sir, no going.
Shakespeare. Winter's Tale, Act i. sc. 2.

Where I may oft out-watch the bear,
With thrice great Hermes, or unsphere
The spirit of Plato, to unfold
What worlds, or what vast regions hold
The immortal mind, that hath forsok
Her mansion in this fleshly nook.—Milton. Il Penseroso.

UN-SPIDE. See UNESPIED.

— And Coelia now, (That had the fame for her white arched brow
While all her lovely fellowes busied were
In picking off the jems from Tellus' haire,
Made tow'rds the creeke, where Philocel, unspide,
(Or maid or shepherd that their May-games plide) Receiv'd his wish'd-for Coelia.
Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b. ii. s. 5.

But first with narrow search I must walk round
This garden, and no corner leave unspid.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. iv.

I thought them such, and went prepar'd to pry,
And trace the charmer, with a critic's eye;
Resolv'd to find some fault, before unspyd,
And disappointed, if but satisfy'd.
Tickell. The Fatal Curiosity

UN-SPILT. Not wasted, scattered, shed.

To borrow to-day, and to-morrow to miss,
For lender and borrower, noyance it is;
Then have of your own, without lending unspilt,
What followeth needful, here learn if thou wilt.
Tusser. September's Husbandry.

That blood, which thou and thy great grandsire shed,
And all that since these sister nations bled,
Had been unspilt, and happy Edward known
That all the blood he spilt, had been his own.
Denham. Cooper's Hill.

UN-SPI'RIT, v. } See To DISPIRIT. To UNSPI'RITUAL. } remove, take away, or UNSPI'RITUALIZE, v. } deprive of spirit, heart, or courage.

Unspiritualize,—to deprive of spirituality, or a superiority to, a disregard of, carnal or worldly things.

What could the frailty of Arcadius Suggest, to unspirit him so much, as not
To fly to her embraces.
Beaum. & Fletch. Coronation, Act iii.

An ox will relish the tender flesh of kids with as much gust and appetite, as an unspiritual and unsanctified man will do the discourses of angels or of an apostle, if he should come to preach the secrets of the gospel.
Bp. Taylor, vol. ii. Ser. 1.

Now there are several enjoyments in themselves very lawful, and yet such, as upon a free unwary use of them, will by degrees certainly indispose and unspiritualize the mind, dulling its appetite, and taking off its edge and relish to the things of God.—South, vol. vi. Ser. 7.

And Circumstance, that unspiritual god
And miscreator, makes and helps along
Our coming evils with a crutch-like rod, Whose touch turns Hope to dust,—the dust we all have trod.
Byron. Child Harold, c. 4.

UN-SPLE'ENED. Deprived, destitute of a spleen.

Vas. Yet the villainy of words, Signior Florio, may be such, as would make any unspleened dove cholerick.
Ford. 'Tis Pity She's a Whore, Act i. sc. 2.

UN-SPO'ILED. Not plundered, pillaged, or bereaved; not robbed, harmed, injured, corrupted.

After that victory Amyntas besieged Memphis, and his menne destroyed so all the countrey thereabouts, that they lefte nothing unspoyled.—Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 52.

Then in a hollow cloud, my self will aid,
To bear the breathless body of my maid:
Unspoil'd shall be her arms, and unprophan'd
Her holy limbs with any human hand:
And in a marble tomb laid in her native land,
Dryden. Virgil. Encis, b. x.

Oh teach us, Bathurst! yet unspoil'd by wealth!
That secret rare, between th' extremes to move
Of mad good-nature, and of mean self love.
Pope. Moral Essays, Ep. 1.

An unspoiled boy, at a classical school, possessing talent and sensibility, is daily, and even hourly, nourished with sentimental food, which causes growth in every thing generous and noble.—Knox. Remarks on Grammar Schools.

UN-SPONTA'NEOUS. Not willing or voluntary.

— Then Pallas struck
The suitors with delirium; wide they stretch'd
Their jaws with unspontaneous laughter loud;
Their meat dripp'd blood; tears fill'd their eyes, and dire Presages of approaching wo, their hearts.
Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. xx.

UN-SPO'TTED. } Not specked, blotted, UNSPOT'TEDNESS. } stained—with marks of defilement or impurity.

Witynge that not bi corruptible gold eithir siluer ye ben bought agen of youre veyne lyuynge of fadris tradicioun, but bi the precious blood as of the lombe undefouled and un-spotted.—Wiclif. 1 Pet. c. 1.

Goddess determinacion was, to be reconciled to mankynde, pardoned of all hys offences thorow fayth, by the sacrifice of an unspotted lambe.—Udal. Marke, c. 9.

Ne ioy of ought that vnder heauen doth houe,
can comfort me, but her owne ioyous sight:
Whose sweet aspect both God and man can moue,
in her unspotted pleasauns to delight.—Spenser, son. 89.

What sins have I committed, chaste Diana,
That my unspotted youth must now be soil'd
With blood of princes?
Beaum. & Fletcher. Two Noble Kinsmen, Act iv. sc. 2.

In these opinions it would be more religion to advise well, lest we make ourselves juster than God, by censuring rashly that for sin which his unspotted law without rebuke allows, and his people without being conscious of displeasing him have used.—Milton. Doct. & Disc. of Divorce, b. ii. c. 13.

'Tis charity and unspottedness that is the pure and un-defiled religion.—Feltham, pt. ii. Res. 3.

Unhappy Dryden!—In all Charles' days,
Roscommon only boasts unspotted bays;
And in our own (excuse some courtly strains)
No whiter page than Addison remains.
Pope. Imitation of Horace, b. ii.

UN-SPIN, v. To undo the spinning.

Oh cruell fates! the which so soone,
his vitall thred unspounne.
Holinshed. Historie of Scotland, an. 1577.

UN-SQUARED. Not worked into square; not worked into proportion, proportionate or regular form; not measured, or regulated, or moderated.

Yet is an idole indeede nothing els, but either a piece of tymber, or a stone, and hathe no more Godhead in it, than an other unsquared piece of tymber, or an vnwrought stone.
Udal. 1 Cor. c. 8.

— And when he speakes,
Tis like a chime a mending. With tearmes unsquar'd,
Which from the tongue of roaring Typhon dropt,
Would seemes Hyperboles.
Shakespeare. Troyl. & Cress. Act i. sc. 3.

UN-SQUEEZED. Not pressed, compressed, or oppressed.

O, far superior Afric's sable sons,
By merchant pilfer'd, to these willing slaves!
And rich as unsqueez'd favourite, to them,
Is he who can his virtue boast alone!—Thomson. Liberty.

UN-STABLE. } That cannot, or may not UNSTABLENESS. } stand; that is not constant, UNSTABLISHED. } steady, or steadfast; firm or strong to stand;—weak, feeble.

Unstablished (in Chaucer) is an instance of un used augmentatively, as in unloose, unstrip, untrim, &c.

That he made of the olde lawes is chartre atte laste,
To holde uor him & uor is eirs, & aselede is vaste inou,
As suththe, as unstable man, withsede & with drou.
R. Gloucester, p. 510.

Stonde he nevere so styfliche. thorgh sterynge of the bote
He bendeth and boweth, the body his unstable.
Piers Ploughman, p. 167.

Til into this our we hungren and thirsten and ben nakid, and ben smytyn with buffatis, and we ben unstable and we traueilen worchyng with oure hondis.
Wiclif. 1 Corynth. c. 4.

In whiche ben summe harde thingis to undirstonde, which unwise and unstable men deprauen, as also thei doen othere scripturis to her owne perdition.
Id. 2 Petir, c. 3.

Amonge which are manye thynges harde to be vnder-stand, which they that are vnlearned and unstable peruert, as they doo othere scriptures vnto theyr owne destruccion.
Bible, 1551. Ib.

I seie that thing that is of man for the unstableness of ghoure fleisch.—Wiclif. Romayns, c. 6.

For the witte comprehendeth without forth, the figure of the bodie of man, that is unestablished [i. e. en-established, constitutam] in the matter subiect.—Chaucer. Boecius, b. v.

Than sheweth it well, that the unstableness of fortune
maie not attaine to receiue verie blisfulnesse.—Id. Ib. b. ii.

For Christ himselfe maketh knowlageing,
That no man maie to geder serue
God and the worlde, but if he swerue
Frowarde that one, and stonde unstable.
Gower. Con. A. Prol.

Unstable dream! according to the place,
Be stedfast once, or else at least be true:
By tasted sweetness make me not to rue
The sudden loss of thy false, feigned grace.
Wyat. The Lover having dreamed, &c.

Wherof whan some of theym consyderyd the malicious and unstable condicions of hym, in auoyding more dauger [that] to theyr cuntry by his meanys myght ensue, [they] fell suddenly vpon hym, & slewe hym.
Fabyan. Chronycle, c. 153.

To whom it was by hym answered, that he greatly meruayled of theyr unstableness, that they had chosen theym a kyng, and now so sodaynly wolde haue hym deposyd.
Id. Ib. c. 86.

There is a great inadvertency and inconsiderateness, incogitancy, unstableness, vanity, love of pleasures, easiness to be corrupted in youth.
Hale. Cont. vol. ii. On Eccles. xii. 1.

UN-STAID. } Not steady, constant, firm,
UNSTAYEDNESS. } stable; firmly set or com-UNSTAYING. } posed.
Unstaying,—not remaining, abiding, or continuing.

Which to haue conceiled had tended more to the opinion of vertue, than to lash out whatsoever his unstaid mind afforded.—Holinshed. Chron. Rich. II. an. 1397.

Besides his eyes sometimes even great with tears, the oft changing of his colour, with a kind of shaking unstayedness over all his body, he might see in his countenance some great determination mixed with fear.—Sidney. Arcadia, b. i.

With that, he fiercely at him flew, and layd
On hideous strokes with most importune might,
That oft he made him stagger as unstay'd,
And oft recule to shunne his sharpe despight.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 1.

Next he saith, that common discontents make these breaches in unstaid minds, and men given to change.
Milton. Colasterion.

"Faire queene, attend; but oh! I feare," quoth he,
"Ere I have ended my sad history,
Unstaying time may bring on his last houre,
And so defraud us of thy wished poure."
Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b. ii. s. 5.

UN-STAINED. Not tinged, dyed, imbued; sullied.

Perd. Your praises are too large: but that your youth
And the true blood which peepes fairely through't,
Do plainly glue you out an unstain'd shepherd.
Shakespeare. Winter's Tale, Act iv. sc. 4.

Other sins draw their being from that original corruption which we drew from our parents, but this [spiritual pride] may seem to be the mother of that; as by which even natures unstained and in their primitive purity may most easily fall.
Hales. Rem. Ser. on Matt. xxvi. 75.

— O, better Sun!
Sun of mankind! by whom the cloudy north,
Sublim'd, not envies Languedocian skies,
That, unstain'd ether all, diffusive smile.
Thomson. Liberty.

UN-STANCHABLE. } Not stayed or stop-UNSTANCHED. } ped; dammed, obstructed.

And for thy is it although renome as of long tyme, as euer the liste to thinke, wer thought, to the regard of the eternite, that is [unstaunched] and infinite, inexhausta], it ne should, not ouelie seme littel, but plainlie right nought.
Chaucer. Boecius, b. ii.

Gonz. I'll warrant him for drowning, though the ship were no stronger than a nutt-shell, and as leaky as an un- stanch'd wench.—Shakespeare. Tempest, Act i. sc. 1.

UN-STATE, v. To divest, or deprive of rank or quality.

Eno. Yes like enough: hye battel'd Caesar will Unstate his happinesse, and be stag'd to th' shew Against a sword.
Shakespeare. Anthony & Cleopatra, Act iii. sc. 11.

UN-STATUTABLE. Not according or agreeable to statute law.

That plea did not avail, although the lease were notoriously unstatutable, the rent reserved, being not a seventh part of the real value: yet the jury upon their oaths very gravely found it to be according to the statute.
Swift. On the Power of the Bishops.

UN-STEADFAST. } Not placed fast, firmly UNSTEADFASTNESS. } or fixedly; not firm or UNSTEADY. } fixed in place; keeping,
UNSTEADILY. } holding, standing firm;
UNSTEADINESS. } not constant, esta-blish'd, determin'd, positively;—changeable, wavering, fickle.

Al reason reproveth such imparfit puple
And halt them unstedfast.
Piers Ploughman, p. 57.

And he was not maad unstedfast in the bileue, neither he biheeld his bodi thanne nygh deed whanne he was almost of an hundrid gheer, ne the wombe of sare nygh need.
Wiclif. Romayns, c. 4.

But whanne I wolde this thing, wher I uside unstedfast- nesse? eithir tho thingis that I thenke I thenke afir the fleisch, that at me be it is and it is not?—Id. 2 Corynth, c. 1.

Wherefore I doubt her brittlenes,
Her variance and unsteadfastnes,
So that I am as yet afraid.
Chaucer. Dreame.

Anon as the kyng harde of ye rebellion of ye Scottes, which to hym was no great wonder, consyderynge theyr great unstedfastnesse, wrote his letters vnto syr Henry Persy erle of Northumberland.—Fabyan. Chronycle, an. 1298.

Ferther all they fled for feare when theyr mayster Chryst was tak'd and brought to iudgement, Lo how great pusylla-nimitye, cowardnes and unstedfastnes was in them.
Fisher. Seuen Psalmes, Ps. 143. pt. i.

And thinke that such mishap, as chaunst to me,
May happen vnto the most happiest wight,
For all mens states alike unstedfast be.
Spenser. Daphnida.

Such is the unquietnesse and unsteadfastnesse of some dispositions, affecting every yeer new forms of things, as, if they should be followed in their unconstaney, would make all actions of state ridiculous and contemptible.
Bp. Hall. An Humble Remonstrance.

"Forward, stout French, your valours, and advance,
By taking vengeance for our fathers slain,
And strongly fix the diadem of France,
Which to this day unsteady doth remain."
Drayton. Battle of Agincourt.

Names must be of a very unsteady and various meaning, if the ideas they stand for be referred to standards without us, that either cannot be known at all, or can be known but imperfectly and uncertainly.
Locke. Hum. Underst. b. iii. c. 9.

Words fail in the first of these ends, and lay not open one man's ideas to another's view: 1. When men have names in their mouths without any determinate ideas in their minds, whereof they are the sign: or, 2. When they apply the common received names of any language of ideas, to which the common use of that language does not apply them: or,
3. When they apply them very unsteddily, making them stand now for one, and by and by for another idea.
Id. Ib. c. 10.

Under these circumstances the monster is the genuine issue: that is, in the same circumstances there would always be the same kind of production. And therefore if things are now and then mis-shaped, this infers no unstea- diness or mistake in nature.
Wollaston. Religion of Nature, s. 5.

If I have never been settled with respect to colouring, let it at the same time be remembered, that my unsteadiness in this respect proceeded from an inordinate desire to possess every kind of excellence that I saw in the works of others.
Malone. Life of Reynolds.

UN-STEEPED. Not merged, drenched, soaked.

Other wheat was sown unsteeped, but watered twice a day.
Bacon. Naturali Historie.

UN-STIFLED. Not stopped or suppressed,
(by stuffing,) not smothered.

Art, brainless Art! our furious charioteer (For Nature's voice unstifled would recall) Drives headlong towards the precipice of death;
Death most our dread; death thus more dreadful made.
Young. Complaint, Night 2.

UN-STIMULATED. Not pricked, instigated, goaded, incited.

He wept for anger; wept to see the mares,
Swift from the first, now swifter, and his own Unstimulated coursers thrown behind.
Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. xxiii.

UN-STIRRED. } Not moved, excited, UNSTIRRING. } roused.

Like the deaf adder, they rest unstirr'd by the most powerful charm of the world.—Courtesie.
Feltham. On Luke, xiv. 20.

Other men may seem clear as long as they are unstirred, but move and trouble them, and the mud arises.
Leighton. Com. on 1 Pet. c. 2.

Be active in all good within thy reach: as this is a sign of the spiritual life, so it is a helper and a friend to it. A slothful unstirring life, will make a sickly unhealthy life.
Id. Ib. c. 4.

UNS

UN-STOCK, v. To remove, to deprive of that which sticks, fixes, or holds fixed or fast; or by which any thing is held fixed or fast.

Thus when he hath his cofer loken,
It shall not after ben unstoken,
But when he list to haue a sight
Of golde, howe that he shineth bright,
That he theron maie loke and muse.—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

— The Trojans fast
Fell to their work, from the shore to unstock
High rigged ships. Surrey. Virgile. Æneis, b. iv.

Wee came to an anker in foule ground and lost the same, and lay all that night a drift, because we had nowe but two ankers left vs, which were unstocked and in hold.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. p. 107.

UN-STO'CKINGED. Destitute of stockings; bare.

He found her in a white cymar of silk lined with furs,
her little feet unstockinged and hastily thrust into slippers.
Scott. Kenilworth, c. 7.

UN-STO'OPING. Not leaning or bending, inclining or declining.

Now by nry scepter's awe, I make a vow,
Such neighbour-neerensse to our sacred blood,
Should nothing priuiledge him, nor partialize
The vn-stooping firmnesse of my vpriht soule.
Shakespeare. Rich. II. Act i. sc. 1.

And there they stand, as stands a lofty mind,
Worn, but unstooping to the baser crowd.
Byron. Childe Harold, c. 3.

UN-STOP, v. To remove, to take away, that which blocks or closes up, fills up, dams up.

After that unstop the quill that goes down into the first dog's jugular vein, and the other quill coming out of the other dog's artery.—Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 149.

Ben. Lawyer, I believe there's many a cranny and leak *unstop*d in your conscience.—Congreve. Love for Love, Act v.

It was prophesied of our Lord, that when he should come to save those that were of a fearful heart, "the eyes of the blind should be opened, and the ears of the deaf should be unstopped; that the lame man should leap as the hart, and the tongue of the dumb should sing."
Bp. Horsley, vol. i. Ser. 12.

UN-STO'RMED. Not assailed or assaulted, seized or taken by violence.

To you the hero of my verse reveals His great designs, to you in council tells His inmost thoughts, determining the doom
Of towns unstorm'd, and battles yet to come.
Addison. To Lord Keeper Somers.

UN-STRAIN, v. To undo or remove the tightness, the close contraction.

Then, to prison of the night
Did condemn those sisters bright,
There for ever to remain,
'Less they could the knot unstrain
Of a riddle, which she put Darker, than where they are shut.
B. Jonson. Love freed from Folly.

The fearless British priests, under an aged oak,
Taking a milk-white bull, unstrained with the yoke,
And with an ax of gold, from that Jove sacred tree
The mistleto cut down; then with a bended knee
On th' unhew'd altar laid, put to the hallow'd fires.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 9.

UN-STRAIT'ENED. Not constrained, contracted, narrowed.

The eternal wisdom, from whence we derive our beings, enriched us with all these ennoblements that were suitable to the measures of an unstrained goodness, and the capacity of such a creature.
Glanvill. Vanity of Dogmatism, c. 1.

UN-STRENGTHENED. Not having ability, power, force, vigour, firmness, added, or given.

Surely the church of God in this businesse is neither of capacitie, I trust, so weake, nor so vnstrengthened, I know, with authoritie from aboue, but that her lawes may exact obedience at the hands of her owne children, and enioyne gain-sayers silence, giuing them roundly to vnderstand, that where our dutie is submission, weake oppositions betaken pride.—Hooker. Eccles. Politie, b. v. § 8.

UN-STRE'WED. Not scattered, dispersed, or spread.

Then, where he found, more distant from the ships
Clear space, unstrew'd with bodies on the bank
Of gulfy Xanthus, Priam's glorious son
Co'uen'd a council of the chiefs of Troy.
Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. viii.

— From the foss
Emerging, in a vacant space they sat, Unstrewd with bodies of the slain. Id. Ib. b. x.

UNS

UN-STRING, v. To remove, to take away, loose or relax—the string, or cord.

Our mute harpes untun'd, unstrung,
Up we hung
On greene willowes neere beside us;
Where we sitting all forlorne,
Thus in scorn
Our proud spoylers 'gan deride us.—Donne, Ps. 137.

Still would the willing muse aspire,
With transport still her strains prolong;
But fear unstrings the trembling lyre,
And admiration stops her song.
Congreve. Ode to Q. Anna.

He has disarmed his afflictions, unstrung his miseries:
and though he has not the proper happiness of the world, yet he has the greatest that is to be enjoyed in it.
South, vol. ii. Ser. 12.

The thing is possible, but still the instruments might play in concert. But if ours be unstrung, yours will be hung up on a peg; and both will be mute for ever.
Burke. Letter to Thomas Burgh, Esq.

UN-STRUCK. Not smitten, hit, or beaten.

— Over dank, and dry,
They journey toilsome, unfatigued with length
Of march, unstruck with horror at the sight
Of Alpine ridges bleak, high-stretching hills,
All white with summer's snows.—J. Philips. Blenheim.

For who can gaze
On restless seas,
Unstruck with life's more restless state?—Young. Ocean.

UN-STUDIED. Not inured to, not effected or produced by exertion, exercise, labour of mind, of thought or forethought.

[Their] necessary shifts have long inur'd them to cloak the defects of their unstudied years, and hatred now to learn, under the appearance of a grave solidity, which estimation they have gain'd among weak perceivers.
Milton. Tetrachordon.

See on the hallow'd hour that none intrude,
Save a few chosen friends, who sometimes deign
To bless my humble roof, with sense refin'd,
Learning digested well, exalted faith,
Unstudy'd wit, and humour ever gay.—Thomson. Winter.

Solomon's song, difficult as it is to be interpreted, may be read with delight, even if we attend to little else but the brilliancy of the diction; and it is a circumstance which increases its grace, that it appears to be quite unstudied.
Knox. Ess. No. 49.

UN-STUFFED. Not stowed or closely packed, not crammed.

Care keeps his watch in euery old mans eye,
And where Care lodges, sleepe will neuer lye:
But where vnbruised youth with *vnstuf*d braine
Doth couch his lims, there, golden sleepe doth raigne.
Shakespeare. Romeo & Juliet, Act ii. sc. 3.

UN-SUBDUED. Not brought under; not brought to submission; not subjugated or subjected.

In vain do we boast of the cross of Christ, as that whereby the guilt of our sins is abolished, if the power of them still remains unsubdued in us.—Atterbury, vol. iv. Ser. 6.

UN-SUBJECT. Not cast low or under; not submitted, subservient, or subordinate.

God makes thee king of our estates; but we Do make thee king of our affection,
King of our love: a passion born more free,
And most unsubject to dominion.
Daniel. Panegyrick to K. Charles II.

Though no manner of person or cause be unsubject unto the king's power, yet so is the power of the king over all, and in all limited, that unto all his proceedings the law itself is a rule.—Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, b. viii.

UN-SUBMITTING. } Not yielding, or con-
UNSUBMISSIVE. } ceding, or bending.

A Hampden too is thine, illustrious land,
Wise, strenuous, firm, of unsubmitting soul,
Who stem'd the torrent of a downward age
To slavery prone, and bade thee rise again,
In all thy native pomp of freedom bold.
Thomson. Summer.

But so much the more intolerable is such a stubborn unsubmissive frame of spirit in men; when the whole host of the creation besides, are with the highest readiness and alacrity continually intent upon the execution of their great master's commands.—South, vol. x. Ser. 5.

UN-SUBORDINATE. Not being of a lower or inferior order, rank, or station.

Is not the chief of them accus'd out of his own book, and his late canons, to affect a certain unquestionable patri-archate, independent and unsubordinate to the crown?
Milton. Of Reformation in England, b. ii.

UNS

UN-SUBORNED. Not procured (sc.) by persuasion or allurement.

Such a tone, as I guessed the minister would have taken,
I am very sure, is the true, unsuborned, unsophisticated language of genuine natural feeling under the smart of patience exhausted and abused.
Burke. On a Regicide Peace, Let. 3.

UN-SUBSTANTIAL. See INSUBSTANTIAL.
Not able to stand under or support; having no steadiness, firmness, or solidity.

L. J. Gray. Then there's an end of greatness: the vain dream
Of empire, and the crown that danc'd before me,
With all those unsubstantial empty forms;
Waiting in idle mockery about us.
Rowe. Lady Jane Gray, Act iv.

They taste not unlike a green cocoa nut, and, like them, probably they yield a nutriment that is watery and unsubstantial.—Cook. First Voyage, b. iii. c. 9.

UN-SUCCE'EDABLE. } In Brown,—that UNSUCCESS'ED. } could not succeed or prosper, attain or reach, its object. In Milton, —having no successor; and, consequentially, possessed or retained for ever.

And therefore when in the temptation of Christ he [Satan] played upon the fallacy, and thought to deceive the author of truth, the method of this proceeding arose from the uncertainty of his divinity; whereof had he remained assured, he had continued silent; nor would his discretion attempt so unsucceedable a temptation.
Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. i. c. 2.

— Unjust thou saist
Flatly unjust, to bind with laws the free,
And equal over equals to let reign,
One over all with unsucceeded power.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. v.

UN-SUCCE'SSFUL. } Not having reached
UNSUCCESS'SFULLY. } or attained the end UNSUCCESS'SSFULNESS. } in view, the object, the good sought or desired; not having good fortune; not fortunate, prosperous, or happy.

Assembl'd angels, and ye powers return'd
From unsuccessful charge, be not dismay'd,
Nor troubl'd at these tidings from the earth,
Which your sincerest care could not prevent.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. x.

Nor was the heroic cause unsuccessfully defended to all Christendom, against the tongue of a famous and thought invincible adversary.
Id. Way to establish a Free Commonwealth.

And who were most to blame in the unsuccessfulness of that treaty, his appeal is to God's decision; believing to be very excusable at that tribunal.
Id. Answer to Eikon Basilike, § 18.

[The good duke of Somerset took all pains] to put a stop to the impoverishing and dispiriting of the poor; and to heal their discontents, which he foresaw also a great danger in; yet such was the greedy avarice of the gentry, that all these endeavours proved unsuccessful.
Styrie. Eccles. Mem. Edw. VI. an. 1548.

The society, after inviting unsuccessfully a Dutch and an English minister, who lived in the neighbourhood of those nations, to undertake their conversion, prevailed on the Rev. Mr. Thoroughgood Moor to go.
Secker. Works, vol. vi. p. 457.

UN-SU'CCOURABLE. } That cannot be UNSU'CCOURED. } assisted, aided, helped, relieved.

In the end some one or other might do an unsuccourable mischief.—Sidney. Arcadia, b. iv.

Him wretched thrall into his dungeon brought,
Where he remains, of all unsuccour'd and *vn*sought.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 8.

— Keep out th' intercourse of wrong and pride,
That they ingulf not up unsuccour'd right,
By th' extreme current of licentious might.
Daniel. To Sir T. Egerton.

UN-SU'CKED. Not drawn or drained (as the teats of the mother by the mouth of its young.)

When from the boughes a savourie odour blow'n,
Grateful to appetite, more pleas'd my sense
Then smell of sweetest fennel or the teats
Of ewe or goat dropping with milk at eevn, Unuckt of lamb or kid, that tend thir play.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ix.

UN-SU'FFERABLE. } See INSUFFERABLE.
UNSU'FFERABLY. } That cannot be borne,
UNSU'FFERED. } supported, sustained,
UNSU'FFERING. } tolerated, or endured.

She vseth ful flatteryng familiarite with hem that she enforceth to begile, so long, til that she confound with unsufferable sorrow, hem that she hath lefe in dispaire vnpurueied.—Chaucer. Boecius, b. ii.

Now in this your deede, the maner is vngodlye, the thing unsufferable, the cause wicked.
Sir J. Cheeke. Hurt of Sedition.

For your welth I leaue nothyng vndone and unsuffered, but ye towarde me agayne beare not lyke loue.
Udal. 2 Corinthians, c. 6.

It is unjust that any ordinance, ordain'd to the good and comfort of man where that end is missing, without his fault, should be forc'd upon him to an unsufferable misery and discomfort, if not commonly ruin.
Milton. Tetrachordon.

This wench methinks, does look so unsufferably ugly.
Vanburgh. Provoked Wife, Act i.

Bleat out afresh, ye hills: ye mossy rocks,
Retain the sound: the broad responsive lowe,
Ye vallies, raise: for the Great Shepherd reigns;
And his unsuffering kingdom yet will come.
Thomson. A Hymn.

But though I say nothing to your own conduct, that of your servants is unsufferable. Their manner of drinking is setting a very bad example in this house.
Goldsmith. She Stoops to Conquer, Act iv.

UN-SUFFICIENT. See INSUFFICIENT.
UN-SUFFICIENTLY. } Not adequate; not UN-SUFFICIENCY. } equal, fit, able, or ca-
UN-SUFFICIENCY. } pable; not enough.

And also I renounce the name, worshyp & regaly, and kyngely hyghnesse, clerelye, frelye, singulerlye and hooly, in the moost best maner and fourme that I may, and with dede & worde I leue of and resygne theym, goo frome theym for euermore, sauynge alwey to my successouris, kynages of Englobe, all the rightys, pryuylegess and appurtenauncys to the sayde kyngedome and lordeshyppes aboue-sayde, belongynge and apperteynyng: for weale I wote, and knowlege, and deme my selfe to be and haue ben unsufficyent and vnable, and also vnprofytable.
Fabyan. Chronicle, an. 1398.

Lawes though both ordeined of God him selfe, and the end for which they were ordeined continuing, may notwithstanding cease, if by alteration of persons or times they be found unsufficient to attaine vnto that end.
Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, b. iii. § 10.

But should a reasonable man give credit to their bare conceit, and because their positions have driven them to imagine absolving of unsufficiently disposed penitents to be a real creating of further virtue in them, must all other men think it due.—Id. Ib. b. vi.

The error and unsufficiency of the arguments, doth make it on the contrary side against them, a strong presumption that God hath not moved their hearts to think such things as he hath not enabled them to prove.—Id. Ib.

The unsufficiency of the light of nature, is by the light of Scripture so fully and so perfectly herein supplied, that further light than this hath added, there doth not need vnto that end.—Id. Ib. b. ii. § 8.

UN-SUGARED. Not impregnated with saccharine matter.

This is a noble experiment if it be true; [that salt-water will dissolve salt, put into it, in lesse time, than fresh water will dissolve it:] for it sheweth meanes of more quick and easie infusions; and it is likewise a good instance of attraction, by similitude of substance. Try it with sugar put into water, formerly sugred; and into other water unsugred.—Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 883.

UN-SUITED. } Not fitted, adapted,
UN-SUITABLE. } agreeable or according to,
UN-SUITABLY. } accommodated or appro-UN-SUITABLENESS. } priate.
UN-SUITING.

In church-musique curiositie and ostentation of art, wanton, or light, or unsuteable harmonie, such as only pleaseth the eare, and does not naturally serue to the verie kind and degree of those impressions which the matter that goeth with it leaueth, or is apt to leaue in mens minds, doth rather blemish and disgrace that wee doe, then adde either beautie or furtherance vnto it.
Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, b. v. § 38.

What would be best advis'd then, if it be found so unhurtful and so unequal to suppress opinions for the newness, or the unsuitableness to a customary acceptance, will not be my task to say.—Milton. Areopagitica.

It would be very unsuitable to my intended brevity, and more disproportionate to my small abilities, to attempt the making this good, by insisting particularly on all the diuine excellencies, that we are in some measure acquainted with.
Boyle. Works, vol. v. p. 132.

There is a fitness or suitableness of certain circumstances to certain persons, and an unsuitableness of others; founded in the nature of things and the qualifications of persons, antecedent to all positive appointment whatsoever.
Clarke. Evidences, Prop. 1.

Now leave those joys unsuited to thy age,
To a fresh comer, and resign the stage.
Dryden. Lucretius, b. iii.

These endowments are sacred to the purposes of piety and charity; and it is neither lawful for us to employ them unsuitably ourselves, nor to let any part of them become a prey to the avarice of others.—Secker, vol. v. Charge 3.

So that no constitution-fancier may go unsuited from his shop, provided he loves a pattern of pillage, oppression, arbitrary imprisonment, confiscation, exile, revolutionary judgment, and legalized premeditated murder, into any shapes into which they can be put.
Burke. Letter to a Noble Lord.

UN-SU'LLY. Not soiled, dirtied, defiled, distained.

Now by my maiden honor, yet as pure
As the unsullied lilly, I protest,
A world of torments though I should endure,
I would not yeeld to be your houses guest.
Shakespeare. Loves Labour Lost, Act v. sc. 2.

For other stars than * and * wear,
And may descend to Mordington from Stair;
(Such as on Hough's unsully'd mitre shine,
Or beam, good Digby, from a heart like thine.)
Pope. Epistle to Sat. Dial. 2.

Tir'd nature's sweet restorer, balmy sleep!
He, like the world, his ready visit pays
Where fortune smiles; the wretched he forsakes;
Swift on his downy pinions flies from woe,
And lights on lids unsullied with a tear.
Young. Complaint, Night 1.

— His fleecy vest
New-woven, elegant, he first put on,
And his broad mantle—brac'd his sandals, next,
To his unsullied feet, and slung his sword
With ardent studs adorn'd.—Couper. Homer. Iliad, b. ii.

UN-SU'MMED Not counted or collected into one amount or total.

— Egregious madness; yet pursu'd
With pains unwearied, with expense unsumm'd,
And science doating.—Mason. The English Garden, b. i.

UN-SU'MMONED. Not called upon, not cited.

No sounding voice unto his seat may come;
The lazy sense still sleeps. unsummon'd with his drum.
P. Fletcher. Purple Island, c. 5.

Bring blast-averting sulphur, nurse, bring fire!
That I may fumigate my walls; then bid
Penelope with her attendants down,
Nor leave unsummon'd one of all the train.
Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. xxii.

UN-SUNG. Not celebrated in song, in verse, in poetry, in musick.

Nor sought for baye, (the learned shepherd's meede)
But as a swayne unkent fed on the plaines
And made the eccho umpire of my straines,
And drawne by time (altho' the weak'st of many)
To sing those layes as yet unsung of any.
Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b. i. s. 1.

Nor Oebalus, shalt thou be left unsung,
From nymph Semethis and old Telon sprung;
Who then in Teleboan Capri reign'd,
But that short isle th' ambitious youth disdain'd.
Dryden. Virgil. Aeneis, b. vii.

UN-SUNK. Not settled down; merged or submerged.

And sitting lastly on an oake's bare trunke,
(Where rain in winter stood long time unsunk),
His plaints he gan renew.
Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b. ii. s. 4.

UN-SU'NNED. Not exposed to the sun; not warmed or melted by the sun.

— I thought her
As chaste, as un-sunn'd snow
Shakespeare. Cymbeline, Act ii. sc. 5.

You may as well spread out the unsunn'd heaps
Of miser's treasure by an outlaw's den,
And tell me it is safe, as bid me hope
Danger will wink on opportunity.
And let a single helpless maiden pass
Uninjur'd in this wild surrounding waste.
Milton. Comus.

UN-SUPE'RFLUOUS. Not overflowing, or flowing or abounding to excess, beyond need or use.

If every just man, that now pines with want,
Had but a moderate and beseeching share
Of that which lewdly-pamper'd luxury
Now heaps upon some few with vast excess,
Nature's full blessings would be well dispens'd
In unsuperfluous even proportion.—Milton. Comus.

UN-SUPPLANTED. Not overthrown, or overturned; not undermined.

Gladsome they quaff, yet not exceed the bounds
Of healthy temperance, nor encroach on night,
Season of rest, but well bedew'd repair
Each to his home with unsupplanted feet.
J. Philips. Cider, b. ii.

UN-SUPPLE. Not bending or yielding easily.

Again she struggl'd to have stood on end:
But those unsupple sinewes would not bend.
Sandys. Ovid. Metam. b. ii.

UN-SUPPLIED. } Not filled, furnished; not UNSUPPL'ABLE. } given, added, or joined so as to leave no want or deficiency.

Secondly that it [preaching] were practised only when the church was unsupplied, either by the death, or absence, or sickness of their pastor, or in case of like necessity.
Hales. Let. from the Synod of Dort, Dec. 1618.

The unsuppliable defect of any necessary antecedent must needs cause a nullity of all those consequences which depend upon it.—Chillingworth.

Light was the wound; but in the sinew hung,
The point; and his disabled wing unstrung.
He wheel'd in air, and stretch'd his vans in vain;
His vans no longer cou'd his flight sustain:
For while one gather'd wind, one unsuppl'd
Hung drooping down; nor pois'd his other side.
Dryden. Ovid. Metam. b. xii.

Nor is the loss of a Goldsmith's descriptive and sentimental strain unsupplied by Cowper.
Knox. Winter Evenings, Even. 52.

UN-SUPPORTABLE. } That cannot be UNSUPPORTABLENESS. } borne or carried,
UNSUPPORTABLY. } sustained, suffered,
UNSUPPORT'ED. } tolerated or en-UNSUPPORT'ING. } dured.

For unsupported with his lockes hore,
Amphiorax sighen gan full sore,
With hed enclined, and many an heuy thought,
Whan that he saw his counsaill stood for nought.
Lidgate. Story of Thebes, pt. iii.

The very courtesy of the law was jugum an unsupportable yoke; but the spite of the law is a curse.
Bp. Hall. Ser. Gal. v. 1.

First, he for whom thou dost this villany,
Though pleas'd therewith, will not avouch thy fall,
But let the weight of thine own infamy
Fall on thee unsupported, and unback'd.
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. iii.

— But now France lost,
Sheds us more blood than all her winning cost.
For losing war abroad, at home lost peace;
B'ing with our unsupporting selves close pent.
Id. Ib. b. vi.

He has not been able to clear his scheme of the unsupportable charge of making two Gods, one supreme, and another inferior.—Waterland. Works, vol. iv. p. 5.

For a man to do a thing, while his conscience, the best light that he has to judge by, assures him that he shall be infinitely, unsupportably miserable, (if he does it,) this is certainly unnatural, and one would imagine impossible.
South, vol. ii. Ser. 5.

'Tis the unsupportableness of this [guilt], that many times doth cause men in the bitterness of their souls, to chuse strangling and death rather than life.
Wilkins. Natural Religion, b. ii. c. 7.

But now when Christianity first appeared, how weak and defenceless was it, how artless and undesigning! How utterly unsupported either by the secular arm, or secular wisdom!—Atterbury, vol. i. Ser. 3.

The truth is, we have seen, and yet do see religious societies, some grown up, and continuing unsupported by, and ununited with the state; others, that, when supported and united, have by strange arts brought the state into subjection, and become its tyrants and usurpers.
Warburton. Divine Legation, b. ii. § 5.

UN-SUPPRE'SSED. Not kept or held down, or under; subjected or subverted.

The unsuppressed abby-lands are a fourth of the whole.
Bp. Barlow. Rem.

UN-SURE. } See INSECURE. Not confi-UNSU'RELY. } dent, certain, trust worthy,
UNSU'RETY. } constant, safe.

Thus was I in a joyous dout,
Sure and unsurest of that rout,
Right as mine herte thought it were,
So more or lesse wexe my fere,
That if one thought made it wele,
Another shent it euery dele.
Chaucer. Dreams

Thus may every man reken hym selfe ensure of his owne father yf he beleue no man, or bycause all the prose therof standyth but vpon one woman, & that vpon her, which though she can tell best, yf it be wronge hath greatest cause to lie.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 124.

The stode al christendom in doubt, & unsurety, whither Saint John's gospel wer holy scripture or not, & so forth of al the new testament.—Id. Ib. p. 319.

For they will not suffer thee, nor none of thy progeny to live, to make any claim afterwards, or to be revenged: for that were their unsurety.

Strype. Eccles. Mem. Hen. VIII. an. 1538. Tonsal.

How long shall this like dying life endure,
And know no end of her owne miserie?
But waste and weare away in termes unsure,
Twixt feare and hope depending doubtfully.
Spenser, son. 25.

The vanity of greatness he had try'd,
And how unsurely stands the foot of pride.
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. ii.

It was indeed a very curious show; but utterly unsafe to touch, and unsure to stand on.

Burke. On American Taxation.

UN-SURGING. Not rising, not moving in waves.

But as a ship, that in a quiet calm
Floats up and down on the unsurging seas,
By some rough gust, which some ill star doth raise,
Is driven back into the troubled main;
Even so was I.—Drayton. Legend of Matilda the Fair.

UN-SURMOUNTABLE. See INSURMOUNTABLE. That cannot be ascended, climbed or passed over; that cannot be overcome.

They being now on a desolate coast, where scarcely any other provision could be got, except what should be saved out of the wreck, this was another unsurmountable source of discord.—Anson. Voyages, b. ii. c. 3.

We find (as Josephus well expresses it) that, in proportion to the neglect of the law, easy things became unsurmountable, and all their undertakings how just soever, ended in incurable calamities.

Warburton. Divine Legation, b. iv. § 2.

UN-SURPASSED. Not exceeded or excelled.

Peace to Torquato's injured shade! 'twas his
In life and death to be the mark where Wrong
Aim'd with her poison'd arrows: but to miss.
Oh, victor unsurpass'd in modern song!
Byron. Childe Harold, c. 4.

UN-SURRENDERED. Not yielded, given up, delivered up.

— Therefore hear,
Ye Trojans! my fix'd purpose in return.
Helen is mine, an unsurrender'd prize
For ever; but the treasures with herself
From Argos brought, all those I will resign, Increas'd with large addition of my own.
Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. vii.

UN-SURROUNDED. Not encircled, encompassed, or environed.

Still he combated unwounded,
Though retreating unsurrounded.
Byron. Siege of Corinth, s. 25.

UN-SUSCEPTIBLE. See INSUSCEPTIBLE. That cannot or may not take or receive; that cannot or may not admit or allow.

Cleom. Some men are made of such a leaky mould,
That their fill'd vessels can no fortune hold:
Pour'd in, it sinks away, and leaves 'em dry,
Of that unsusceptible make am I.
Dryden. Cleomenes, Act iv.

But, on the other hand, they are certainly not wholly unsusceptible of the tender passions; if we may judge from their being so fond of music.

Cook. Third Voyage, b. iv. c. 2.

UN-SUSPECT. } Not looked at as bring-UNSUSPECTED. } ing or intending ill; not UNSUSPECTEDLY. } apprehended, doubted,
UNSUSPECTING. } distrusted, feared.
UNSUSPECTINGLY. } Unsuspicious,—not a-UNSUSPICIOUS. } nticipating intended or approaching ill; not doubting, distrusting, fearing.

Our English hereticks that are lurking there might there imprint their heresies amonge other matters, & so sende them hither unsuspected.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 833.

— Yet that one beast which first Hath tasted, envies not, but brings with joy
The good befall'n him, author unsuspect,
Friendly to man, farr from deceit or guile.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ix.

Let them not envy others who think the same no less their duty by the general office of Christianity, to speak truth, as in all reason may be thought, more impartially and unsuspectedly without money.

Id. On the Removal of Hirelings.

And therefore he such deep advice apply'd,
As foreign craft and cunning could invent,
To circumvent an unsuspecting wight,
Before he could discern of their despite.
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. v.

It became almost a shame to examine what the world believed so unsuspectingly.

Bp. Taylor. Deus Justificatus, Ep. Ded.

But unsuspicious magnanimity
Shames such effects of fear and force to show;
Busied in free and open actions, still Being great—for being good, hates to be ill.
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. v.

This is a true story, which happened in the reign of William III. to an unsuspected old patriot, who coming out at the back-door from having been closetted by the king, where he had received a large bag of guineas, the bursting of the bag discovered his business there.

Pope. Moral Essays, Ep. 3. Note.

From their unsuspicious manner of coming on board, and of receiving us at first on shore, I am of opinion, they are seldom disturbed by either foreign or domestic troubles.

Cook. Second Voyage, b. ii. c. 3.

UN-SUSPENDED. Not held or kept in a state of rest; not ceasing from action or motion.

Not a long and tedious treatise, divided and subdivided, and requiring the unsuspended attention of a day to comprehend a part of it.—Knox. Ess. No. 1.

Yet at the same time I have observed, that it is not agreeable to read a great collection of epigrams with an unsuspended attention.—Id. Ib. No. 60.

UN-SUSTAINABLE. } That cannot be UNSUSTAINED. } held, borne, carried suffered, or endured.

— Oft stooping to support
Each flour of slender stalk, whose head though gay,
Carnation, purple, azure, or spect with gold,
Hung drooping unsustain'd.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ix.

His [the slanderers] weapon is an envenomed arrow, full of deadly poison, which he shooteth suddenly, and feareth not; a weapon which by no force can be resisted, by no art declined, whose impression is altogether inevitable and unsustainable.—Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 18.

Their leader lost, the Volscians quit the field;
And, unsustain'd, the chiefs of Turnus yield.
Dryden. Virgil. Æneis, b. xi.

Hale are their young, from human frailties freed;
Walk unsustain'd, and unassisted feed;
They live at once; forsake the dam's warm side,
Take the wide world, with Nature for their guide.
Young. Paraphrase on Job.

UN-SWADDLED. See UNSWATHE.

Puppy has scarce unswaddled my legs yet.
B. Jonson. Tale of a Tub, Act i. sc. 2.

UN-SWATHE, v. To remove, to loosen, to revolve the bonds or fillets wound or folded round.

Why truly my bedfellows left me about an hour before day, and told me, if I would be good and lie still, they would send somebody to take me up as soon as it was time for me to rise. Accordingly about nine o'clock in the morning an old woman came to unswathe me.

Spectator, No. 90.

UN-SWAYABLE. } That cannot be UNSWAYED. } poised or balanced;
UNSWAYEDNESS. } held or kept in equipoise; welded; held steady.

— I rais'd him, and I pawn'd
Mine honor for his truth: who being so heighten'd,
He watered his new plants with dewes of flattery,
Seducing so my friends: and to this end,
He bow'd his nature, neuer knowne before,
But to be rough, unswayable, and free.
Shakespeare. Coriolanus, Act v. sc. 5.

Rich. Is the chayre emptie? is the sword unsway'd?
Is the king dead? the empire vnposset?
Id. Rich. III. Act iv. sc. 4.

That constancy and unswayedness in our lives and actions, that rock which no tempest can move.—Hales. Rem. p. 246.

UN-SWEAR, v. } To unswear,—to annul the UNSWORN. } force of, to revoke an oath.
Not pledged to the observance of an oath; not bound by oath.

For none of them cā tel what was said to an other, & yet they be unsworne also.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 133.

Yet are there many that dare secretly detecte, and by whom the ordinary shal know who can tell more, and will also if they be called and sworn, and wyll not vncalled and unsworen, tel no tale at all.—Id. Ib. p. 973.

Turne you the key, and know his businesse of him;
You may; I may not. you are yet unsworne.
Shakespeare. Measure for Measure, Act i. sc. 5.

He that swears a false oath with his lips, and unswears it with his heart, hath deceived one more than he thinks for.
Bp. Taylor, vol. i. Ser. 12.

Ma. Yes: unswear that oath again I'll tell you all.
Beaum. & Fletcher. Noble Gentleman, Act iv.

I spake, and, undelaying, she complied.
When, therefore, nought of all her solemn oath
Unsworn remain'd, I climb'd her stately bed.
Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. x.

UN-SWEAT, v. } In Milton,—to remove, to UNSWEATING. } dry—the moisture exuded or evaporated from the skin, the perspiration. In Dryden,—not exuding or evaporating; not perspiring.

The interim of unsweating themselves regularly, and convenient rest before meat, may both with profit and delight be taken up in recreating and composing their travail'd spirits with the solemn and divine harmonies of music heard or learn'd.—Milton. Of Education.

Call for a fire, their winter cloaths they take:
Begin but you to shiver, and they shake:
In frost and snow, if you complain of heat,
They rub th' unsweating brow, and swear they sweat.
Dryden. Juvenal, Sat. 3.

UN-SWEET. Not pleasing or agreeable.

For all his gods he tooke to borrow,
If the Thebans and the Greekes meet,
The fine thereof shall be so unsweet,
That all Greece after shall rew.
Lidgate. Story of Thebes, pt. iii.

Long were to tell the troublous stormes that toss
The private state, and make the life unsweet.
Who swelling sayles in Caspian sea doth crosse,
And in frayle wood on Adrian gulf doth fleet
Doth not, I weene, so many evils meet.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 7.

UN-SWELL, v. To sink from a tumid or turgid state; to subside.

But tho began his herte alite unswell.
Chaucer. Troil. & Cres. b. v.

UN-SWEPT. Not rubbed, wiped, brushed, or cleared away; not moved or passed over with a sweeping motion or action.

Where fires thou find'st vnrak'd, and hearths unswept,
There pinch the maids as blew as bill-berry.
Shakespeare. Merry Wives of Windsor, Act v. sc. 3.

What custome wills in all things, should we do't?
The dust on antique time would lye unswept,
And mountainous error be too highly heapt,
For truth to o're-peere.—Id. Coriolanus, Act ii. sc. 3.

— As when whirlwinds of the West
A storm encounter from the gloomy South,
The waves roll multitud'nous, and the foam,
Unswapt by wand'ring gusts, fills all the air,
So Hector swept the Grecians.
Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. xi.

UN-SWILLED. Not swallowed (in large draughts); not drunk or gulped down.

At last, and in good hour, we are come to his farewell, which is to be a concluding taste to his jabberment in law, the flashiest and the fustiest that ever corrupted in such an unswill'd hogshead.—Milton. Doct. & Disc. of Divorce, Post.

UN-SYLOGISTICAL. Not according to the logical rules for the construction of syllogisms.

To the first proposition of this unsyllogistical syllogism, I answer, that to say the true church is not always de facto universal, is so far from being an heresie, that it is a certain truth known to all those that know the world, and what religions possess far the greater part of it.

Chillingworth. Religion of Protestants, c. 6. § 14.

UN-SYSTEMATICK. } Not placed toge-UNSYSTEMATICAL. } ther, composed or constructed in a connected series of dependent or successive parts

UNT

No man, who is not inflamed by vain-glory into enthusiasm, can flatter himself that his single, unsupported, desultory, unsystematic endeavours, are of powers to defeat the subtle designs and united cabals of ambitious citizens.
Burke. On the present Discontents, (1770.)

Thus, between the resistance of power, and the unsystematical process of popularity, the undertaker and the undertaking are both exposed, and the poor reformer is hissed off the stage both by friends and foes.
Id. On Economical Reform.

UN-TACK, v. To remove that which tacks, takes or holds; to loosen, to dissolve.

Sir, the little ado which methinks I find in untacking these pleasant sophisms, put me into the mood to tell you a tale e'er I proceed further, and Menenius Agrippa speed us.
Milton. Reformation in England, b. ii.

It [faith] alone can untack our minds and affections from this world, rearing our souls from earth, and fixing them in heaven.—Barrow, vol. ii. Ser. 3.

If they should untack the bill, and separate one from the other, then the House of Commons would have insisted on a maxim that was now settled among them, as a fundamental principle never to be departed from, that the Lords cannot alter a money bill, but must either pass it or reject it as it is sent to them.—Burnet. Own Time, an. 1705.

UN-TA'GGED. Not tied or fastened; or tacked or attached.

You have my resolution.

Row. And your money,

Which since you are so stubborn, if I forfeit,
Make me a Jack o' Lent, and break my shins
For untag'd points and compters.

Beaum. & Fletch. Woman's Prize, Act iv. sc. 3.

UN-TA'INTED. } Not stained, dyed, sorted UNTA'INTEDLY. } or sullied, infected, tar-UNTA'INTEDNESS. } nished.

As for the other children of this king [Edward I.] which he had by Eleanor his queen, probably born in this castle, viz. Henry Alphonse, Blanche, dying in their infancy immediately after their baptism, it is enough to name them; and to bestow this joynt epitaph upon them:—

"Cleansed at font we drew untainted breath,
Not yet made bad for life, made good by death."

Fuller. Worthies. Berkshire.

The light hath a quality of clearness, of purity: of clearness, for the use of manifestation: of purity and untaintedness, in respect of any mixture of corruption.

Bp. Hall. Ser. 1 John, i. 5.

Your grace has not only a long time of youth in which to flourish, but you have likewise found the way, by an untainted preservation of your honour, to make that perishable good more lasting.

Dryden. Indian Emperor, Epis. Ded.

A school so untaintedly loyal, that I can truly and knowingly avow, that in the very worst of times, (in which it was my lot to be a member of it) we really were king's scholars, as well as called so.—South, vol. v. Ser. 1.

— It shall be my task,

To drive the noisome swarms, which on the slain
In battle feed, afar; and should he lie
The year complete, his flesh shall yet be found Untainted, and, it may be, fragrant too.

Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. xix.

UN-TA'KEN. Not seized, or captured, not apprehended.

The Englysshmen were put to the chase, and dyuerse hurt and slayne, and specially sir Robert Dartoyes was sore hurte, and scapedde hardely untaken.

Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 93.

Howbet yet I will goe about to finde a remedy to saue thee from taking, if thou be untaken: & if thou bee taken, that thou maiest skape out againe.

Vives. Instruction of a Christian Woman, b. i. c. 14.

What lately was their public terrour, they Behold with glad eyes as a certain prey.
Dispose already of th' untaken spoil.

Waller. Battle of the Summer-Islands, c. 2.

UN-TA'LKED. Not spoken; not prated or prattled.

Spred thy close curtaine loue-performing night,
That run-awayes eyes may wincke, and Romeo Leape to these armes, untalkt of and vnsene.

Shakespeare. Romeo & Juliet, Act iii. sc. 2.

UN-TALL. Not of lofty—courage or high spirit.

Who totheth ou hem thei ben untall;

Thei ben arayid all for pece.—Chaucer. Plowman's Tale.

UN-TA'MEABLE. } That cannot be quieted
UNTA'MED. } or rendered quiet, peace-UNTA'MEDNESS. } ful, obedient or submissive; that cannot be subdued or suppressed, or domesticated.

As for the plowing with vres (which I suppose to be vnlukelie) because they are (in mine opinion) untameable and alkes a thing commonlie vsed in the east countries: here is no place to speake of it, since we want these kind of beasts, neither is it my purpose to intreat at large of other things than are to be seene in England.

Holinshead. Description of England, b. iii. c. 4.

Such first was Bacchus, that with furious might
All th' East, before untam'd, did ouerronne,
And wrong repressed, and establisht right,
Which lawlesse men had formerly fordonne.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 1.

For this reason the philosopher judges young men unfit hearers of moral philosophy, because of the abounding and untamedness of their passions, granting, that if those were composed and ordered, they might be admitted.

Leighton. Com. on 1 Peter, c. 2.

There is a stubbornness and fretting of heart concerning our souls, that arises from pride and the untamedness of our nature: and yet some take a pleasure in it, touching the matter of comfort and assurance if it be withheld; or which they take more liberty in, if it be sanctification and victory over sin; and yet find little or no success.—Id. Ib. c. 5.

He cannot be as a beast, or a mere sot, if he would; reason, reflecting on present evils, and boding others future, will afflict him; his own unsatiable desires, unavoidable fears, and untameable passions, will disquiet him.

Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 3.

He would have worn her out by slow degrees,
As men by fasting starve th' untam'd disease:
But present love requir'd a present ease.

Dryden. Theodore & Honoria.

UN-TA'NGLE, v. To remove, to loosen that which ties, folds, involves, intricates, or perplexes; to remove or do away intricacy or perplexity.

— My care now

Must be to untangle this division,
That our most equal flames may be united.

Beaum. & Fletch. Fair Maid of the Inn, Act iii.

Yet hold! if Leonora's innocent, she may untangle all.

Vanburgh. False Friend, Act iii.

UN-TA'STED. Not touched, (sc. with the tongue or palate;) not felt or perceived; (not enjoyed.)

Now worne away, and with oft trauell broke
I come, no more to part: grant now our old Wedlocks untasted rites: grant me to hold
The emptie name of wife.—May. Lucan. Pharsalia, b. ii.

And could not, by all means might be devis'd,
Untaste them of this violent disgust;
But that they still held something lay disguis'd
Under this treaty.

Daniel. Civil Wars, b. viii.

When, sudden, comes blind unrelenting Fate,
And gives th' untasted portion you have won,
With ruthless toil, and many a wretch undone,
To those who mock you gone to Pluto's reign.

Thomson. Castle of Indolence.

Ne'er for his lip the purpling cup they fill,
That goblet passes him untasted still.

Byron. Corsair, c. 1. s. 2.

UN-TA'XED. Not rated or assessed; not charged to the payment of tax or contribution; not charged (sc. with fault or offence).

Antoninus Pius was a prince excellently learned; and had the patient and subtle wit of a schoolman, insomuch as in common speech which leaves no virtue untaxed he was called Cymini sector, a carver or divider of cummin seed, which is one of the smallest of seeds.

Bacon. Of Learning, b. i.

On this state, those untaxed people were actually subject to the payment of taxes to the amount of six hundred and fifty thousand a year.—Burke. Conciliation with America.

UN-TEACH, v. } Not to take or receive;
UNTE'ACHABLE. } not to take or convey UNTAU'GHT. } knowledge.

To cause to be ignorant; to leave in ignorance, without instruction, without knowledge.

Cyril hath also shewed you, he taught it hys faithfull disciples at the institution of ye blessed sacrament) he laboureth as I say in these woordes here moste as can be deuysed, to tell them and make them belieue that they shall verely eate his fleshe.

Sir T. More. Workes, p. 1064.

What congregation of Christendome in all records afforded you the necessary patterne of an unteaching pastor, or an unfeeding teacher?—Bp. Hall. Apol. against Brownists, §27.

Their office also in a different manner, steers the same course; the one teaches what is good by precept, the other unteaches what is bad by punishment.

Milton. Doctrine & Discipline of Divorce, b. ii. c. 14.

Our Saviour at no time exprest any great desire to teach the obstinate and unteachable Pharisees; but when they came to tempt him, then least of all.—Id. Tetrachordon.

Cort. Wild and untaught are terms which we alone Invent, for fashions differing from our own:
For all their customs are by nature wrought,
But we, by art, unteach what nature taught.

Dryden. The Indian Emperour, Act i. sc. 1.

Almanz. Forgive that fury which my soul does move;
'Tis the essay of an untaught first love.

Id. 1 Pt. Conquest of Granada, Act iii.

If we furnish them with money also, they will often misapply it. If we procure them advice and medicines: dispersed, and unprovided, and unteachable as they are, the charge will usually be heavy, and the success very uncertain.—Secker, vol. v. Ser. 10.

And now my only son, new to the toils
And hazards of the sea, nor less untaught
The arts of traffic, in a ship is gone Far hence, for whose dear cause I sorrow more Than for his sire himself.—Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. iv.

UN-TE'MPERATE. } See INTEMPERATE.
UNTE'MPERATELY. } Not moderated or re-UNTE'MPERED. } gulated, as time, season, circumstances require.

Untempered,—not moderated, modified, qualified, seasoned.

In Castyle there is nothyng but harde rockes and moun-taynes, whiche are nat good to eate, and an untemperate
ayre, and troubled ryuers.

Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. c. 194.

When their geastes beeyng already drunke, haue their mouthes out of taste, & powre in drinke untemperately, then thei bring and serue of the werst sort.—Udal. John, c. 2.

What life lead testy men then, that consume their days
In inward frets, untemper'd hates, at strife with some always.—Surrey. Paraph. on Ecclesiastes, c. 5.

Why give you peace to this untemperate beast
That hath so long transgressed you?

Beaum. & Fletch. Maid's Tragedy, Act v.

This ravening fellow has a wolf in's fellow;
Untemperate knave, will nothing quench thy appetite?

Id. Woman Pleas'd, Act i. sc. 2.

There is not one stone of a new foundation laide by us:
yea the old wal stands still: onely the ouercasting of those ancient stones with the untempered mortar of new inventions, displeaseth us.—Bp. Hall. The Old Religion, c. 3.

"Let us not," says his last ingenious biographer, "condemn him with untempered severity, because he was not a prodigy which the world hath seldom seen, because his character included not the poet, the orator, and the hero."

Johnson. Life of Waller.

The untempered spirit of madness, blindness, immorality, and impiety, deserves no commendation.

Burke. Appeal from the New to the Old Whigs.

UN-TE'MPTED. Not tried or put to the trial; not tried by allurements, enticement, or persuasion; not allured or enticed.

— Can you imagine

A maid, whose beauty could not suffer her
To live thus long untempted, by the noblest,
Richest and cunningst masters in that art,
And yet hath ever held a fair repute;
Could in one morning, and by him be brought To forget all her virtue?

Beaum. & Fletch. Woman-Hater, Act iv. sc. 1.

Lastly how should our joy be seasoned with a cautious fear, when we cast our eyes upon those objects of dread, and horror, the principalities and powers of darkness, not so confined to their hell, as to leave us untempted, and increasing their sin and torment by our temptation.

Bp. Hall. The Invisible World, § 12.

UN-TE'NABLE. That cannot or may not be held, or kept supported.

Their main scheme appearing so gross, and so untenable, that they themselves are afraid or ashamed to own it.

Waterland. Works, vol. iv. Introd.

blind side, thinks it time to abandon a post that was untenable—Dryden. Juvenal, Ded.

UNT

UN-TE'NDED. Not observed, watched, heeded, guarded, taken care of.

— Let Asia's woods,
Untended, yield the vegetable fleece;
And let the little insect-artist form,
On higher life intent, its silken tomb.—Thomson. Liberty.
The cattle droop; and o'er the furrow'd land,
Fresh from the plough, the dun discolour'd flocks,
Untended spreading, crop the wholesome root.
Id. Winter.

UN-TE'NDER. Not easily hurt or injured; not delicate, sensitive, mild, gentle.

Lear. But goes thy heart with this?
Cor. I my good lord.
Lear. So young, and so untender?
Cor. So young my lord, and true.
Shakespeare. Lear, Act i. sc. 1.

— What's the matter?
Why tender'st thou that paper to me, with A looke so untender? Id. Cymbeline, Act iii. sc. 4.

In all which time (so gentle was thy mind)
I ne'er could charge thee with a deed unkind;
Not one untender word or look of scorn,
Which I too often have from others borne.
Congreve. Lament. of Hecuba over Hector.

UN-TE'NDERED. Not reached out, offered, presented.

— Cassibulan thine vnkle (Famous in Cæsar's praises, no whit lesse
Then in his feasts deseruing it) for him
And his succession, granted Rome a tribute.
Yeerely three thousand pounds; which (by thee) lately
Is left untender'd.—Shakespeare. Cymbeline, Act iii. sc. 1.

UN-TENT, v. To remove from a tent, or extended covering.

Agæ. Why will he not vpon our faire request,
Vntent his person, and share the ayre with vs?
Shakespeare. Troil. & Cress. Act ii. sc. 3.

UN-TE'NTED. Not probed or examined; not salved or dressed (as wounds or sores after probing).

Blastes and fogges vpon thee:
Th' vntented woundings of a father's curse
Pierce euerie sense about thee.
Shakespeare. Lear, Act i. sc. 4.

UN-TE'RRIFIED. Not frightened, afraid, or dismayed.

Yet stands he stiff, undash'd; unterrify'd;
His mind the same, although his fortune worse:
Virtue in greatest dangers b'ing best shown.
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. vi.

— On th' other side
Incenc't with indignation Satan stood Unterrify'd, and like a comet burn'd,
That fires the length of Ophiucus huge
In th' artick sky, and from his horrid hair Shakes pestilence and warr.—Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ii.

R. Brunne, p. 241.

My Troilus shall in his herte deme
That I am false, and so it may we'll seme,
Thus shall I have unthanked on eve'y side.
Chaucer. Troil. & Cress. b. v.

Unthank come on his hand that bond him so,
And he that better shuld have knit the rein.
Id. The Reves Tale, v. 4081.

He wyll thynke, that his seruante broughte hym thither onely for vayne glorie, and as a beholder and woderer at the riches that he him selfe gaue hym, which the other unthankfully doth attribute to his owne fortune or policie.
Sir T. Elyot. The Governour, b. iii. c. 2.

Wherein our miserie is so muche the greater, that in so great filthiness & unthankfulness we are not ouerwhelmed with blushing shame.—Caluin. Foure Godlye Sermons, Ser. 2.

And than doth the wonderfull vnkyndenesse and too much unthankfulness of man, vnspeakably set fourth the mercies of God, who wylleth all men to be saued.
Fisher. On Prayer, To the Reader.

— If all the world
Should in a pet of temp'rance feed on pulse,
Drink the clear stream, and nothing wear but frieze,
Th' all-giver would be unthank'd, would be unprais'd.
Milton. Comus.

UNT

A thankful man owes a courtesy ever; the unthankful but when he needs it.—B. Jonson. Poetaster, Ded.

The husbandman ought not, for one unthankful year, to forsake the plough.—Id. Bartholomew Fair, Act iii. sc. 1.

At length he had considered his owne state, and weied how unthankfullie the French king and his brother had dealt with him.
Holinshed. Chron. of England. Hen. VII. an. 1173.

But almightie God did not long suffer this their unthankefulness without iust punishment.
Id. Historie of England, b. v. c. 27.

Arcos. Were you oblig'd in honour by a trust,
I should not think my own proposals just.
But, since you fight for an unthankful king,
What loss of fame can change of parties bring?
Dryden. 2 Pt. Conquest of Granada, Act iii.

UN-THA'WED. Not softened, relaxed, dissolved, (as ice by warmth.)

So that the pride of vaine glorie
Euer afterwarde out of memorie
He let passe, and thus is shewed,
What is to ben of pride unthawed,
Ageine the high gods lawe:
To whome no man maie be felawe.—Gower. Con. A. b. i.

Go work, hunt, exercise! (he thus began)
Then scorn a homely dinner, if you can.
(Your wine lock'd up, your butler stroll'd abroad,
Or fish deny'd the river yet unthaw'd;) Id.
If then plain bread and milk will do the feat,
The pleasure lies in you, and not the meat.
Pope. Imitation of Horace, b. ii. Sat. 2.

— The flood of life,
Loos'd at its source by tepefying strains,
Flows like some frozen silver stream unthaw'd,
At a warm zephyr of the genial spring.
Cooper. Power of Harmony, b. i.

UN-THEOLOGICAL. Not according to sound principles of theology, or reasoning upon subjects of divinity.

Tell that questionist, that, to argue from scripture negatively in things of this nature is somewhat untheological.
Bp. Hall. Let. on the Obs. of Christ's Nativity.

UN-THINK, v. } Unthought,—not felt, UNTHOUGHT. } perceived, conceived, or UNTHOUGHTFULNESS. } imagined; not received into the mind or understanding; not retained in the mind; not considered or meditated.

They as unthoughtfull, with the rechelesnesse of the father, and wantonnesse of the mother, leaue the iuste trauaille, and take vniust idlenes.—Golden Boke, c. 37.

— Before
His highnesse shall speake in, I do beseech
You (gracious madam) to unthinke your speaking;
And to say so no more.
Shakespeare. Hen. VIII. Act ii. sc. 4.

Dare I prophane, so irreligious be,
To 'greet, or grieve her soft euthanasee!
So sweetly taken to the court of blisse,
As spirits had stolne her spirit in a kisse,
From off her pillow and deluded bed;
And left her lovely body unthought dead!
B. Jonson. Under-woods, Elegy 9.

But on the other side, the shallow, unthinking vulgar, are sure of all things, and bestow their peremtory, full assent on every slight appearance.—Glanvill, Ess. 1.

A little inconsiderate accident, the breach of a vein, an ill air, a little ill-digested portion of that excess wherein they delight, may put a period to all those pleasures, and to that life, in a week, in a year, in a day, in a hour, in an unthought moment, before a man hath an opportunity to consider, to bethink himself, or to repent.
Hale. Cont. Of Wisdom and the Fear of God.

During the current of that tyranny, which for so many years we all groan'd under, he [Hammond] kept a constant equable serenity and unthoughtfulness in outward actions.
Fell. Life of Hammond, § 2.

The dull, flat falsehood serves for policy;
And in the cunning, Truth itself's a lie;
Unthought-of frailties cheat us in the wise;
The fool lies hid in inconsistencies.
Pope. Moral Essays, Ep. 1.

UN-THOR'NY. Not having tearing prickles;
free from prickles, painful difficulties.

It were some extenuation of the curse, if in sudore vultus
tui were confinable unto corporal exertitions, and there still remained a Paradise or unthorny place of knowledge.
Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. i. c. 5.

UN-THREAD, v. To revolve that which threadeth, knitteth, holds together.

(Far other arms and other weapons must
Be those that quell the might of hellish charms:
He with his bare wand can unthread thy joints,
And crumble all thy sinews.
Milton. Comus.

Creseide with a sigh, right in this wise
Answerde, "I wis, my dere herte trew,
We may well steale away, as ye devise,
And finden such unthrifty waies new."
Chaucer. Troil. & Cress. b. iv.

God fordid that nise unthrifty thought shoulde come in thy mynde thy wittes to trouble, sithen euery thyng in commynge is contingent.—Id. Testament of Loue, b. i.

"For louers ben the folke that ben on liue,
That most disease haue, and most unthrive,
And most endure sorrow, wo, and care."
Id. Cuckow and the Nightingale.

Therefore dooe not thou thinke that he is returned home to thee the same manne that he was: but thinke hym of an unthriste to be new borne an honest and a well disposed manne.—Udal. Luke, c. 15.

Beysdes theis, a great multitude of unthrists and cut throtes were flocked thither out of all Gallia.
Goldinge. Cæsar, fol. 76.

Some in Parys sayde: it is pytie these unthrists be vn-
hanged or drowned, for tellyng of suche lies.
Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. c. 218.

Except suche rybaudes, and unthriftye people, as desyred nothyng but yuell and noyse, all the other (gladye they sayde) wolde haue rest and peace, what soeuer came therof.
Id. Ib. vol. i. c. 386.

Therefore consider in thy mind, not what hee hath said, that hath liked thee, but what hee hath spoken, that hath disliked thee: as if he had either done or said ought piuishly, foolishly, foul, horrible, abhominable, lewdly, unthrifstie, madly, vngratiously: and by that that cometh forth, make coniecture, what lieth hid secretly, & closelie within.—Vives. Instruction of a Christian Woman, c. 14.

Admytte thy wyfe be of croked condicions, or a nyce wanton, or geuen to other unthriftnesse: destroye her not with ragyng crueltie, but heale her and amende her with sobre lenitie.—Udal. Ephesians, c. 5.

You therefore if ye be sure, and have God in your sleeve to call you to his grace at last, venture hardily by mine example vpon naughty unthriftnesse, in trust of his goodness; and besides the shame, I dare lay ten to one ye shall perish in the adventure —Wyat, Let. 1. To his Son.

An other no lesse is, that such plentie of vittayle, as was aboundantly in euery quarter, for the reliefe of vs all, is nowe all wastfully and unthrifstfully spent, in mainteyning you vnlawfull rebelles.—Sir J. Cheeke. Hurt of Sedition.

And gossip mine I'll keep you sure hereafter
From gadding out again, with boys and unthrists.
Beaum. & Fletch. Knight of the Burning Pestle, Act iv.

In somuch that manie of them [yeomen] are able and doo buie the lands of unthrifstie gentlemen.
Holinshed. Description of England, b. ii. c. 6.

Full many mischiefes follow cruell Wrath;
Abhorred bloodshed, and tumultuous strife,
Vnmanly murder, and unthrifty seath,
Bitter despyght, with rancours rustie knife,
And fretting grieffe the enemy of life.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 4.

That are your words of credit. Keepe your names
For your next meale; this you are sure of. Why Will you part with them, here unthrifstly?
B. Jonson, Epig. 7.

And after them a rude, confused rout
Of persons flockt, whose names is hard to read:
Emongst them was sterne Strife, and Anger stout,
Vnquiet Care, and fond unthrifstlied.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 12.

God's familie admitteth of no dwarfes (which are unthriv-ing and stand at a stay) but men of vmesures.
Bp. Hall. Meditations & Vowes, Cent. 1. No. 44.

There are very many ways for a good man to become unblessed, and unthriving in his prayers, and he cannot be secure unless he be in the state of grace, and his spirit be quiet, and his mind be attentive, and his society be lawful, and his desires be earnest and passionate, and his deuotions persevering.—Bp. Taylor, vol. i. Ser. 6.

Ber. Unthrists will starve if we before-hand give,
I'll see you shall have just enough to live.
Dryden. Tyrannick Love, Act ii. sc. 1.

Thus, as some fawning usurer does feed
With present sums th' unwary unthrifst's need.
Id. 1 Pt. Conquest of Granada, Act I.

He therefore that is such a niggard of his time, that he grudgeth to withhold any part thereof from his worldly occasions, deeming all time cast away that is laid out in waiting upon God, is really most unthrift and prodigal thereof.—Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 7.

It is therefore the greatest want of policy, the worst ill-husbandry and unthriftiness that can be, to be sparing this way [bounty to the poor], he that useth it cannot be thriving; he must spend upon the main stock, and may be sure to get nothing considerable.—Id. Ib. Ser. 31.

UN-THRONE, v. See DETHRONE. To remove from a throne or seat; seat of eminence, of royalty.

He takes upon him by Papal sentence to unthrone Chilpericus the rightful king of France, and gives the kingdom to Pepin for no other cause, but that he seem'd to him the more active man.—Milton. Reformation in England, b. ii.

Either to disinthrone the king of Heav'n
We warr, if warr be best, or to regain
Our own right lost: him to unthrone we then
May hope when everlasting fate shall yield
To fickle chance, and chaos judge the strife.
Id. Paradise Lost, b. iii.

Qu. I came not here to be advis'd by you:
But charge you by that pow'r which once you own'd,
And which is still my right, ev'n when unthrone'd;
That whatsoe'r the states resolve of me,
You never more think of Candiope.
Dryden. Secret Love, Act v.

UN-THROWN. Not cast, flung, hurled, tossed.

But soon another sort stept in their stead;
No stone unthrown, nor yet no dart uncast.
Surrey. Virgile. Æneis, b. ii.

UNTICKLED. Not tickled, or acted upon by titillation.

There is not an ear in the whole country untickled; the ticklers have, in their turn, others who tickle them, inso-much, that there is a circulation of tickling throughout that vast empire, [China].—Chesterfield. Fogg's Journal, No. 377.

UN-TIDY. Not timely or seasonable; prepared for the season, ready. Very common in speech.

My sorowe is euermore unteide.
And secheth ouer all my veynes.—Id. Ib. b. iv.

At euery which alarme, the two lordes generall shewed themselves maruelous ready & forward, insomuch that at the very first alarme, skant wel furnished with any more defence then their shirts, hose, and dublets, & those too altogether in a maner untied, they were abroad in the streetes themselves, to see the vttermost of it.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 613.

— The pleasure I take in her
Thus I blow off; the care I took to love her,
Like this point, I untie, and thus I loose it;
The husband I am to her, thus I sever.
Beaum. & Fletch. Woman's Prize, Act iv. sc. 4.

2 Ten. You make of love a riddle, or a chain,
A circle, a mere knot; untie't again.
Bas. Love is a circle, both the first and last
Of all our actions, and his knot's, too, fast.

1 Ten. A true love knot will hardly be untied.
B. Jonson. Love's Welcome.
Nor must the fable, that would hope the fate
Once seene, to be againe call'd for and plaid,
Have more or lesse then just five acts: nor laid,
To have a god come in; except a knot
Worth his untying happen there.
Id. Horace. Art of Poetrie.

I have shewn also how it unties the inward knot of marriage, which is peace and love (if that can be untied which was never knit) while it aims to keep fast the outward formality.—Milton. Doct. & Disc. of Divorce, b. i. c. 9.

That is the immediate link of the union in such a life; and the untying and death consists chiefly in the disengagement of the heart, breaking off the affection from it.
Leighton. Com. on 1 Peter, c. 2.

Since the self-denial here recommended can only respect things in themselves lawful and not unreasonable, and in favor of such our bare inclinations have been allowed to be taken for arguments and directions, it looks as if this advise to deny one's self or inclinations inferred a contradiction. But this knot will be quickly untied.
Wollaston. Religion of Nature, § 9.

UN-TIL. See TILL. To while. Used also as equivalent to Unto.

Dauid at that while was with Edward the kyng,
Git auanced he that file untill a faire thing.

See, see, the mourning fount, whose springs weep yet
Th' untimely fate of that too beauteous boy.
B. Jonson. Cynthia's Revels, Act i. sc. 1.

Their so frequent martyrdomes, of what excellency or avail, if after all they should be hurried out of this world, and all their fortunes and possessions, by untimely, by disgraceful, by dolorous deaths, to be set before a tribunal, to give account of their universal neglect, and contemning of Christ's last testament, in so great an affair, as the whole government of his church.
Bp. Taylor. Episcopacy Asserted, § 22.

The proper consequent of this will be, that when the apostle says, Death came in by sin, and that death is the wages of sin, he primarily and literally means the solemnities, and causes, and infelicities, and untimeliness of temporal death; and not merely the dissolution, which is directly no evil, but an inlet to a better state.
Id. To the Bishop of Rochester.

Here (were there words to express such sentiments with proper tenderness) I should record the beauty, innocence, and untimely death, of the first object my eyes ever beheld with love.—Tatler, No. 181.

Mon. If I not press untimely on his leisure,
You would much bind a stranger to your service,
To give me means of audience from the emperor.
Rowe. Tamerlane, Act iii.

A grape-stone in the throat, a hair, a bone of a fish has brought many to an untimely grave.—Knox. Antipolemus.

"By my faith, this bodes us no good!" said Blount; "it must be some perillous cause puts her grace in motion thus untimously."—Scott. Kenilworth, c. 15.

UN-TINGED. Not stained, dyed, imbued.

In a darkened room it may appear what beams are un-tinged and which they are that upon the bodies that terminate them do paint either the primary or secondary iris.
Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 727.

Your inattention I cannot pardon. Pope has the same defect, and it is of all others the most mortal to conversation: neither is Bolingbroke untinged with it.
Swift to Gay, July 10, 1732.

UN-TYRED. } Not harassed or distressed,
UNTYRABLE. } vexed or troubled, wearied or fatigued.

As in a picture limb'd unto the life,
Or carved by a curious workman's knife,
If twenty men at once should come to see
The great effects of untirde industry,
Each severally would thinke the pictures eye
Was fixt on him, and on no stander by.
Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b. ii. s. 1.

Mer. A most incomparable man, breath'd as it were,
To an untyreable and continue goodnesse.
Shakespeare. Timon of Athens, Act i. sc. 4.

— True indeed,
A son was born; but to prevent that crime,
The wretched infant of a guilty fate,
Bor'd through his untir'd feet, and bound with cords,
On a bleak mountain, naked was expos'd.
Dryden. Edipus, Act iii. sc. 1.

When he adds to all this that he will do it right early he intimates to us the particular time, at which such resolutions as these are best executed; 'tis in the morning, the season of devotion, when the mind is fresh and vigorous, untired with the business of the day, and untainted with ill images and impressions.—Atterbury, vol. iv. Ser. 9.

UN-TITLED. Not having, being without, or deprived of a name—of honourable distinction, a name of distinction.

Such be the meed of all, that by such meane
Vnto the type of kingdoms title climes.
But false Duessa, now untitled queene,
Was brought to her sad' doome, as heere was to be seene.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 9.

— O natiō miserabl!
With an untitled tyrant, bloody sceptred,
When shalt thou see thy wholesome dayes againe?
Since that the truest issue of thy throne
By his owne interdiction stands accurst,
And do's blaspheme his breed?
Shakespeare. Macbeth, Act iv. sc. 3.

UN-TO. On or in to.

Vnto the se side chaced thei Sir Lowys,
He durst not abide, no turne Thebald his vis [visage].
R. Brunne, p. 104.

& geldes vp alle the bondes of homage & feaute,

Sir T. More. Workes, p. 1009.

And all her sisters seeing her sad stowre,
Did weep and waille, and made exceeding mone,
And all their learned instruments did breake,
The rest, untold, no liuing tongue can speake.
Spenser. Teares of the Muses.

Three nights I hous'd him, and within my cot
Three days detain'd him (for his ship he left
A fugitive, and came direct to me),
But half untold his story yet remains.
Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. xvii.

UN-TOLERABLE. See INTOLERABLE.
That cannot or may not be borne or suffered,
supported, sustained, or endured.

The pope himselfe is nowe becomeme intolerable. No tyran was ever hable to matche him in pompe, and pride.
Jewel. Defence of the Apologie, p. 618.

Insomuche as if a manne geue you a blowe vpon the cheke (which is accounted commonlie an intolerable vilanie), ye shal not requite it with a blowe againe, but rather offer the other cheke to bee stricken too.—Udal. Math. c. 5.

UN-TOMBED. Removed from, taken out of—the tomb, grave, or sepulchre.

If any man doubt of the strange antiquities delivered by historians, as of the wonderful corps of Anteus untomb'd a thousand years after his death by Sertorius.
Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. vii. c. 18.

UN-TOOTH, v. } To deprive of teeth.
UNTOOTHsome. } Untoothsome, — not UNTOOTHsomeness. } agreeable or pleasing to the tooth; i.e. the taste, the palate.

What philosopher durst haue enterpryse to propoune suche thynges as these, so ferre contrarie to all mennes opinion or thinkyng, and thynges so untouthsome for menne to bee fonde on, or to make anie great countenance vnto.
Udal. Luke, Pref.

The hony of the island Corsica of all other is counted most unpleasant and untouthsome.—Holland. Plinie, b. xiii. c. 4.

I speak not of Popish mock-fasts: in change, not in forbearance, in change of courser cates of the land, for the curious dainties of the water, of the flesh of beasts, for the flesh of fish; of untouthsome morsells for sorbituncula delicata, as Hierome calls them.
Bp. Hall. Sermon before the King, March 30, 1628.

So as the dogge, in stead of a beast, findes now nothing but a ball of prickles, to wound his jawes; and goes away crying from so untouthsome a prey.
Id. Occasional Meditations, Med. 123.

Bp. Hall. Cont. Samariaes Famine Relieved.

— But ah, beware!
For I intend thee mischief, and to dash
With both hands ev'ry grinder from thy gums,
As men untooth a pig pilf'ring the corn.
Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. xviii.

UN-TORMENTED. Not tortured or twisted; not distressed or distracted.

Too much for chaos to permit my mass
A longer stay with essences unwrought,
Unfashion'd, untormented into man?
Young. Complaint, Night 7.

UN-TORN. Not rent, reaved, or forced asunder.

How could Ezra heare this with his clothes, his haire, his beard untorne?—Bp. Hall. Cont. Zerubabel & Ezra.

And the truth is, that as long as that small remainder of land, belonging to the church shall continue yet untorn from her, and as long as there shall be those about her (as there will ever be very many) who will never think, that they themselves have enough, the church and clergy of England shall always be inveighed against, and struck at as having too much.—South, vol. v. Ser. 10.

But Phoebus, pitying even after death
The valiant Hector, with his golden shield O'ershadow'd him, that uncorrupted still,
And still untorn, though dragg'd he might remain.
Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. xxiv.

UN-TOUCHABLE. } That may not be felt UNTOUCHED. } by the sense of touch; that may not be fingered, handled; not reached, not affected; in any way acted upon or inter-meddled with.

Further Theophylacte saithe, the body of Christe is eaten;
but the Godheade is not eaten: because it is untouchable,
and vncomprehensible vnto our senses.
Jewell. Defence of the Apologie, p. 239.

This one matter is sufficiēt to declare the moderacion & clemencye that was then in Alexander; for he did not only pardon Madates, but also left the cite untouch'd.
Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 112.

And surely, were not their persons sacred, that is, by the laws of God and man, untouchable as to prejudice; and so, protected against the malice, the envy, the fury, and the rabidness of self-ended man: it would not be an easie matter to conjure him into that enchanting circle.
Feltham, pt. ii. Res. 66.

For as to the greatest part of them, even those masters of merely by the impossibility they found in it.

Locke. Hum. Underst. b. iii. c. 4.

Ulysses conscious of his life untouch'd,
Retir'd a step from Socus, and replied:
Ah hapless youth! thy destiny impends.
Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. xi.

UN-TOWARD. } In Gower,—Unto-ward, UNTOWARDLY. } equivalent to—Toward. In UNTOWARDNESS. } the rest,—Untoward.
Not coming to, acceding to, yielding or complying; not docile or tractable, or manageable;
averse, perverse, awkward.

Ye father ofte it hath ben so,
That whan I am my ladie fro,
And thynke vntowarde hir drawe,
Than cast I many a newe lawe,
And all the worlde tourne vp so downe.
Gower. Con. A. b. iv.

The last of this diuision Stant vntowarde Septemtrion.—Id. Ib. b. vii.

Thou shalte goe afore him to prepaire mennes heartes to

UNTRACTABI'LITY. } steps, or vestiges.

Untractable (see INTRACTABLE),—that may not be drawn or led along (in a given way or road);
that cannot be managed, guided, or governed.

But if he be so untractable that he wyll be moued neyther with shame, nor with feare of iudgemente, than bryng the matter to the congregacion.—Udal. Mathew, c. 18.

And why is this way narrow but because it is untracked and untrodden? if I may not rather say the way is untracked and found by few, because it is narrow and not easie to tread in.—Bp. Hall. Soliloquies, Sol. 68.

— But I
Toild out my uncouth passage, fore't to ride
Th' untractable abyss, plung'd in the womb
Of unoriginal night and chaos wilde.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. x.

He [God] puts on a rigid, rough and untractable carriage, even towards his dearest children, even then when he means them most good.—Hales. Rem. Ser. on Luke, xviii. 1.

If the ways of God's universal providence be untraceable, then most of all the workings of his grace are conducted in a secret unperceivable way in this new birth.
Leighton. Com. on 1 Peter, c. 1.

Who can alone discover the wiles, and fathom the depths

(otherwise untraceable) labyrinths.
Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 261.

— So the eagle,
That bears the thunder of our grandsire Jove,
With joy beholds his hardy youthfull offspring
Forsake the nest, to try his tender pinions,
In the wide untract air.
Rowe. Ulysses, Act iii.

Which great difference in men's intellectuals, whether it rises from any defect in the organs of the body, particularly adapted to thinking; or in the dullness or untractableness of those faculties for want of use; or, as some think, in the natural differences of men's souls themselves, or some, or all of these together; it matters not here to examine.
Locke. Hum. Underst. b. iv. c. 20.

Nor wonder, if (advantag'd in my flight,
By taking wing from thy auspicious height)
Through untrac'd ways and airy paths I fly,
More boundless in my fancy than my eye.
Denham. Cooper's Hill.

There are few people so untractable but may be kept in temper by a wise management.—Waterland, vol. ix. Ser. 1.

This plan was accordingly put into execution; but the untractableness and prodigious strength of the buffaloes, rendered it a tedious and difficult operation.
Cook. Third Voyage, b. vi. c. 10.

His [Condorcet] untractability to these leaders, and his figure in the club of jacobins, which at that time they wished to bring under, alone prevented that part of the arrangement.—Burke. Thoughts on French Affairs, (1791.)

UN-TRADED. Not frequented or resorted to (for purposes of merchandize or commerce; not engaged in commerce.)

Our English that to steale the first blessing of an vntaded place, will perhaps secretly hasten thither, may bee beholding to mee for this caueat, if they take notice thereof.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 682.

That he may deliuer vp vnto Messias at his comyng a

— By Mars his gauntlet, thanks!
Mock not, that I affect the untraded oath.
Shakespeare. Troil. & Cress. Act iv. sc. 5.

Men leave estates to their children in land, as not so liable to casualties as money, in untrading and unskilful hands.—Locke.

UN-TRAINED. Not drawn (in the way they should go); not educated, exercised, or practised, or experienced.

But yet these shadowes of thynges visible wer geuen for a tyme to the grosse and untrained people, to the ende thei might one daie in processe of tyme by these first introducciōs, growe and procede foreward to thynges of the mynde.

Udal. Luke, c. 24.

Alas, what is to be lookt for of raw untaught untrained men (if such should be called forth of their shops on the sudden) that know not so much as their files or motions, or postures, but either flight or filling of ditches.

Bp. Hall. St. Paul's Combat, pt. ii.

UN-TRANSFERABLE. That cannot be borne or conveyed from one to another.

In parliament there is a rare co-ordination of power, though the sovereignty remain still entire and untransferable, in the prince.—Howell. Pre-em. of Parliament.

UN-TRANSLATED. } Not borne or con-UNTRANSLATABLE. } veyed from (one language into another).

Hebrew Borith, which word Arias Montanus in his interlineary Bible reteineth untranslated.

Search. Light of Nature, vol. ii. pt. iii. c. 30.

To me they appear untranslatable. [Lines from Richard the 3d's description of himself.]

Gray. To West, April 1742.

UN-TRANSPARENT. Not shining through.

We have found more than once that some pieces of glass [so] prepared, though held against the light, appear'd of a transparent yellow, yet looked on with one's back turned to the light, exhibited an untransparent blue.

Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 735.

UN-TRANSPASSABLE. That cannot be gone or passed over.

Are these the bounds y' have given

Th' untranspassable bars

That limit pride so short?—Daniel. Cleopatra.

UN-TRAVELLED. Not having gone or passed a wearisome length of way; not having gone, passed, journeyed, through countries, over seas; not having visited foreign countries.

What if they should? why, if they should, I say, they were never abroad: what foreigner would do so? it writes them directly untravel'd.—Beaum. & Fletch. Philaster, Act i.

I have heard it observed more than once, by those who have seen Italy, that an untravelled Englishman cannot relish all the beauties of Italian pictures, because the gestures which are expressed in them are often such as are peculiar to that country.—Spectator, No. 407.

Where'er I roam, whatever realms to see,
My heart untravel'd fondly turns to thee:
Still to my brother turns, with ceaseless pain,
And drags at each remove a lengthening chain.

Goldsmith. The Traveller.

UN-TREAD, v. } To tread back again; to UNTRODDEN. } pass back the same way or road. Untrodden,—

Not passed on foot; not walked or trampled on; where no path has been made.

Where is the horse that does untread againe
His tedious measures with the vnbaded fire,
That he did pace them first: all things that are,
Are with more spirit chased then enjoy'd.

Shakespeare. Merchant of Venice, Act ii. sc. 6.

Sal. We do beleue thee, and beshrew my soule,
But I do loue the fauour, and the forme
Of this most faire occasion, by the which We will untread the steps of damned flight.

id. King John, Act v. sc. 4.

(Those scatter'd troops from Barnet that escap'd,)
Through untrod grounds, in many a tedious hour, Flock to her daily.—Drayton. Miseries of Q. Margaret.

—Methinks the downs are sweeter,
And the young company of swains far meeter,
Than those forsaken and untrodden places.

Beaum. & Fletch. Faithful Shepherdess, Act i.

The most frequented once, and noisie part
Of Thebes, now midnight silence reigns even here,
And grass untrodden springs beneath our feet.

Dryden. Oedipus, Act i.

No fleecy flocks dwell there, nor plough is known
But the unseeded and unfurrow'd soil
Year after year, a wilderness by man
Untrodden, food for blatant goats supply'd.

Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. ix.

UN-TREASURED. Deprived of its treasure, or store of wealth, or riches, or any thing precious.

1 Lo. I cannot heare of any that did see her,
The ladies her attendants of her chamber Saw her a bed, and in the morning early
They found the bed untreasur'd of their mistris.

Shakespeare. As You Like It, Act ii. sc. 2.

UN-TRE/ATABLE. That cannot be managed; that cannot be composed or arranged.

Thou shalt not wenen (quod she) that I beare an untreatable batayle [inexorable bellum] ayenst fortune.

Chaucer. Boecius, b. ii.

If we carry thither with us a perverse and untreatable temper, that will not endure either to submit or condescend, we shall be sure to find the same humour reigning thro'out all the society of the wicked.—Scott. Christian Life, pt. i. c. 3.

UN-TRE/MBLING. Not shaking or shuddering.

—Nor untrembling canst thou see,

How from a scraggy rock, whose prominence
Half overshades the ocean, hardy men

Fearless of rending winds and dashing waves,
Cut samphire, to excite the squeamish gust
Of pampered luxury.

J. Philips. Cider, b. i.

But when men died, at once they ceas'd to be,
Returning to the barren womb of nothing,
Whence first they sprung, then might the debauchee Untrembling mouth the Heavens.—Blair. The Grave.

UN-TRE/SPASSING. Not transgressing.

Others were sent more chearful, free, and still as it were at large, in the midst of an untrespassing honesty.

Milton. Apology for Smectymnuus, § 1.

UN-TRE/SSSED. Not tied in a tress, (Tyr-whitt); not plaited.

Her gilt heeres, with a gold threde

Ibound were, untressed as she lay.

Chaucer. The Assemblie of Fowles.

Hire heres han they kempt, that lay untressed

Ful rudely, and with hir fingres smal

A coroune on hire hed they han ydressed.

Id. The Clerkes Tale, v. 8256.

UN-TRIED. Not proved or put to the proof; not essayed, attempted, experienced.

But where ye ended haue, now I begin
To tread an endless trace withouten guide Or good direction how to enter in Or how to issue forth in waies untride,
In perils strange, in labours long and wide.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 1.

Her followers such, as meerly friendless stood,
Sunk and dejected by the Spensers pride,
Who bore the taints of treason in their blood,
And for revenge would leave no ways untry'd.

Drayton. Barons' Wars, s. 37.

And since like Tiphys parting from the shore,
In ample seas I sail, and depths untry'd before,
This let me further add, that Nature knows
No stedfast station, but ebbs or flows:
Ever in motion.—Dryden. Ovid. Metam. b. xv.

UN-TRIMMED. Corruptly so written for en-trimmed, as unrip for enrip, (and see also UN-STABLISHED.) In A. S. On-trimman, to trim, (qv.) The A. S. has its on, negative and also augmentative, like the Lat. In; thus on-lihtan is to enlighten, on-tyan is to untye; and in this word untrim, on, (aug.) has been converted into our neg. form un. The commentators on Shakespeare, not aware of this, are quite at fault. In Ford it is not clear whether Bianca meant to scoff at the finical or slovenly appearance of her husband's beard.

Cen. O Lewis, stand fast, the deuill tempts thee heere,
In likeness of a new untrimmed bride.

Shakespeare. K. John, Act iii. sc. 1.

Bian. Can you imagine, sir, the name of Duke Could make a crooked leg, a scrambling foot,
A tolerable face, a wearish hand,
A bloodless lip, or such an untrimmed beard
As yours, fit for a lady's pleasure?

Ford. Love's Sacrifice, Act v. sc. 1.

UN-TRIUMPHED. } Not conquered or UNTRIUMPHABLE. } subdued (with ceremony in commemoration of the victory).

The sun's rise—where into th' ocean
Nysas, Hydaspes, and swift Ganges fall,
[I] suffer'd you only, when I conquer'd all,
To goe untriumph'd: Parthias king alone
Of all th' East's monarchs, scap'd subiection.

May. Lucan. Pharsalia, b. viii.

2131

What towns, what garrisons, might you,
With hazard of this blood, subdue,
Which now y' are bent to throw away
In vain untriumphable fray?—Hudibras, pt. i. c. 2.

UN-TROLLED. Not turned or moved round; not rolled.

Yet none he found so much a fool to lend.
Hard fate! untroll'd is now the charming dye,
The play-house and the parks unvisited must lie.

Dryden. Juvenal, Sat. 9.

UN-TRO/UBLE, v. } To remove, to free UNTRO/UBLED. } from, to divest of—UNTRO/UBLEDNESS. } trouble or vexation, distress, molestation, anxious or displeasing labour or toil.

Then with the sunne, take sir your timely rest,
And with new day new worke at once begin:
Vntroubled night (they say) giues counsell best.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 1.

—Leave the thoughts
Of this vain world, forget your flesh and blood,
And make your spirit an untroubled way
To pass to what it ought.

Beaum. & Fletch. Love's Pilgrimage, Act iv. sc. 2.

Art thou troubled with fears, enemies, and snares? un-trouble thyself of that for he is with thee.

Leighton. Com. on 1 Pet. c. 5.

He hath rifled all the sects of the old philosophers, robb'd each of them of his master-piece; the sceptick of his indifference and untroubledness, &c.

Hammond. Works, vol. iv. p. 479.

Ever chearful in her behaviour, but withal ever calm and even, her satisfaction, like a deep untroubled stream, ran out, without any of that violence, or noise, which sometimes the shallowest pleasures do most abound in.

Atterbury, vol. i. Ser. 6.

UN-TRUE. } Not agreeing with, according UNTRU/LY. } or conformable to, consistent UNTRU/TH. } with—the truth, or with that which is thought or believed, with our thoughts or belief; not faithful or veracious.

To undertake the tool. of untrewe sacrifice

In menyng of miracles.—Piers Plouhman. Vision, p. 5.

And there we lengeden ful long, and leueden ful harde
For to alle this Freren folke, weren founden in tounes,
And taughten untrewely, and that we wel aspiede.

B. Jonson. Every Man Out of his Humour, Act ii. sc. 1.

Such as on stages play, such as we see
The Dryads painted, whom wilde satyres loue,
Whose armes halfe naked ; lockes entrussed bee,
With buskins laced on their legs aboue,
And silken robes tuckt short about their knee ;
Such seem'd the Silurian daughters of this groue,
Saw that in stead of shafts and boughes of tree,
She bore a late, a harpe of citterne sheene.

Fairefax. Godfrey of Boulogne, b. xviii.

Neither shall you, at any time, ambitiously affecting the title of the untrussers or whippers of the age, suffer the itch of writing to over-run your performance in libel.

B. Jonson. Poetaster, Act v. sc. 1.

Come, we'll go see how far forward our journeyman is toward the untrussing of him.—Id. Ib. Act iv. sc. 5.

UN-TRUST. } Not thought or believed UNTRUSTY. } to be true and faithful ; not UNTRUSTINESS. } confided in, credited, relied, or depended upon.

Bp. Hall. Cont. Saul in David's Cave

UN-TUMULTUOUS. Not noisy or turbulent ; not raising a commotion or confusion.

— Nor less admire

This tumult untumultuous ; all on wing !
In motion all ! yet what profound repose !
What fervid action, yet no noise ! as aw'd
To silence by the presence of their Lord.

Young. Complaint, Night 9.

UN-TUNE, v. } To remove or destroy an UNTUNNEABLE. } extended continuity of sound,
UNTUNNEABLY. } of sounds in consent or concert, in harmony or concord ; to disable from the production of such sounds ; to relax the strings.

Or be the shepherds which doe serue her laesie.
That they list not their mery pipes apply,
Or be their pipes untunable and craesie,
That they cannot her honour worthily ?

Spenser. Colin Clouts come home againe.

Pardon (bright excellence !) an untun'd string,
That in thy ears thus keeps a murmuring ;
O ! speak a lowly muse's pardon.

Crashaw. Upon the Duke of York's Death.

As one broken link dissolves the union of the whole chain, and one jarring untuned string spoils the whole musick, so is every sin that seizes upon a portion of our affections ; if we love one, that one destroys the acceptation of all the rest.—Bp. Taylor, vol. i. Ser. 12.

He who sees not this argument how plainly it deserves to divorce any untunable, or unatoneable matrimony, sees little.—Milton. Tetrachordon.

An odious and unpleasant thing it is, to hear a hen keep a creaking or cackling, and a cow untowardly and untunably crying.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 586.

On other occasions we have drawn two words into one, which has likewise very much untuned our language, and clogged it with consonants, as " mayn't, can't, shan't, won't," and the like, for " may not, can not, shall not, will not, &c." Spectator, No. 135.

Their poetry then was made up almost entirely of monosyllables ; which, when they came together in any cluster, are certainly the most harsh untuneable things in the world.

Waller. Pref. to Poems, (ed. 1690.)

UN-TURNED. Not moved round ; revolved, converted ;—" no stone unturned," i. e. no obstacle left unmoved, no place unsearched, nothing untried.

Nevertheless in the mean time they left no stone unturned in Scotland, by secret contrivances to procure that the young king might be sent over into France, and Morton the regent laid aside.

Camden. Hist. of Q. Elizabeth, an. 1574.

Who will spare no pains, nor leave any stone unturned, for satisfying their lusts, and accomplishing their bad designs.—Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 20.

After you shall have left no stone unturned to avoid it [war,] after you shall have sought peace by every mode of negotiation, the next desirable point will be, to take the greatest care that the execution of a bad business may be chiefly consigned to bad men.—Knox. Antipolemus.

UN-TUTORED. Not educated, instructed, disciplined.

We are two simple maids untutor'd, here, sir ;
Two honest maids, is that a sin at court, sir ?
Beaum. & Fletch. Loyal Subject, Act iv. sc. 3.

She had sixty-seven killed in the action, and eighty-four wounded, whilst the Centurion had only two killed, and a lieutenant and sixteen wounded, all of whom but one recovered : of so little consequence are the most destructive arms in untutored and unpractised hands.

Anson. Voyages, b. iii. c. 8.

For living at first scattered abroad in independent tribes, their gross, untutored minds could rise no higher than to the sensible causes of good and evil.

Warburton, vol. ix. Ser. 5.

UN-TWINE, v. } To roll back, to revolve ;
UNTWIST, v. } any thing convolved, (any thing twained, or twined.)

This knot [saith our author] might be untwined with more facilitie thus.

Holinshed. The Sundrie Invasions of Ireland.

When Age and Death call'd for the score,
No surfeits were to reckon for ;
Death tore not (therefore) but sans strife
Gently untwined his thread of life.

And by her means he came to untwist this riddle.

Beaum. & Fletch. Woman Pleas'd, Act v. sc. 1.

The saints deceiv'd, shall be a sweet mistake,
Hand up thy soul for mine, and mine for thine.
Emp. No, I'll untwist you :

I have occasion for your stay on earth.

Dryden. Don Sebastian, Act iii. sc. 1.

Ev'n light itself, which every thing displays,
Shone undiscover'd, till his brighter mind
Untwisted all the shining robe of day.

Thomson. To Sir Isaac Newton.

But still the solar light is not less real in the rainbow where it's rays become thus untwisted, and each differing thread distinctly seen in its effect, than while they remained united and incorporated with one another in the sun.

Warburton. Divine Legation, b. ii. App.

UN-VA'CILLATING. Not wavering, unsteady, or inconstant.

He was situated like one who walks upon ice, ready to give way around him, and whose only safety consists in moving onwards, by firm and unvacillating steps.

Scott. Kenilworth, c. 17.

UN-VA'LUABLE. } See INVALUED. In the UNVA'LUED. } word Invalided, the in is emphatical or augmentative ; and so Unvalued
(see UNRIP) used to denote—

Much valued, highly prized, esteemed highly,
or to be of great worth.

Mongst which, therein a siluer dish did ly
two golden apples of unvalued price :
For passing those which Hercvles came by,
or those which Atalanta did entice.—Spenser, son. 77.

Cla. Here I swear to thee,
By the unvalued love I bear this beauty,
(And kiss the book too) never to be recreant,
To honour ye, to truly love, and serve ye.

Beaum. & Fletch. Woman Pleas'd, Act ii. sc. 6.

Chryses, the priest, came to the fleet to buy
For presents of unvalued price his daughter's liberty.

Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. i.

Out of the east jewels of worth she brings.
Th' unvalued diamond of her sparkling eye.

Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b. ii. s. 3.

No home for her confesses she
But where she may a martyr be.
She'll to the Moors and trade with them,
For this unvalued diadem.—Crashaw. Hymn to St. Teresa.

Sir Moth. I will tell you, sister,
I cannot cry his caract up enough ;
He is unvaluable.—B. Jonson. Magnetic Lady, Act i. sc. 1.

And from my father [I] received such a character of his learning, humility, and other virtues, that, like jewels of unvaluable price, they still cast such a lustre, as envy or the rust of time shall never darken.

King. Letter to Mr. Walton.

True it is, that a good name is unvaluable ; and all the pelf in the world is not an equal ransom for it.

South, vol. x. Ser. 9.

UN-VA'NQUISHABLE. } That cannot be UNVA'NQUISHED. } overpowered or overcome, conquered, subdued.

When time and occasion shall require, ye shal be through my spirite stronge and unvanquishable.—Udal. John, c. 17.

For so shall they be strong againste all the troublesome hurlyburlies of thys world, and shall persist unvanquished.

Id. Ib.

On this side, lo ! the Getule town behold !
A people bold, unvanquished in war.

Surrey. Virgile. Æneis, b. iv.

But now as concerning that the same unvanquishable army fighting vnder your ensignes and name, streightwaies after it came to land, set fire on their ships ; what moued them so to doo ?—Holinshed. Hist. of England, b. iv. c. 24.

Whilst the stout queen, by speedy flight, redeem'd
The safety of herself, and of her son :
And with her Somerset to Durham fled ;
Her pow'rs suppress'd, her heart unvanquished.

Daniel. Civil Wars, b. vii.

UN-VA'NTAGED. Not aided or assisted, benefited or profited.

Yet, even thus, unvantag'd and on foot,
Superiour honours I that day acquir'd
To theirs who rode, for Pallas led me on Herself to victory.

Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. xi.

UN-VARIABLE. } See INVARIABLE. That UNVA'RIED. } cannot be altered or UNVA'RYING. } changed ; (actively) — that does not alter or change.

So that if man would be unvariable,
He must be God, or like a rock or tree;
For e'en the perfect angels were not stable,
But had a fall more desperate than we.
Donne. Immortality of the Soul, § 9.

In all which this is constant and unvariable, that every more general term stands for such an idea, and is but a part of any of those contained under it.
Locke. Hum. Underst. b. iii. c. 3.

And nothing being a measure of duration, as nothing is of extension, we cannot keep by us any unvarying measure of duration, which consists in a constant fleeting succession.
Id. Ib. b. ii. c. 14.

The commodore on hearing this pleasing and unexpected news, threw down his axe, with which he was then at work, and by his joy broke through, for the first time, the equable and unvaried character which he had hitherto preserved.
Anson. Voyages, b. iii. c. 3.

The annals of Egypt, as may be seen by Herodotus, Diodorus Siculus, Strabo, Plutarch, and others, who all copied from these annals, were express and unvariable for the real diversity, the distinct personality of Osiris and Sesostris.—Warburton. Divine Legation, b. iv. s. 5.

Along thy glades, a solitary guest,
The hollow sounding bittern guards its nest;
Amidst thy desert walks the lapwing flies,
And tires their echoes with unvary'd cries.
Goldsmith. Deserted Village.

UN-VARNISHED. Not brightened or burnished; having no false glossiness or brilliancy given or added.

— Yet (by your gracious patience)
I will a round unvarnish'd tale deliver,
Of my whole course of love.
Shakespeare. Othello, Act i. sc. 3.

This is a true, unvarnished, undisguised state of the affair.—Burke. Speech at Bristol, (1780.)

UN-VEIL, v. } To remove or divest of UNVEILEDLY. } cover, skreen, shade or con-
UNVEILER, n. } cealment.

The providence that's in a watchful state,
Keeps place with thought; and almost like the gods,
Doe thoughts unvail in their dumbe cradles.
Shakespeare. Troyl. & Cres. Act iii. sc. 3.

— Hesperus that led
The starrie host, rode brightest, till the moon
Rising in clouded maiestie, at length
Apparent queen unvaild her peerless light,
And o'er the dark her silver mantle threw.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. iv.

Oh, speak! unveil this mystery of sorrow,
And draw the dismal scene, at once to sight.
Rowe. Tamerlane, Act ii.

For these [the divine books] want not excellencies, but only skilful unvailers.—Boyle. Works, vol. iv. p. 18.

Not knowing what use you will make of what has been unveiledly communicated to you, I was unwilling that some things, which had cost me pains, should fall into any man's hands, that scorns to purchase knowledge with pains.
Id. Ib.

UN-VE'NERABLE. That may not be revered, honoured, or respected.

Paul. For euer
Unvenerable be thy hands, if thou
Tak'st vp the princesse, by that forced basenesse
Which he has put vpon't.
Shakespeare. Winter's Tale, Act ii. sc. 3.

UN-VE'NOMED. Not poisoned or infected with poison.

If thou mayst spit upon a toad unvenomed, why mayst thou not speak of a vice without danger?
Bp. Hall. Satires, Post.

UN-VE'NTED. Not opened for utterance or emission.

Things like ourselves, as sensual, vain, unvented
Bubbles, and breaths of air, got with an itching
As blisters are.—Beaum. & Fletch. Mad Lover, Act ii.

UN-VE'NTILATED. Not having an opening or passage (for fresh air); not exposed to wind.

This animals, to succour life, demand;
For should the air unventilated stand,
The idle deep corrupted would contain
Blue deaths, and secret stores of raging pain.
Blackmore. Creation, b. ii.

UN-VE'RDANT. Not green, or flourishing in growth.

Ungraceful 'tis to see without a horn
The lofty hart, whom branches best adorn;
A leafless tree, or an unverdant mead;
And as ungraceful is a hairless head.
Congreve. Ovid. Art of Love, b. iii.

UN-VE'RITABLE. Not assured or ascertained.

Whereupon arised divers doubts, and many suspicious conceptions; some believing he [St. John] was not buried, some that he was buried but risen again, others that he descended into the tomb, and from thence departed after.
But all these proceeded upon unveritable grounds.
Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. vii. c. 10.

UN-VE'RSED. Not practised, experienced, or expert.

Van Hemart, governour of the town, a young man raw and unversed in military matters, not so much as expecting an assault, compounded for his own and the townsmens lives, and yielded up the place.
Camden. Hist. of Q. Elizabeth, an. 1586.

I say therefore, in which epistles, are some things hard to be understood, which they that are unlearned and unstable (that are unlearned, i.e. unskilled and unversed in divine things; and unstable, i.e. of light, desultory, unbalanced minds) wrest, as they do the other scriptures, to their own destruction.—Atterbury, vol. iii. Ser. 9.

Not eastern monarchs, on their nuptial day
In dazzling gold and purple, shine so gay
As the bright natives of th' unlabour'd field,
Unvers'd in spinning, and in looms unskill'd.
Blackmore. Creation, b. i.

UN-VE'XED. Not agitated, disturbed, distressed, or harassed.

— In whom all white, and red, and blue (Beauty's ingredients) voluntary grew,
As in an unvex'd Paradise.
Donne. Anatomy of the World, Act i.

How bless'd is he, who leads a country life,
Unvex'd with anxious cares, and void of strife!
Who studying peace, and shunning civil rage,
Enjoy'd his youth, and now enjoys his age.
Dryden. To John Dryden, Esq.

UN-VI'GOROUSLY. Not with active force or strength; without energy.

Many other courses he tries, enforcing himself with much ostentation of endless genealogies, as if he were the man that St. Paul forewarns us of in Timothy, but so unvigorously, that I do not fear his winning of many to his cause, but such as doting upon great names are either over-weak, or over-sudden of faith.
Milton. Reason of Church Government, b. i. c. 5.

UN-VI'OLATED. Not forced, harmed or injured by force; not outraged, ravaged, or ravished.

Heerein you warre against your reputation,
And draw within the compasse of suspect
Th' unviolated honor of your wife.
Shakespeare. Comedie of Errors, Act iii. sc. 1.

It is not when two unfortunately met are by the canon
forc'd to draw in that yoke an unmerciful day's work of sorrow till death unharress 'em, that then the law keeps marriage most unviolated and unbroken.
Milton. Doct. & Dis. of Divorce, b. ii. c. 21.

It came to pass that the fire when it came to proof, would not do his work, but starting off like a full sail from the mast, did but reflect a golden light upon his [Polycarpus] unviolated limbs, exhaling such a sweet odour, as if all the incense of Arabia had bin burning.
Id. Of Prelatical Episcopacy.

UN-VI'RTUOUS. Not strong, powerful, efficacious; not morally good.

Poppy she knew, she knew the mandrakes might,
And tore up both, and so cool'd her child's blood:
Unvirtuous weeds might long unvex'd have stood.
Donne. Progress of the Soul, s. 1.

Wherby it may be plain enough to men of eyes, that the vulgar exposition of a permittance by law to an entire sin, whatever the colour may be, is an opinion both ungodly, unpolitic, unvirtuous, and void of all honesty and civil sense.
Milton. Tetrachordon.

UN-VI'SARD. Deprived, divested, of the mask of concealment.

We know where the shoe wrings you, you fret, and are gall'd at the quick; and O what a death it is to the prelates to be thus unvisarded, thus uncas'd, to have the periwigs pluck'd off that cover your baldness, your inside nakedness thrown open to public view.
Milton. Animad. upon the Remonst. Defence, § 1.

UN-VI'SIBLE, i.e. Invisible. That cannot be seen.

For the unvysible thingis of him that ben undirstondun ben biholdun of the creature of the world bi tho thingis that ben maad, ghe and the euerlastinge vertue of him and the godheed, so that thei moun not be excusid.
Wiclif. Romayns, c. 1.

For in him alle thingis ben maad in heuenes and in erthe, visible and unvysible, either trones, either domynaciouns, either princehoodis, either poweris.—Id. Colocensis, c. 1.

For that joy thou haddest whan thou ley
With Mars thy knight, when Uulcanus fond,
And with a chaine unvisible you bond.
Chaucer. Com. of the Black Knight.

You in time of divine sacrifice, do faithfully and humbly, both in heart and utter gesture, agnize, reverence, and adore the same flesh in substance, altho' unvisibly in the sacrament, which we al shal se in the latter day visible coming in the firmament.
Bp. Gardner. Ser. at the Funeral of Q. Mary.

UN-VI'SITED. Not seen, viewed, or surveyed (by travellers, by any who have gone to see or view); not looked at or upon.

Yet not in so generall a maner, but that there remayned some farre remote countries unvisited by them, among the which it is reported that India the great, called the vttermost India, as yet had receiued no light of the word.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 171.

— Or else in some mild zone
Dwell not unvisited of Heav'n's fair light Secure, and at the brightning orient beam Purge off this gloom.—Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ii.

Yet none he found so much a fool to lend.
Hard fate! untroll'd is now the charming dye,
The play-house and the parks unvisited must lie.
Dryden. Juvenal, Sat. 9.

UN-VI'TIATED. Not affected, not polluted by any vice or sin, any criminality, impurity.

Redintegrate the fame first of your house,
Restore your ladyship's quiet, render then
Your niece a virgin and unvitiatted,
And make all plain and perfect, as it was,
A practice to betray you, and your name?
B. Jonson. Magnetic Lady, Act iv. sc. 3.

UN-VITTA'ILED. Not provided with food.

And heare, how much and howe worthily maye Exceter be commended, which being in the midst of rebelles, unvittailed, vnurnished, vnprepared, for so long a siege, did noblye holde out the continuall and dangerous assault of the rebell.—Sir J. Cheeke. The Hurt of Sedition.

UN-U'NIFORMNESS. The state or condition of not having one form, frame, or fashion, mode, method, or manner.

The different attributes of which one uniform being, are not a variety of parts, or an ununiformness (if I may so speak) of the necessity by which it exists; but they are all and each of them attributes of the whole, attributes of the one simple infinite being.
Clarke. Answer to the Sixth Letter.

UN-U'NITED. See DISUNITE. Not joined, connected or combined.

The meaning of parts, (in questions of this nature,) is separable, compounded, ununited parts, such as are the parts of matter: which, for that reason, is always a compound, not a simple substance.
Clarke. Answer to the Sixth Letter.

The truth is, we have seen, and yet do see, religious societies, some grown up, and continuing unsupported, and ununited with the state; others that, when supported and united, have by strange arts brought the state into subjection, and become its tyrants and usurpers; and thereby defeated all the good that can arise from this alliance; such societies, I say, we have seen.
Warburton. Alliance between Church & State, b. ii.

UN-VOTE, v. To revoke or recall a vote.

This was so sacred a rule, that many of those who voted with the court the day before, expressed their indignation against it, as subverting the very constitution of parliaments, if things might be thus voted and unvoted again from day to day.—Burnet. Own Time. Q. Anne, an. 1711.

UN-VO'YAGEABLE. Not to be gone over;
over which there is no way.

Hell could no longer hold us in her bounds,
Nor this unvoyageable gulf obscure Detain from following thy illustrious track.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. x.

UN-U'RGED. Not worked or laboured, or kept at work or labour; not spurred, stimulated, incited; earnestly pressed.

The time was once when thou enur'd wouldst vow,
That neuer words were musicke to thine eare.
Shakespeare. Comedie of Errours, Act ii. sc. 2.

And noble Dolphin, albeit we sweare
A voluntary zeale, and an en-ur'd faith
To your proceedings.—Id. K. John, Act v. sc. 2.

For ill or good 't is madness to have prov'd
Dangers unur'd; feed on this flattery,
That absent lovers one in th' other be.
Donne. Elegy on his Wife.

UN-USED. } Not practised, employed,
UN-USEDNESS. } accustomed.

UN-USEFUL. } mon or frequent, or in the ordinary course.

Unuseful,—without use; useless.

You that know death liues, where power lies vnusde,
Joying to shine in waues that burie you,
And so make way for life euen through your graues.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 670.

Indeed these most filthy abominations, euen in our common wealth, be not altogether vnusuall.
Id. Ib. vol. i. p. 585.

Comparing the unusedness of this act with the unripeness of their age, seeing in general conjecture they could do it for nothing that might not fall out dangerous: he was somewhile troubled with himself.—Sidney. Arcadia, b. vii.

They saw before, the pillar of his ordinary presence: now they see him unusually terrible.
Bp. Hall. Cont. Searchers of Canaan.

Whether his rage and covetousnesse had so transported him, that he had no leasure to observe the unnaturall un-usualnesse of the event.—Id. Ib. Of Balaam.

The vnusualnesse of the reuelations in those corrupted times was such, that Gideon might thinke of any thing rather than an angell.—Id. Ib. Gideon's Calling.

Thier. Mine eyes when she is nam'd Cannot forget their tribute, and your gift
Is not unuseful now.

Beaum. & Fletch. Thierry & Theodoret, Act iv.

Softening thus the vigor of his sex, [thou] engrafest into that tender age a superfluous love of riches, and dost perswade him to the pursuit of those things which are totally un-useful.—Evelyn. Golden Book of St. Chrysostom.

Conquest and triumph, now, are mine, no more;
Nor will I victory in camps adore:
For, lingering there, in long suspense she stands,
Shifting the prize in unresolving hands;
Unused to wait I broke through her delay,
Fix'd her by force, and snatch'd the doubtful day.
Congreve. Mourning Bride, Act i.

All other goods without it [happiness] are insignificant and unuseful thereto; and it cannot be wanting where piety is.—Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 6.

Mark no man; question no man; for the sight
Of strangers is unusual here, and cold
The welcome by this people shewn to such.
Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. vii.

In the stomach they [grass and hay] are softened by the gastric juice, which in these animals is unusually copious.
Paley. Natural Theology, c. 16.

UN-UTTERABLE. } That cannot be UN-UTTERABLY. } spoken or told.
UN-UTTERED. }

— He is, sir

The most unutterable coward that e'er nature
Blest with hard shoulders, which were only given him,
To the ruin of bastinados.
Beaum. & Fletch. Thierry & Theodoret, Act ii.

Gons. Dear madam, speak, or you'll incense the king.
Alm. What is't to speak? or wherefore should I speak?
What means these tears, but grief unutterable?
Congreve. Mourning Bride, Act iv.

I believe few parents would wish their sons to live the life of Cowper, which, though virtuous and amiable, was at certain times, unutterably woeful.
Knox. Remarks on Grammar Schools.

See his mortified looks, his troubled gestures! see the bloody sweat! strange symptom of the unuttered pangs that rend his righteous heart!—Bp. Horsley, vol. ii. Ser. 19.

UN-VULGAR. Not popular or common, or usual among the people; not common.

Cynthia, I apply
My bolder numbers to thy golden lyre:
O then inspire

The priest in this strange rapture! heat my brain

With Delphic fire,

That I may sing my thoughts in some unvulgar strain.
B. Jonson. Under-woods.

And as the cogitations of princes farre differ from those of the vulgar; so their dreams are unvulgar and different.
Sandys. Ovid. Metam. Illust.

UN-VULNERABLE. See INVULNERABLE.
That cannot be wounded.

With the consent of supream Jove, informe
Thy thoughts with noblesse, that thou mayst proue
To shame unvulnerable, and sticke i' th' warres
Like a great sea-marke standing every flaw,
And sauing those that eye thee.
Shakespeare. Coriolanus, Act v. sc. 3.

UN-WAITED. Not watched, observed, or attended.

For else to wander up and down unwaited on
And unregarded in my place and project,
Is for a sowters soul, not an old souldiers.
Beaum. & Fletch. Mad Lover, Act ii.

UN-WA'KED. } Not raised or roused, (sc.
UNWA'KENED. } from sleep, inertness;) not quickened or excited.

And than vpon hym selfe he caste
A mantel, and his swerde all naked
He toke in honde, and she enwaked
A bedde laie.
Gower. Con. A. b. vii.

— Which th' only sound
Of leaves and fuming rills, Aurora's fan,
Lightly dispers'd, and the shrill matin song
Of birds on every bough; so much the more
His wonder was to find unwaka'd Eve
With tresses discompos'd, and glowing cheek,
As through unquiet rest.—Milton. Paradise Lost, b. v.

Enwakened with the tumult of this fray,
Dissolv'd in death-like sleep, Aphidus lay Vpon a beares rough hide on Ossa kild.
Sandys. Ovid. Metam. b. xii.

UN-WA'LLED. Not fortified by wall, (qv.) not fortified or secured.

There was onely so much of this streight enwalled, as might serue for the issuing of the horsemen, or the passing of caryage in time of neede.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 541.

Jedworth, [is] a towne which after the manner of the countrie is enwalled and vnfensed, but onelie with the strength of the inhabitants.
Holinshed. Historie of Scotland, an. 1572.

Welcom as peace t' unwalled cities, when Famine and sword leave them more graves than men.
Beaum. & Fletch. Faithful Shepherdess, Prol. (1633.)

Santa Cruz it self is a small unwalled town fronting the sea, guarded with two other forts to secure the road.
Dampier. Voyages, an. 1699.

UN-WANDERING. Not moving or going from place to place; not roving or straying.

— He loos'd them from the yoke,
Gave them ambrosial food, and bound their feet
With golden tethers not to be untied
Or broken, that unwand'ring they might wait
Their lord's return, then sought the Grecian host.
Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. xiii.

UN-WANTED. Not needed; not required or sought for; not desired or coveted.

— You seem much surprised.
Osm. At your return so soon and unexpected.
Zara. And so unwish'd, unwanted too, it seems.
Congreve. Mourning Bride, Act iii.

The disciples of Jesus were not in so low a state of religion as is here described; but as they were yet only young in their profession, it may be supposed a lesson on this subject could not have been unwanted by them.
Gilpin, vol. iv. Hint 3.

UN-WAPPERED. Grose says,—Wapper'd,
i. e. restless or fatigued, is spoken of a sick person,
in Gloucestershire.

Unwappered may be,—unwearied; not fatigued.

— We come towards the gods
Young, and unwapper'd, not halting under crimes
Many and stale.
Beaum. & Fletch. Two Noble Kinsmen, Act v. sc. 4.

UN-WA'RDDED, i. e. unguarded, (qv.)

There was one Tiriotes, whiche during thys mourning & lamentacion, escaped by a gate that was enwarded, & fled

For he so sodenliche enware
Beheld the beautee, that she bare.—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

Anone for thy this same tyde
Lepe on thy hors, and let vs ride,
So maie we knowe both two Unwarely what our wiues do,
And that shal be a trewe assaile.—Id. Ib. b. vii.

And for the Cristen hoost shuld be assuryd from the sodayne & enware assautes & reprochis of the infidelles, therfore he cloyd theym without a strength of dyche and pale.—Fabyan. Chron. Lowys IX. an. 24.

How many haue we seene, that the chances of fortune coule not abate, and yet within a shorte whyle after enwarenesse with greatte ignominious shame hath ouerthrowe them?
Golden Boke, Let. 4.

With whiche stroke the kynge was sodeynly feryd, thynkynge his enemyes hadde comen enwarelye vpon hym.—Fabyan. Chron. Charlys VII. an. 14.

The morning next following he did set vpon them also at enwares.—Holinshed. Historie of Scotland. Ederuo.

One day as I enwarily did gaze
On those fayre eyes my loues immortall light:
The whiles my stonish hart stood in a maze,
Through sweet illusion of her lookes delight.
Spenser, s. 16.

For such who are careful (as they call it) to principle children well (and few there be who have not a set of those principles for them, which they believe in,) instill into the unwary, and as yet unprejudiced understanding (for white paper receives any characters) those doctrines they would have them retain and profess.
Locke. Hum. Underst. b. i. c. 3.

Two of our men were ordered to attend him; but one of them unwarily trusting the Indian with his firelock and pistol, the Indian escaped with them into the woods.
Anson. Voyages, b. iii. c. 2.

The same temper of mind which inclines us to a desire of fame, naturally betrays us into such slips and unwarienesses, as are not incident to men of a contrary disposition.
Spectator, No. 256.

UN-WA'RLIKE. Not warlike; not having the qualities or dispositions requisite for war, for offence or defence.

He safely might old troops to battle lead
Against th' unwarlike Persian and the Mede, Whose hasty flight did, from a bloodless field,
More spoils than honour to the victor yield.
Waller. Panegyric to Oliver Cromwell.

UN-WARMED. Not heated, inflamed, animated, inspirited.

Upon this cup what ever may compel
By powerful charm, and unresisted spell,
A heart unwarm'd to melt in love's desires,
Distill into this liquor all your fires.
Beaum. & Fletch. Humorous Lieutenant, Act iv. sc. 3.

Car. But of what marble must that breast be form'd,
To gaze on Bazzet, and remain unwarm'd?
Pope. Basset Table.

Unwarned drank therof a draught als him liste.
R. Brunne, p. 13.

Here, one picks quartels with the defect of justice done to his subjects; and makes sudden embargoes, and unwarned inroads into the adjoining country: there, another takes advantage of the violation of leagues; and colours his ambition, with the fair name of a just vindication.
Bp. Hall. Ser. Ps. xlv. 8.

Prepar'd in arms pursue your happy chance;
That none unwarn'd may plead his ignorance.
Dryden. Virgil. Aeneis, b. xi.

So now Aegisthus, under no constraint
Of destiny, had ta'en Atrides' wife
To his own bed, and him at his return
Hath foully slain, though not unwarn'd by us,
That he would surely perish.
Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. i.

UN-WA'RPED. Not thrown or cast (out of

As for his knightly form, and the dragon under him, as he is pictured in Beryth, a city of Cyprus, with a young maid kneeling to him, an unwarrantable report goes, that it was for his martial delivery of the king's daughter from the dragon.—Drayton. Poly-Olbion. Illustrations, s. 4.

O Saviour, even our well-meant zeale in seeking and injoying thee, may be faulty; if we seek thee where we should not, on earth; how we should not, unwarrantably.
Bp. Hall. Cont. The Resurrection.

Who in both the tenets of episcopacy by divine right, and the unwarrantableness of lay-presbytery, agrees so fully with me, as I do with my self.
Id. Answer to Vindication of Smectymnus, § 3.

This is their doom written, and the utmost that we find concerning them in these latter days; which we have much more cause to believe, than his unwarranted revelation here, prophesying what shall follow after his death, with the spirit of enmity, not of St. John.
Milton. Answer to Eikon Basilike, § 28.

If they did (as most certainly they did) then either the same disparity of jurisdiction must be retained, or else we must be governed with an unlawful and unwarranted equality, because not by that which only is of immediate divine institution.—Bp. Taylor. Episcopacy Asserted, § 9.

I have hinted something above of the strange lengths which have been run, and of the unwarrantable excesses which some late systems of the eucharistic sacrifice manifestly abound with.—Waterland. Works, vol. viii. p. 180.

I am perfectly sensible, that both immorality and irreligion are grown almost beyond the reach of ecclesiastical power: which having in former times been very unwarrantably extended, hath since been very unjustly and imprudently cramped and weakened many ways.
Secker, vol. v. Charge 5.

UN-WA'SHED. } Not wetted or washed; UNWA'SHEN. } not cleaned or cleansed by wetting or washing.

And the Farisees and summe of the Scribis camen fro Jerusalem togidir to him, and whanne thei hadden seen summe of hise disciplis ete bred with unwayschen hondis thei blamen.—Wiclif. Mark, c. 7.

And the Pharises came together vnto him, & diuerse of the Scribes which came fro Jerusalem. And when they saw certayne of his disciples eat breat w^t comen handes (y^t is it to say, w^t vnwashen handes) they complayned.
Bible, 1551. Ib.

To sytte vpon an vnwashed seate, doeth not defyle the mynde of a man, lyke as the washed seate, doeth not make pure and cleane hym that sytteth in it.
Udal. Matthew, c. 15.

Observe that the Scribe finds fault with the suspition of blasphemy: the Pharisee, with unwashen hands.
Bp. Hall. Pharisaisme & Christianitie.

Or when the fleece is shorn, if sweat remains Unwash'd, it soaks into their empty veins.
Dryden. Virgil. Georgics, 3.

I dare not pour, with unwash'd hands, to Jove
The rich libation forth; it cannot be,
That I should supplicate, thus foul with stains
Of gory battle, the tempestuous God.
Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. vi.

UN-WA'STED. } Not desolated, demolished, UNWA'STING. } consumed, expended, squandered, exhausted; not uselessly or lavishly employed.

After whom euer in my herte, with thursting desire weete I doe brenne, vnwastyng I langour and fade and the date of my destinie, in death or in loye I vnvide, but yet in the ende I am comforted bee my supposalle in blisse, and in loye to determine after my desires.
Chaucer. Testament of Loue, b. iii.

The rockes so many yeeres vnwasted spirit
He fills her with, and comming to inherit
A Delphian brest, nere fill'd he prophessee
Fuller: her former minde he lanishes,
And bids all women from her brest be gone.
May. Lucan. Pharsalia, b. v.

O! let me not lanch out, but let me save
Th' expense of brain and spirit: that my grave
His right and due, a whole unwasted man may have.
Donne. Progress of the Soul, s. 1.

Purest love's unwasting treasure,
Constant faith, fair hope, long leisure;
Days of ease, and nights of pleasure;
Sacred Hymen! these are thine.—Pope. Chorus to Brutus.

Several of the petty princes of the most southerly of the unwasted provinces were compelled to pay very heavy rents and tributes, who for a long time before had not paid any acknowledgment.

Udal. Luke, c. 4.

But when he sells or changes land, h' impairs
His writings, and, unwatch'd, leaves ot ses heirs.
Donne, Sat. 2.

They are cold in their religion, indeuot in their prayers, incurious in their walking, unwatchful in their circumstances.—Bp. Taylor, vol. ii. Ser. 20.

Too many are very much subject, by reason of their unwatchfulness, and not staying themselves in this point, though not to profane, yet to vain, and it may be, to detrac- tive speeches.—Leighton. Com. on 1 Peter, c. 3.

UN-WA'TERED. Not wetted or watered.
Than I will that the said xxiiii. peces of fleshe be altered vnto saltfyshe, or stokfyshe, unwatered and unsodeyn.
Fabyan. Chronycle. The Will.

UN-WA'VERING. Not moving to and fro unsteadily, unsettledly; steady, settled.

And on this occasion she wrote the king a letter (which these noblemen seem to be the carriers of) chiefly to shew how unwavering she continued in her formerly declared purpose about religion.
Styrie. Eccles. Mem. Edw. VI. an. 1551.

UN-WA'YED. Not moving or used to move on the road (or way).

Beasts that have been rid off their legs, are as much for a man's use, as colts that are unwayed, and will not go at all.
Suckling.

UN-WEA'NED. Not allured, withdrawn, disengaged.

Thus wing'd with haste she came, and with like haste
The virgin-nurse, enfolding in her arms
His yet unwean'd and helpless little one,
Fair as the star of morn.—Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. vi.

Thus we acquire a powerful attachment; an unweaned affection for peculiarities which have no other claim upon us, but from the force of habit.
Cogan. Ethical Treatise, Disq. 3. § 2.

UN-WEA'PONED. Not having or wearing, not being prepared with arms of offence or defence.

The Irish espieng the opportunitie rushed into the court in plumps, where surprising the vnweaponed multitude, they committed horrible slaughters by sparing none that came vnder their dint.
Holinshed. Chron. Description of Ireland, c. 3.

Who would not have thought, a worse time could never have beene pickt for Israels warre, than now? In the feeble- nesse of their troopes, when they were wearied, thirsty, unweaponed.—Bp. Hall. Cont. Foyle of Amalek.

But when he saw the man gainst whom he fought Vnweaponed, still stood he in the field.
Fairefax. Godfrey of Boulogne, b. vii. c. 94.

UNWE'ARIABLELY. }

When Whittlewood betime th' unwearied muse doth win
To talk with her a while.—Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 23

Some cry from tops of houses; thinking noise
The fittest herald to proclaim true joys;
Others on ground run gazing by his side,
All, as unwearied, as unsatisfied.
B. Jonson. Panegyre on James II.

This maketh them, through an vnweariable desire of receiuing instruction from the masters of that companie, to cast off the care of those verie affaires which doe most concerne their estate, and to thinke that then they are like vnto Marie, commendable for making choyce of the better part.
Hooker. Ecclesiastical Politie, Pref.

Oh, let us spend our selves in prayers, in teares, in per- swasions, in unweariable indeuours for the happy conversion of those ignorant misguided soules, who having not our knowledge, yet shame our affections.
Bp. Hall. St. Paul's Combat, pt. i.

I do much congratulate the exemplary practice of the eminent divines of our own, and the neighbour churches actuated by the unweariable endeavours of our worthy and never-enough commended Duræus.
Bp. Hall. The Peace-Maker, § 5.

Oh then, let us earnestly and unweariably aspire thither; and think all the time lost, that we employ not in the endeavour of making sure of that blessed and eternal inher- itance.—Id. The Christian's Assurance of Heaven.

And for the act which remains of the opera, I believe I shall have no leysure to mind it, after I have done what I proposed: for my business here is to unweary my selfe, after my studies, not to drudge.
Dryden. Letter to Mr. J. Tonson. Sep. 1684.

And some, with whom compar'd your insect tribes
Are but the beings of a summer's day,
Have held the scale of empire, rul'd the storm
Of mighty war; then, with unwearied hand,
Disdaining little delicacies, seiz'd
The plough, and greatly independent liv'd.
Thomson. Spring.

Thus they labour unweariedly the ruin one of another: and too frequently, rather than fail of it, will risque, or even contrive, the ruin of the whole.—Secker, vol. v. Ser. 14.

UN-WEAVE, v. To remove or undo the intertexture; to unfold.

Custom that wrought so cunningly on nature
In me that I forgot my sex, and knew not Whether my body female were, or male,
You did unweave, and had the power to charm
A new creation in me.
Beaum. & Fletch. Love's Cure, Act v. sc. 3.

So subtle and so curious was the measure,
With so unlook'd for change in ev'ry strain;
As that Penelope wrapp'd with sweet pleasure,
When she beheld the true proportion plain
Of her own web, weav'd and unweav'd again,
Davies. On Dancing.

They fill not their brains with notions that signifie nothing, to the utter extermination of all reason and common sense, and spend not an age in weaving and unweaving subtil cobwebs, fitter to catch flies than souls; therefore they have no deep knowledge in the acroamatical part of learning!
Chillingworth. Religion of Prot. Pref.

UN-WED. Not joined, united, bound, (in marriage;) not married; not inseparably attached.

From Erebus the shades of the deceas'd,
Brides, youths unwedded, seniors who had liv'd
Long time familiar with oppressive cares,
And girls, afflicted never till they died.
Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. xi.

Do you not find that joy within the breast
Of the unwedded man is soon suppress'd;
While to the bosom of a wife convey'd,
Increase is by participation made.
Crabbe. Tales of the Hall, b. x.

And there was one soft breast, as hath been said,
Which unto his was bound by stronger ties
Than the church links withal: and though unwed,
That love was pure, and, far above disguise.
Byron. Childe Harold, c. 3.

UN-WE'DGEABLE. That cannot be split or cloven.

— Mercifull heauen,
Thou rather with thy sharp and sulphurous bolt
Splits the vn-wedgable and gnarled oak
Than the soft Mertill.
Shakespeare. Measure for Measure, Act ii. sc. 2.

UN-WEE'DED. Not freed or cleared from weeds; not cleared from any thing noxiously or uselessly overgrowing or overspreading.

Fie on't? Oh fie, fie, 'tis an vnweeded garden
That growes to seed; things rank, and grosse in nature Possesse it meereley.—Shakespeare. Hamlet, Act i. sc. 2.

UN-WEE'PING. } Not shedding or dropping UNWE'PT. } (tears).—Not lamented or deplored with tears.

Ah! lies full low) pity'd thy woful plight;
There had'st thou lain unwept, unburied,
Unbless'd nor grac'd with any common rite."
P. Fletcher. Purple Island, c. 1.

UN-WEE/TING. } Not knowing, or per-UNWEE/TINGLY. } ceiving, or understanding, or intending.

To frame all well, I am content
That it were done unweetingly;
But yet I say, (who will assent,)
To do but well, do nothing why
That men should deem the contrary.
Wyat. That the Eye beaurayeth, &c.

From thence a Faerie thee unweeting reft,
There as thou sleptst in tender swadling band,
And her base Elfin brood there for thee left.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 10.

They only set on sport and play
Unweetingly importun'd
Thir own destruction to come speedy upon them.
Milton. Samson Agonistes.

—"Have I so long
Employ'd my various art, t' enrich the lap
Of Earth, all-bearing mother; and my lore Communicated to the unweeting hind,
And shall not this preeminence obtain?"
J. Philips. Cerealia.

order'd him [Virgil] massy plate, unweigh'd to a great value.—Dryden. Life of Virgil.

UN-WE/LCOME. } Not well, not grate-UNWE/LCOMENESS. } fully, pleasingly come; not grateful, pleasing, acceptable.

Ev. I thank your grace, you have prepar'd me strongly,
And my weak mind.
Queen. Death is unwelcome never,
Unless it be to tortur'd minds and sick souls,
That make their own hells.
Beaum. & Fletch. Wife for a Moneth, Act ii.

But, together with that unwelcome news you send me, what does much to alleviate the unwelcomness of it, when you acquaint me with your pious and generous resolution, to prosecute the good work he was engaged in with the same christian aim (the glory of God, and the good of souls)

She saide; Lord, indigne and unworthy

Am I, to thilke honour, that ye me bede.

Chaucer. The Clerkes Tale, v. 8236.

And connyng, wherby onely man excelleth all other creatures in erthe, they reiecte and accompte unworthy to be in theyr chyl dren.—Sir T. Elyot. Governour, b. i. c. 12.

Who either thinking too worthily of the Spaniards valure, too indifferently of his purposes against vs, or too unworthily of them that vndertook this iourney against him, did thinke it a thing dangerous to encounter the Spaniard at his owne home.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. p. 135.

For oure unworthyness cannot altare the substance of Gods sacramente, that is euermore all one, howsoever we swarue frome worthines to unworthines.

Bp. Gardner. Explication, fol. 82.

Many things might be noted on this place not ordinary, nor unworth the noting.—Milton. Tetrachordon.

Tho Madan reign'd, unworthy of his race:

For, with all shame that sacred throne he fild:

Next Memprise, as unworthy of that place.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 10.

If it [jesting] mingles with any sin, it puts on the nature of that new unworthiness, beside the proper ugliness of the thing it self; and after all these, when can it be lawful or apt for Christian entertainment?—Bp. Taylor, vol. i. Ser. 23.

The generality of the wisest heathens thought it agreeable to reason, to make use of subordinate intelligences, dæmons or heroes, by whom they put up their prayers to the superior gods; hoping that by the mediation of those intercessours, the unworthiness of their own persons, and the defects of these prayers might be supplied; and they might obtain some merciful and gracious answers to their prayers, as they could not presume to hope for upon their own account.—Clarke. On the Evidences, Prop. 13.

This being the case, imagining that God can enjoin religious cruelties, or fail to be displeased with them, is thinking so unworthily and absurdly of him, that few things are more surprising, than the wide extent and long prevalence of so monstrous an error.—Secker, vol. iii. Ser. 18.

UN-WO'UNDED. Not hurt or injured; not damaged.

Woundlesse armour, unwounded in war, do rust through long peace.—Spenser. Shepherds Calender. October, Gloss.

Lean. You make him blush: it needs not sweet As-canio,

We may hear praises when they are deserv'd,

Our modesty unwounded.

Beaum. & Fletch. Spanish Curate, Act i. sc. 1.

They fought, nor can our hero boast the event,

For Hector from the field, unwounded went.

Dryden. Ovid. Metam. b. xiii.

— Therefore, should a pow'r

From Heav'n approach to try thee, with the gods

Contend not; but should Venus interfere,

Her chase, and not unwounded, back to Heav'n.

Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. v.

UN-WRAP, v. To remove the wrappings or foldings; to unfold, to disclose.

Thou haste yeuen or beheight me, to unwrappe the hidde causes of thinges, and to discouer me the reasons, couered with darknesse.—Chaucer. Boecius, b. iv.

O scathful harm, condition of poverté,

With thirst, with cold, with hunger so confounded,

To asken helpe thee shameth in thin herte,

If thou non ask, so sore art thou ywounded,

That veray nede unwrappeth al thy wound hid.

Id. Man of Lawes Tale, v. 4524.

UN-WRE'AKED. } Not avenged or re-UNWRO'KEN. } venged.

Render me now to the Grekes fight againe:

And let me see the fight begon of new:

We shall not all unwroken dye this day.

Surrey. Virgile. Æneis, b. ii.

— O soueraigne Lord that first on hie,

And raig'n'st in bliss amongst thy blessed saints,

How suffrest thou such shamefull cruelty,

So long unwreaked of thine enemy?

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 11.

UNY

UN-WREATH, v. To untwine or untwist.

The beards of wild oats, and of divers other wild plants, continually wreath and unwreath themselves, according to the temperature of the ambient air.—Boyle.

UN-WRE'CKED. Not afflicted, dashed against, or to pieces; and consequentially, not ruined or destroyed.

— Let them for her sake,

Who to thy safeguard doth herself betake,

Escape undrown'd, unwreck'd.

Drayton. Upon Lady Aston's departure for Spain.

UN-WRINKLED. Not having the smooth or even surface distorted; not roughened or rumpled; not wrested or drawn into furrows or indented lines.

— Sometimes, as if in doubt,

Not perfect yet, and fearing to be out,

Trains her plain ditty in one long spun note,

Through the sleek passage of her open throat

A clear unwrinkled song.—Crashaw. Musick's Duel.

All-circling point, all-centring sphere,

The world's one, round, eternal year,

Whose full and all-unwrinkled face

Nor sinks nor swells with time or place.

Id. In the glorious Epiphany of Lord God.

— The face

Of thy cave-guarded spring, with years unwrinkled,

Reflects the meek-eyed genius of the place.

Byron. Childe Harold, c. 4.

UN-WRITTEN. Not written; not formed or framed, graved or impressed—in literal characters or letters; not composed in letters.

— Prehours that this shewen

Or prechen inparfit, yputt out of grace

Unwryten for som wikkednesse, as holy writ sheweth.

Piers Plouhman, p. 194.

Iren. It [the Brekon law] is a rule of right unwritten but delivered by tradition from one to another, in which oftentimes there appeareth great shew of equity, in determining the right betweene party and party, but in many things repugning quite both to Gods law and mans.

Spenser. View of the State of Ireland.

Equity is a certain perfect reason that interpreteth and amendeth the law written, itself being unwritten, and consisting in nothing else but right reason.

Hobbs. Of the Common Laws of England.

The lex non scripta, or unwritten law, includes not only general customs, or the common law properly so called: but also the particular customs of certain parts of the kingdom: and likewise those particular laws, that are by custom observed only in certain courts or jurisdictions.

Blackstone. Commentaries, b. i. Introd.

UN-WROUGHT. Not worked; not formed by work or labour; not operated.

Yet is an idole in dede nothing els, but either a piece of tymber, or a stone, and hathe no more Godhead in it, than an other vnsquared piece of tymber, or an unwrought stone.

Udal. 1 Cor. c. 8.

A ravell'd wound distain'd her purer brest,

(Brests softer farre than tufts of unwrought silke.)

Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b. ii. s. 4.

But as the merchant, when he receives large summs, always takes it by weight, so they usually pay him unwrought gold, and quantity for quantity.

Dampier. Voyages, vol. ii. c. 7.

UN-WRUNG. Not strained; not twisted strictly or tightly; not twisted, distorted, wrested.

Your maiestie, and wee that haue free soules, it touches vs not: let the gall'd iade winch: our withers are unwring.

Shakespeare. Hamlet, Act iii. sc. 2.

UN-YIE'LED. } Not rendered, not sur-UNYIE'LDING. } rendered; not granted or conceded.

Alexander lefte his footemen to subdue suche as were yet unyelden, and went forwardes with his horsemen into other partes.—Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 216.

Here were no tricks of inferences, no quirks of sophismes, no violent deduction of unyeelded sequels?

Bp. Hall. Christian Moderation, b. ii. § 11.

But Arcite's men, who now prevail'd in fight,

Twice ten at once surround the single knight:

O'erpow'd at length, they force him to the ground,

Unyielded as he was, and to the pillar bound.

Dryden. Palamon & Arcite, b. iii

For Spain is compass'd by unyielding foes,

And all must shield their all, or share Subjection's woes.

Ruron. Childe Harold, c. 1.

UN-YOKE, v. To remove or take away, to loose or free from—the yoke; to disjoin, to disconnect.

Ever be thy honour spoke,
From that place the morn is broke,
To that place day doth unyoke.

Beaum. & Fletcher. Faithful Shepherdess, Act i.

Other especially shining stars, I represent unto thine eyes
In the evening, & when thou doest unyoke and give over thy daies worke.—Holland. Plinie, b. xviii. c. 27.

—Long ere now

The plow-man hath unyok'd his teame from plow.

Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b. i. s. 5.

Oft o'er his back a crooked scythe is laid,
And wreaths of hay his sun-burnt temples shade:
Oft in his harden'd hand a goad he bears,
Like one who late unyok'd the sweating steers.

Pope. Vertumnus & Pomona.

—No more, my muse

With weary wings the labour'd flight pursues,
Her purple swans unyok'd the chariot leave,
And needful rest (their journey done) receive.

Congreve. Ovid. Art of Love, b. iii.

UN-ZEA'LOUS. Devoid, destitute of warmth, fervour, ardour.

[The King would] prostrate our consciences in a blind obedience to himself, and those men, whose superstition, zealous or unzealous, would enforce upon us an antichristian tyranny in the church.—Milton. Ans. to Eikon Basilike, § 9.

UN-ZO'NED. Not girded; without girdle or cincture.

Grace shap'd her limbs, and beauty deck'd her face;
Easy her motion seem'd, serene her air;
Full, though unzon'd, her bosom rose; her hair,
Unty'd, and ignorant of artful aid,
Adown her shoulders loosely lay display'd.

Prior. Solomon, b. ii.

VO'CABLE. Fr. Vocable, vociférer, voix;
VOCA'BULARY. It. Vocabolo, vociferare, voce; VO'CAL. Sp. Vocablo, vociferar, voz;
VO'CALLY. Lat. Vocabulum, vociferari, VOCA'LITY. vox. Vox, from the verb VO'CALIZE, v. voc-are, and this by the in-VOCA'TION. section of c from the Gr.
VO'CATIVE. Βοαειν, to make a noise;
VOCI'FERATE, v. utter a sound. Vocables or VOCIFERA'TION. words—
VOCI'FEROUS. Distinct and articulate VOICE, n. sounds, used as signs to ex-VOICE, v. press the thoughts (ideas or VOI'CEFUL. sensations).
VOI'CELESS. Voice—is applied to the sound uttered or emitted (by the organs of speech), to the power of utterance; the utterance or speech.

To voice,—to utter or emit sounds; to make a noise; to announce, to pronounce, to report.

To voice, or speak for or against, is—to give a vote.

Vociferate, (vocem ferre,)—to carry, to throw forth, the voice; to shout, to clamour.

Bot Hakon, Herne bald sonne, of best he bare the voice,
In stede of kynge's banere he did him bere the croice.

R. Brunne, p. 17.

For this is he of whom it is seid by Ysaie the prophete seyynge, a voice of a crier in desert, make ye redy the weies of the Lord, make ye right the pathis of him.

Wiclif. Matthew, c. 3.

This is he of whome it is spoken by the prophet Esaye, whiche sayeth: The voice of a crier in the wyldernes, prepare the Lordes waye, and make hys pathes strayght.

Bible, 1551. Ib.

And changed so, that no man coude know
His speche ne his vois, though men it herd.

Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 1374.

And ouer this of suche nature
Thei ben, that with so sweete a stenen
Like to the melodie of heuen
In womens voice thei singe.—Gower. Con. A. b. i.

Some others would ampliate and enriche, theyr native language with moe vocables, whych I also commend, yf it be aptely and wittily assayed.—Udal. Luke, Pref.

For this worde angell is a vocable or worde signifying a ministre, and is a name agreying to an inferioure.

Udal. Hebrues, c. 1.

Elles if he agree y^t the contempt & dispising of Goddes lawe maye be called malice, and a maliciouse castyng of of the yoke of Gods law both fro loue and drede, as I wene it is expounded in God Almightyes vocabulary: the drede I nothing but that it wyll well appere agaynst Tindall all the whole matter, both that Dauyd agreed and consented to sinne, & wilfully cast of Goddes yoke and maliciously to.

Sir T. More. Workes, p. 598.

And so for our selues we haue great cause to thanke God, by whose religion and holy word daily taught vs, we learne not only to feare him truly, but also to obey our king faithfully, and to serue in our own vocation like subiectes honestly.—Sir J. Cheeke. The Hurt of Sedition.

Than the cardynals all of one acorde assembled togyder,
and their voyces rested on sir Robert of Genesue.

Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 346.

It is very pretty and commendable, when a man meeteth with words of diuers acceptions, to make use thereof accordingly, and to accommodate them to the present occasions and subject matters, like as the grammarians teach us to do in vocables that admit sundry senses.

Holland. Plutarch, p. 24.

For so much as in corruption of common talke we find that [u] with his vocale is easilie lost and suppressed; so we saie ere for euer, nere for neuer, shoole for shoouell, ore for ouer, ene for euen, dile for diuell.

Holinshed. Description of Ireland, c. 1.

If May-day come, and the sun shine, perhaps,
They'll sing like Memnon's statue, and be vocal.

B. Jonson. Staple of News, Act iii. sc. 1.

Nothing can bee said to bee dumbe, but what naturally speaks; nothing can speake naturally but what hath the instruments of speech; which because spirits want, they can no otherwise speake vocally, then as they take voices to themselves, in taking bodies.

Bp. Hall. Cont. The Dumbe Devill ejected.

To charge them [deacons] for this [to preach] as men not contented with their owne vocations, and as breakers into that which appertayneth vnto others, is very hard. For when they are therevnto once admitted, it is a part of their owne vocation, it appertayneth now vnto them as well as others.—Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, b. v. § 78.

Howbeit, in this exercise we must beware of over-loud vociferations and clamours; for such violent strainings of the voice, and unequall extensions and intentions of the wind, many times cause ruptures of veines, or inward spasmes and convulsions.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 508.

Aristotle is of opinion, that no living creature hath any voice, but such onely as are furnished with lungs and wind-pipes: that is to say, which breath and draw their wind: and therefore he holdeth, that the noise which we heare to come from insects, is no voice at all, but a very sound, occasioned by the aire that getteth within them, and so being enclosed, yeeldeth a certaine noise, and resoundeth again.—Id. Plinie, b. xi. c. 51.

Pythagoras, Plato, and Aristotle do hold the voice to be bodilisse; for that it is not the aire but a form in the aire.
and a superficies thereof, and that by a certaine beating which becometh a voice.—Id. Plutarch, p. 636.

—Sorrowful nymph,

Salute me with thy repercussive voice,
That I may know what cavern of the earth Contains thy airy spirit, how, or where
I may direct my speech, that thou may'st hear.

B. Jonson. Cynthia's Revels, Act i. sc. 1.

There at the present two English natives in France of noble extraction and Romish persuasion, much voyced in common discourse for their probability to such preferment.

Fuller. Worthies. General.

I remember also that this place is pretended for the people's power of voicing in councils.

Bp. Taylor. Episcopacy Asserted, § 41.

Timon. Is this th' Athenian minion, whom the world
Voic'd so regardfully?

Shakespeare. Timon of Athens, Act iv. sc. 3.

Or was it lately voic'd to thee from heaven, concerning these wretched animals stabling in France, arise Pope Urbane, kill and eate?—Bp. Hall. To Pope Urban VIII.

As (woo'd by Maye's delights) I have been borne
To take the kind ayre of a wistfull morne Neere Tavier's voycefull streame (to whom I owe More straines than from my pipe can ever flowe.)

Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b. ii. s. 3.

A vocabulary made after this fashion would perhaps, with more ease, and in less time, teach the true signification of many terms, especially in languages of remote countries or ages, and settle truer ideas in men's minds of several things, whereof we read the names in ancient authors, than all the large and laborious comments of learned critics.

Locke. Hum. Underst. b. iii. c. 11.

In baptism we recommend and commemorate mentally, vocally, and manually, (in mind, and by mouth, and by significant actions,) the death and burial of Christ our Lord.

Waterland. Works, vol. viii. p. 222.

If wit or wisdom be the head, if honesty be the heart, industry is the right hand of every vocation; without which the shrewdest insight and the best intention can execute nothing.—Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 14.

Noah continued alive three hundred and fifty years after the deluge, that is within seven-six years of the vocation of Abraham; and Shem, the son of Noah, died just as many years after the vocation.—Bolingbroke. Ess. On Monotheism.

When we name the person to whom we speak, or the thing to which we address our selves, as if it were a person, the noun acquires thereby a new relation, which is sometimes marked by a new termination, called the vocative.

Port-Royal General Grammar, pt. ii. c. 6.

It is one thing to give an impulse to breath alone; another thing to vocalize that breath, i. e. in its passage through the larynx, to give it the sound of human voice.—Holder.

Violent gesture and vociferation naturally shake the hearts of the ignorant, and fill them with a kind of religious horror.—Spectator, No. 407.

I must not here omit one particular absurdity which runs through this whole vociferous generation, and which renders their cries very often not only incommodious, but altogether useless to the public.—Id. No. 251.

Unworthy he, the voice of Fame to hear,
That sweetest music to an honest ear.

Pope. Imitation of Horace, b. ii. Sat. 2.

Is it for thee the lark ascends and sings?
Joy tunes his voice, joy elevates his wings.

Id. Essay on Man, Ep. 3.

[The Latin Fathers] wrote as well as their coeval writers among the pagans, not indeed with Augustan elegance, but still well enough to preserve a skill in the construction and vocabulary of the language.—Knox. Ess. No. 112.

But when we rise again in the morning, let us go forth to our various employments, resolved to walk worthy of our Christian vocation; our loins girded, and our lights burning.

Id. vol. vi. Ser. 23.

So saying, he lash'd the shoulders of his steeds,
And, through the ranks vociferating, call'd
His Trojans on; they, clamorous as he,
All lash'd their steeds, and, menacing, advanc'd.

Couper. Homer. Iliad, b. xv.

The poor plebian, though he may vociferate the word liberty, knows not how to give it an effectual support.

Knox. Ess. No. 81.

The judges of the Areopagus considered action and vociferation as a foolish appeal to the external senses, and unworthy to be practised before those who had no desire of idle amusement, and whose only pleasure was to discover right.—Idler, No. 90.

The quickly succeeding transitions, which necessarily required to be sung in a lower tone, seemed like plaintive strains succeeding the vociferations of emotion or of pain.

Byron. Child Harold, c. 4. Note 3.

He held in his hand a carved bird of wood, as large as a pigeon, with which he rattled as the person first mentioned had done; and was no less vociferous in his harangue, which was attended with some expressive gestures.

Cook. Third Voyage, b. iii. c. 13.

But when with rapid course we had arriv'd
Within such distance as a voice may reach,
Not unperceiv'd by them the gliding bark
Approach'd, and thus harmonious they begun.

Couper. Homer. Odyssey, b. xii.

The Niobe of nations! there she stands,
Childless and crownless, in her voiceless woe;
An empty urn within her wither'd hands,
Whose holy dust was scatter'd long ago.

Byron. Child Harold, c. 4.

Who hath not shared that calm so still and deep,
The voiceless thought which would not speak but weep.

Id. Monody on Sheridan.

VOGUE. It. Voga; Fr. Vogue, from It.
Vogare; Fr. Voguer, libere navigare, from the Lat. Vagari, to wander. Lye thinks this etymology confirmed by the old French mode of writing (sc.) vauguer; others from It. Vogàre, from Lat.
Fugare.

To be in vogue (estre en vogue),—to prevail, to be in favour or fashion; to be in common use.

But considering these sermons bore so great a vogue
among the papists, I will here give a taste of them.

Strype. Eccles. Mem. 1 Mary, an. 1553.

Thus we are taught to clothe our minds as we do our bodies, after the fashion in vogue, and it is accounted fan-tasticalness, or something worse not to do so.

Locke. Conduct of the Underst. § 33.

A good man has no security in such cases, nor any firm ground to rest himself upon, but by examining carefully what is true, right, and just in itself, separate from common vogue or popular opinion.

Waterland. Works, vol. viii. p. 407.

VOID, v. See AVOID. Fr. Vuid, vuider; VOID, adj. It. Voto, votare; Sp. Vazu, vaziar. Menage derives from the Lat. Vacuus. Wachter thinks the Fr. is formed from VO'IDANCE. Ger. Ode, desolate. VO'IDER. To evacuate, to empty, to clear out; to go out of; to go, move, or turn away from; to eschew; to leave, to quit, to vacate; to clear, or free from the force, power, or effect; to make or render of none effect; to annul, to abrogate.

Id. Ib. Rich. I. an. 1198.

After that euery man had said hys mind, they decreed that all such as eyther by sicknes or age were unnecessary for the warres, should void the towne.
Goldinge. Caesar, fol. 230.

And by the longing for mete with voidace of yt she had eten (whiche had no saintly sauoure) she was perceived for no saint, & confessed al the matter.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 135.

In the meane tyme the sewer geveth a voyder to the carver, and he doth voyde into it the trenchers that lyeth under the knyues poynt, and so cleanseth the table cleane.
Leland. Collect. vol. vi. p. 11. Inthronization of Nevill.

Here he solde the voydings of close stooles, although there wanteth not the dung of beastes.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. p. 69.

When thus the field was voyded all away,
And all things quieted, the elfin knight
(Weary of toyle and trauell of that day)
Caus'd his pavilion to be richly pight
Before the citie gate.—Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 4.

Then shall the nobles possess all the dignities and offices of temporal honour to themselves, sole lords without the improper mixture of scholastic and pusillanimous upstarts; the parliament shall void her upper house of the same annoyances.—Milton. Of Reformation in England, b. ii.

By all oaths in one
I, and the justice of my love would make thee
A confest traytor: O thou most perfidious
That ever gently look'd the voydes of honor.
That ev'r bore gentle token; falsest cosen
That ever blood made kin, call'st thou her thine?
Beaum. & Fletcher. Two Noble Kinsmen, Act iii. sc. 1.

Instead of tears let them pour capon sauce upon my hearse,
And salt instead of dust, manchets for stones, for other glorious shields
Give me a voider; and above my hearse
For a trutch sword, my naked knife stuck up.
Id. Woman-Hater, Act I. sc. 3.

In what only case a divorce may be made after a lawfull marriage you have seen before; now you enquire of the annulling of voiding of marriages made unlawfully.
Bp. Hall. Cases of Conscience, Case 10, Dec. 4.

Through him the cold began to couet heate,
And water fire; the light to mount on hie,
And th' heauie downe to peize; the hungry t' eate,
And voidnesse to seeke full satietie.
Spenser. Colin Clout's come home againe.

The schoole of Pythagoras holdeth, that there is a voidnesse without the world, to which, and out of which the world doth draw breath: but the Stoicks affirm, that into it the infinite world by way of conflagration is resolved. In the first book of vacuity, Aristotle saith, there is voidnesse.
Holland. Plutarch, p. 671.

Oh! bestow
Some poor remain, the voiding of thy table,
A morsel to support my famish'd soul.
Lowe. Jane Shore, Act v.

What pains they require in the voidance of fond conceits, in the suppression of froward humours, in the quelling fierce passions, in the brooking grievous crosses and adversities, in the bearing heinous injuries and affronts?
Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 18.

And now had Menelaus won Immortal fame, his rival dragg'd away,
But Venus mark'd the moment, snapp'd the brace,
Though stubborn, by a slaughter'd ox supplied,
And the void helmet follow'd as he pull'd.
Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. iii.

And no marriage is voidable by the ecclesiastical law, after the death of either of the parties, nor during their lives, unless for the canonical impediments of pre-contract, if that indeed still exists; of consanguinity; and of affinity, or corporal imbecility, subsisting previous to the marriage.
Blackstone. Commentaries, b. i. c. 15.

VO'LANT, adj. Fr. Volant, volatil; It. Volante, volatile; Sp. Volante, volatil; Lat. Volans, volatilis, from volare, to fly. VO'LATILE, adj. Flying; swift as flight; swift, rapid; swift as wind; light as air, breath, spirit, vapour; evaporating, subtle: (met.) changeable as the wind; lively, spirited, giddy.

I lookynge biheelde and sigh foure footid beestis and crepinge beestis and volatilis of heuene.—Id. Dedis, c. 11.

I count this for one singular favour of hers, to wit the death of Alexander the Great, a prince of incomparable courage, and spirit invincible, who being lifted up by many great prosperities, glorious conquests, and happy victories, lanced himself in manner of a star volant in the air, leaping out of the east into the west, and beginning now to shoot the flaming beams and flashing rales of his armour as far as into Italy.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 525.

The intelligent nature of heaven, he [Plato] calleth, a chariot volant, to wit, the harmonical motion and revolution of the world.—Id. Ib. p. 648.

Sub. Infuse vinegar,
To draw his volatile substance and his tincture.
B. Jonson. The Alchemist, Act ii. sc. 1.

But then it is to be observ'd, that those transient acts of devotion, or other volatile and fugitive instances of repentance, are not the proper and proportion'd remedy to the evil of vicious habits.—Bp. Taylor. Of Repentance, c. 5. § 6.

But [the aire] performeth other offices in the universe; as to fill all vacuities about the earth or beneath it, to convey the heate of the sun, to maintain fires and flames, to serve for the flight of volatils, respiration of breathing animals, and refrigeration of others.
Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. iii. c. 21.

I know, that many learned men, and among them divers chymists themselves, do not thinck it credible, that at least corporal gold should be volatilized by quicksilver.
Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 648.

Chymists plainly see the notable effect that sublimate distilled from antimony has upon that mineral, by opening it and volatilizing it.—Id. Ib. vol. iii. p. 79.

Though I shall say nothing now concerning Helmont's sal circulatum, yet as to the volatilization of the salt of tartar, what I have seen scarce permits me to doubt, that it is possible.—Id. Ib. vol. ii. p. 122.

Their desires may sometimes be violent and eager as if they would take heaven by force, and wrest mercy out of the hands of God; their prayers may be so importunate and earnest as if they would take no denial from God: but yet this volitable spirit is soon spent.
Hopkins. Ser. John, iii. 5.

Birds or flying animals are almost erect, advancing the head and breast in their progression, and only prone in the act of volitation.—Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. iv. c. 1.

Meanwhile blind British bards with volant touch Traverse loquacious strings, whose solemn notes Provoke to harmless revels.—J. Philips. Cider, b. ii.

By her
The different qualities of things were found,
And secret motions; how with heavy bulk
Volatile Hermes, fluid and unmoist
Mounts on the wings of air.—Id. Ib. b. i.

Or at least it [the soul must] by the old ones [laws of bodies] be capable of mounting upwards, in proportion to the volatility of its vehicle, and of emerging out of these regions into some medium more suitable, and (if the philosopher may say so) equibrious.
Wollaston. Religion of Nature, s. 9.

The most active imagination will be sometimes torpid, under the frigid influence of melancholy, and sometimes occasions will be wanting to tempt the mind, however volatile, to sallies and excursions.—Idler, No. 58.

By this kind of operation, that species of property becomes (as it were) volatilized; it assumes an unnatural and monstrous activity.—Burke. On the French Revolution.

VO'LARY. Fr. Volier,—a great cage wherein birds have room enough to flutter, (Cotgrave.) Volary, or volery, is also applied, as the Fr. Volée, to—

A flight; a whole flight, flock, or company; a brood.

And now sits penitent and solitary
Like the forsaken turtle, in the volary.
B. Jonson. New Inn, Act v. sc. 1.

I thought thee then our Orpheus, that wouldst try,
Like him, to make the air one volary.—Id. A Vision.

And an old boy at his first appearance, with all the gravity of his ivy-bush about him, is sure to draw on him the eyes and chirping of the whole town volery; amongst which, there will not be wanting some birds of prey, that will presently be on the wing for him.—Locke. Of Education, § 94.

VOLCA'NO, or It. Vulcano, q. d. vulcani
VULCA'NO. } regia; Mons Vulcanius.
VOLCA'NIC. } A mountain that, like Ætna, throws from its intrails smoke and flames, and sometimes stones, (Skinner.)

We kept at a good distance off shoar, and saw no land till the 14th day; but then, being in lat. 12 d. 50 m. the volcano of Guatimala appeared in sight.

Dampier. Voyages, an. 1685.

The many inundations, great earthquakes, vulcanoe's and fiery eruptions have been in particular countries; yet there is no memory or testimony of any such thing, that has ever been universal, except perhaps of one deluge.
Wollaston. Religion of Nature, s. 5.

It [fire] was indeed upon a very high mountain, and continued burning for several days afterwards; however, it was not a vulcano, but rather, as I suppose, a tract of stubble or heath, set on fire for some purpose of agriculture.
Anson. Voyages, b. ii. c. 9.

The seat of volcanoes has, without exception, been found to be the highest part of the countries in which they are found.—Cook. First Voyage, b. iii. c. 14.

The climate of these volcanic hills is warmer, and the vintage begins a week sooner than in the plains of Padua.
Byron. Childe Harold, c. 4. Note 16.

VOLE, v. Fr. Voler,—to rifle, to strip.

But have you no notion, madam, of receiving pleasure and profit at the same time?

Mask. Oh! quite none! unless it be sometimes winning a great stake; laying down a vole, sans prendre may come up, to the profitable pleasure you were speaking of.
Vanburgh. Journey to London, Act iv.

VOLITION. } Lat. Volitio, from Velle, to VO'LITIVE. } will or to be willing. See VELLEITY.

See the quotations from Locke and Cogan.

The external act does superadd new obligations beyond those which are consequent to the mere internal volition, though never so perfect and complete. For the external act is exemplar in virtue, or scandalous in evil.
Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. iv. c. 1.

The right and true knowledge of those things do not only perfect our souls and natures by the excellency of the knowledge it self, but they perfect our souls and natures with goodness: they do not only perfect the intellectual faculty, but they also perfect the volitive faculty.
Hale. Origin of Mankind, p. 6.

This power which the mind has thus to order the consideration of any idea, or the forbearing to consider it; or to prefer the motion of any part of the body to its rest, and vice versa, in any particular instance; is that which we call the will. The actual exercise of that power, by directing any particular action, or its forbearance, is that which we call volition or willing.—Locke. Hum. Underst. b. ii. c. 21.

There can be no volition, saith he [Spinoza] but from some cause, which cause must likewise be caused by some other cause, and so on infinitely.

Clarke. On the Attributes, Prop. 9.

Volition or to will, as expressive of the exercise of volition in this philosophical sense, may be considered as comprehending the following particulars: It implies some leading principle of action;—Incitement or inducement to perform a certain act;—A desire or inclination formed by this inducement;—Ability to act according to the desire or inclination inspired;—The motive which proved influential in determining the mind;—the determination itself,—and the final act.—Cogan. On the Passions, vol. ii. pt. i. c. 4.

VOLLEY, v. } See VOLERY. Fr. Vollée, a VO'LLAY, n. } flight or flying.

A flight; a rapid motion or passage (of numbers together or in succession), a rapid utterance or emission—of shot from a gun; of words from the mouth; a discharge, an explosion.

At their meeting they hailed the admirall after the maner of the sea, and with great ioy welcommed one another with a thundring volly of shot.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 82.

— I met them,
In the fore front of the armies met them;
And as if this old weather-beaten body
Had been compos'd of cannon-proof, I stood
The volleys of their shot.

Beaum. & Fletcher. The Laws of Candy, Act i.

And therefore easily great Somerset (Whom Envy long had singled out before)
With all the volley of disgraces met,
As th' only mark that Fortune plac'd therefore.

Daniel. Civil Wars, b. vi.

Cor. He were an iron-hearted fellow, in my judgment, that would not credit him upon this volley of oaths.

B. Jonson. Every Man out of his Humour, Act iv. sc. 4.

Pru. O master Lovel, you must not give credit
To all that ladies publicly profess,
Or talk o' the vollee, unto their servants.

Id. New Inn, Act i. sc. 1.

What were those thousands of blaspheming cavaliers about him, whose mouths let fly oaths and curses by the volley; were those the prayers?

Milton. Answer to Eikon Basilike, § 10.

Heark how they shout to th' battel; how the air
Totters and reels, and rends apieces, Drusus,
With the huge vollied clamours.

Beaum. & Fletcher. Bonduca, Act iii. sc. 5.

Another flap-mouthed mourner, black and grim,
Against the welkin vollied out his voice.

Shakespeare. Venus & Adonis.

Eno. Make battery to our eares with the loud musicke,
The while, Ile place you, then the boy shall sing.
The holding euery man shall beate as loud
As his strong sides can volly.

Id. Anthony & Cleopatra, Act ii. sc. 7.

— At his near approach
The Gallic natives, impotent to bear
His volly'd thunder, torn, dissever'd, scud,
And bless the friendly interposing night.

J. Philips. Blenheim.

Till sacred morn had brightend into noon,
The volly'd weapons on both sides their task
Perform'd effectual, and the people fell.

Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. viii.

The Turcoman hath left his herd,
The sabre round his loins to gird;
And there the vollying thunders pour,
Till waves grow smoother to the roar.

Byron. Siege of Corinth, s. 2.

VO'LUBLE. } Fr. Voluble; It. Volubile; VO'LUBLY. } Sp. Voluble; Lat. Volubilis, VOLUBILITY. } (from volvere, to roll,) which VOLVE, v. } Tooke derives from the A. S.

Wealow-ian, to roll, to turn round. See VOLUME.
That can or may be rolled; used actively,— that can or may roll, or turn round; easy, quick.

Volve,—to roll or turn, put or keep in motion;
quick, active.

And euer whā this ymaginacyon came to him, I volued, toured, and redde many volumes and bokes, conteynyng famous histories.—Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, Pref.

If a man hath a voluble tongue, we say, he hath the gift of prayer. His gift is to pray long, that I see; but does he pray better?—Selden. Table Talk.

— There's nothing, almost puts Faith in a feavor, and deifies alone

Voluble chance, who only attributes
The faculties of other instruments
To his own nerves and act.

Beaum. & Fletcher. Two Noble Kinsmen, Act i. sc. 2.

The heaven bendeth and inclineth toward the centre, but the earth goeth from the centre, whiles the world with continuall volubilitie and turning about it, driveth the huge and excessive globe thereof into the forme of a round ball.

Holland. Plinie, b. ii.

A lacquey that runs on errands for him, and can whisper a light message to a loose wench with some round volubility?

B. Jonson. Cynthia's Revels, Act i. sc. 1.

He must be very little skilled in the world, who thinks that a voluble tongue shall accompany also a good understanding; or that men's talking much or little should hold proportion only to their knowledge.

Locke. Hum. Underst. b. iii. c. 2.

This he as volubly would vent,
As if his stock would ne'er be spent.—Hudibras.

All the rest of the cant of criticism, he emitted with that volubility which generally those orators have who annex no ideas to their words.—Idler, No. 76.

thing rolled; applied to books or writings, because they were rolled (in the form of a cylinder).—Vossius.

Any thing rolled, or enfolded; a roll, a fold:
applied, generally, to the circuit, bulk, size, quantity.

Voluminous, (met.)—bulky, (as a work of many volumes.)

Volumed,—in rolling masses.

I could occupie a great volume with histories of them, whiche couetyng to mouit into excellent dignities, dyd therby bringe it to extreme peryles, bothe them selues and their countreys.—Sir T. Elyot. The Governour, b. iii. c. 16.

Repentance is a great volume of duty; and godly sorrow is but the frontispiece or title-page; it is the harbinger or first introduction to it.—Bp. Taylor, vol. ii. Ser. 5.

Why though I seem of a prodigious waist,
I am not so voluminous and vast,
But there are lines, wherewith I might be embrac'd.

B. Jonson. Underwoods.

But the controversies that concern these, are so hotly managed by the divided schools, and so voluminously handled by disputing men, that I shall not need insist on them.—Glanvill. Ess. 1.

The miscreant bishop of Spalatto wrote learned volumes against the pope, and run to Rome when he had done; ye write them in your closets, and unwrite them in your courts; hot volumists and cold bishops; a swashbuckler against the pope, and a dormouse against the devil.

Milton. Animad. upon the Remonstrants' Def. Postscript.

Deep in her breast he plung'd his shining sword,
And hell's dire monster back to hell restor'd,
Th' Inachians view the slain with vast surprise,
Her twisting volumes and her rolling eyes,
Her spotted breast, and gaping womb embru'd
With livid poison, and our children's blood.

Pope. Statius. Thebaid, b. i.

The numerous volumes of learned men, are proofs more than enough to shew what attention, study, sagacity, and reasoning are required, to find out the true meaning of ancient authors.—Locke. Hum. Underst. b. iii. c. 9.

They insisted on them so constantly and so voluminously, that natural religion held but a second place in their system,
and that righteousness of faith became more important than righteousness of works.

Bolingbroke. Fragments of Essays, § 33.

His works [Aquinas's] mount to that voluminousness they have very much by repetitions.

Dodwell. Letters of Advice, Let. 2.

And a book, that should be framed to give rules of action in all the particular circumstances of every case that would happen, would be much too voluminous for vulgar use, and too intricate for vulgar understandings.

Secker, vol. iii. Ser. 21.

He climbs the crackling stair—he bursts the door,
Nor feels his feet glow scorching with the floor:
His breath choak'd gasping with the volumed smoke,
But still from room to room his way he broke.

Byron. Corsair, c. 2.

Whose clouds that day grew doubly dun,
Impervious to the hidden sun,
With volumed smoke that slowly grew
To one white sky of sulphurous hue.

lontario; Sp. Voluntad, voluntario; Lat. Voluntas, from velle, to will, or be willing. Evelyn is the last writer in whom the noun volunté has occurred.

Willing or wishing, spontaneous; wilful.

Of volunte without any trespas,
My accusours hath taken vnto grace,
And cherisheth hem my death to purchase.

Chaucer. Complaint of the Black Knight.

And if he do nat his request
He shal as much him molest
As his fellow, for that he May not fulfill his volunte
Fully, as he hath required.—Id. Rom. of the Rose.

There no man doutd, that thei ne been gouerned volun-

Men of voluntarious wil withsitte that heuens gouerneth.
Id. Test. of Loue, b. ii.

The sayde kynge Rycharde, knowyng his owne insuffy-ciency, hath of his owne mere volunte and fre wyll, renouneyd and geuen vp the rule and gouernaunce of this lāde.

Fabyan. Chronycle. Rich. II. an. 1399.

We knowe for a truthe that Almyghtye God of his owne voluntarie will and gracious volunté both redemed vs and wil exerceyse his mercy when we do aske it.

Fisher. Seuen Psalmes, De Profundis.

The archebyssshop of Yorke, accordyng vnto the kynges desyre, shewyd vnto them seryously the voluntary renouns-yng of the kyng.—Fabyan. Chronycle. Rich. II. an. 1399.

Cesar refused not the profer, thinkyng he wold now come to amendment, consideryng he offered of his own voluntary wil, the thing he hadde before denied when it was requested.

Goldinge. Caesar, fol. 34.

In recōpensation wherof, as testyfyeth y^t auctor Guydo, he Crystis enemies.—Fabyan. Chronycle. Rich. I. an. 1198.

Panthia, wife of king Susius, kept her faith vnto her husbande being in captiuitie, and spendeth out al her goods for his life; and when hee was slaine in bataille, shee died voluntarily after him.

Vives. Instruction of a Christian Woman, b. ii. c. 4.

For so doing her grace should learn daily more and more truly to know the Lord, to taste, relish and to ensue his holy and sweet word, to love and fear him, to be his faithful and obsequious handmaiden, and a diligent ensuer of his will and steps, most pleasantly and voluntarily to bear the yoke of his most comfortable commandments. [From Pay-nel's Pith of all Scripture.]

Strype. Eccles. Mem. Edw. VI. an. 1550.

Our volunté cannot (after some sort) embrace the evill, considering it as evill, but doth it alwayes when it happens to be masked under some appearance of good.

Evelyn. Of Liberty & Servitude, c. 2.

Notwithstanding all this, the handsommer to disguise and apparell these his volunties, and render them at the least specious procedures of justice, he permits none of his edicts to passe as authentick until the court of Parliament (who is absolutely at his devotion) have first verified them.

Id. The State of France.

An action is neither good nor evil, unless it be voluntary and chosen.—Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. iv. c. 1.

Among other musicians, hee [Nero] sung voluntarie upon the stage before the plaies began.

Holland. Plinie, b. xxxvii. c. 2.

By dipping voluntarily his fingers end, yet with shew of great remorse, in the blood of Strafford, wherof all men clear him, he thinks to scape that sea of innocent blood wherin his own guilt inevitably hath plung'd him all over.

Milton. Answer to Eikon Basilike, § 2.

Reason itself assures us, that those things which are done in the service of God, are not therefore ill because they are spontaneous, (the voluntariness of an action is not able to defame it, if there be no irregularity imputable to the action itself, abstracted from the voluntariness.)

Hammond. Works, vol. i. p. 234.

And with five thousand valiant volunteers
Of native French, put under her command,
With arms well fitted, she tow'rd Scotland steers.

Drayton. Miseries of Q. Margaret.

He [Goldwell] was by Queen Mary preferred bishop of St. David's; and, as a volunteer, quitted the land in the first of Queen Elizabeth.—Fuller. Worthies. Kent.

He appears here well informed of their design, and of the names of the chief agents who had already volunteered their services against him.

B. Jonson. Poetaster, Act iii. sc. 1. Note 6.

Suppose a man be carried whilst fast asleep, into a room, where is a person he longs to see and speak with; and be there locked fast in, beyond his power to get out; he awakes, and is glad to find himself in so desirable company, which he stays willingly in, i. e. prefers his stay to going away;
I ask, is not this stay voluntary?

Locke. Hum. Underst. b. ii. c. 21.

Nothing is more certain than that God acts, not necessarily, but voluntarily, with particular intention and design, knowing that he does good, and intending to do so, freely and out of choice, and when he has no other constraint upon him but this, that his goodness inclines his will to communicate himself and to do good.

Clarke. On the Attributes, Prop. 12.

Leave off these wagers; for in conscience speaking
The city needs not your new tricks for breaking;
And if you gallants lose, to all appearing You'll want an equipage for volunteering.

Dryden. K. Arthur, Prol.

Reason however able, cool at best,
Cares not for service, or but serves when prest;
Stays till we call, and then not often near,
But honest instinct comes a volunteer.

Pope. Essay on Man, Ep. 3.

The unavoidable evils of life are nothing to those which we bring upon one another voluntarily, by ill-nature, insensitivity and heedless disregard.—Secker, vol. i. Ser. 16.

Compare the limbs of the volunteer soldiers in the metropolis with those of the rustic militia or regulars.
Knox. Ess. No. 129.

Obscure at his birth, and unpreferred at his death, but illustrious by his virtues, he [Erasmus] became the self-appointed champion of man, a volunteer in the service of miserable mortals, an unbought advocate in the cause of those who could only repay him with their love and their prayers.—Id. Preface to Antipolemus.

VO'LUPERE. A cap, a night-cap.

The tapes of hire white volupere
Were of the same suit of hire colere;
Hire fillet brode of silk, and set full hye.
Chaucer. Milleres Tale, v. 3241.

And whan she gan this white thing espie,
She wend the clerk had wered a volupere.

Through sotie, and through nicestee
Of his voluptuositee.—Gower. Con. A. b. viii.

This blessed company of vertues, in this wise assēbled, foloweth temperance, as a sad and dyscrete matrone and reuerent gauernesse, awaytynge dyligently, that in any wise voluptie or concupiscence haue no preemynence in the soule of man.—Sir T. Elgot. The Governour, b. iii. c. 19.

In the tender wittes be sparkes of voluptuositie whiche nourished by any occasion or obiecte, encrease often tymes in to so terrible a fyre, that therewith all vertue and reason is consumed.—Id. Ib. b. i. c. 6.

But y^t sifful creature which so greuously hathe displeased God hiss maker folowing his owne sēsal & vnlawful volupty against y^e wil of our Lord.
Fisher. Seuen Psalmes, Ps. 51. pt. i.

I thought, that, when thou heardest the kings pleasure and intendm^t herein, thou wouldest haue relented, and put the self and thy voluptuous act wholly to the kings will and pleasure.—Wgat. Account of Q. Anne Bullen.

Hauinge in these and suche other like voluptuous vanities consumed a great part of the treasure, when he vnderstode Alexander to be come out of India, and to vse extreme iustice vpō his officers, that misvsed them, of whome they had rule (by reasō he was priuy to his fowle conscience) he feared the lyke myght come to him selfe.
Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 292.

Wherefore he gaue him selfe to delyte and to lust, misusinge manye that were noble and free women, and wallowed in all kynde of voluptuousnes.—Id. Ib.

Laste in order came the Babylonyan horsemen, whose sumptuous furniture, bothe for them selues and theyre horses, tended more to voluptuousnes and delicacie, then to any magnificence.—Id. Ib. fol. 105.

Than was openly spoken that he was nat worthy a byshopryche, that coude vse the bragge or pompe of the worlde, the vse of voluptuosyte, of glotany and lechery, the shynynge aray of clothyng, the countenance of knyghtes, and the gaderynge of horsemen, & thynke full lytell on the profyte of soules.—*Fabyan. B. Jonson. Cynthia's Revels, Act v. sc. 1.

The king returned proud of victorie,
And insolent wox through vnwonted ease,
That shortly he forgot the leopardie,
Which in his land he lately did appease,
And fell to vaine voluptuous disease.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 10.

The invention to have gardens within a citie, came up first by Epicurus the doctor and master of all voluptuous idlenes, who devised such gardens of pleasance in Athens.
Holland. Plinie, b. xix. c. 4.

Alfred enjoying three years of peace, by him spent, as his manner was, not idely or voluptuously, but in all vertuous employments both of mind and body, becoming a prince of his renown, ended his daies in the year 900, the 51 of his age, the 30th of his reign, and was buried regally at Winchester.—Milton. History of England, b. v.

A people obliged to obedience by such an oath, is discharged of that obligation, when a lawfull prince becomes a tyrant, or gives himself over to sloth and voluptuousness.
Id. A Defence of the People of England, c. 4.

In vain doth the scornful voluptuary ask for an account of it, [peace which passeth all understanding,] which can never be given him; for it hath no alliance with any of the pleasures of sense, in which he delights; nor hath he any ideas, by which the perception of it may be conveyed to him.
Atterbury, vol. ii. Ser. 6.

The jolly and voluptuous livers, the men who set up for freedom of thought, and for disengaging themselves from the prejudices of education and superstitious opinions, may pretend to dispute this truth, and, perhaps, in the gaiety of their hearts, may venture even to deride it.
Id. vol. iv. Ser. 4.

We chose rather to incur the censure of imprudence and temerity, which the idle and voluptuous so liberally bestow upon unsuccessful fortitude and perseverance, than leave a country we had discovered unexplored, and give colour to a charge of timidity and irresolution.
Cook. First Voyage, b. iii. c. 5.

However grateful the sensations may occasionally be in which we are passive, it is not these, but the latter class [active] of our pleasures, which constitute satisfaction; which supply that regular stream of moderate and miscellaneous enjoyments, in which happiness, as distinguished from voluptuousness, consists.
Paley. Natural Theology, c. 26.

VO'LUTE.

VOLUTA'TION.

Fr. Volute; It. Voluta; Sp. Voluta. The rolling shell of a snail; also, the writhen circle, or curl tuft that hangs over, or sticks out, of the chapter of a pillar, &c. (Cotgrave.)

The voluta as we term it, properly enough the scrowl, is not the derivative of any Greek word, but the Latin, voluta, à volvendo, for that it indeed seems to be roll'd upon an axis or staff.—Evelyn. On Architecture.

There are also volutas in the Corinthian and compounded capitals, wherof the first hath eight, which are angular, the rest consisting rather of certain large stalkes after a more grotesco design, as may be gathered from those rams horns in the capital of the columns taken out of the bathes of Dioclesian.—Id. Ib.

In the sea, when the storm is over, there remains still an inward working and volutation.

But whā we be cōsailled to liue tēperately, & forbere our delicates & our glotonye, y^t will we not here of: but fain wold we haue sōe medicines, as purgacions & vomites, to pul down & auoid y^t we cram in to much.—Id. Ib. p. 99.

And so constantly we shall be driven to affirme;—but blindness and dim sight differ not, and inordinate passion of vomiting, called Cholera, is nothing different from a keekish stomack and a desire to cast, but only according to augmentation and diminution, more or less.
Holland. Plutarch, p. 640.

They with much consideration and care gave in answer those words of Aristides, they were not of the number of those that used to vomit out answers, but of those that considered every word they were to speak.
Bp. Taylor. Pol. Disc.

Her vomit full of bookes and papers was,
With loathly frogs and toads, which eyes did lack,
And creeping, sought way in the weedy grass;
Her filthy parbreakes all the place defiled has.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 1.

And why may not Pancirone as well bid his servants keep the door to wantonness, and hold the chalice to beastly vomitings?—Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. iv. c. 1.

Which after it is thickened to the substance of a gum, is usually taken to the foresaid weight, with honey, for a vomitore; and doth evacuat chollericke humours especially.
Holland. Plinie, b. xxvi. c. 7.

How many have saved their lives, by spewing up their debauch? whereas, if the stomack had wanted the faculty of vomition, they had inevitably died.—Grew. Cosmologia.

If you cast a quantity of fair water upon it [butter of antimony] there will quickly precipitate a ponderous and vomitive calx.—Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 526.

Some learned men have confidently written, that glass of antimony, and crocus metallorum, being either of them infused in a great proportion of wine, will make it vomitue.
Id. Ib. vol. iii. p. 671.

During the night the volcano, which was about four miles to the west of us, vomited up vast quantities of fire and smoke, as it had also done the night before.
Cook. Second Voyage, b. iii. c. 5.

VORA'CIOUS.

VORA'CIOUSLY.

VORA'CIOUSNESS.

VORA'CITY.

Fr. Vorace; It. Vorace; Sp. Voraz; Lat. Vorax, from Vorare, to feed (like a beast. Vossius.) See DEVOUR.

Feeding eagerly, greedily, gluttonously; greedy, gluttonous; rapacious, or ravenous.

What a nature is that which feedeth the most greedie voracity in the whole world without losse of it selfe?
Holland. Plinie, b. ii. c. 107.

Who then shall check his voracity, or calm his revenge, or allay his pride, or mortify his lust, or humble his spirit?
Bp. Taylor, vol. ii. Ser. 18.

I have seen of the king carrion crows, but could not perceive them to be bigger than the rest; neither were the black ones, their companions, so unmannerly as to let them eat without company; they are very voracious, and will dispatch a carcass in a trice.—Dampier. Voyages, an. 1676.

They have a relish for every thing that is news, let the matter of it be what it will; or, to speak more properly, they are men of a voracious appetite, but no taste.
Spectator, No. 452.

This necessarily puts a good man upon making great ravages on all the dishes that stand near him; and distinguishing himself by a voraciousness of appetite, as knowing that his time is short.—Tatler, No. 255.

They appeared not only to be reconciled to their situation but in high spirits, and upon being offered some bread when they came on board, they devoured it with a voracious appetite.—Cook. First Voyage, b. ii. c. 1.

But if it seem wisest in your account and best to eat voraciously the patrimonial goods Of one man, rend'ring no account of all, Bite to the roots.—Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. ii.

But it ought to be observed that it is this slowness which alone suspends the voracity of this animal [the sloth].
Paley. Natural Theology, c. 16.

VORA'GINOUS

Fr. Vorage; It. Voragine; Lat. Vorago, voraginosus (à vorando.) Devouring, swallowing.

And, lo! his secret seat,
Where never sun-beam glimmer'd, deep amidst
A cavern's jaws voraginous and vast,
The stormy genius of the deep forsakes.
Mallet. Amyntor & Theodora, c. 1.

VORTICES.

VO'RTICAL.

VORT'GINOUS.

It. Vòrtice, (see VERTEX.) which differs from vortex only in the application (from vertere, or vortere, to turn.)

Any thing turned (rapidly) or whirled around, or which whirls around; a whirlpool.

[Pythagoras must also have held] that there are infinite numbers of atoms or particles, differing in magnitude and figure; and that they are moved in the universe after the manner of vortices.—H. More. Philosophic Cabbala, App.

That all things are made not without a mechanical necessity, this vortical motion being the cause of the generation of all things.—Id. Ib.

But when they came, at length, where Xanthus winds His stream vortiginous from Jove deriv'd, There, scatt'ring their divided host, he drove Part through the plain to Troy.
Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. xxi.

He said, and lifting high his angry tide Vortiginous, against Achilles hurl'd, Roaring, the foam, the bodies, and the blood.—Id. Ib.

See Vow. A votary,—one voted or devoted, pledged or promised, dedicated or given up (sc.) to religion, philosophy; any especial purpose. Vote,—voice of one devoted; voice in favour of, in choice of, suffrage.

The Actes of English Votaries, comprehendynge their vnchaste practises and examples by all ages, from the worldes begynnynge to the yere of our Lorde, A.M. collected owte of their owne legendes and chronycles.
Bale. English Votaries, Pref.

Bishops give not their votes by blood in parliament, but by an office annexed to them, which being taken away they cease to vote, therefore there is not the same reason for them as for temporal lords.—Selden. Table Talk, p. 11.

But the events of salvation and damnation (blessed be God) do not depend upon the votes and sentences of men.
Bp. Taylor. Dissuasive from Popery, pt. ii. b. i. § 7.

But the late long lasting parliament voted it a monopoly; and restored the benefit thereof to the former proprietaries.
Fuller. Worthies. Yorkshire.

Superstition is now so well advanced, that men of the first blood are as firme as butchers by occupation; and votary resolution is made equipollent to custome, even in matter of blood.—Bacon. Ess. Of Custome & Education.

I read in the Chronicles, that the senat made a decree, that Taracia Caia, or, as some say, Suffetia, a votarie or vestall nun, should have her image made of brasse.
Holland. Plinie, b. xxxiv. c. 6.

The iewels you haue had from me to deliuer Desdemona, would halfe haue corrupted a votarist.
Shakespeare. Othello, Act iv. sc. 2.

Out with this nun, she is too handsome for ye, I'll tell thee, aunt, and I speak it with tears to thee, If thou keepst her here, as yet I hope thou art wiser, Mark but the mischief follows.

Ab. She is a votress.

Beaum. & Fletch. Monsieur Thomas, Act v. sc. 6.

So that the old man's life described, was seen As in a votive table in his lines.

B. Jonson. Poetaster, Dial.

A man by contrition is not reconcil'd to God, without their sacramental or ritual penance, actual or votive; and this is decreed by the council of Trent.

Bp. Taylor. Dissuasive from Popery, pt. i. b. ii. § 1.

How many men have no other ground for their tenets, than the supposed honesty, or learning, or number, of those of the same profession? as if honest or bookish men could not err, or truth were to be established by the vote of the multitude.—Locke. Hum. Underst. b. iv. c. 20.

Some who are more zealous than they are wise, endeavour to render the naturalist suspected of holding secret correspondence with the atheist: which things if really they were so, 'twere fit that the writings of philosophers should be sent after the books of curious arts, that were voted to destruction by apostolick authority and zeal.

Glanvill. Ess. 4.

"Abstain from beans:" that is, say the interpreters, "Meddle not with elections;" beans having been made use of by the voters among the Athenians in the choice of magistrates.—Tatler, No. 240.

Thy votress from my tender years I am,
And love, like thee, the woods and sylvan game.

Dryden. Palamon & Arcite, b. iii.

In this part of the fable the contrivance is inimitable, and here the poet's art is a study, which every votarist of the dramatic muses ought to pay attention and respect to.

Observer, No. 75.

She has the pleasure of being supposed to be pleased with a refined amusement, and of hoping to be numbered among the votresses of harmony.—Idler, No. 18.

Goldinge. Caesar, fol. 53.

And thus much of this time of our two vniuersities in each of which I haue receiued such degree as they haue vouchsafed rather of their fauour than my desert to yeeld and bestow vpon me.

Holinshed. Description of England, b. ii. c. 3.

His tongue flows with light, and glories, and communion, and reuelations and incomes: and then, believes that the Holy Ghost is the author of all this, and that God is in him of a truth, in a special way of manifestation and vouchsafement.—Glanvill. Ser. 1.

The proud and fantastick pretences of many of the conceited melancholists in this age, to communion, have prejudiced diuers intelligent persons against the belief of any such happy vouchsafement.—Id. Ess. 6.

When any particular matter of fact is vouched by the concurrent testimony of unsuspected witnesses, there our assent is also unavoidable.

Locke. Hum. Underst. b. iv. c. 16.

I write concerning a man so fresh in all peoples remembrance, that is so lately dead; and was so much and so well known, that I shall have many vouchers, who will be ready to justify me in all that I am to relate.

Burnet. Life of Sir M. Hale.

Think only of what sort of things they are, to which you sometimes hear the Lord of heaven and earth invoked to be a voucher: things, which men would be ashamed to hint at in the presence of an earthly superior: and yet the great God is called upon, familiarly and without scruple, to attend to them; called upon sometimes to bear witness, that we resolve to do, what we know he hath forbidden on pain of hell fire.—Secker, vol. ii. Ser. 31.

Voucher also is the calling in of some person to answer the action, that hath warranted the title to the tenant or defendant.—Blackstone. Commentaries, b. iii. c. 20.

Bp. Hall. Honour of the Married Clergie, § 17.

A late proclamation of the king that disallowed of the marriage of priests, and concerning the vows of religious persons, gave them disgust.

Strype. Eccles. Mem. Hen. VIII. an. 1539.

One way of doing so, is by rash and inconsiderate vows:
for a vow, being a promise made solemnly to God, partakes of the nature of an oath.—Secker, vol. vi. Lect. 20.

But vowing to do what there is no use of doing, is trifling with our Creator: making unlawful vows, is directly telling him we shall disobey him.—Id. Ib.

Now I must edge upon a point of wind;
And make slow way, recovering more and more,
Till I can bring my vessel safe ashore.
Dryden. Cleomenes, Act iii. sc. 1.

The manner of making a canoa is, after cutting down a large long tree, and squaring the upper-most side, and then turning it upon the flat side, to shape the opposite side for the bottom.—Dampier. Voyages, an. 1685.

And in order to render the ships stiffer, and to enable them to carry more sail abroad, and to prevent their straining their upper-works in hard gales of wind, each captain had orders given him to strike down some of their great guns into the hold.—Anson. Voyages, b. i. c. 5.

— Deiphobus had snatch'd
His splendid casque, but swift as fiery May Meriones transpiere'd his upper arm,
And from his hand down fell the sounding spoil.
Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. xiii.

UP-BAR, v. To take up, or out the bar; to unbar; and so Todd reads.

Whom when the watch that kept continuall ward
Saw comming home; all voyd of doubtfull feare,
He running downe, the gate to him vpard;
Whom straight the prince ensuing, in together far'd.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 9.

UPB

UP-BEAR, v. } Dut. Op-beuren.
UPBO'RN. } To bear, to carry, to hold or lift up.

But he that all thinge maie kepe,
Unto this lorde was merciable,
And brought him saue vpon a table,
Whiche to the lande him hath vborne.
Gower. Con. A. b. viii.

And now he has so long remained there,
That vitall powres gan wexe both weake and wan,
For want of food, and sleepe; which two vpbear,
Like mighty pillours, this fraile life of man,
That none without the same enduren can.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 8.

Its likeness makes it seem to fly, and soon
It skins on real wings, that are its own,
A real bird, it beats the breezy wind,
Mix'd with a thousand sisters of the kind,
That, from the same formation newly sprung,
Up-born aloft on plumy pinions hung.
Crocoll. Ovid. Metam. b. xiii.

Wak'd by his warmer ray, the reptile young
Come wing'd abroad; by the light air upborn, Lighter, and full of soul. Thomson. Summer.

— That retreat a goddess holds,
Daughter of sapient Atlas, who the abyss
Knows to its bottom, and the pillars high Himself upbears which sep'rate Earth from Heav'n.
Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. i.

It was the fearful time when she absorb'd
The briny flood, but, by a wave upborne,
I seiz'd the branches of the wild fig tree fast
To which, bat-like, I clung. Id. Ib. b. xii.

UP-BLOWING. Raising by the wind.

As when a foggy mist hath ouer-cast
The face of heauen, and the clear aire engrost,
The world in darknesse dwells, till that at last
The watry south-winde from the sea-bord cost
Vpblowing, doth disperse the vapour lost.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 4.

UP-BRAID, v. } A.S. Up-ge-bræd-an, ex-UPBRA'IDER. } probare, obicere, (Skinner UPBRA'IDING, n. } thinks,) from A.S. Up, and UPBRA'IDINGLY. } ge-bræd-an, dilatare, am-UPBRA'Y, v. & n. } pliare, to dilate, to amplify (broad); and thus—to extend beyond desert, to exaggerate; but the A.S. is also used, consequentially, extendere, extrahere, string-ere, to extend, to draw out—"He is sword ge-bræd," he drew out his sword. And the words abraid and braid have been shewn to be applied to any sudden, violent action; an assault, attack, &c. (See BRAID.)
Hence up-braid may mean—

To make an assault or attack upon (the conduct, character, &c.); to assail bitterly, contemptuously, reproachfully, revilingly; to treat with contumely or scorn; to condemn, to reproach, to revile; to charge with any thing reproachful, or deserving reproach; any thing disgraceful, discreditable, shameful.

Spenser forges upbray.
That schame has git non ende, no that upbraidyn,
That on France salue lende, for falsnes of ther kyng.
R. Brunne, p. 318.

And the theves that weren crucified with him upbray- deden [exprobrant] him of the same thing.
Wiclif. Matthew, c. 27.

And if-ony of you nedeth wisdom axe he of God which giueth to alle men largeli and upbreideth not, and it schal be ghoun to hym.—Id. James, c. 1.

"O Pandarus, that in dremes for to trist
Me blamed hast, and wont art oft upbreide,
Now mayst thou seem thyself, if that thee list,
How trew is now thy nece, bright Creside."
Chaucer. Troil. & Cres. b. v.

But this opinion, bred by the sottishnes of the comon people, hath hitherto (as I hope) bene sufficiently ouerthrown as a thing foolish and vaine, and as being deuised for the upbrayding of our nation.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 562.

At last, proud Radigund with fell despight,
Hauing by chaunce espyde aduantage neare,
Let driue at her with all his dreadfull might,
And thus upbrayding, said.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 7.

And his true loue faire Psyche with him playes;
Fair Psyche to him lately reconcyl'd,
After long troubles and vnmeet upbrayges.
Id. Ib. b. iii. c. 6.

But Scudamour himselfe did soone vp-raise,
And mounting light, his foe for lying long upbraies.
Id. Ib. b. iv. c. 1.

It were a thing monstrously absurd and contradictory to give the parliament a legislative power, and then to upbraid them for transgressing old establishments.

Milton. Answer to Eikon Basilike, § 19.

He discourages the weak, and weakens the hands of the strong, and by upbraiding their weariness, tempts them to turn it into rashness or despair.

Bp. Taylor, vol. ii. Ser. 20.

The latter [he that comes to the sovereignty by the suffrage of the people] hath no upbraidings, but was raised by them that sought to be defended from oppression; whose end is both the easier and the honestest to satisfy.

B. Jonson. Discoveries.

He is upbraidingly called a poet, as if it were a contemptible nick-name.—Id. Ib.

The dauphin and duchess of Burgundy, as they went to the opera, were surrounded by crowds of people, who upbraided them with their neglect of the general calamity, in going to diversions, when the whole people were ready to perish for want of bread.—Tatler, No. 10.

Axa. Yet I will listen, fair unkind upbraider,
Yet I will listen to thy charming accents,
Altho' they make me curse my fame and fortune,
My laurel wreaths, and all the glorious trophies,
For which the valiant bleed.—Rowe. Tamerlane, Act i.

Cal. Then am I doom'd to live, and bear your triumph?
To groan beneath your scorn and fierce upbraidings,
Daily to be reproach'd, and have my misery
At morn, at noon, at night told over to me.

Id. Fair Penitent, Act iv.

Of this Thales it is reported, that being upbraidingly demanded, what advantage the professors of astrology could derive from the knowledge of it; he astrologically foreseeing what a year it would prove for olives, before any wonted signs of it did appear to husbandmen, engrossed, by giving earnest, the greater part of the olives, which the next should afford to Chios and Miletus.

Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 64.

UP-BREED, v. To nurse or nourish, to rear, to train up.

ing my selfe uprightly and with a good conscience, in all matiers.—Udal. Actes, c. 23.

For before the tenthes wer ordeyned, yet upryghtnes, well doyng, and feith wer requyred, and perteyned vnto the praye of ryghteousnesse.—Id. Matt. c. 23.

And we are in hym truly, in that we folowe hys doctrine and promyses with an upryght conscience, as longe as wee are in hys sonne Jesus Christe, whome he sent into the worlde for that intent.—Id. 1 John, c. 5.

He became a new man, vsing himselfe uprightlie in the administration of iustice.
Holinshed. Historie of England, b. iii. c. 7.

And though he handled not this matter with such fauour and uprightnesse as the bishops wished on their behalves, yet he caused king John to restore the most part of all those goods that remained vnspend.
Id. Chron. of England, K. John, an. 1214.

— But perhaps
The way seems difficult and steep to scale
With upright wing against a higher foe.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ii.

— How hast thou instill'd Thy malice into thousands, once upright
And faithful, now prov'd false.—Id. Ib. b. vi.

He verily that will evermore set before his eies and remember the frailtie of man's estate, shall live in this world uprightly and in even ballance, without enclining more to one side, than unto another.
Holland. Plinie, b. vii. c. 7.

Then [says the good psalmist] shall I not be ashamed,
i. e. Then may I safely confide in my own innocence and uprightness, when I have respect unto all thy commandments; when I find myself equally determined to obey every divine precept, and resolved to allow my self in no practice whatsoever, which the law of God doth not allow of.
Atterbury, vol. iii. Ser. 12.

However the pilot assuring us that this was the least depth we should meet with, we continued our course, till at length the ship stuck fast in the mud, with only eighteen foot water abaft; and, the tide of ebb making, the water sewed to sixteen feet, but the ship remained perfectly up- right.—Anson. Voyages, b. iii. c. 7.

They [the vast buttresses of the Gothic architecture] want the rotundity of the column, and the uprightness of the pilaster, and abound with unpleasing angles.
Knox. Ess. No. 79.

Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. c. 60.

Whervpon king Henrie desirous to tame their hautie stomachs (bicause it was a greefe to him still to be vexed with such tumults and uprisings as they dailie procured) assembled a mightie armie, and went into Wales.
Holinshed. Chron. of England, Hen. I. an. 1115.

UPS

Oh sunne, thy vprise shall I see no more,
Fortune and Anthony part heere, euen heere
Do we shake hands?
Shakespeare. Anthony & Cleopatra, Act iv. sc. 10.

"Instead of music, and base flattering tongues,
Which wait to first salute my lord's vprise;
The cheerful lark wakes him with early songs,
And birds' sweet whistling notes unlock his eyes."
P. Fletcher. Purple Island, c. 12.

Cos. They are the more to thank their modesty,
God keep my wife, and all my issue female
From such uprisings.
Beaum. & Fletch. Noble Gentleman, Act i.

Hast thou not seen my morning chambers fill'd
With scepter'd slaves, who waited to salute me:
With eastern monarchs: who forgot the sun.
To worship my uprising?—Dryden. All for Love, Act iii.

All hasted then to council; sorrow wrung
Each parent's heart, and soon as on full seats
The whole assembled senate sat, uprose Euphros first.
Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. xxiv.

UP-ROAR, n. } Dut. Op-roer.
UPROAR, v. } A high, raised, elevated, noise, clamour, shouting; a noisy, clamorous disturbance or tumult.

And all this while there lacketh not greates plentye of suche as incense the myndes of prynces to battayle, namely of those persones, whome it behoueth, forasmuche as theyr profite and luyng dependeth thereupon, to haue all the worlde in an uprore, and vnquieted with warres.
Udal. Mark, Pref.

— Nay, had I powre, I should Poure the sweet milke of concord, into hell,
Vprore the vniuersall peace, confound
All vnity on earth.—Shakespeare. Macbeth, Act iv. sc. 3.

While we were passing by these rocks of Vele Rete, there was an outcry of fire on the fore-castle; this occasioned a general alarm, and the whole crew instantly flocked together in the utmost confusion, so that the officers found it difficult for some time to appease the uproar.
Anson. Voyages, b. iii. c. 6.

UP-RO'LED. Turned up in folds, in convolutions; folded up in rounds.

So high as heav'n the tumid hills, so low Down sunk a hollow bottom broad and deep, Capacious bed of waters; thither they Hasted with glad precipitance, uprowld
As drops on dust conglobing from the drier.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. vii.

UP-ROOT, v. To eradicate, tear, pull, drag up, by the roots, from the foundation.

Orpheus could lead the savage race;
And trees uprooted left their place,
Sequacious of the lyre:
But bright Cecilia rais'd the wonder higher.
Dryden. Song for St. Cecilia's Day.

— Resembling thus (as far As race of men inferior may)
The fam'd gigantic war,
When those tall sons of earth did heav'n aspire;
(A brave but impious fire!)
Uprooting hills, with most stupendous hale,
To form the high and dreadful scale.
Congreve. To the King.

Lo, Nemi! navell'd in the woody hills
So far, that the uprooting hills which tears
The oak from his foundation, and which spills
The ocean o'er its boundary, and bears
Its foam against the skies, reluctant spares
The oval mirror of thy glassy lake.
Byron. Child Harold, c. 4.

UP-ROUSE, v. To rise, raise, or cause to rise;
to excite, to awaken.

But where vnbruised youth with vnstuffed braine
Doth couch his limbs, there, golden sleepe doth raigne, Therefore thy earliness doth me assure,
Thou art uprous'd with some distemperature.
Shakespeare. Romeo & Juliet, Act ii. sc. 3.

UP-RUN, v. To run up, ascend or mount up.

He gave me to bring forth and rear a son
Of matchless might, who like a thriving plant
*Up*ran to manhood, while his lusty growth
I nourish'd as the husbandman his vine.
Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. xviii.

UP-SEND, v. To cast or throw up.

As when some island situate afar
On the wide waves, invested all the day
By cruel foes from their own city pour'd,
Upsends a smoke to Heav'n, and torches shows
On all her turrets at the close of eve.
Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. xviii.

UPS

But vain his efforts were with loudest call
To reach their ears, such was the deafning din
Upsent to Heav'n, of shields and crested helms,
And of the batter'd gates.—Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. xii.

UP-SET, v. Dut. Op-setten.
To put or place up; also, to put or place, or turn over.

The duke forgotten is he of thing, that Harald hette,
Now is he in the see with saile on mast upsettle.
R. Brunne, p. 70.

— And he was cosin nighe
To him, that Thebes firste on high Upset, which kyng Cadme hight.—Gower. Con. A. b. i.

For of the false Moabites,
Forth with the strength of Amonites
Of that thei were first misget,
The people of God was ofte upset
In Israell and in Judee.

And Ginks to sing the song: I for the structure,
Which is the bowl.
Hig. Which must be up-sey English,
Strong, lusty, London beer; let's think more of it.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Beggar's Bush, Act iv. sc. 5.

I do not like the fullness of your eye;
It hath a heavy cast, 'tis upsee Dutch.
B. Jonson. Alchemist, Act iv. sc. 4.

UP-SHOT. } A cast up; the account, the UPSHOOTING. } amount, the sum—cast up; the amount, sum, or summit.

King Henrie the fift in his beginning thought it a meere scofferie to pursue anie fallow deere with hounds or grei-hounds, but supposed himselfe alwaies to haue doone a sufficient act when he had tired them by his owne trauell on foote, and so killed them with his hands in the upshot of that exercise and end of his recreation.
Holinshed. Description of England, b. ii. c. 4.

With which he kindleth his ambitious spright
To like desire and praise of noble fame,
The onely up-shot where-to he doth aime.
Spenser. Mother Hubbard's Tale.

The painted floures, the trees upshooting hie
The dales for shade, the hills for breathing space.
Id. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 12.

What marvel then if he thought it no diminution of himself, as oft as he saw his time, to be importunate for treaties, when he sought them only, as by the upshot appear'd, to get opportunities?—Milton. Answer to Eikon Basilike, § 18.

The fearfulllest plagues God still reserves for the upshot:
all the former do but make way for the last.
Bp. Hall. Cont. Plagues of Egypt.

I am a woman of condition, not now three and twenty, and have had proposals from at least ten different men, and the greater number of them have upon the upshot refused me.—Spectator, No. 528.

The upshot is that upon comparing those pleasures, which are the natural effects of virtue with those sufferings, which are the natural effects of ill constitution or other calamity, these are many, very many times found to exceed: and e contrario, upon balancing those evils, which are the genuine effects of vice, against the advantages resulting from a fortunate estate, these may often be found to outdo the other.—Wollaston. Religion of Nature, s. 9.

UP-SITTING, n. Dut. Op-sitten, insidere, to sit upon.

A sitting up.
Count. Farewell my Lord, I was entreated to invite your lordship to a lady's upsitting.

UP-SKIPS, i. e. Upstarts.

He bad them in God's behalf, to sit upon the bench themselves, and not put all to the hearing of velvet coats, and upskips, as he termed them.
Strype. Eccles. Mem. Edw. VI.

UP-SO-DOWN. } See Up.
UP-SIDE-DOWN. }

And al the multitude of hem arisen: and ledden him to Pilat. And thei bigunnen to accuse him: and seiden, we han founden this turnynge upsodown oure folk.
Wiclif. Luk, c. 23.

But Saul, which is seid also Poul, was fillid with the Hooli Goost and biheelde in to hym and seide, a thou ful of al gile and al falsnesse, thou sone of the deuel, thou enemye of al rightwisnesse, thou leeuyst not to turne upsodown the rightful weies of the Lord.—Id. Dedis, c. 13.

UPS

And how upso aoun is this thing, that we seen that the betidyng of temporall thynges, is cause of the eterne prescience.—Chaucer. Boecius, b. v.

And vpon this diuision
The londe was tourned up so downe.
Gower. Con. A. b. ii.

This ought a kynge well vnderstonde,
As he whiche is to lawe swore,
That if the lawe be forlone
Withouten execucion,
It maketh a londe turne up so downe.—Id. Ib. b. vii.

And y^t now we make the fassio of Cristedom, to seme al turned quite upsodown.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 110.

Sir Greg. No not to me, the edge of her tongue is taken off
Gives me very good words, turn'd up-side-down to me,
And we live as quietly as two tortoises.
Beaum. & Fletch. Wit at several Weapons, Act v.

Was any man ever to that degree sui juris, so much his own master, as that he might lawfully prey upon mankind, bear down all that stood in his way, and turn all things upside-down?—Milton. A Defence of the People of England.

There is no question but these young Machiavels will, in a little time, turn their colledge upside down with plots and stratagems.—Spectator, No. 305.

UP-SPRING, v. } Dut. Op-springhen; A. S.
UPSPRING, n. } Up-springan.
To rise or raise up, to shoot up, to leap up.

That monkerye was as the dead carreyne that stynketh, and that their vowes were fryuolouse, ydell, and abhomy-nable, beyng the upspryngynge braunches of Sodome.
Bale. English Votaries, pt. ii.

Ham. The king doth wake to night, and takes his rouse, Keepes wassels and the swaggering upspring reeles,
And as he dreines his draughts of Renish downe,
The kettle drum and trumpet thus bray out
The triumph of his pledge.
Shakespeare. Hamlet, Act i. sc. 4.

Upspringing to his seat, at once he bade
His charioteer drive to the hollow barks,
Heart-sick himself with pain.
Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. xi.

UP-SPURNER. One who casts up indignantly; (met.) a scorner, a contemner, a disdainer.

erth perished, Lucanus describeth it.
Joye. Expositio of Daniel, c. 4.

UP-STAID. Dut. Op-staen.
Kept, propped, held up.

But when of him no answer she receiued,
But saw him senselesse by the squire up-staid,
She weened well, that then she was betraid.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 9.

UP-STAND, v. } Dut. Op-staen.
UPSTANDING, n. } To be or become, to keep hold in an erect, upright position; to keep or hold up; to sustain.

Nevertheless, if he thought the enterprize should not be mistaken, nor turn to any displeasure, he would be an humble suitor to your lordship, and by the same to the king's good grace, for the upstanding of the foresaid house, of the continuance of the same to many good purposes.
Strype. Eccles. Mem. Hen. VIII. an. 1536.

So, vp he let him rise: who with grim looke
And count'naunce sterne upstanding, gan to grind
His grated teeth for great disdain, and shooke
His sandy locks, long hanging downe behinde.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 5.

Erelong, arriving on the destin'd spot,
They left the chariot, and proceeded both
Into the interval between the hosts.
At once upstood the monarch, and upstood
The wise Ulysses.
Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. iii.

UP-START, v. } To move up suddenly, UPSTART, adj. } jump or leap (as if suddenly UPSTART, n. } stirred).

An upstart,—one suddenly raised or risen, become eminent or conspicuous.

Their dam upstart, out of her den effraid,
And rushed forth, hurling her hideous taile
About her cursed head, whose folds displaid
Were stretcht now forth at length without entraile.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 1.

And where they had a common speech at Rome, to call them upstarts that were no gentlemen born, but did rise by virtue: it fortun'd Cato to be called one of them.
North. Plutarch, p. 289.

Arr. It is a note
Of upstart greatness, to observe and watch
For these poor trifles, which the noble mind Neglects and scorns.—B. Jonson. Sejanus, Act v. sc. 8.

UPT

Thirsl upstarting from his fearless bed,
Where useless nights he safe and quiet rests, Unhous'd his bleeting flock, and quickly thence Hasting to his expecting audience,
Thus with sad verse began their griev'd minds incense.
P. Fletcher. Purple Island, c. 7.

Thus while he spoke, the virgin from the ground
Upstart fresh, already clos'd the wound,
And unconcern'd for all she felt before Precipitates her flight along the shore.
Dryden. Theodore & Honoria.

This note was made to meet with the common reproach then given to the religion reformed, that it was a new upstart religion, and called the new learning.
Strype. Eccles. Mem. Hen. VIII.

Would it not be an insufferable thing for a learned professor, and that which his scarlet would blush at, to have his authority of forty years standing, wrought out of hard rock Greek and Latin, with no small expence of time and candle, and confirmed by general tradition and a reverend beard, in an instant overturned by an upstart novelist?
Locke. Hum. Underst. b. iv. c. 20.

So saying, the might of Vulcan loos'd the snare,
And they, detain'd by those coercive bands
No longer, from the couch upstarting, flew,
Mars into Thrace, and to her Paphian home
The queen of smiles.—Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. viii.

URBA'NITY. { nità; Sp. Urbano, urbanidad;
Lat. Urbanus, of, or pertaining to a city (urbs).

Civil, civilized, polite, polished, courteous or courtly, gentle or genteel.

Now as touching their urbanity, it is much vnlike vnto ours in Japan, and vnto that of Europe: howbeit vnder two principal kindes the rule of their urbanity or courtesie may be comprehended: whereof one is obserued betweene equals, and the other betweene superiours and inferiours.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. p. 96.

So will they keep their measures true,
And make still their proportions new,
Till all become one harmony,
Of honour, and of courtesy,
True valour and urbanity.—B. Jonson. Love Restored.

Moral doctrine, and urbanity, [says Casaubon] or well-mannered wit, are the two things which constitute the Roman satire.—Dryden. Juvenal, Ded.

You cannot read and taste his [Horace] beauties, without improving your urbanity of manners, together with your knowledge of polite literature.

But the fift troupe most horrible of hew,
And fierce of force, was dreadfull to report
For, some like snayles, some did like spiders shew,
And some like vgly urgins thicke and short.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 11

Some [fish] are armed with shels, some with hard skales, and diuers round as a ball skinned like an yrcheon or hedg-hog.—Holinshed. Description of Scotland, c. 9.

The fox in Æsop's Fables, would not suffer the urchin to take off the tiques that were settled upon her body: for if (quoth shee) thou take away these that be already full, there will come other hungry ones in their place.
Holland. Plutarch, p. 323.

Of the same sort that crabs be, are the urchins of the sea called echini; and these instead of feet have certain pointed prickles. Their manner of going is to roll themselves up and tumble round.—Id. Plinie, b. ix. c. 31.

alkes a thing commonlie vsed in the east countries; here is no place to speak of it, since we want these kind of beasts.
Holinshed. Description of England, b. iii. c. 4.

URGE, v. Fr. Urger; It. Urgere; Sp. Urgente; Lat. Urgere, (from the URGENT. Gr. Epyov, opus, opus excitare, aut URGENTLY. stimulare,) to rouse, to spur on to URGENCY. work, (Vossius.) URGER.

To press on in any work or labour; to excite, to stimulate, to encourage, to be earnest—in pressing forward or persevering; to labour earnestly; to pursue, to seek—eagerly; to impress, to impel.

And [he] urged the tribute, saying if it were worth but one haire, that he would not remit it.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 225.

During the two houres of those two dayes the heat is very urgent, and so perhaps it will be in foure or fiue dayes more an houre euery day, vntill the sunne in his proper motion haue crossed the equinoctiall.—Id. Ib. vol. iii. p. 49.

And therefore the Jewes called more urgently vpon the matier, vnwittynly doing thereby seruite to the thing that God appointed: that is, to haue this sacrifice made in time conuenient, and in due season.—Udal. John, c. 19.

Anger and pitty, in his manly brest,
Urge, yet restraine his teares.
Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b. ii. s. 4.

The second is, when of diuers things euill, all being not euitable, wee are permitted to take one; which one sauing only in case of so great urgency were not otherwise to bee taken; as in the matter of diuorce amongst the Jewes.
Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politic, b. i. § 8.

Yet take heed, worthy Maximus, all ears
Hear not with that distinction mine do, few You'll find admonishers, but urgers of your actions.
Beaum. & Fletcher. Valentinian, Act i. sc. 3.

Lo hapless Tydeus, whose ill-fated hand
Had slain his brother, leaves his native land,
And, seiz'd with horror, in the shades of night,
Thro' the thick deserts headlong urg'd his flight.
Pope. Statius. Thebaid, b. i.

If the Suktan understands that any man has money, if it be but 20 dollars, which is a great matter among them, he will send to borrow so much money, pretending urgent occasions for it; and they dare not deny him.
Dampier. Voyages, an. 1686.

Were a probable way suggested to us of acquiring great wealth, honour, or pleasure, should we not quickly run about it? could we contentedly sleep, till we had brought the business to a sure or hopeful issue? and why with less expedition or urgency should we pursue the certain means of our present security and comfort, of our final salvation and happiness?—Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 16.

But time is urgent; haste we to consult Priest, prophet, or interpreter of dreams
For dreams are also of Jove) that we may learn What crime of ours Apollo thus resents.

Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. i.

URINA'TOR. Lat. Urinator, from urinare, to dive, (of unsettled etymology;) perhaps Gr. Apvew- ew, to dip or dive.

A diver.

And it is more than ten years since his majesty's urinator,
Mr. Curtis, published in the Gazette, how he had practised, and was furnished with instruments, divers, and shipping,
to recover permanent goods which are lost by shipwreck;
which minds me how easy it were, and advantageous for our merchants, in all their voyages, to be furnished with such urinators.—Boyle. Works, vol. vi. p. 446.

As pearl, coral, mines; with innumerable other things of great value, which may be much more easily found out by the help of this, than by any other usual way of the uri- nators.—Wilkins. Dædalus, c. 5.

And eke thyn urinals, and thy jordanes.

Chaucer. Pardoner's Tale, v. 12,240.

And we find also, that places where men urine commonly have some smell of violets: and urine, if one hath eaten nutmeg, hath so too.—Bacon. Natural History, § 835.

These follies are within you, and shine through you like the water in an urinall.

Shakespeare. Two Gentlemen of Verona, Act ii. sc. 1.

Those medicines being opening and piercing, do fortifie the operation of the liver, in sending down the wheyey part of the blood to the reins. For medicines urinate do not work by rejection, and indigestion, as solutive do.

Bacon. Natural History, § 43.

—As hot, as at the muster

Of all your night-tubs, when the carts doe cluster,
Who shall discharge first his merd-urinous load.

B. Jonson, Epig. 134.

The urachos or ligamentous passage is derived from the bottom of the bladder, whereby it dischargeth the waterish and urinary part of its contents.

Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. v. c. 5.

In the kidneys there should be such innumerable little siphons or tubes conveying the *urino*se particles to the pelvis and ureters, first discover'd by Bellini, and illustrated by Malpighi.—Ray. On the Creation, pt. ii.

URN, n. } Fr. Urne; It. Urna; Sp. Urna; URN, v. } Lat. Urna, a vessel for dipping (into the water), from urinare. (See URINATOR.) Cotgrave calls it—

"A narrow-necked pot or pitcher of earth, to fetch or keep water in." Also used for various other purposes; to contain the ashes of the dead;
to receive the names of candidates, votes, &c.

The poudre in which min herte shall turn
That pray I thee thou take and it conserve
In a vessell that men clepeth an vrne
Of gold.

Chaucer. Troil & Cres. b. v.

And some of hem with vrnes made of gold,
Whan the ashes fully were made cold,
To enclose of hem of great affection,
And beare hem home vnto hir region.

Lidgate. Story of Thebes, pt. iii.

If fortune grant recourse to Italy,
Not here shall these so sacred ashes ly:
But from my hand Cornelia shall take,
And vrne thy reliques.—May. Lucan. Pharsalia, b. viii.

He will not suffer us to burn their bones,
To urne their ashes, nor to take th' offence
Of mortal loathsomeness from the blest eye
Of holy Phœbus, but infects the winds
With stench of our slain lords.

Beaum. & Fletcher. Two Noble Kinsmen, Act i. sc. 1.

When the pile was burnt down, they put out the remains of the fire, by sprinkling wine, that they might the more easily gather up the bones and ashes: this gathering up the bones and ashes, and putting them into the urn, was the next office paid to the deceased.

Kennett. Roman Antiquities, pt. ii. b. v. c. 10.

URTICATION. This seems to be a word coined by Bp. Taylor, and by him only used.
From Lat. Urtica, a nettle; and intended to denote, merely—

Stings.

Nature never makes excellent things for mean or no uses; and it is hardly to be conceived, that our infinitely wise Creator should make so admirable a faculty which comes nearest the excellency of his own incomprehensible being, to be so idle and uselessly employed, at least a part of its time here, as to think constantly, without remembering any of those thoughts, without doing any good to itself or others, or being any way useful to any other part of the creation.—Locke. On Hum. Underst. b. ii. c. 1.

Without it [industry] we cannot in any state act decently, or usefully, either to the benefit and satisfaction of others, or to our own advantage and comfort.

Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 19.

"The act of perspicuous, as far forth as perspicuous," is another peripatetic definition of a simple idea; which, though not more absurd than the former of motion, yet betrays its uselessness and insignificance more plainly, because experience will easily convince any one, that it cannot make the meaning of the word light (which it pretends to define) at all understood by a blind man.

Locke. On Hum. Underst. b. iii. c. 4.

There are many companies, sports, and recreations, (I shall not mention particulars, no doubt in themselves very lawful; but yet they may chance to prove the bane of the cold user of them.)—South, vol. vi. Ser. 11.

These trees commonly grow here, as indeed usually where-ever they grow, in a champion dry ground, such at least as is not drowned or morassy.

Dampier. Voyages, vol. ii. c. 1.

So that, absolutely speaking, in this strict and philosophical sense; either nothing is miraculous, namely, if we have respect to the power of God; or, if we regard our own power and understanding, then almost every thing, as well what we call natural, as what we call supernatural, is in this sense really miraculous; and 'tis only usualness or unusualness that makes the distinction.

Clarke. Evidences of Religion, Prop. 14.

Still you will say perhaps, that, explain and limit it as we will, it is very hard after all, that in order to obey God, and demonstrate our love to him, we must disobey the dictates of the strongest and usefullest principle he hath planted in our nature, the love of ourselves, and adopt others, often of very undeserving characters, in our room.

B. Jonson. Every Man out of his Humour, Act v. sc. 4.

Though it be ordinarily true here also that he that doubts speculatively, does also doubt practically; as if he doubts concerning all usurious contracts, whether it be lawful or no to use any, he doubts all concerning this which himself uses, if it be usurious.

Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. i. c. 5.

So that if a common-wealth permits an usurious exchange or contract, it is not unjust, because the laws are the particular measures of justice and contracts.

Id. Ib. b. ii. c. 2.

For the enemies to interest in general make no distinction between that and usury, holding any increase of money to be indefensibly usurious.

Blackstone. Commentaries, b. ii. c. 30.

I know of but two definitions that can possibly be given of usury: one is the taking of a greater interest than the law allows of: this may be stiled the political or legal definition. The other is the taking of a greater interest than it is usual for men to give and take: this may be stiled the moral one: and this, where the law has not interfered, is plainly enough the only one.

Fabyan. Chronycle, an. 1471.

Euerie one which either by flattering had god rithes together, as by seditious partaking was had by estimation, sought to haue the gouernement, and to usurp the title of king.—Holinshed. Historie of England, b. vi. c. 8.

But whether these gouernors (whose names we haue recited) were kings or rather rulers of the common wealth, or tyrants and usurpers of the gouernment by force, it is vncerteine.—Id. Ib. b. iii. c. 10.

That the assignation of such offices, and appropriating them to the ministry of certain persons may be a cancel to secure the inclosures of the clerical orders from the usurpings and invasions of pretending and unhallowed spirits.

Bp. Taylor. Pol. Disc. Pref.

As conquest may be called a foreign usurpation, so usurpation is a kind of domestick conquest, with this difference, that an usurper can never have right on his side, it being no usurpation, but where one is got into the possession of what another has a right to.

Locke. Of Civil Government, c. 17.

Too well I know her blandishments to gain, Usurper-like, till settled in her reign; Then proudly she insults, and gives you cares And jealousies; short hopes and long despairs.

Dryden. 1 Pt. Conquest of Granada, Act iii.

Then answer thus Ulysses wise return'd: Yes—and I would that vengeance from the gods Might pay their insolence, who thus usurp Dominion here, and in another's house, With no respect of right, or dread of shame, Much evil daily work, and purpose more.

Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. ii.

UTENSIL. Fr. Utensil; Sp. Utensilios; Lat. Utensilia, (ab utendo.)

Any article necessary for use.

They bete out the heddes and let the wyne ronne in the stretes, and al formys, stols and other utensilis in the howse by theym foundyn, all to brake in peces.

Fabyan. Chronycle. Phil. IV. an. 20.

But if he can go beyond this limit, then it can have no natural limit, but may extend to sumptuousness, to ornaments of churches, to rich utensils, to splendor, to majesty; for all that is decent enough, and in some circumstances very fit.—Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. iii. c. 4.

The inhabitants of Ægypt doe use the root in stead of wood, not for fewell onely, but also to make thereof sundrie vessels and utensils in an house.

Holland. Plinie, b. xiii. c. 11.

Multitudes [were] employing themselves upon ingenious handicrafts with the souls of departed utensils, for that is the name which in the Indian language they give their tools when they are burnt or broken.—Spectator, No. 56.

Of all the utensils which necessity and ingenuity have concurred to produce among other savage nations, they saw only a basket to carry in the hand, a satchel, to hang at the back, and the bladder of some beast to hold water, which the natives drink through a hole that is made near the top for that purpose.—Cook. First Voyage, b. i. c. 5.

UTERINE. Fr. Uterin; It. Uterino; Sp. Uterino; Lat. Uterinus.

Of or pertaining to the womb (uterus).

As for women, their inward parts are answerable to mens in all these respects abovesaid: and besides they have by themselves adjoining close unto the bladder, another little bag or purse; whereupon it is called in Latine uterus: and it hath another name beside, to wit, loci; which we call the matrice, the mother, or the wombe: and in other creatures it is termed vulva.—Holland. Plinie, b. xi. c. 37.

Sulphur; in regard whereof, they dry, resolve, mollifie, attract, and are good for uterine effects, proceeding from cold and windy humours.—Fuller. Worthies. Somersetshire.

Walter Pope, uterine brother to Dr. Joh. Wilkins sometime bishop of Chester, was born at Faulsley in Northamptonshire.—Wood. Athenæ Oxon. vol. ii.

UTILITY. Fr. Utilité; It. Utilità; Sp. Utilidad; Lat. Utilitas, (from utilis), that may be used. See USE, USEFULNESS.

Utilitarian, (sub. and adj.) are words now in common use.

The utilities to knowe the ascencions of sygnes in the right circle is this.—Chaucer. Astrolabe.

For suche is the beneficial goodness of God, that he whiche gaue vs muche before, doeth in most ample wise augment his giftes, beecause he right wel perceyueth, that whatsoever was geuen, the same is distributed & bestowed to the great utilitie of manye.—Udal. Marke, c. 4.

Where, I say, the attractive pleasure and sweetnesse of speech is not without some fruit, nor void of utility, there let us bring in withall the reason of philosophy, and make a good medly of pleasure and profit together.

Holland. Plutarch, p. 16.

Others have contended, that all difference of good and evil, and all obligations of morality, ought to be founded originally upon considerations of publick utility.

Clarke. On the Evidences, Prop. 1.

In common life we may observe, that the circumstance of utility is always appealed to; nor is it supposed that a greater eulogy can be given to any man, than to display his usefulness to the public, and to enumerate the services, which he has performed to mankind and to society.

Hume. On the Principles of Morals, pt. i. § 5.

A theory founded on utility, therefore requires that we should cultivate, as excitements to practice, those other habitual dispositions which we know by experience to be generally the source of actions beneficial to ourselves and our fellows; habits of feeling, productive of habits of virtuous conduct, and in their turns strengthened by the re-action of these last.

Sir J. Mackintosh. Progress of Ethical Philosophy, s. 6.

UTIS. The octave of a legal term or of any festival, from A. S. Eahta, eight, (Skinner,) or, he adds, in another place, the Fr. Huit.

Shakespeare is supposed to mean festivity, jollity, according to old usage, without restraint.

This knyght straunger, for the loue of these tydynges yt he had brought pleasaunt to the duke of Lancastre, and to the erle of Cambridge, he was feasted and dyned with the kynge, and so taried the space of xv. dayes, tyll the vtas of saynt George.—Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 380.

The verie utler part of Saint Adelmes point, is fife miles from Sandwich.—Holinshed. Description of Britaine, c. 12.

The name of faith being properly and strictly taken, it must needs haue reference vnto some utted word, as the obiect of beliefe: neuertheless sith the grounde of credit is the credibilitie of things credited; and things are made credible, eyther by the knowne condition and qualitie of the utterer, or by the manifest likelihood of truth which they haue in themselves; hereupon it riseth that whatsoever wee are perswaded of, the same we are said generally to beleue.—Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, b. ii. § 4.

Yet if by chance, in uttr'ing things abstruse,
Thou need new terms, thou mayst, without excuse,
Feign words unheard of to the well truss'd race
Of the Cethegi.—B. Jonson. Horace. Art of Poetry.

Such flights also haue the alewies for the utternce of this drinke, that they will mixe it with rosen and salt.

Holinshed. Description of England, b. ii. c. 6.

There be also certaine flaming torches shining out in the skie, houbet, never seen but when they fall. Such a one was that, which at the time that Germanicus Cæsar exhibited a shew of sword-fencers at utternce, ran at noonetide in the sight of all the people.—Holland. Plinie, b. ii. c. 26.

Nor to be obtained by the invocation of dame Memory and her siren daughters, but by devout prayer to that eternal Spirit, who can enrich with all utternce and knowledge, and sends out his seraphim, with the hallow'd fire of his altar, to touch and purify the lips of whom he pleases.

Milton. Reason. of Church Government, b. ii.

Utters of secrets he from thence debarde,

Babblers of folly, and blazers of crime.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 9.

O heaven! that any thing in the likeness of man should suffer these rack'd extremities, for the uttering of his sophisticate good parts.—B. Jonson. Cynthia's Revels, Act i. sc. 1.

That woman whose honour is not appeach'd, is less injur'd by a silent dismissal, being otherwise not illiberally dealt with, than to endure a clamouring debate of utterless things, in a business of that ciuil secrecy and difficult discerning, or not to be overmuch question'd by nearest friends.

Milton. Doct. & Disc. of Divorce, b. ii. c. 21.

Howbeit those had forsaken his father, and taken part with him against his said father, he seemed now so much to mislike, that he remoued them utterlie from his presence.

Holinshed. Chron. of England. Rich. I. an. 1189.

That which is of God wee defend, to the uttermoste of that habilitie which he hath guen: that which is otherwise, let it wither euen in the root from whence it hath sprung.

Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, b. ii. § 1.

Why doe wretched men so much desire
To draw their dayes vnto the utmost date,
And doe not rather wish them soone expire,
Knowing the misery of their estate.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 3.

Inflam'd with these words, they all vow thir utmost, with such undaunted resolution as amaz'd the Roman general; but the souldier less waighing, because less knowing, clamour'd to be led on against any danger.

Milton. History of England, b. ii.

They are naturally mischievous to their power; and if they speak not maliciously, or sharply of witty men, 'tis only because God has not bestow'd on them the gift of utterance.—Dryden. Aurenge-Zebe, Ep. Ded.

Achilles, plunging in that part his spear,
Impell'd it through the yielding flesh, beyond
The ashen beam his pow'r of utfrance left Still unimpair'd, but in the dust he fell.

Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. xxii.

They brandished their weapons, and seemed resolved to defend their coast to the uttermost, though they were but two, and we forty.—Cook. First Voyage, b. iii. c. 1.

VU'LGARISM. } by transposition, βολχος, vulgus.

Of or pertaining to the multitude or many, the common people:—common, usual, ordinary, mean, low, gross; common, public.

Whiche olde Englishe wordes and vulgars no wise man because of their antiquitee will throwe aside.

Gower. Con. A. Ep. Ded.

Are not here the statelie princes of this worlde ashamed, who wyl haue nothing common with the vulgar people.

Udal. Marke, c. 1.

He that forbereth to speke, all thought he can doo it bothe wysely and eloquently because neyther in the frute nor in the herers, he findeth opportunitie, so that no fytme maye succede of his speche, he therefore is vulgarely called a discrete personne.—Sir T. Elyot. The Governour, b. i. c. 25.

But as to the author of these soliloquies, whether it were the late king, as is vulgarly believ'd, or any secret coadjutor, and some stick not to name him; it can add nothing, nor shall take from the weight, if any be, of reason which he brings.—Milton. Ans. to Eikon Basilike, Pref.

She tells you too, how that it bounded is,
And kept enclosed with so many eyes,
As that it cannot stray and break abroad
Into the private ways of carelessness;
Nor ever may descend to vulgarise,
Or be below the sphere of her abode.

Daniel. To Lady Anne Clifford.

If they say that the variety of deities, worshipped by the heathen world, were but figurative ways of expressing the several attributes of that incomprehensible Being, or several parts of his providence: I answer, what they might be in the original, I will not here inquire: but that they were so in the thoughts of the vulgar, I think nobody will affirm.

Locke. Hum. Underst. b. i. c. 4.

If the world vulgarly doth account and call the rich man happy, a better author has pronounced the poor man such: blessed are the poor, doth march in the van of the beatitudes.—Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 31.

[Fletcher] without losing sight of the characters of his speakers, has never descended to vulgarism or affected obscurity.—P. Fletcher. Pisc. Ecl. Ecl. 1. Note.

Verses which a few years past, were thought worthy the attention of children only, or of the lowest and rudest orders, are now admired for that artless simplicity which once obtained the name of coarseness and vulgarity.

Knox. Ess. No. 47.

But Mrs. Cole lived in polished society, and would have turned with contempt from the reprobate vulgarity of the frontiers of Bartholomew fair.

B. Jonson. Bartholomew Fair, Act ii. sc. 1. Note by Gifford.

Their decent mode of preaching, raises a respectful attention to their doctrine, far more favourable to the advancement of religion, than learning sullied with pedantry, exhortation vulgarized by low wit, argument perplexed by scholastic subtilty, exposition spoiled by quaintness, and pious declamation rendered ludicrous by humour and ill-placed pedantry.—Knox. Ess. No. 38.

All violations of grammar, and all vulgarisms, solecisms, and barbarisms, in the conversation of boys, and also in their most familiar letters, must be noticed and corrected.

Id. Liberal Education, § 14.

VULGATE. The old Latin version of the Scriptures; the greater portion of which is ascribed to St. Jerome.

These translations were all of them, as has been already hinted, from the Latin Vulgate, according to which, at that time, were the lessons, which were taken out of the bible, &c. commonly read and used in our churches, which therefore gave the greater offence to the zealots of these times.

Lewis. English Translations of Bible, c. 1.

Some of the ancients, and particularly Jerom, translated the epithet Epiusios, "supersubstantial and superessential," instead of "daily," and at this hour it stands so translated in the vulgate bible, for ages the only bible of the people.—Knox. On the Lord's Supper.

VULNERABLE. } Fr. Vulnérable; It. Vulnerabile; Sp. Vulnerable; Lat. Vulnerarius, vulnerare, vulnus, a wound. VULNERARY, adj. } VULNERARY, n. } VULNERATED. } VULNERATION. } Vulnerable,—that may be wounded, hurt, harmed, or injured.

Vulnerable,—pertaining to, suited to, healing wounds.

Let fall thy blade on vulnerable crests,
I beare a charmed life, which must not yeeld
To one of woman borne.

Shakespeare. Macbeth, Act v. sc. 7.

WAD. A. S. Wad, i. e. woad, (qv.)

I find also that rape oile hath beene made within this land. But now our soile either will not or at the leastwise may not beare either wad or matter: I saie not that the ground is not able so to doo, but that we are negligent, afraid of the pilling of our grounds, and carelesse of our owne profits.—Holinshead. Description of Britaine, c. 18.

Highly commended by Hicesius a physician of great name and authoritie, also by Aristogiton, for an excellent vulnerarie.—Holland. Plinie, b. xxvii. c. 4.

Some have ordained a vulnerarie drinke to be made therof for those that be wounded.—Id. ib. b. xxvii. c. 4.

The aspect of his eye alone does sometimes become not only vulnerable, but mortal.—Feltham, pt. ii. Res. 56.

It is enough for me that, de facto, there is such an intercourse between the magnetick unguent and the vulnerable body, and I need not be solicitous of the cause.

Glanvill. Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 21.

When God foretels by the prophet Zachary what he should suffer from the sons of men, he says expressly, "they shall look upon me whom they have pierced;" and therefore shews that he speaks of the son of God, which was to be the son of Man, and by our nature liable to vulneration; and withal foretels the piercing of his body.

Pearson. On the Creed Art. 4.

So in the right hand of Achilles beam'd
His brandish'd spear, while, meditating wo
To Hector, he explor'd his noble form, Seeking where he was vulnerable most.

Cowper. Homer. Iliad, b. xxii.

Offer yourself as a candidate for a seat in parliament, be promoted to honour and emolument, or in any respect attract the attention of mankind upon yourself, and if you are vulnerable in your character you will be deeply wounded.

Knox. Ess. No. 85.

The gentler, the kinder, the more Christian mode of expostulation and rational concession, whatever concession can be made, may, like a balsamic vulnerable, heal the sore which opposition would cause to rankle.

Id. Christian Philosophy, § 38.

If I had not known no application had been made to it, I should certainly have enquired, with a very interested curiosity, after the vulnerable herbs and surgical art of the country.—Cook. First Voyage, b. ii. c. 9.

VULPINE. Fr. Vulpin,—fox-like, of a fox, (vulpes.) Lat. Vulpinus.

It requires as much policy to grow good, as great. There is an innocent providence, as well as the slyness of a vulpine craft.—Feltham, pt. i. Res. 12.

VULTURE. } Fr. Vautour; It. Avvoltojo; VULTUROUS. } Sp. Buitre; Lat. Vultur, a volando, ob crebrum volatum; because constantly on the wing.

Vulturous,—ravenous, voracious.

And a strange thing it is to consider, that the greedie and ravenous vultures disdeined to praye vpon any of the reliques, which remained.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 21.

The blacke vultures are the best of that kind. No man could ever meet with their nests: whereupon some have thought (but untruly) that they flie unto us out of another world, even from the antipodes, who are opposite unto us.

Holland. Plinie, b. x. c. 6.

Mont. Ye dregs of baseness, vultures amongst men
That tyre upon the hearts of generous spirits.
I Cred. You do us wrong sir, we tyre no generous spirits we tyre nothing but our hackneys.

Beaum. & Fletch. Honest Man's Fortune, Act ii.

On his bosome sat
Two vultures, digging through his caule of fat,
Into his liuer, with their crooked beakes;
And each by turnes, the concrete entrails breakes
As smith their steale beate, set on either side.

Chapman. Homer. Odyssey, b. xi.

He was shut up alone in the bladder, his vulturous stomach lets loose upon himself, and within few minutes more, one half of him devours the other.

Hammond. Works, vol. iv. p. 473.

In fine, the censorious humour, argueth ill nature to be predominant, (a vulturous nature, which easily smelleth out, and hastily flyeth toward, and greedily feedeth on carrion.)

Barrow, vol. ii. Ser. 20.

There also Tityus on the ground I saw Extended, offspring of the glorious earth;
Nine acres he o'respread, and, at his side
Station'd, two vultures on his liver prey'd,
Scooping his entrails; nor his hands were free
To chase them thence.—Cowper. Homer. Odyssey, b. xi.

UXORIOUSLY. } taining to a wife, (uxor.)
UXORIOUSNESS. } Usually denoting—
Too fond of a wife, too yielding, conceding and complying to a wife.

But he's an ass that will be so uxorious to tie his affections to one circle.—B. Jonson. Silent Woman, Act iv. sc. 1

Trust nothing that the boy lets fall,
My lords, he hath plots upon you all.
A pensioner unto your wives,
To keep you in uxorious gyves.—Id. Time Vindicated.

What if I had writ as your friend the author of the aforesaid Mime, Mundus alter and idem, to have been ravish'd like some young Cephalus or Hylas, by a troop of camping housewives in Viraginea, and that he was there forced to swear himself an uxorious varlet.

Milton. An Apologie for Smectymnus, Introa.

If thou art thus uxoriously inclin'd,
To bear thy bondage with a willing mind,
Prepare thy neck, and put it in the yoke;
But for no mercy from thy woman look.

Dryden. Juvenal, Sat. 6.

To say nothing of the carnality and uxoriousness of the Jews.—More. Mystery of Godliness, (1660,) p. 100.

W hath taken his name (says Butler) not of his force, as other letters, but of his shape, which consisteth of two U's (UU); or (B. Jonson), according to our present mode of writing, it is V geminated (W) in full sound. B. Jonson adds,—Though it have the seat of a consonant with us, the power is always vowelish, even where it leads the vowel in any syllable; as, if you mark it, pronounce the two uu, like the Greek u, quick in passage; and these words, uu-ine, u-ine, uu-ant, u-ant, suu-am, su-am, will sound, wine, want, swam. Put the aspirate before, and huu-at, hu-at, &c. will be what, &c.

As children wading from some river's bank
First try the water with their tender feet;
Then shruddring up with cold, step back again.

Dryden. Secret Love, Act v.

Foreseeing a necessity of wading through rivers frequently in our land-march. I took care before I left the ship to provide myself a large joint of bambo, which I stopt at both ends, closing it with wax, so as to keep out any water.

Dampier. Voyages, an. 1681.

As when a dab-chick waddles through the copse
On feet and wings, and flies, and wades, and hops;
So labouring on with shoulders, hands, and head,
Wide as a wind mill all his fingers spread.

Pope. Dunciad, b. ii.

He turns, and they turn; big with care,
He waddles to his elbow-chair,
Squats down, and silent, for a season,
At last with Crape begins to reason.

Churchill. Ghost, b. iv.

We shall look upon the states of suffering as sinks and cess-pools of the universe, to drain off the evil therein from all the rest, and the drudgery of wading thro' them as a necessary service to be shared in rotation by all alike.

Yet I insisted, yet you answer'd not,

But with an angry wafter of your hand

Gaue signe for me to leaue you.

Shakespeare. Julius Cæsar, Act ii. sc. 1.

For so have I seen the rays of the sun or moon dash upon a brazen vessel, whose lips kissed the face of those waters that lodged within its bosom; but being turned back, and sent off with its smooth pretences or rougher waftings, it wandred about the room, and beat about the roof, and still doubled its heat and motion.

Bp. Taylor. Holy Dying, c. 3. § 4.

Methought I heard a confused noise of soft complaints, gentle ecstasies, and tender sighs of lovers, vows of constancy and as many complainings of perfidiousness; all which the winds wafted away as soon as they had reach'd my hearing.

Spectator, No. 425.

In this dire season, oft the whirlwind's wing Sweeps up the burthen of whole wintry plains
At one wide waft.

Thomson. Winter.

Troil. No, Pandarus, I stalk about your door,
Like a strange soul upon the Stygian banks
Staying for waftage.—Dryden. Troil. & Cress. Act ii. sc. 2.

Though choice of follies fasten on the great,
None clings more obstinate than fancy, fond
That sacred Friendship is their easy prey;
Caught by the wafture of a golden lure,
Or fascination of a high-born smile.

Young. Complaint, Night 2.

It was calm only while we were upon the rock, except once; and even the gale that afterwards wafted us to the shore, would then certainly have beaten us to pieces.

Quærere or quæritare.

But swiche a crie and swiche a wo they make,
That in this world ni's creature living,
That ever herd swiche another waiementing.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 905.

But it were all to long for to devise
The grete clamour, and the waiementing,
Whiche that the ladies made at the brenning
Of the bodies.
Id. Ib. v. 998.

For as sayth Salomon; Who so that had the science to know the peines that ben established and ordeinmed for sinne, he wold forsake sinne. That science, saith Seint Austin, maketh a man to waiementen in his herte.
Id. Persones Tale.

Till at the last of briddes a score,
Come and sembled at the place
Where the window broken was,
And made swiche waiementacioun,
That pity was to heare the soun.—Id. Dreame.

But soone as life recovered had the raine,
She made so pittious moane and deare waiement,
That the hard rocks could scarce from teares refraine.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 4.

WAIN. A corruption of wagon,—wag'n, wan, or wain.

And so gret forst in wynter there com al so god,
That ther nas non so heuy charge of wayn, ne of other

R. Gloucester, p. 416.

—Go back again,
Bootes, thou that driv'st thy frozen wain
Round as a ring, and bring a second night
To hide my sorrows from the coming light.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Faithful Shepherdess, Act iv.

I vse the word carrucata or carruca, which is a waine load, and, as I remember, used by Plinie, lib. 33. cap. 11.
Holinshed. Chron. Description of Britaine, c. 18.

As when the fiery mouthed steeds, which drew
The sunnes bright waine to Phaeton's decay.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 8.

By congregated loads adhering close
To the clogg'd wheels. Cowper. Task, b. iv.

WA'INSCOT, n. } Dut. Waeghen - schot, WA'INSCOT, v. } waeghe-schot, from waeghe, WA'INSCOTTING, n. } fluctus, (see WAG,) a wave, (says Kilian :) and Skinner inclines to an opinion, that wainscot was so called from the waving veins or fibres of the material. The quotation from Pliny in some degree confirms this.
Scot, in Dut. Schot, beschot, which Kilian calls contignatio intermedia, and Ger. Ge-schoss, are from the A. S. Scitt-an, Dut. Schiet-en, schutten, Ger. Schiessen; schutten, to shut; and hence,— to close, to inclose. And hence, wainscot,—

Any inclosure, side of a room or other building, formed of materials (deals) resembling or presenting the resemblance of waving lines, now commonly of any kind of boards, and sometimes even of other materials.

The deals of oaks are especially called wainscot.

This rascal fears neither God nor man, he has been so beaten: sufferance has made him wainscot.

Beaum. & Fletch. A King & No King, Act v.

Also in all seelings and wainscot whatever it be, whether Greekish, Campaine, or Sicilian, it [firre] runs alwaies round and winding, like the tendrils of a vine, as the ioyer runneth over the painels and quarters with his plainer.

Holland. Plinie, b. xvi. c. 42.

He replied smiling, that complements were not in use in Bensalem; and taking me by the hand, he led me into an handsome square chamber wainscotted with cedar, which fill'd the room with a very grateful odour.—Glanvill, Ess. 7.

After the king was murdered, he laid by all his collections of the pleas of the crown; that they might not fall into ill hands, he hid them behind the wainscotting of his study.

Burnet. Life of Hale.

When he is pleased with any thing that is acted upon the stage, [he] expresses his approbation by a loud knock upon the benches or the wainscot, which may be heard over the whole theatre.—Spectator, No. 235.

When the important day arrives, the two doughty disputants go into a large dusty room full of dirt and cobwebs, with walls and wainscot decorated with the names of former disputants, who, to divert the tedious hours, cut out their names with their pen-knives, or wrote verses with a pencil.
Knox. Ess. No. 77.

WAIST. See WASTE.

WAIT, v. } Fr. Guetter, aguetter; Ger.
WAIT, n. } Wachten, is the same word as

To watch or be on the watch; to be vigilant, attentive, observant; to attend, to observe; to lie, stay, or keep—upon the look out, in attendance, in observation, in expectation; to stay, to expect.

Waits, is a name applied to musicians, who go round in the night, and wake the neighbourhood with their music and the congratulations of the season.

Cla. Nay, those are tokens for a waiting-maid
To trim the butler with.—Id. Love's Cure, Act ii. sc. 2.

In dinner time he twice chang'd his crown, his waiters thrice their apparel; to whom the emperor in like manner gives both bread and drink with his own hands: which they say is done to the intent that he may perfectly know his own household.—Milton. History of Muscovia, c. 5.

On the east side of this channel all our fleet lay waiting for the Lima fleet, which we were in hopes would come this way.—Dampier. Voyages, an. 1685.

The waits often help him through his courtship; and my friend Banister has told me, he was proffered five hundred pounds by a young fellow, to play but one winter under the window of a lady, that was a great fortune, but more cruel than ordinary.—Tatler, No. 222.

We change our taverns according as he suspects any treasonable practices in the settling the bill by the master, or sees any bold rebellion in point of attendance by the waiters.
Spectator, No. 508.

Entering the tavern where we met every evening, I found the waiters remitted their complaisance, and, instead of contending to light me up stairs, suffered me to wait for some minutes by the bar.—Rambler, No. 26.

The wood-nymphs deck'd with daisies trim,
Their merry wakes and pastimes keep.—Milton. Comus.

It is not iron bands, nor hundred eyes,
Nor brazen walls, nor many wakefull spyes
That can withhold her wilfull wand'ring feet;
But fast good will with gentle courtesies,
And timely seruice to her pleasures meet
Make her perhaps containe, that else would algates fleet.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 9.

"But after, bolden'd with my first successe,
I durst essay the new-found paths, that led To slavish Mosco's dullard sluggishnesse;
Whose slotheful Sunne all winter keeps his bed
But never sleeps in summer's wakefulness."

P. Fletcher. Piscatory Eclogues, Ecl. 1.

Look with the eyes of heaven that nightly waken,
To view the wonders of the glorious Maker,
And not the weakness.

Beaum. & Fletch. The Mad Lover, Act v.

WALK, n. } bulare, (Wachter.) Skinner
WALKER. } thinks walk is from the A. S.
WALKING, n. } Wealc-an, to roll; and Somner suggests the same origin, in v. Wealc-an, to rowle, to turne, to tumble, to revolve, to rowle back, to turne up and downe, to returne often; hereof (he adds) probably our to walk, ambulare.

To walk, as a species of voluntary motion, is distinguished in bipeds from to run; in quadru-peds from to run, to trot, to canter, to gallop.

To walk yarne (in Rastall), is—to tread it, to press it, (Skinner.)

Walk, n.—is applied to the motion, the gait;
the way or path, the course or track.

For I am none that will stand out sir, I.

You may take me in with a walking-stick,

Even when you please, and hold me with a packthred.

Beaum. & Fletcher. Beggar's Bush, Act v. sc. 1.

He [child] is become able perhaps to walk by himself, but what path to choose he knows not, cannot distinguish his safety and danger, his advantages and disadvantages; nor, in general, good and evil.—Wollaston. Relig. of Nature, s. 8.

Mr. Banks in his morning walk this day met a number of the natives whom, upon enquiry, he found to be travelling musicians; and having learnt where they were to be at night, we all repaired to the place.

Cook. First Voyage, b. i. c. 14.

The forms and turnings of the streets of London, and other old towns, are produced by accident, without any original plan or design: but they are not always the less pleasant to the walker or spectator.

Reynolds, vol. ii. Dis. 13.

WALL, n. } Dut. Ger. and Sw. Wall, A. S.
WALL, v. } Weal, which the etymologists derive from the Lat. Vallum. Tooke, on the other hand, derives vallum, and the northern word wall, from the A. S. Wil-an, to join together, to consolidate, to cement. We apply the word to—

Any materials, brick, stone, mud, clay, wood,
&c. consolidated, cemented, or fastened together.

The A. S. Weal was not only so applied, but also to the mortar, or that by which the materials are cemented or connected.

Wall-flower, wall-wort, &c.—so called (Skinner)

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 10.

In three [battels] he beat the thunder-bolt his brother,
Forc'd him to wall himself up.

Beaum. & Fletcher. The Mad Lover, Act i.

They gave them also thir help to build a new wall, not of earth as the former, but of stone (both at the public cost, and by particular contributions) traversing the ile in direct line from east to west, between certain cities placed there as frontiers to bear off the enemy, where Severus had wall'd once before.—Milton. Historie of England, b. iii.

The smoke or perfume also of walwort (a common hearbe

Can hide thy head, but till to-morrow's dawn.

Dryden. King Arthur, Act ii.

Having mentioned a house, it may not be amiss to observe, that some here differ from those I saw at the other isles; being inclosed or walled on every side, with reede neatly put together, but not close.

Cook. Second Voyage, b. iii. c. 2.

WALL. Skinner writes—"Wall or whall ey, a disease of horses; I know not whether from any likeness to the eyes of the whale fish." Mr.
Brocket says—"In those parts of the north, with which I am best acquainted, persons are said to be wall-eyed, when the white of the eye is very large, and to one side. On the Borders, sic folks, are considered unlucky." The author of the Craven Glossary explains wall-ee, to mean white or green (grey). Grose defines it,—"An eye with little or no sight, all white like a plastered wall." Cooper, in his Thesaurus, 1573, renders glauclolus—

A horse with a waicle eye.

Wall-eyed wrath, in Shakespeare, seems to correspond with the Lat. Glauco, oculi, which Cooper renders, eyes with furie (fierie) ruddinesse.

Wall or whall, whally, whally-eyed, are from the
A. S. Hwel-an, contabescere, putrescere.

And next to him rode lustful Lechery
Upon a bearded gote, whose rugged heare,
And whally eies, (the signe of gelousy)
Was like the person selfe whom he did beare.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 4.

—This is the bloodiest shame
The wildest sauagery, the vildest stroke
That euer wall-ey'd wrath, or staring rage
Presented to the teares of soft remorse.

Shakespeare. King John, Act iv. sc. 3.

Say, wall-ey'd slave, whither wouldst thou convey
This growing image of thy fiend-like face?

Id. Titus Andronicus, Act v. sc. 1.

Mor. A pair of wall-eyes in a face forced.

B. Jonson. Cynthia's Revels, Act v. sc. 2.

WALLET. From Ger. Wallen; Dut. Wallen;
A. S. Weall-ian, to go, to go abroad, to travel.

A traveller's bag or pouch; any thing hanging like a bag.

But hode, for jolite, ne wered he non,
For it was trussed up in his wallet.

Chaucer. Prol. to the Canterbury Tales, v. 684.

With all readinesse goe ye to the buisnesse of the ghospel: neither carying scrip nor wallet, nor yet shooes with you.—Udal. Luke, c. 10.

But tell me lady, wherefore do you beare
This bottle thus before you with such toyle,

And eke this wallet at your backe areare,

That for these carles to carry much more comely were.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 8.

Gon. Faith sir, you neede nor feare: when wee were boyes

Who would beleuee that they were mountayneeres,

Dew-lapt, like buls, whose throats had hanging at 'em

Wallets of flesh? or that they were such men

Whose heads stood in their breasts.

Shakespeare. Tempest, Act iii. sc. 3.

Having looked about him for some time, he entered into a long gallery, where he laid down his wallet, and spread his carpet, in order to repose himself upon it, after the manner of the eastern nations.—Spectator, No. 290.

WALLOWISH. } ner derives from the Lat.
Volv-ere. Tooke—the Lat. from the A. S.

To roll,—usually applied to—rolling for indulgence or enjoyment, as swine in the mud; men in sensual gratifications.

Wallowish,—rolling or tossing; as any thing nauseous in the stomach or bowels; and hence, nauseous, quia (sc.) talia ingrata volutantur et fluctuant in ventriculo.

And whanne the bodi was taken, Joseph lappede it in a clene sendel, and leide it in his newe biriel that he had hewen in a stoon, and he walwide a gret stoon to the dore of the biriel & went away.—Wiclif. Matthew, c. 32.

More. Workes, p. 322.

WAN

I shall euery nyghte wasshe my bedde with my wepyng teares. And by this sayde bedde is vnderstande the fylthy voluptuousnes of the body, wherin the sinner waltereth and wrappeth him selfe, like as a sowe waloweth in the stinkyng gore pit or in ye puddel.—Fisher. Seuen Psalmes, Ps. 6.

WAMBLE, v. } From A. S. Wamb, the womb WAMBLE, n. } or belly.

To be ill at ease, in a state of tumult in the belly, (Skinner.)

But then shall ye sometime see there some other, &c. theyr bodye frete, their stomake wamble, and al their bodye shiuer for paine.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 322.

If tenne daies after that a woman hath had the companie of a man, she feelee an extraordinarie ach in the head, and perceiue giddinesse in the braine, seeming that all things went round; find a dazeling and mistinesse in the eies, abhorring and loathing of meate, and withall, a turning and wambling of the stomacke: it is a signe that she is conceived, and beginneth to breed.—Holland. Plinie, b. vii. c. 6.

And your cold sallets without salt or vineger
Be wambling in your stomachs.

Beaum. & Fletch. The Mad Lover, Act i.

Our meat going down into the stomach merrily, and with pleasure dissolveth incontinently all wambles, reducing and restoring nature again into her own estate; as if faire weather and a calme season were come againe.

Holland. Plutarch, p. 575.

Sos. I was never good at swallowing physick; and my stomach wambles at the very thought of it.

Dryden. Amphitryon, Act iii.

The waters were wan.—Id. Why come ye not to Court?

For want of will in woe I plain,
Under colour of soberness;
Renewing with my suit my pain,
My wan-hope with your steadfastness.

Wyat. The Lover lamenteth his Estate.

As pale and wan as ashes was his looke,
His body leane and meagre as a rake,
And skin all withered like a dried rooke.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 11.

But in her wane of pride, as she in strength decreast
Her nymphs assum'd the names, each one to her delight.

Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 17.

Sejanus must go downward! You perceive

His wane approaching fast!

B. Jonson. Sejanus, Act v. sc. 8.

They endeouour to shew how women were admitted vnto that function [to bee ministers of baptisme] in the waine and declination of Christian pietie.

Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, b. v. § 62.

Am I, because I am in bonds, and miserable,
My health decay'd, my youth and strength half blasted,
My fortune like my waining self, for this despis'd?
Am I for this forsaken? a new love chosen,
And my affections, like my fortunes, wanderers?

Beaum. & Fletch. The Sea Voyage, Act iv.

This earthly moone the Church hath her fuls and wainings, and sometimes her eclipses; whiles the shadow of this sinfull masse hides her beauty from the world.

Bp. Hall. Epistles, Dec. 4. Ep. 10.

Moreover, in the warres of Antonie, the sunne continued almost a yeere long with a pale and wan colour.

Holland. Plinie, b. ii. c. 3.

Then the Corrigidor hauing an officer with him which bare a white wand in his hand, sayd to the master of the ship: yeeld your selfe, for you are the kings prisoner.

Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. p. 118.

When he [Octavius] saw that the king [Antiochus] made no haste to give him his dispatch presently, but said he would make him an answer another day; made no more adoe, but with a wand or rod that he had in his hand, drew a circle about the king, and compelled him perforce to give him his answer before he stirred his foot without that compasse.—Holland. Plinie, b. xxxiv. c. 6.

— Lighted by the beamy hand
Of Truth, that searcheth the most hidden springs,
And guided by Experience, whose straight wand
Doth mete, whose line doth sound the depth of things.

B. Jonson. Underwoods.

Where acting the monk rather than the captain, with a single wand in his hand, he was slain with Egrie, and his whole army put to flight.

Milton. Historie of Britaine, b. iv.

Above the rest, as chief of all the band,
Was Picus plac'd, a buckler in his hand;
His other wav'd a long diuining wand.

Dryden. Virgil. Aeneis, b. vii.

When the wands of the magicians were cast upon the ground and became serpents, the fact, considered in itself, was as much a miracle as when Aaron's rod was cast upon the ground and became a serpent; for it was as much a miracle that one dry stick should become a live serpent as another.—Bp. Horsley, vol. i. Ser. 11.

blinded he shoulde shewe the waye of health and saluacion.

Udal. Luke, c. 24.

It is not iron bands, nor hundred eyes,
Nor brazen walls, nor many wakefull skyes,
That can withhold her wilfull wand'ring feet;
But fast good will with gentle courtesies,
And timely seruice to her pleasures meet
May her perhaps containe, that else would algates fleet.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 9.

Am I, because I am in bonds, and miserable,
My health decay'd, my youth and strength half blasted,
My fortune like my waining self, for this despis'd?
Am I for this forsaken? a new love chosen,
And my affections, like my fortunes, wanderers?

Beaum. & Fletch. The Sea Voyage, Act iv.

It is a practice that has turn'd penances into a fair, and the court of conscience into a Lombard, and the labours of love into the labours of pilgrimages, superstitious and useless wanderings from place to place.

Bp. Taylor. Dissuasive from Popery, pt. i. § 3.

Were thy prayers made in fear and holiness, with passion and desire? were they not made unwillingly, weakly, and wandringly, and abated with sins in the greatest part of thy life?—Id. vol. i. Ser. 3.

Genus and species long since barefoote went Upon their ten-toes in wilde wanderment.

Bp. Hall, b. ii. Sat. 3.

That not in Fancy's maze he wander'd long,
But stoop'd to truth, and moraliz'd his song.

Pope. Prolog. to Sat.

If thou shouldst prove unkind to me, as Altamont,
Whom shall I find to pity my distress,
To have compassion on a helpless wanderer,
And give her where to lay her wretched head.

Rowe. Fair Penitent, Act iii.

In this sweet retirement I naturally fell into the repetition of some lines out of a poem of Milton's, which he entitles Il Penseroso, the ideas of which were exquisitely suited to my present wanderings of thought.—Spectator, No. 425.

Alas! where at this moment is the church of France?— her altars demolished—her treasures spoiled—her holy things profaned—her persecuted clergy and her plundered prelates wanderers on the earth!—Bp. Horsley, vol. i. Ser. 13.

WA'NION. } Not in any of our dictionaries.
WA'NTY. } Mr. Nares had met only with the phrase—"with a wanion." Sir T. More writes—"in the waniand." Nares thinks it evidently either from the A. S. Wanung, detriment, (see WANE,) or Wanian, plorare, to deplore: he produces an instance from Fox's Ecclesiastical History, where it is written Wanie.

Wang, whang, or wheang, is in Suffolk and the North—a thong: and to wang is—to bang; in Devonshire also. (See Grose, Brocket, and Moore.)

A wanty is—a leather girth.

Waniand, in Sir T. More, seems to have some reference to cart furniture.

A pannell and wanty, pack saddle, and ped,
A line to fetch litter, and halters for head.

Tusser. Husbandry Furniture, p. 11.

He would of lykelyhood bynde them to cartes and beate

Beaum. & Fletch. Knight of the Burning Pestle, Act ii.

We shall have painfull good ministers to keep school, and catechise our youth, and not teach them to speak plays, and act fables of false news, in this matter, to the super-vexation of town and country with a wannion.

B. Jonson. Staple of News, Act iii. sc. 2.

All I desire of you is but harbour for a minute: you cannot in humanity deny that small succour to a gentlewoman.

Franc. A gentlewoman! I thought so, my house affords no harbour for gentlewomen: you are a company of proud harlotries; I'll teach you to take place of tradesmen's wives with a wannion to you.—Dryden. Wild Gallant, Act iii.

WANT, v. } Dut. Wan; Ger. Wan. "Want,
WANT, n. } the noun, (Tooke,) is—Waned, WA'NTLESS. } wan'd, want, the past part. of to wane, (qv.) to fall away;" and the verb is formed upon the noun.

To be or become less, diminished, or decreased; to fail, to be deficient; to be without (sc. a something to complete a whole;) to be without, to be destitute, to need, to be in need of; to feel the need of: and, consequentially, to seek or long for,
to desire, or covet.

Want,—A. S. Wand, talpa, a mole. Skinner derives from A. S. Wend-an, to turn, a vertendo tenam.

For ther is no creature so good, that him ne wanteth
somewhat of the perfection of God that is his maker.

Chaucer. Tale of Melibeus.

For the tyme was so short, and the enemy so earnest to feight and so nere at hand, that there wanted leysure not only to place theym vnder theyr ante-signes, but also to put on theyr skuls, and to pul their tergats out of their cases.

Want makes us know the price of what we avile.

B. Jonson. Prince Henry's Barriers.

And with him wastefulness, that all expended,
And want that still in theft and prison ended,
A hundred foul diseases close at backs attended.

P. Fletcher. Purple Island, c. 7.

He is forced to have recourse to that prodigiously absurd supposition, that all matter as matter, is endued not only with figure and a capacity of motion, but also with an actual sense or perception; and wants only the organs and memory of animals to express its sensation.

Clarke. On the Attributes, Prop. 8.

When we apply to the mercy of God, and beg of him to pity our infirmities and wants, the design is not to move His affections as good speakers move their auditors by the pathetic arts of rhetoric, or hearty beggars theirs by importunities and tears.—Wollaston. Religion of Nature, s. 5.

There is yet another cause of necessity, which has occasioned great speculation among the writers upon general law; viz. whether a man in extreme want of food or cloath-ing may justify stealing either, to relieve his present necessities?—Blackstone. Commentaries, b. iv. c. 2.

Thu. Nay then the wanton lyes: my face is blacke.
Shakespeare. Two Gentlemen of Verona, Act v. sc. 2.

Shall a beardlesse boy,
A cockred silken wanton braue our fields,
And flesh his spirit in a warre-like soyle,
Mocking the ayre with colours idely spred,
And finde no checke?—Id. K. John, Act v. sc. 1.

Imo. So sicke I am not, yet I am not well:
But not so citizen a wanton, as
To seeme to dye, ere sicke.

Id. Cymbeline, Act iv. sc. 2.

Pleasure hath set my well-school'd thoughts to play,
And bid me use the virtue of mine eyes,
For sweetly it fits the fair to wantonize.

Daniel. Complaint of Rosamond.

So when the prettie rill a place espies,
Where with the pebbles she would wantonize.

Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b. i. s. 4.

I speake not of this carrion-flesh which thou wantonly
infestest with the false colours of thy pride.

Bp. Hall. Pharisaisme & Christianitie.

And now was all disorder in th' excess,
And whatsoever doth a change portend;
As idle luxury and wantonness,
Porteus-like varying pride, vain without end.

Daniel. Civil Wars, b.

K. Em. By this we plainly view the two imposthumes
That choke a kingdom's welfare; ease, and wantonness

See Somner, Spelman, and Wachter; and the quotation from Holinshed.

The bisshop of Durham bouht Saberg, with the wapentake. R. Brunne, p. 145.

The hundred and the wapentake is all one, as I read in some. and by this diuision not a name appertinent to a set number of townes (for then all hundreds should be of equal quantitie) but a limited jurisdiction.

Holinshed. Description of England, b. ii. c. 4.

At their first comming, because they perceiued they could not liue without lawes and ciuill government, they seuered themselves into tribes, or as it were into hundreds, or wapentakes, euery of the same hauing a speciall gouernor to see their lawes ministred, and iustice maintained.

Id. Historie of Scotland. Brechus.

And let them get but ten mile out of town, They out-swagger all the wapentake.

B. Jonson. New Inn, Act iv. sc. 2.

The people, in imitation of their ancestors, the ancient Germans, assembled there in arms; whence a hundred was sometimes called a wapentake, and its courts served both for the support of military discipline, and for the administration of civil justice.—Hume. Hist. of England, vol. i. c. 2.

As ten families of freeholders made a town or tithing, so ten tithings composed a superior diuision, called a hundred, as consisting of ten families. In some of the northern counties these hundreds are called wapentakes.

In order to make war compleatly effectual, it is necessary with us in England that it be publicly declared and duly proclaimed by the king's authority; and, then, all parts of both the contending nations, from the highest to the lowest, are bound by it.—Blackstone. Commentaries, b. i. c. 7.

When two of these canoes, in which there might be about sixty men, came near enough to make themselves heard, they sung their war-song; but seeing that we took little notice of it, they threw a few stones at us, and then rowed off towards the shore.—Cook. First Voyage, b. ii. c. 4.

WAR'BLE, n. } Fr. Werble, parole, propos, WA'RBLE, v. } discours. Werbler,—parler à WA'RBLE. } haute voix, reciter, discourer, WA'RBLE, n. } (Roquefort.) Warble (says Skinner) is perhaps from the Dut. Wervelen, (to whirl,) gyros agere, and hence applied to music—vocem reciprocantibus modulis circumagere, vocem vibrare, vibrissare; and Junius—cantum crebro vocis inflexu variare ac subinde mutare.

To sing, with quick and varied voice, with vibrations of tone; to quaver or shake. It is applied, as well to the loud and rapid notes of the nightingale, as to the low, gentle, but quick notes of the linnet.

That pity was to heare the soun, And the warbles of their throtes, And the complaint of their notes, Which from joy cleane was reuersed.—Chaucer. Dreame.

Certes they were wonder swete of sowne, and they were touched al in lamentacion wise, and by no werbelles of mirthe.—Id. Testament of Loue, b. ii.

There shalt thou here and see all kinds of birds ywrought, Well tune their voice with warble small, as nature hath them taught. Surrey. Having defied the Power of Love, &c.

And all the while sweet music did apply Her curious skill, the warbling notes to play, To driue away the dull melancholy. Spenser. Faerie Queene b. i. c. 12.

The waters fall with difference discreet, Now soft, now loud, vnto the wind did call: The gentle warbling wind lowe answered to all. Id. Ib. b. ii. c. 12.

WAR

Suffic'd at length, she warbled in her throat,
And tun'd her voice to many a merry note,
But indistinct, and neither sweet nor clear,
Yet such as sooth'd my soul, and pleas'd my ear.
Dryden. The Flower and the Leaf.

So the sweet warbler of the spring, alone,
Sings darkling, but unseen her note is known.
Pope. Essay on Man. Verses on.

While th' old apart, upon a bank reclin'd
Attend the tuneful carol, softly mixt
With every murmur of the sliding wave,
And every warble of the feather'd choir.
Dyer. The Fleece, b. i.

I give you thanks for your warble, and wish
You could sing yourself to rest.
Gray. To Mr. West, April 1742.

The attic warbler pours her throat,
Responsive to the cuckoo's note,
The untaught harmony of spring:
While, whispering pleasure as they fly,
Cool zephyrs through the clear blue sky
Their gather'd fragrance fling.—Id. Ode on the Spring.

Ten thousand warblers cheer the day and one
The live-long night.
Cowper. The Sofa.

A voice as of the cherub-choir,
Gales from blooming Eden bear;
And distant warblings lessen on my ear,
That lost in long futurity expire.—Gray. The Bard.

WARD, v. A. S. Ward-ian, or weard-
WARD, n. ian; Dut. Weeren, waeren, WA'RDEN. waerden; Ger. Weeren, to WA'RDENRY. guard, (qv. and see WAR and WA'RDENSHIP. WARE.) The primary meaning WA'RDER. seems to be—WA'RDLESS. To look at, (tueri,) to look WA'RDSHIP. after; and, consequentially, to defend, to protect, to keep harmless.

To look at or after; to watch, to look vigilantly;
to defend, to protect, to save or keep harmless;
to keep or hold off; to keep in custody.

thanne thei undirstonden, that he seide not to be war of sour dough of looves: but of the techyng of Pharisees and Saducees.—Id. Ib. c. 16.

She was not nice, ne outrageous,
But wise and ware, and vertuous
Of faire speche, and faire answere.
Chaucer. Rom. of the Rose.

And at the day before appoynted y^e kyng with a certayne of Brytons nat ware of this purposed treason, came in a peacyble wyse to the place before assygned.
Fabyan. Chronycle, c. 89.

Thou muste take so much care therewithal, to haue hym wel and warily caried, for feare after he were taken, hee might scape from thiem againe.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 1382.

In the mean season hee came to Darius, and gaue him thankes that he had so warily and with suche wisdomed auoided the treason of that false Grecian.
Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 131.

The patron as warie & wise in the businesse of the sea, thought in himselfe that the Turkes made such prolonging to some euill intent.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. p. 76.

Doubt is his sleep, he walketh in invention,
Fancy his food, his cloathing is of carefulness.
Beauty his book, his play lover's dissention:
His eyes are curious, search but vail'd with warefulness.
Sidney. Arcadia, b. ii.

Ware they bee what offensive weapons they have, and of what force they are.—Holland. Plinie, b. viii. c. 24.

But they him laid full lowe in dungeon deepe,
And bound him hand and foot with iron chaines,
And with continuall watch did warily keepe.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 12.

Both they vnwise, and warelesse of the euill,
That by themselves, vnto themselves is wrought,
Through that false witch and that foule aged dreuil,
The one a fiend, the other, an incarnate deuill.
Id. Ib. b. iv. c. 2.

For warelesse insolence (whilst undebarr'd
Of bounding awe) runs on to such excess,
That following lust, and spoil, and blood so hard,
Sees not how they procure their own distress.
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. vi.

Counsels their heat with calm grave words, and fit,
Words well fore-thought, that from experience springs,
And warns a warier carriage in the things,
Lest blind presumption work their ruining.—Id. Ib. b. iii.

WAR

But sleepe full farre away from her did flie :
In stead thereof sad sighes and sorrowes deepe
Kept watch and ward about her warily ;
That nought she did but waile, and often steepe
Her dainty couch with tears, which closely she did weepe.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 2.

Volp. How might I see her?
Mos. O, not possible ;
She's kept as warily as is your gold ;
Never does come abroad, never takes air,
But at a window.—B. Jonson. The Fox, Act i. sc. 1.

There was bred in the minds of the penitent, through long and daily practice of submission, a contrary habit unto that which before had been their ruin, and for ever afterwards wariness not to fall into those snares out of which they knew they could not easily wind themselves.
Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, b. vi.

Full many stroakes, that mortally were ment,
The whiles were interchanged twixt them two :
Yet they were all with so good wariment
Or warded, or avoyded and let goe,
That still the life stood fearelesse of her foe.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 3.

[We should] read that sacred volume, with a wise jealousy, and a wary distrust of our own selves ; not with a conceited opinion of our own gifts and parts, as if we alone were able to fathom all depths, and to grasp all mysteries.
Atterbury, vol. iii. Ser. 10.

We are warily to decline the particular acquaintance of men of contentious dispositions, mischievous principles, and factious designs.—Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 30.

The inclination and tendency of their nature to happiness is an obligation and motive to them, to take care not to mistake or miss it ; and so necessarily puts them upon caution, deliberation and wariness, in the direction of their particular actions, which are the means to obtain it.
Locke. Hum. Underst. b. ii. c. 21.

Should beauty's soul-enchancing smile,
Love-kindling looks, and features gay,
Should these thy wandering eye beguile,
And steal thy wareless heart away.—Langhorne, Fab. 5.

The bear hunts them by scent, till he come in sight, when he advances warily, keeping above them, and concealing himself among the rocks, as he makes his approaches, till he gets immediately over them, and nigh enough for his purpose.—Cook. Third Voyage, b. vi. c. 5.

He that is forming himself, must look with great caution and wariness on those peculiarities or prominent parts, which at first force themselves upon view ; and are the marks, or what is commonly called the manner, by which that individual artist is distinguished.—Reynolds, Disc. 6.

WARE, n. } A.S. Ware ; Dut. Waere ; WARE-HOUSE. } Ger. War ; Sw. Wara, (Wach- dities in their warehouses, and to sell their commodities to whom they please without let or hinderance.

Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 507.

O, why should fortune make the city proud,
To give that more, than is the court allow'd,
Where they (like wretches) hoard it up to spare,
And do ingross it, as they do their ware.
Drayton. Edw. IV. to Mrs. Shore.

— I believe
You men of wares, the men of wars will nick ye,
For starve nor beg they must not.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Mad Lover, Act i.

Bya. There are the other papers : when they come Begin you first, and let the rest subscribe
Hard by your side ; give 'em as little light
As drapers do their wares.
Id. Woman's Prize, Act v. sc. 1.

You know it in common practice, in your trades and merchandize, that, when a man hath bought a parcel of commodities, he sets his mark upon them, to distinguish them from the rest in the warehouse : so doth our God.
Bp. Hall. Ser. Eph. iv. 30.

The earthen ware of this country is coarse and of a grey colour, yet they make great quantities of small earthen dishes, that will hold half a pint or more.
Dampier. Voyages, an. 1688.

A capricious man of fashion might sometimes prefer foreign wares, merely because they were foreign, to cheaper and better goods of the same kind that were made at home.
Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. iv. c. 2.

WAR

WARISH, v. To heal, to recover from sickness, (Tyrwhitt.)

To be ware or wary, to take care of, and, consequentially, to cure, to heal, to recover.

Carew. Suruey of Cornwall, fol. 53.

The winters hurt recovers with the warm ;
The parched green restored is with shade ;
What warmth, alas ! may serve for to disarm
The frozen heart, that mine inflame hath made ?
Surrey. Having endeavoured to subdue his Passion.

Petre furthermore abured the Lorde (that is to saie, swore that he knewe him not, nor had naught to doe with him, nor naught would he medle with him,) while being thoroughly taken with colde, he taketh warmth and heate by the coles of the wicked Jewes.—Udal. Luke, c. 24.

This grace they will haue to be applied by infusion : to the end, that as the body is warmed by the heate, which is in the body, so the soule might be righteous by the inherent grace.—Hooker. Discourse of Justification, § 5.

Thus put he on his arming trusse, fair shooes upon his feet,
About him a mandilion, that did with buttons meet,
Of purple, large, and full of folds, curl'd with a warmeful
nap,
A garment that gainst cold in nights, did soldiers use to wrap.
Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. x.

The Creator is willing mankind should serve themselves of all his creatures' various excellencies, in their strength, weight, light, sweetness, warmness.
Bp. Taylor. Artificial Handsomeness.

Many persons, from vicious, and dead, and cold, have passed into life and an excellent grace, and a spiritual warmth, and holy fires : but from lukewarm and indifferent never any body came to an excellent condition, and state of holiness.—Id. vol. i. Ser. 13.

This I take to be properly entusiasm, which, though founded neither on reason nor divine revelation, but rising from the conceits of a warmed or over-weening brain, works yet, where it once gets footing, more powerfully on the persuasions and actions of men, than either of those two, or both together.—Locke. Hum. Underst. b. iv. c. 1.

Then marble, soften'd into life grew warm,
And yielding metal flow'd to human form.
Pope. Imitation of Horace, b. ii. Ep. 1.

All stand amaz'd, a second jav'lin flies,
With equal strength, and quivers through the skies ;
This through thy temples, Tagus, forc'd the way,
And in the brain-pan warmly bury'd lay.
Dryden. Virgil. Aeneis, b. ix.

The soul with great and manly feelings warm'd,
Panting for knowledge, rests not till inform'd :
And shall not I, fir'd with the glorious zeal,
Feel those brave passions which my subjects feel ?
Churchill. Gotham, b. iii.

The young plainly need [admonition] it most : as they are just entering into the world ; with little knowledge, less experience, and yet scarcely even any distrust ; with lively spirits and warm passions to mislead them, and time to go a great way wrong, if they do not go right.
Secker, vol. ii. Ser. 9.

WAR

The third circumstance to be remarked in this profession of the Sycharites, is the great warmth and energy of expression with which they declare their conviction that Jesus was that universal Saviour whose arrival at this season they expected.—Bp. Horsley, vol. ii. Ser. 24.

WARN, v. } A. S. Wærn-ian, wearn-ian;
WA'RNÉR, n. } Dut. Waern-en; Ger. Warn-en;
WA'RNING, n. } Sw. Warna; formed upon the verb war-ian, or wer-ian, to cause to look or take notice; to cause to be aware—waren, war'n, or warn.

To cause to look, observe, or take notice; to put upon guard or defence; to give notice of that which is to be guarded against, of that which ought or ought not to be done; to caution, to admonish; also, to protect, to defend, to deny.

A Warner was the first soteltie, and which preceded or gave warning of the courses, (Pennant, London.)

In Leland (iv. 226,) The Coronation of Lady Elizabeth, the warn before the course is twice mentioned.

 Preserve your line. This warning comes of you;
 And Troia stands in your protection now.
Surrey. Virgile. Aeneis, b. ii.

As two broad beacons, set in open fields,
 Send forth their flames farre off to euery shire,
 And warning giue, that enemies conspire,
 With fire and sword the region to invade;
 So flam'd his eyne with rage and rancorous ire.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 11.

WAR

Once warn'd is well bewar'd; not flattering lies Shall sooth me more to sing with winking eyes
 And open mouth;—for fear of catching flies.
Dryden. The Cock and the Fox.

He must be warned, and directed, and watched still by his parents, or some body intrusted by them, or else it might have been possibly much better for him to have expired under the midwife's hands, and prevented the effects of his own ignorance.
Wollaston. Religion of Nature, s. 8.

—Oh! should'st thou wrong her
 Just Heaven shall double all thy woes upon thee,
 And make 'em know no end—Remember this
 As the last warning of a dying man.
Rowe. Jane Shore, Act iv.

Dr. Solander himself was the first who found the inclination, against which he had warned others, irresistible; and insisted upon being suffered to lie down.
Cook. First Voyage, b. i. c. 4.

WARP, v. } Dut. Werp-en, worp-en; Sw.
WARP, n. } Warp-a; A. S. Weorp-an, to WA'RPING, n. } cast, to hurl. “When planks

Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 23.

Your hair wove into many a curious warp,
 Able in endless error to infold
 The wandering soul.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Faithful Shepherdess, Act ii.

The cobwebs that spiders weave, which serve for patterns, as well for our women to make their webs of cloth, as for fishers to knit and work their nets, are in many respects very admirable: first in regard of the fine threads, and the subtil weaving thereof, which are not distinct one from another, nor ranged after the order of the warpe and woofe in our artificial webs upon the loom, but are continued and run all into one.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 786.

She acquainted the Greeks underhand with this treason, which was a warping against them, and advised them to look unto themselves, and stand upon their own guard.
Id. Ib. p. 409.

—Spread sailes, and if the sky
Warrant thee not to goe for Italy,
 Ile warrant thee; the iust cause, why thou fear'st
 Is this, because thou know'st not whom thou bear'st.
May. Lucan. Pharsalia, b. v.

That error was not great, but always excusable, if not warrantable.
Bp. Taylor. Dissuasive from Popery, pt. ii. b. ii. § 6.

But it is the warrantable and necessary duty of S. Peter, and all his true evangelicall successors, when they meet with a froward generation, to call it so.
Bp. Hall. Ser. Feb. 18, 1634.

Conjugal love requires not only moral, but natural causes to the making and maintaining; and may be warrantably excus'd to retire from the deception of what it justly seeks, and the ill requitals which unjustly it finds.
Milton. Tetrachordon.

If these things come from God, let them shew their war-ranty, and their books of precedents.
Bp. Taylor. Dissuasive from Popery, pt. i. c. 2. § 10.

Whereof the one doth warrantize vnto vs their faith, the other their loue, till they fall away, and forsake either the one or the other, or both.—Hooker. Ser. on Jude.

Is it because there is nothing else but necessity alone, doth warrantize the killing of a man: and he who unlawfully and without expresse commandment of a superior [unconstrained] doth it, is a meer homicide and manslayer.
Holland. Plutarch, p. 706.

We (to our great shame and rebuke be it spoken) are so unhappy, as to commit our selves to other men's tuition, and live under their warrantize and assurance.
Id. Plinie, b. xxii. c. 6.

Thus they prescribe with great warrantize, to take all the naile parings of toes and fingers of man, &c.
Id. Ib. b. xxviii. c. 7.

My hours my own, my pleasure unrestrain'd.
 So bred, no wonder if I took the bent
 That seem'd ev'n warranted by thy assent.
Dryden. Sigismonda & Guiscardo.

—This confirms
 The king in full belief of all you told him
 Concerning Osmyn, and his correspondence
 With them who first began the mutiny.
 Wherefore a warrant for his death is granted.
Congreve. Mourning Bride, Act iv.

His intentions were pure and right, his actions warrantable, and the tenor of his life conspicuously blameless.

Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 2.

A man's pen may be very warrantably and usefully employed, though it be not directly so, to teach a theological truth, or incite the reader's zeal.

Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 453.

The warrantableness of this practice may be inferred from a parity of reason.—Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 1.

Next may follow the clause for warranty; whereby the granter doth, for himself, and his heirs, warrant and secure to the grantee the estate so granted.

Blackstone. Commentaries, b. ii. c. 20.

The ship herself remained in the harbour with only the warrant officers on board for many years.

Cook. First Voyage, b. iii. c. 11.

Can'st thou, and honour'd with a Christian name,
Buy what is woman-born, and feel no shame;
Trade in the blood of innocence, and plead Expedience as a warrant for the deed?—Cowper. Charity.

It is a necessary and warrantable pride to disdain to walk servilely behind any individual, however elevated his rank.

Reynolds, vol. i. Dis. 6.

Watte the warynere. and hus wife dronke.

Piers Plouhman, p. 106.

We found the whole cuntry to bee a warren of a strange kinde of conies, their bodies in bignesse as be the Barbary conies, their heads as the heads of ours, the feete of a want, and the taile of a rat being of great length.

Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 738.

Wheras in parks and warrens we haue nothing else than either the keepers & warreners lodge, or at least the manor place of the chief lord and owner of the soile.

Holinshed. Description of England, b. ii. c. 19.

There's nothing loves him: his own cat cannot endure him,

She had better lye with a bear, for he is so hairy
That a tame warren of fleas frisk round about him.

Beaum. & Fletch. Women Pleas'd, Act ii. sc. 4.

Fulvius Hirpinus was the first inventor of warrens as it were for winks, which he caused to be made within the territorie of Tarquiny, a little before the civile warre with Pompey the great.—Holland. Plinie, b. ix. c. 56.

And to this effect [Alexander] commanded certaine thousands of men, one or other, throughout all the tract, as well of Asia and Greece, to give their attendance, and obey him: to wit, all hunters, falconers, fowlers and fishers, that lived by those professions. Item, all forresters, park-keepers, and wariners.—Id. Ib. b. viii. c. 16.

Like a young puppy in a warren, they have a flirt at all, and catch none.—Vanburgh. The Relapse, Act ii. sc. 1.

Free warren is a similar franchise, erected for preservation or custody (which the word signifies) of beasts and fowls of warren; which being feræ naturæ, every one had a natural right to kill as he could.

By which, fair'st living things disfigur'd oft they see.

Drayton. Poly-Oibion, s. 7.

Another burgen there is close unto him, bearing out like a knob, of the bignesse of a wert.

Holland. Plinie, b. xvii. c. 22.

A little freckle, mole or pendant wert in the face of man or woman, is more offensive than black and blew marks, than scars or maimes in all the rest of the body.

Id. Plutarch, p. 288.

Tiberius the emperor being troubled with a fellow that wittily and boldly pretended himself to be a prince, at last when he could not by questions, he discovered him to be a mean person by the rusticity and hardness of his body: not by a callousness of his feet, or a wart upon a finger, but his whole body was hard and servile, and so he was discovered.—Bp. Taylor. Of Repentance, c. 8. § 7.

When the picture of Achilles is drawn in tragedy, he is taken with those warts, and moles, and hard features, by those who represent him on the stage, or he is no more Achilles: for his creatour Homer has so describ'd him.

Dryden. Virgil. Æneis, Ded.

Such in paintings are the warts and moles, which, adding a likeness to the face, are not, therefore, to be omitted.

Shakespeare. Hen. V. Act i. sc. 2

Satan with less toil, and now with ease
Wafes on the calmer wave by dubious light,
And like a weather-beaten vessel holds
Gladly the port, though shrouds and tackle torn;
Or in the emptier waste, resembling air,
Weighs his spread wings, at leisure to behold
Farr off th' empyreal heau'n.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ii.

— Embassies thou shew'st
From nations far and nigh; what honour that,
But tedious waste of time to sit and hear
So many hollow compliments and lies, Outlandish flatteries?—Id. Paradise Regained, b. iv.

Long so they trauelled through wastefull waies,
Where dangers dwelt, and perils most did wonne,
To hunt for glory and renowned praise.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 1.

Ah! but said crafty Trompart, weet ye well,
That yonder in that wastefull wilderness
Huge monsters haunt, and many dangers dwell.
Id. Ib. c. 10.

Others also who having wastfully eaten out of their owne patrimony, would be glad to repaire, if they might, their decayed estates, with the ruine they care not of what nor of whom, so the spoile were theirs.
Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, b. v. § 79.

For as Judas his care for the poore was meere couetousnesse, and that franck-hearted wastfulness spoken of in the gospell, thrift; so there is no doubt but that going in rags may be pride, and thrones bee challenged with vnfained humilitie.
Id. A learned Sermon on the Nature of Pride.

Even so be those wretches more odious and worthy to be hated of us, who by their miserable parsimony and pinching do mischief, than those by their riot and wastfulness be hurtfull to a common-weale, because they take and catch from others that which they themselves neither will nor know how to use.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 175.

— Shee of nought affraid
Through woods and wastnesse wide him daily sought, Yet wished tydings none of him vnto her brought.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 3.

And what needs that (quoth he) cannot Pompey recover and live, if Lucullus were not a waster, and a delicate given to belly-cheare?—Holland. Plutarch, p. 361.

Haply straw or rushes and such like stuffe might catch fire and suddenly flame, so thereupon might ensue much losse, and a publike wasting of many faire buildings.
Id. Ib. p. 313.

And thou art a wast-thrift, and art run away from thy master, that lov'd thee well.
Beaum. & Fletch. Knight of the Burning Pestle, Act i.

In homely guise their honest hearts express,
And bless the warrior who protects the peace,
Who keeps the foe aloof, and drives afar
The dreadful ravage of the wasting war.
Rowe. On the Success of Q. Anne.

I from the root thy guilty race will tear,
And give the nations to the waste of war.
Pope. Statius. Thebaid, b. i.

For it is hardly to be hoped, but that our negligence about their conduct, will tempt them, either to be dishonest, or idle, or wasteful, in our service.—Secker, vol. ii. Ser. 7.

Wastfulness also, and even mere negligence, approach to the same sin; for by both you injuriously diminish what is not your own.—Id. Ib. Ser. 11.

WASTE, or } Skinner says,—perhaps from WAIST, n. } the Lat. Vastus, q. d. vastior corporis pars, the larger part of the body, which appears to be the reverse of the fact; compared with the breadth across the shoulders, and across the hips, it is the smaller, the wasting, diminishing part. See WASTE, ante.

They are clothed with beastes skinnas as well the men as women, but that the women go somewhat straiter and closer in their garments than the men do, with their waistes girded.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 203.

And the women weare of the sayd turqueses at their nostrils and eares, and very good wast-coats and other garments.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 369.

At last that mighty chaine, which round about
Her tender waste was wound, adowne gan fall,
And that great brazen pillour broke in peeces small.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 12.

Host. No gauling [dear spouse] no gauling, every days new vexation abates me two inches in the waste, terrible pennance for an host.

Beaum. & Fleten. Fair Maid of the Inn, Act iii.

And with her armes graceth a wast-coate fine
Imbracing her as it would ne'er untwine.
Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b. i. s. 5.

I'll write a play, says one, for I have got
A broad brim'd hat, and waste-belt towards a blot.
Dryden. 1 Pt. Conquest of Granada, Prol.

'Twas a sad sight before they march'd from home
To see our warriors in red wastecoats, come,
With hair tuck'd up, into our tiring room.
Id. Marriage A-la-Mode, Prol.

He had a sky coloured silk pair of breeches, and a piece of red silk thrown cross his shouldiers, and hanging loose about him; the greatest part of his back and waist appearing naked.—Dampier. Voyages, an. 1687.

The waist of a ship of this kind is an hollow space of about five feet in depth, contained between the elevations of the quarter-deck and the fore castle, and having the upper deck for its base, or platform.
Falconer. Shipwreck, c. 2. Note 37.

Conscious of age she recollects her youth,
And tells, not always with an eye to truth,
Who spann'd her waist, and who, where'er he came,
Scrawl'd upon glass miss Bridget's lovely name.
Cowper. Truth.

WASTEL. Perhaps (Spelman) from Dut.
Vasten, to fast. Skinner prefers the Fr. Gasteau, a cake; and Mr. Tyrwhitt assents to Skinner. In Picardy, Gasteau is called Ouastel; and the French etymologists consider the name to be given to a kind of bread from the size (a vastitate), baked in one mass.

Wastel-bread is repeatedly mentioned in our old statutes regulating the assize of bread.

For thou hast no good by good faith to bygge the with a wastell.—Piers Plouhman, p. 104.

Of smale houndes hadde she, that she fedde
With rosted flesh and milk, & wastel brede.
Chaucer. Prol. v. 147.

The shilling too seems originally to have been the denomination of a weight. When wheat is at twelve shillings the quarter, says an ancient statute of Henry III. then wastel-bread of a farthing shall weigh eleven shillings and four pence.—Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. i. c. 4.

WA'TCHFULNESS. } lantly, attentively, heedfully, WA'TCHING, n. } carefully, cautiously, warily;
to attend, to heed, to regard, to guard.

A watch,—a machine by which to watch or observe time.

Whan thei hadde alle eten, & watches mad alle preste,
To grete that thei had geten, R. gede to reste.
R. Brunne, p. 182.

And scheperdis weren in the same cuntre, wakinge and kepinge watchis of the night on her flok.—Wiclif. Luk. c. 2.

And there were in y^e same region shepherdes abidyng in the felde & watchige their flocke by night.
Bible, 1551. Ib.

The man whiche hathe his lond tilled,
Awaiteth nought more redily
The heruest, than thei gredily
Ne make than warde and watche,
Where thei the profite mighten catche.
Gower. Con. A. b. v.

As David in his boke recordeth
How Polyphemus, whilom wrought
When that he Galathe besought
Of loue, whiche he maie not lache,
That made him for to waite and watche.—Id. Ib. b. ii.

Hengiste beyng mynded to execute his former purposed treason, shewyd his watche-word, by reason wherof anon the Brytons were slayne as shepe amonge woluyes.
Fabyan. Cronycle, c. 89.

Thus they stode styll kepyng watche and ward, redy at

And on ye mou'taynes and hylles costyng the see on the fronters agaynst Flaunders and Fraunce were set watche me and watchers in dyuers maners, I cā not tell how.
Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. c. 49.

This erande of the watcher, is a cōmaundement grounded

Bible, 1551. Daniel, c. 4.

Of men obliuious, he shall make you of good remembraunce: of slowe witted, easie to be taught: of sleapish sluggardes, vigilant & watchfull: of sorowful men, chereful: of earthly folke, heauenlie.—Udal. John, c. 14.

The kinge himselfe being shot thorow by the Colonell with a pistoll, lying on the ground for dead, & I looking as watch-fully for the sauing of Manteos friends, as others were busie that none of the rest should escape.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 263.

Now wil I let passe my continual labours and trauayls taken for the gospels sake, and not rehearse my continual times, my often fastynges, nor the payne of coldenesse and nakednes.—Udal. 2 Cor. c. 1.

Some keepe aboute the prison with lanterns and watch-bells answering one another fūe times euery night.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. p. 74.

Upon the walles euery night doe watch fūteene men in watch houses, for euery watch house fūe men, and in the market place 30 souldiers continually.—Id. Ib. vol. ii. p. 108.

Our souldyers assone as the watchword was geuen, stept quikly to the wall, and passing slightlye ouer it, tooke three camps.—Goldinge. Caesar, fol. 207.

Lu. Are they all a bed?
Boy. I think so, and sound asleep, unless it be
Some women that keep watch in a low parlor
And drink, and weep, I know not to what end.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Night-Walker, Act ii.

The souldier may not moue from watchfull sted,
Nor leaue his stand, vntill his captaine bed.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 9.

For dangerous things can hardly to their end,
Whereon so many watchfully attend.
Drayton. Q. Isabell to Mortimer.

Thus she all night wore out in watchfulness,
Ne suffred slouthfull sleepe her eye-lids to oppresse.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 6.

And call their diligence, deceit;
Their virtue, vice;
Their watchfulness, but lying in wait:
And blood, the price?
B. Jonson. Catiline, Act iv. sc. 7.

And this it doth not by such a kind of choice, deliberation and forecast as the watch-maker makes his watch; for as yet this vital rational principle doth not exercise an actual ratiocination or discursive deliberation, neither hath those organs of heart, and brain, and spirits, and vessels (by the help of which we exercise our acts of reason) till it hath made and framed them.—Hale. Origin of Mankind, p. 26.

The use of this watch-tower, is to shew light as a lanthorne, and give direction in the night season to ships, for to enter the hauen, and where they shall avoid barrs and shelves.
Holland. Plinie, b. xxxvi. c. 13.

When he sent Demetrius his sonne into Greece with a puissant armada, and a great power of men for to deliver the Greeks from seruitude, he made a reason thereof and said: that his glory would from Greece shine out into all continents and habitable parts of the earth, no lesse than a burning light from some high watch-tower.
Id. Plutarch, p. 341.

We know how great an absurdity our Saviour accounted it, for the blind to lead the blind; and to him that cannot so much as see, to discharge the office of watch.
South, vol. i. Ser. 5.

Heavy with age, Entellus stands his ground,
But with his warping body wards the wound.
His hand, and watchfull eye keep even pace;
While Dares traverses, and shifts his place.
Dryden. Virgil. Æneis, b. iv.

He must watchfully look to his own steps, who is to guide others by his authority and his example.
Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 19.

These volunteers in politics, undergo all the pain, watchfulness, and disquiet of a first minister, without turning it to the advantage either of themselves or their country; and yet it is surprising to consider how numerous this species of men is.—Tatler, No. 160.

Watching, for the most part, imports hostility, and no man observes the motions of his enemy, but that he may advantageously find a time to fight him.
South, vol. v. Ser. 10.

But suppose I had found a watch upon the ground, and it should be inquired how the watch happened to be in that place; I should hardly think of the answer which I had before given, that for any thing I knew, the watch might have always been there.—Paley. Natural Theology, c. 1.

Amongst the various societies of Christians, there are some, in which the holy ordinances are more regularly administred; discipline more equitably enforced; and Christian liberty more watchfully protected.
Warburton, vol. ix. Ser. 11.

It is not at all wonderful, that what depends on man, should be so liable to error, and negligence, as to demand the strongest exhortations to care and watchfulness.
Gilpin, vol. i. Hint 19.

WA'TCHET. Chaucer writes waget; and Skinner thinks it may be wad-chet, the colour of wad or woad, Fr. Guesde; and Cotgrave says the French dyers call the coarser sort of stuff guesde, and the finer, pastel.

Yclad he was ful smal and proprely,
All in a kirtel of a light waget.
Chaucer. The Milleres Tale, v. 3322.

We saw birds of all colours, some carnation, some crimson, orange-tawny, purple, watchet, and of all other sorts both simple and mixt.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 645.

They him disarm'd, and spredding on the ground
Their watchet mantles fring'd with silver round,
They softly wip't away the ielly'd blood
From th' orifice.—Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 4.

But he their sonne full fresh and iolly was,
All decked in a robe of watchet hew,
On which the waues, glittering like crystall glass,
So cunningly enwouen were, that few
Could weenen whether they were false or trew.
Id. Ib. b. iv. c. 11.

Then follows an armed knight bearing a crimson baneret

Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 687.

Waters deuoure and swallow up the earth: waters quench and kill the flames of fire: they mount up aloft into the aire, and seeme to challenge a seignorie and dominion in the heauens also; whiles by a thick seeling and floore as it were of clouds, caused by the dim vapors arising from them, that vitall spirit which giveth life unto all things, is debarred, stopped and choked.—Holland. Plinie, b. xxxi. c. 1.

caried with violence.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

And herken this ensample: A gret wawe of the see cometh somtime with so gret a violence, that it drencheth the ship.—Chaucer. Persones Tale.

Whan he came in his countree,
And passed had the wawy see,
In an haven deepe and large
He left his rich and noble barge,
And to the court shortly to tell,
He went.

And for none other cause verailly, but for his sounde and constaunt profession, by ye which whan the people wer in a wauering and mammering what he was, Peter being as the voice of al the apostles together, pronounced the sētence, that Jesus was the sonne of the liuing God.

Udal. Luke, c. 6.

Loke not waueringly about you, haue no distrust, be not afrayed, lest you be tossed in ye sources of sorowes, as thoughe you were vndefended and set naught by.

Id. 1 Peter, c. 5.

Yet towards night a great sort came downe to the water

Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. p. 33.

In the midst of a great quadrangle railed about hanged with course linnen, and agreeably vnto the foure partes of the world made with foure gates to goe in and out at, is digg'd a hole: in the hole is laied good store of wood, whereon is raised gallantly a waved rooffe.—Id. Ib. p. 86.

And eche parte thought to fyght, for euery day they shewed themselfe in the felde, with baners and penons waueryng with the wynde; it was great pleasure to beholde thē.—Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 333.

For putting his hande to the holy shryne, that was called Archafederis, whan it was broughte by kynge Daudid from the citie of Gaba, though it were wauerynge and in daunger

Sir T. Elyot. The Governour, b. i. c. 11.

Which to behold, he clomb vp to the banke,
And looking downe, saw many damned wights,
In those sad waves; which direfull deadly stanke,
Plonged continually of cruell sprights.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 7.

The waved water chamelot was from the beginning esteemed the richest and bravest wearing.

Holland. Plinie, b. viii. c. 48.

As Cynthia from her wave-embattl'd shrouds
Op'ning the west, comes streaming thro' the clouds,
With shining troops of silver-tressed stars,
Attending on her as her torch bearers.

Drayton. Duke of Suffolk to the French Queen.

In which amazement, when the miscreant
Perceived him to wauer weake and fraile,
Whiles trembling horror did his conscience dant,
And hellish anguish did his soule assaile;
To driue him to despaire, and quite to quail,
Hee shew'd him painted in a table plaine,
The damned ghosts, that doe in torments waille.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 9.

— Still he stroue,
Yet still the little hands were bloody seene,
The which him into great amaz'ment droue,
And into diuers doubt his wauering wonder cloue.

Id. Ib. b. ii. c. 1.

For liberty of will is like the motion of a magnetick needle toward the north, full of trembling and uncertainty till it were fixed in the beloved point; it wavers as long as it is free, and is at rest when it can choose no more.

Bp. Taylor, vol. iii. Ser. 7.

Dryden. Aureng-Zebe, Act i.

No more the lab'ring hind regrets his toil,
But cheerfully manures the grateful soil:
Secure the glebe a plenteous crop will yield,
And golden Ceres grace the waving field.
Congreve. To Lord Halifax.

What though I am delighted with the wavings of thy forests, and those breezes of perfumes which flow from the top of Tirzah; are these like the riches of the valley?
Spectator, No. 585.

And God be thanked that he did so! since by thus settling his wavering disciples in an unshaken belief of this truth, he enabled them, with the utmost firmness and constancy, to propagate their belief of it, and even to seal their testimony with their blood.—Atterbury, vol. iii. Ser. 7.

This is called by a peculiar name, revelation; and our assent to it faith: which as absolutely determines our minds, and as perfectly excludes all wavering, as our knowledge itself; and we may as well doubt of our own being.
Locke. Hum. Underst. b. iv. c. 16.

But, farmer, look where full-ear'd sheaves of rye Grow wavy on the tilth, that soil select
For apples: thence thy industry shall gain
Ten-fold reward.
J. Philips. Cider, b. i.

At length two appeared on the banks of the river, a man

By length of plaint.—Chaucer. Troyl. & Cres. b. iv.

Thus we did remaine the sixt day: then we were very weake and wished all to die sauing onely my selfe which did comfort them and promised they should come soone to land by the helpe of God.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 164.

We also finde double the perill in the reciduacion, that was in the first sicknes, with which disease nature being forelaborid, foreweried and weakened, waxeth the lesse able to beare out a new surfet.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 49.

By mean wherof, his people were so sore myneshed &
wekyd, that he was forced to take peas w^t his enemies.

Fabyan. Chronycle, c. 171.

Golden Boke, Let. 3.

In number we were diminished, and in strength greatly weakned, both by reason of our sicknesse and also of the number that were dead.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 228.

The Lord perceyuing that his disciples (who were as yet but rude, & weaklynges) did geue no credence vnto his doctrine, attempted many wayes to bring forth in them,

For, him to be yet weake and weary, well she knew.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 9

But when as him (all in bright armour clad)

Before her standing she espied had,

As one out of a deadly dreame affright,

She weakly started, yet she nothing drad.

Id. Ib. b. ii. c. 1.

The condition of man in this world is so limited and depressed, so relative and imperfect, that the best things he does he does weakly, and the best things he hath are imperfections in their very constitution.

Bp. Taylor, vol. iii. Ser. 7.

He [Eschines] was but weakling and very tender, and therefore his mother would not much let him go to school, neither also durst his masters keep him too hard to it, because he was but a sickly child at the first, and very weak.

North. Plutarch, p. 700.

The error of the judge does not make the sentence invalid; his authority prevails above his error: but in the other it is the case of souls, and therefore is conducted by God only as to all real and material events, and depends not upon the weakness and fallibilities of men.

Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. iii. c. 4.

We are furnished with faculties (dull and weak as they knowledge of the Creator, and the knowledge of our duty.

Locke. Hum. Underst. b. ii. c. 23.

How strangely is the force of this motive weakened by those who make Christ a mere man, not the Eternal Son of God, sent out to us from the bosom of his Father!

Atterbury vol. iii. Ser. 3.

The like instances may be given in the fastings and mortifications used by many people, which, no question, rightly managed, are huge helps to piety, great weakeners of sin, and furtherances to a man in his Christian course.

 rupana.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 659.

I confesse indeede that I endeauour to be briefe, not so much in regard of wearisomenesse, as for feare least I haue bene ouer tedious vnto you.—Id. Ib. vol. ii. p. 96.

Their scope was obedience, ours is skill; their endeauour was reformation of life, our vertue nothing but to heare gladly the reproofe of vice; they in the practise of their religion wearied chiefly their knees and hands, we especially our eares and tongues.

Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, b. v. § 81.

But the condemnation of his sin he received,—weariness

Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, b. i. c. 7.

But no worthy enterprise can be done by us without continuall plodding and wearisomenesse to our faint and sensitive abilities.—Milton. Tetrachordon.

It is a calling, the business whereof doth so exercise as not to wearie, so entertain as not to cloy us.

Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 16.

Thus with a flowing tongue old Nestor spoke:

Then, to full bowls each other they provoke;

At length with weariness, and wine oppress'd;

They rise from table; and withdraw to rest.

Dryden. Ovid. Metam. b. xii.

There was once a time when wreaths of bays or oak were considered as recompences equal to the more wearisome labours and terrific dangers, and when the miseries of long marches and stormy seas were at once driven from the remembrance by the fragrance of a garland.—Idler, No. 6.

In the whole of this work, we must be careful, neither to hurry over any part thoughtlessly, nor lengthen it weari- somely.—Secker, vol. vi. Lect. 38.

A duty so hard, as undergoing sharp torments, or continued wearisomenesse, may well admit of some imperfection in the performance, and yet entitle us, through our merciful Father's bounty, to a large recompence.—Id. vol. ii. Ser. 14.

That with the straint, his wesand nigh he brast.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 2.

Ant. I say cut his wezand, spoil his piping;
Have at your love-sick heart, sir.

Beaum. & Fletcher. The Chances, Act ii.

He might have thought thus much: That this wezill of the throat, otherwise called Epiglottis, was not made for nothing, and to no purpose, but ordained for this, that when we swallow any food it might keep down and close the conduit of the wind-pipe.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 609.

Now this wezill abovesaid, being placed just in the midst, and indifferent to serve both passages, when we speake, doth shut the mouth of that conduit or wezand that leadeth to the stomach.—Id. Ib.

When the wind is thus settled, we have commonly fair weather, and a clear sky, especially if the sun is in the southern sign; but if in a northern sign, the weather is usually cloudy.—Dampier. Discourse of Winds, c. 1.

In weathering this point all the squadron, except the Centurion, were very near it; and the Gloucester being the leewardmost ship, was forced to tack and stand to the southward, so that we lost sight of her.

Anson. Voyages, b. ii. c. 7.

To repair these defects the caulkers were set to work, as soon as we got into fair and settled weather, to caulk the decks and inside weather-works of the ships; for I would not trust them over the sides while we were at sea.

Cook. Third Voyage, b. i. c. 3.

Peace to the artist, whose ingenious thought

Devis'd the weather-house, that useful toy!

Fearless of humid air and gath'ring rains, spinning of others, and to order such as should bee woven.

Vives. Instruction of a Christian Woman, b. i. c. 3.

The cobwebs that spiders weave, which serve for patterns, as well for our women to make their webs of cloth, as for fishers to knit and work their nets, are in many respects very admirable: first in regard of the fine threads, and the subtile weaving thereof, which are not distinct one from another, nor ranged after the order of the warpe and woof in our artificial webs upon the loom, but are continued and run all into one.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 786.

Locke. On Hum. Underst. b. i. c. 2.

Then weavers stretch your stays upon the weft.

Dryden. Virgil. Georgics, b. i.

The silk-worm weaves her web for a safeguard to herself, and at the same time furnishes us with materials for our cloathing and ornament.

Search. Light of Nature, vol. ii. pt. i. c. 19.

The capital which employs the weavers, for example, must be greater than that which employs the spinners;
because it not only replaces that capital with its profits, but pays, besides, the wages of the weavers.

Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. i. c. 6.

It is made in a kind of frame of the size of the cloth, generally about five feet long, and four broad, across which the long threads, which lie close together, or warp, are strained, and the cross threads, or woof, are worked in by hand, which must be a very tedious operation.

which is the most convenient size for swimming.

Derham. Physico-Theology, b. vii. c. 1. Note 9.

A weaver cannot apply himself entirely to his peculiar business, unless there is before hand stored up somewhere, either in his own possession, or in that of some other person, a stock sufficient to maintain him with the materials and tools of his work, till he has not only completed, but sold his web.

Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. ii. pt. ii. Intro.

They scatter abroad fire-brands and arrows, and cry, Are we not in sport? they delight to trip up the unwary, or entangle the feeble in their webby filaments, and then chuckle with joy to see the perplexities they have occasioned.—Search. Light of Nature, vol. ii. pt. iii. c. 27.

There blinks through paper'd panes the setting sun;
There noisy sparrows, perch'd on penthouse near,
Chirp tuneless joy, and mock the frequent tear;
Bats on their webby wings in darkness move,
And feebly shriek their melancholy love.

In gaining him, I gain that fortune too
Which he has wedded, and which I but woove.
Dryden. 2 Pt. Conquest of Granada, Act iii.

Is mirth seasonable on the day of marriage? behold the greatest wedding that ever was is this day solemnized:
heaven and earth are contracted; divinity is espoused to humanity; a sacred, an indissoluble knot is tied between God and man.—Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 43.

But man in general, wedded to the world, despises its call [Christianity].—Gilpin, vol. i. Hint 2.

The relation between Christ and his church, it is evident, must be of a nature not to be adequately typified by any thing in the material world; and nothing could be found in human life which might so aptly represent it as the relation of husband and wife in the holy state of wedlock.
Bp. Horsley, vol. i. Ser. 8.

WEDGE, n. } Dut. Wegghe, massa, cuneus; WEDGE, v. } Ger. Wecke, which Martinus (in
v. Cuneus) thinks is from weichen, cedere (see WAX) quia ea, in quæ adigitur sibi cedere cogit; because it forces those things into which it is driven to give way or yield to it.

The A. S. Wæge, wæge, is applied as the Dut.
Wegghe, to a weight, a mass, a wedge; of some called a way or weigh, (Somner.) But the A. S.
Ge-eggian, to sharpen, to give an edge, seems to account more easily for the uses of a wedge, or edged piece (of wood or metal). (See the quotation from Wilkins.) To wedge,—

To drive or force, asunder or together, as with a wedge, and thus either to cleave or fix; to drive or force in.

Than they without had redy axes and wedges, and hewed

Troy. I was about to tell thee, when my heart,
As wedged with a sigh, would rive in twaine,
Least Hector, or my father should perceiue me:
I haue (as when the sunne doth light a-scorne)
Buried this sigh in wrinkle of a smile.
Shakespeare. Troyl. & Cress. Act i. sc. 1.

Which way do you iudge my wit would flye?
3 Cit. Nay your wit will not so soone out as another man's will, 'tis strongly wedg'd vp in a blocke-head.
Id. Coriolanus, Act ii. sc. 3.

1. God saue you sir. Where haue you bin brolling?
3. Among the crow'd i' th' abbey, where a finger
Could not be wedg'd in more.
Id. Hen. VIII. Act iv. sc. 1.

In Thessaly there be 34, whereof the most famous are,
Cerceti, Olympus, Pierus, Ossa: just against which is Pindus and Othrys, the seat and habitation of the Lapithæ; and those lie toward the west: but eastward, Pelios, all of them bending in manner of a theatre: and before them stand raunged wedge-wise, 72 cities.

Holland. Plinie, b. iv. c. 8.

And thus wedge-wise by little and little they spread broader and broader behind, and beare a great length besides with them: by which meanes also they gather more wind to heave them up and set them forward.

Holland. Plinie, b. x. c. 23.

The fifth mechanical faculty is the wedge, which is a known instrument, commonly used in the cleaving of wood.
[Wilkins. Archimedes, c. 8.

Besides what gold and sand they take up together, they often find great lumps, wedg'd between the rocks, as if it naturally grew there.—Dampier. Voyages, an. 1685.

Are all such teachers? would to heav'n all were?
But hark—the doctor's voice! fast wedg'd between Two empirics he stands, and with swol'n cheeks Inspires the news, his trumpet.—Cowper. Task, b. ii.

Forth goes the woodman, leaving unconcern'd
The cheerful haunts of men; to wield the axe,
And drive the wedge, in yonder forest drear,
From morn to eve his solitary task. Id. Ib. b. v.

WEE. Dr. Jamieson has produced many instances of the usage of wee, with the adj. little, whence he seems inclined to suspect that wee is way; and, from its frequent union with the adj.
little, it may itself have been used to denote—little, small. But the A. S. Wac, wace, our own English weak, may, by dropping the c or k, have given us this word.

Si. No forsooth: he hath but a little wee-face; with a herbage (the verdant clothing) of the field, (subsequently restricted to useless or hurtful plants) or to a clothing of the human body, is, probably,— A covering; that which covers, spreads over vest or vestment, clothing or garment.

To weed,—applied to the destruction of particular plants, covering or overspreading the ground, is—

To hoe, or cut up or out; to eradicate, or root out; to extirpate.

Chaucer contrasts wicked weeds with whole- some herbs.

More. Life of the Sout, b. ii. s. 141.

At sight thereof she was with terror queld,
And said no more: but I which all that while
The pledge of faith, her hand engaged held,
Like wary hynd within the weedy soyle,
For no intreaty would forgoe so glorious spoyle.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 10.

Let never spring visit his habitation,
But nettles, kix, and all the weedy nation,
With empty elders grow, sad signs of desolation.

G. Fletcher. Christ's Triumph over Death.

For all assum'd unto this dignity,
So many weedless paradises be,
Which of themselves produce no venomous sin,
Except some foreign serpent bring it in.

Donne. Anatomy of the World, Act i.

Soon was his labour doubl'd to the swain,
And blasting mildews blackned all his grain.
Tough thistles cloak'd the fields, and kill'd the corn,
And an unthrifty crop of weeds was born.

Dryden. Virgil. Georgics, b. i.

There are a great number of negro slaves brought from other parts of the world; some of which are continually weeding, pruning, trimming and looking after it.

Dampier. Voyages, an. 1691.

All hate the rank society of weeds,
Noisome, and ever greedy to exhaust
Th' improv'ish'd earth; an overbearing race,
That like the multitude made fashion-mad,
Disturb good order, and degrade true worth.

Cowper. Task, b. iii.

Bp. Gardner. Of True Obedience, fol. 54.

This having said, she left me all in tears,
And minding much to speak; but she was gone,
And subtly fled into the weightless air.
Surrey. Virgile. Æneis, b. ii.

Fr. You are light gentlemen,
Nothing to weigh your hearts, pray give me leave,
I'll come and see, and take my leave.
Beaum. & Fletcher. The Night Walker, Act i.

Inflam'd with these words, they all vow thir utmost, with such undaunted resolution as amaz'd the Roman general; but the soldier less weighing, because less knowing, clamour'd to be lead on against any danger.
Milton. History of England, b. iii.

I shall endeavour to give it a right understanding, and describe the truth that lies between the two extremes, and was yet never affirm'd and describ'd by any one that I know of, but is determinable by a just weighing of all that which very many wise men have said, being put together.
Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. iii. c. 5.

Ostorius sending more after, could hardly stay thir flight; till the weighty legions coming on, at first poys'd the battel, at length turn'd the scale.—Milton. Hist. of England, b. ii.

Pleasing to God, or not pleasing, with them weighed alike; and the worse most an end was the weightier.—Id. Ib. b. iii.

His industry was great, his soul large, and fit for the weightiest businesses.
Camden. Hist. of Q. Elizabeth, an. 1590.

The caue in which these beares lay sleeping sound,
Was but of earth, and with her weightlesse
Vpon them fell. Spenser. Ruines of Time.

And so [they] are oft-times emboldned to roule upon them as from aloft very weake and weightlesse discourses.
Bp. Hall. An Apology against Brownists, § 1.

Thomas Gargrave therefore, speaker of the lower house, with some few selected men, after leave obtained, came unto the queen, and making his excuse by his office, the queen's courtesie, and the weightiness of the matter, went forward to this purpose.
Camden. Hist. of Q. Elizabeth, an. 1559.

When we went to weigh our anchor, it was hooked in a rock, and we broke our cable, and could not get our anchor, though we strove hard for it, so we went away and left it there.—Dampier. Voyages, an. 1687.

The water for the squadron being the same day compleated, and each ship supplied with as much wine and other refreshments as they could take in, we weighed anchor in the afternoon, and took our leave of the Island of Madera.
Anson. Voyages, b. i. c. 2.

When to demonstration on the one side, there are opposed on the other, only difficulties raised from our want of having adequate ideas of the things themselves: this ought not to be esteemed an objection of any real weight.
Clarke. On the Attributes, Prop. 1.

The cares of empire are great, and the burthen, which lies upon the shoulders of princes, very weighty; and, on this account, therefore, they challenge, because they particularly want, our prayers, that they may have an understanding heart, to discern between good and bad, and to go out and in before a great people.—Atterbury, vol. i. Ser. 8.

Is his poetry the worse, because he makes his agents speak weightily and sententiously?—Broome. On the Odyssey.

It is a very wrong and irrational way of proceeding to venture a greater good for a less, upon uncertain guesses, and before a due examination be made proportionable to the weightiness of the matter, and the concernment it is to us not to mistake.—Locke. On Hum. Underst. b. ii. c. 21.

I exhort you to spend a due share of the remainder of this day in what, I trust, hath employed not a little of your time already; weighing diligently the nature and importance of the undertaking, in which you are about to engage; forming suitable resolutions: and earnestly begging that grace of God, which alone can make you able ministers of the New Testament.
Secker. Ser. Instructions to Candidates for Orders.

We know the weight of a given quantity of matter on the surface of the sun as well as we know its weight upon the surface of the earth.—Bp. Horsley, vol. i. Ser. 11.

 To welk,—

To turn, to roll, to revolve; also—to devolve, to roll, turn or cause to roll or turn, to go down.
 The welked Phœbus is Phœbus having completed his revolution: to welke in west,—to devolve, to turn or go down, to set. Winter welked hath the day; completed the revolution of day.

Welkin, adj.—rolling; the rolling sea, the rolling sky, a rolling eye: used, substantively, to denote—

The sky. In A. S. Welcn, wolcn.

Thus hath this pitous day a blisful ende;
 For every man and woman, doth his might
 This day in mirth and revel to dispend,
 Til on the welkin shone the sterres bright.

Chaucer. The Clerkes Tale, v. 9001.

Right now the highe windes blowe:

And anon after thei ben lowe.
 Now clouddie, and now clere it is,
 So maie it prouen well by this

A mans sinne is for to hate,
 Whiche maketh the welken to debate,

Surrey. Virgile. Æneis, b. ii.

As gentle shepherd and in sweet euen-tide,
 When ruddy Phœbus gins to welke in west,
 High on an hill, his flock to viewen wide,
 Marks which doe bite their hastie supper best.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 1.

By that the welked Phœbus gan auaile
 His wearie waine.—Id. Shepherd's Calender. January.

But now sad Winter welked hath the day,
 And Phœbus weary of his yeerely task,
 Ystablisht hath his steeds in lowly lay,
 And taken vp his inne in fishes haske.—Id. Id. November.

Now seven times Phœbus had his welked wain
 Upon the top of Cancer's tropick set,
 And seven times in his descent again
 His fiery wheels had with the fishes wet.

Drayton. Barons' Wars, s. 1.

There comes proud Phaeton tumbling thro' the clouds,
 Cast by his palfreys that their reigns had broke,
 And setting fire upon the welked shrouds,
 Now through the heav'n run madding from the yoke.

Id. Id. s. 39.

The grasse now ginnes to be refresht, vnholosome to be dronke (because it is euer troubled and full of mudde) the Macedons fell to dyggyng of welles.

Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 203.

Jhesus perceiuyng that the fond petition of the two, & the disdainful wrath of the others, issued both out of one wel- spring, called them al vnto hym, because he would minister phisicke vnto them all with one medicine.

Udal. Marke, c. 10.

— So her shee soone appeased,
 With sugred words and gentle blandishment,
 Which as a fountaine from her sweet lips went,
 And welled goodly forth, that in short space
 Shee was well pleasd.—Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 6.

If wee have regard to the coldnesse of water, necessarie it is that the well should stand in some coole and shadowie place not exposed to the sunne, and nathelesse open to the broad aire, that it may haue the full view and sight (as it were) of the skie.—Holland. Plinie, b. xxxi. c. 3.

He [Homer] drank off all, nor let one drop be spill'd;
 Since when, his brain that had before been dry,
 Became the well-spring of all poetry.—Davies. Orchestra.

With this his distant friends he beckons near,
 Provokes their duty, and prevents their fear:

 furnish us with frequent instances of violent contentions concerning wells; the exclusive property of which appears to have been established in the first digger or occupant, even in such places where the ground and herbage remained yet in common.—Blackstone. Commentaries, b. ii. c. 1.

Defend me therefore, common sense, say I,
 From reveries so airy, from the toil
 Of dropping buckets into empty wells,
 And growing old in drawing nothing up.

Cowper. Task, b. iii.

The stream, that feeds the well-spring of the heart,
 Not more invigorates life's noblest part,
 Than Virtue quickens with a warmth divine
 The pow'rs, that Sin has brought to a decline.

It would be tried with corns and wens, and such other excrecences.—Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 997.

The earl of Northampton having, after a lingring fever, spent more spirits than a younger body could well have born, by the incision of a wennish tumor grown on his thigh, yesternight between eleven and twelve of the clock departed out of this world.—Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 434.

[Sloth] disposeth a man to live gratis [precariouly] and ingrately on the public stock, as an insignificant cypher among men, as a burthen of the earth, as a wen of any society; sucking alimnt from it, but yielding no benefit or ornament thereto.—Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 19.

Some persons, so deformed with these, have suspected them to be wenny.—Wiseman. Surgery.

So likewise is the poet to reject all incidents which are foreign to his poem, and are naturally no parts of it: they are wens, and other excrecences, which belong not to the body, but deform it.

A way or passage.

Junius explains, went,—a turning or tossing, a turning backwards and forwards, a turning out of a straight way, a passage;—it appears always to mean,—

A way, passage; utterance.

Udal. Actes, c. 2.

While you take [in hand] to schoole others, & to teach them by what name a whale-fish is to be called in our tongue, leauing out through ignorance the letter H. which almost alone maketh vp the signification of the worde, you deliuer that which is not true: for wal in our language signifieth not a whale, but chusing or choice of the verbe Eg-uel, that is to say, I chose, or I make choice.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 568.

Dampier. Voyages, an. 1699.

The whale is the largest animal of which we have any certain information; and the various purposes to which, when taken, its different parts are converted, have brought us tolerably acquainted with its history. Of the whale, properly so called, there are no less than seven different kinds; all distinguished from each other by their external

same doctrine held in Scotland.—Id. Ib.

WHEE'DLE, v. A. S. Wædli-an, indigere, mendicare, to want, to begge, or go a begging, (Somner.) As now applied, it is—To beg, (with importunity, with appeal to the affections,) to persuade (by an assumed degree of fondness); to cajole, to coax.

He that first brought the word sham, or wheedle, or banter in use, put together as he thought fit those ideas he made it stand for.—Locke. Hum. Underst. b. iii. c. 9.

I have already a deed of settlement of the best part of her estate, which I wheedled out of her; and that you shall partake at least.—Congreve. Way of the World, Act iii.

A laughing, toying, wheedling, whimp'ring she,
Shall make him amble on a gossip's message,
And take the distaff with a hand as patient
As e'er did Hercules.—Rowe. Jane Shore, Act i.

Hence goodnature is often called and sometimes really proceeds from folly, which gets no thanks when it proves most beneficial; for men applaud themselves for having gained a compliance by wheedling or pressing, and secretly laugh at the silly thing that could be won by such artifices.

WHEEL, v. } A. S. Hweogul; Dut. Wiel; WHEEL, n. } Ger. Wiel; Sw. Huil; from the WHEELER, } A. S. verb A-wylian, (wyl-an, WHEELY. } willigan, wealc-an, see WELKIN), volvere, revolvere, to roll, to revolve.

To roll or turn round, to revolve; to take or make a circular or rotatory movement.

Hii lete hem gynnes make, as vorst of the toure
Of tre, ymade strong ynou vppe weoles foure.
R. Gloucester, p. 410.

The tunge is ordeyned in oure membris which defoulith

Beaum. & Fletcher. Wit without Money, Act iii.

A carpenter or wheele-wright will not with so good a will lay his hand to make a plough, or a chariot, as he would to frame those tables or boards in which he wist that Solon was to engrave his laws.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 240.

Milton. Historie of England, b. ii.

Yet did they comply so much with the Presbyterians and Independents, that they kept their places: tho' they deserved ejection over and over: and in the change at the restoration, they wheel'd about and acted like Protei.
Wood. Athenæ Oxon. vol. ii.

WHE'RRY. From—to ferry, or to hurry; or from the Lat. Vehere, or the A. S. Far-an, to go.
(See Skinner.) It seems to be very plainly from the
A. S. verb Weri-an, werig-an, lacerare, incitare, to werry; to urge on, (sc.) at all speed. It is the name of—

A light boat, adapted for speed or swiftness;
for the quick impulse of the oars.

WHIFFLING, n. } A waff or waft; as much air as is produced by waving (e.g. a fan); a slight blast, a puff. To whiff,—

To breathe, exhale, expire, emit—a slight blast or puff. To whiffle,—

To move; to stir with a slight blast; to puff or blow about or away; to change or turn, to veer with every wind; to blow a slight wind-instrument, as a fife, a pipe. A whiffler,—

A blower, a piper; one who changes with every wind, who makes frequent noise to little purpose.

The smoke took him [Empedocles], and whift him up into the moon, where he lives yet waving up and down like a feather, all soot and embers, coming out of that coal-pit.

"The poor honest people, who were in raillery called whiggs, from a kind of milk they were forced to drink in their wandrings and straits, became name-fathers to all who espoused the interest of liberty and property through Britain and Ireland." Hist. vol. i. p. 263.

From a word whiggam, used in driving their horses, all that drove were called the whiggamors, and shorter the whiggs.—Burnet. Own Times, b. i.

This was called the whiggamors' inroad: and ever after that, all that opposed the court came in contempt to be called whiggs: and from Scotland the word was brought into England, where it is now one of our unhappy terms of distinction.—Id. Ib.

A noise was made of arbitrary sway;
But in revenge, you whiggs, have found a way,
An arbitrary duty now to pay.

Dryden. Duke of Guise, Prol.

Not whiggs, nor tories they; nor this, nor that;
Not birds, nor beasts; but just a kind of bat:
A twilight animal; true to neither cause,
With tory wings, but whiggish teeth and claws.

If the clift or breach bee not great, so that the wind be constrained to turn round, to rol and whirle in his descent, without fire, that is to say lightning, it makes a whirle-puffe or ghust called Typhen.—Id. Ib. b. ii. c. 48.

— Would to heaven,
In wreak of my misfortunes, I were turn'd
To some fair water-nymph, that, set upon
The deepest whirl-pit of the rav'nous seas,
My adamant eyes might headlong hale
This iron world to me, and drown it all.

B. Jonson. Every Man out of his Humour, Act ii. sc. 2.

In the French ocean there is discovered a mightie fish called Phyteter, (i. a whirelpoole) rising up aloft out of the sea in manner of a colonne or pillar, higher than the very sailes of the ship: and then he spouteth and casteth forth a mightie deale of water, as it were out of a conduit, ynough to drowne and sinke a ship.—Holland. Plinie, b. ix. c. 4.

All suddenly a stormy whirlwind blew
Throughout the house, that clapped euery dore:
With which that iron wicket open flew,
As it with mighty leuers had bene tore.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 12.

Whirl'd from a sling, or from an engine thrown,
Amid the foes, so flies a mighty stone.

To speak in a low voice. See the quotation from Bacon.

Ne euer rest is in that place,
That it nis filled full of tidings,
Eyther loude or of whisperings.
Chaucer. House of Fame, b. iii.

At these wordes ye people began to whisper amonge themselves secretly, that the voyce was neyther loude nor distinctke, but as it were the sounde of a swarme of bees.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 64.

At all these wordes that he spake before euery man helde their peace; but whan he spake of the whyte hattes, ther wer suche a murmuringe and whysperynge, that it might well be parceyued that it was for that cause.
Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 357.

The officers then whisperig together, thought the examination to be sufficient, & returned therewithall to the king.
Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 169.

And me, whom late the dart which enemies threw,
Nor press of Argive routs could make amaz'd:
Each whisp'ring wind hath power now to fray,
And every sound to move my doubtful mind.
Surrey. Virgile. Aeneis, b. ii.

Who shall praise you, who admire?
Who shall whisper by the fire
As you stand, soft tales? Who bring you Pretty news, in rhymes who sing you?
B. Jonson. Love freed from Folly.

If I know he will listen to my whispers to another person, and watch my secret talk to others; I am not bound to say what will inform him.
Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. iii. c. 2.

Flattery is midwife unto prince's rage:
And nothing sooner doth help forth a tyrant,
Than that and whisperers' grace, who have the time,
The place, the power, to make all men offenders.
B. Jonson. Sejanus, Act i. sc. 2.

In the speech of man, the whispering, which they call susurrus in Latine, whether it be louder or softer, is an interior sound: but the speaking out is an exterior sound: and therefore you can never make a tone, nor sing in whispering.—Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 188.

Lintot, dull rogue! will think your price too much:
"Not sir, if you revise it, and retouch."
All my demurs but double his attacks;
At last he whispers, "Do, and we go snacks."
Pope. Prot. to Satires, v. 66.

The list'ning world each whisper will befriend
That breathes his name, and ev'ry ear attend.
Congreve. To K. William.

Next to these bawlers, is a troublesome creature who comes with the air of your friend and your intimate, and that is your whisperer. There is one of them at a coffee-house which I myself frequent, who observing me to be a man pretty well made for secrets, gets by me, and with a whisper tells me things which all the town knows.
Spectator, No. 148.

The one is uttered vocally, the other whisperingly.
Dulgarno. Deaf & Dumb Man's Tutor.

Bishop Patrick says, its grandeur is as much above all other poetry, as thunder is louder than a whisper.

Id. Ib. b. vii.

Vile miscreant (said he) whither doest thou fle
The shame and death, which will thee soone inuade?
What coward hand shall doe thee next to die,
That art thus foully fled from famous enemy?

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 6.

He thus departeth as God would harmlesse,
And forth of a venture his way he is went,
But whitherward he draw, he conceitlesse
Was, he nat knew to what place he was bent.

Brown. Shepherd's Pipe, Ecl. 1.

WHITING. Dut. Wytingh, wittingh.

A fish. Some think so called from its white- ness.

But well I wot he tasteth no such dish
Of rotechets, whitings, or such common fish,
That with his net he drags into his boate.

Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b. ii. s. 1.

Whitings appear in vast shoals in our seas in the spring, keeping at the distance of about half a mile to that of three miles from the shore.—Pennant. British Zoology.

WHITLOW;—written by Holland and Wiseman a Whitflaw; is called by Skinner a hybrid word, from A. S. Wite, pain, and Fr. Loup, lupus.
Lupus tum ob doloris sævitiam, tum quod vicinas partes depascitur. Lye more rationally composes of white (albus), and low (flamma); and considers it to be so called from the colour of the ulcer, and the burning heat of the pain.

Moreover a liniment thereof applied with vinegre, is good for whitflawes and the callosities of the feet.

Holland. Plinie, b. xxii. c. 25.

They cure whitflawes, risings, and partings of the flesh and skin about the naile roots.—Id. Ib. b. xxiv. c. 4.

Paronychia, so called by the Greeks, is a small swelling about the nails and ends of the fingers, known among the Latins by the name of Panaritium; by the vulgar people amongst us it is generally called a whitflaw.

Wiseman. Surgery, b. i. c. 11.

WHITSTER, i. e. a whitener or bleacher.

Trudge with it in all haste, and carry it among the whit- sters in Dotchet mead, and there emptie it in the muddie ditch, close by the Thames side.

Shakespeare. Merry Wives of Windsor, Act iii. sc. 3.

WHITSUNDAY. Ger. Weisse sonntag, dominica alba (Wachter), so called from the white vests in which the candidates for baptism appeared.
Skinner speaks to the same effect.

But I schal dwelle at Effesi tilto wilsonsytide, for a greet dore and an open is opened to me, and manye aduersaries.

Wiclif. 1 Corynth. c. 16.

I wil tarye at Ephesus vntyll wylsontyde. For a greate

Sir T. More. Workes, p. 198.

WHITTLE. A. S. Hwitel, or Hwittle. Cul- tellus, a knife,—Skinner derives from—to whet (or sharpen).

A Sheffield whittle is still a common name.
To whittle,—to whet, to sharpen; to be or become sharp or eager.

—For their kniues care not,

While you haue throats to answer. For my selfe,
There's not a whittle, in th' vnruely campe,
But I do prize it at my loue, before
The reuerendst throat in Athens—

Shakespeare. Timon of Athens, Act v. sc. 2.

Certain Chians there were, who being come to see the city of Sparta, chanced to be well whittled and stark drunk, who after supper went to see also the consistory of the Ephori.

Holland. Plutarch, p. 387.

Now when they are come to that once [drinking wine] & be thoroughly whittled, then shall ye haue them cast their wanton eyes upon mens wiues.—Id. Plinie, b. xiv. c. 22.

Stand still like a good Christian, and offer his weeson to a butcher's whittle.—Dryden. Duke of Guise, Act iv.

WHIZ, n. } Stridere, manifestly (says Skin-WHIZ, v. } ner) from the sound. See Hiss.
To make a noise,—between humming and hissing.

Besight themselves, the west with southern blast,
The gladsome east proud of Aurora's horse;
The woods do whiz.—Surrey. Virgile. Æneis, b. ii.

But when the whizzing bells the silent air do cleave,
And that their greatest speed, them vainly do decline;
And the sharp cruel hawks, they at their backs do view,
Themselves for very fear they instantly inew.

Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 20.

The sailers softly spread their sailes, nor dare
Shake their strong shrowds within the whizzing aire.
May. Lucan. Pharsalia, b. ii.

Fierce Turnus first to nearer distance drew,
And poiz'd his pointed spear before he threw:
Then, as the winged weapon whizz'd along;
See now, said he, whose arm is better strung.
Dryden. Virgil. Æneis, b. x.

But what he especially values himself upon is, that in all the campaigns he has made, he never once duck'd at the whiz of a cannon-ball.—Guardian, No. 92.

By your superior skill—the goat was won!
Have you a jointed pipe, indecent clown!
Whose whizzing straws with harsher discord jarr'd,
As in the streets your wretched rhymes you marr'd.
Beattie. Horace, Past. 3.

WHO. } Goth. Hwas; A. S. Hwa, hua;
WHOM. } Dan. Huo; Dut. Wie; Ger. Wer; WHOSE. } Sw. Ho, (anciently Huo, hua, hue and ha, Ihre.)

It has been suggested in v. that How is from the A. S. Hiwan, to hew; hiwe, effigies; the form or fashion; the manner or means; the state or condition. How (quo modo) does he look? how does he do? how does he feel?—are questions all applied to the form or fashion, &c. of the person concerning whom the inquiry is made. How, in A. S. is Hu, and also Hwu. Who is Hua, hwa; and this latter, by a mere change of place in the aspirate, is Wha (a broad, whaw), whoo, who.
R. Gloucester and others, following the A. S. form, Hu, hua (without the aspirate), write—Ho, hoso;
and Ihre tells us how variously the Sw. Ho was written. The transposition hw into wh is common.
See Lye.

Who, then, may be explained to denote,—the form or frame, the model, the image, of some person or thing spoken of; latterly restricted to the person only, to the identification of the individual person.

From Who, are composed, who-se, who-m, by the addition of the term. és, and ém.

What, is,—who-ad, or who-ed, whad, what: the past part. Hw-ad, hwed, hwad, hwat, of the verb Hw-an.

Which, is,—who, each. See SUCH.

When, is,—who (or what) one, (sc.) moment.
See THEN.

Where, is,—who (or what) ere, i.e. place. See
THERE.

Whither, is,—who (or what) there (the ere), i.e.
what the place.

Wiclif writes,—“Ye witen which we were.”
Bible, 1551,—“Ye know after what maner we behaved.” Wiclif,—“He forgat which he was.”
Bible, 1551,—“He forgetteth what his fashion was.” Bible, 1583,—“What maner of one he was.”

The Scotch corresponding words are,— Quha, quihk, quhen, quhar. The Scotch etymologists have written largely to account for this Q. Some learned persons have suggested that it may be the “ancient Æolic digamma, aspirated in pronunciation.” This digamma must be accounted for from a different letter, viz.: B, and its cognates, p, f, v. Q is the common Gothic or prefix, Ga, Ge, or Ce, united in pronunciation with the vowel following; thus in A. S. we find Wicc-ian, and Cwicc-ian, in Ger. Wecken, and Quicken; and Wick, equivalent to Quick, is, among our northern countrymen, now in common use.

Lennep does not attempt to give any reason for the Greek prefixes K and T, and Scheide mis-names them literas serviles.

Some other pronouns, not hitherto traced to their source, seem to claim an origin in common with How and Who; and it may be prudent to place them in connexion here.

Why (qua re)—A. S. and Sw. Hwy, Dut. Wy, Dan. Hvi.

We (pron.), differing little in form from the Dut. Wie, who, or the Ger. Wie, how, has been applied to denote the person speaking; in grammatical arrangement called the first person plural, and nominative case.

We (oue), with the common term. es, forms,
we-es; by contraction, wes; by change of vowel,
VOL. II.

wos, or wus; and it is, by transposition, variously written,—ows, ous, us.

Our,—Sw. Wa-or, Dan. V-or, is,—we, or ou, with the common term. er.

The pron. You, ye, must be ascribed to the same root. You, in A. S. is Eow; your is ower; and anciently they are respectively written,—owe, ow or ou, ower or oure; they are also written,— gow, ghou, goure, and the g must be accounted for as in the Scottish Quha; it is the common prefix, ge-; thus, ge-ow, gow or ghou, and the g softened, as in numberless other instances, into y.
And this y may have been preserved, prefixed, to discriminate the identification of persons spoken to from those speaking.

Your (A. S. Eow-er), is,—you, with the common term. er. It has been noticed under different pronouns (he, it), that they were not anciently confined to gender or number; and it is equally clear, that we, ou, and you, were not restricted to person. Chaucer writes,—It am I; and the expressions,—I am he, we are they, you are they, are current in modern speech.

The Spirit of God hath royally and wholesomely tempered the holy scriptures so, as both by the plaine places he might prevent our hunger, and by the obscure he might avoid our nice slothfulness.—Bp. Hall. Dissuasive from Popery.

Much might be said to this purpose for the convenience of out-funerals, without respect of those Jewish grounds, who held a kind of impurity in the corpses of the dead: but that, which might be said, is rather out of matter of wholesomnesse, and civill considerations, than out of the grounds of theology.—Id. Ser. preached at Exeter, Aug. 24, 1637.

Upon this question what supported or kept up this chain: would it be a sufficient answer to say, that the first (or lowest) link hung upon a second (or that next above it), the second or rather the first and second together upon the third, and so on ad infinitum? for what holds up the whole?
Wollaston. Religion of Nature, s. 5.

The people distasted, and contemn'd all the doctrines, and instructions that were not deliver'd after their own fashion, though otherwise never so seasonable, and wholesome.—Glanvill. Ess. 7.

The wholesomness of his meat or drink would not give him reason to venture on it: and I would fain know, what it is he could do upon such grounds, as are capable of, no doubt, no objection.—Locke. Hum. Underst. b. iv. c. 11.

When they came on board they congratulated each other upon their safety, with a joy that no man can feel who has not been exposed to equal danger; and as I had suffered great anxiety at their not returning in the evening of the day on which they set out, I was not wholly without my share.—*Cook. veneficus was applied to—persons of infamous character. Skinner, among other suggestions, proposes the A. S. Wiccian, incantare, q. d. be- witched; and Tooke considers wicked to be merely witched (k for ch) and (as witch also) to be the past tense, used as a participle of the A. S. Wiccian.
"All atrocious crimes," he observes, "were attributed by our ancestors to enchantment, sorcery, and witchcraft; and in indictments at this day the crime is attributed to the instigations of the devil."

Tempted, allured, enticed, drawn, led,—to vice, to the commission of any vice, sin, or crime; to viciousness, sinfulness, criminality: and, hence,— vicious, sinful, criminal, flagitious, depraved;
also—mischievous, pernicious, baneful.

Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 587.

— Well thou didst advise,
Yet not for thy aduise or threats I fly
These wicked tents devoted, least the wrauth
Impendent, raging into sudden flame Distinguish not.—Milton. Paradise Lost, b. v.

Those tents thou sawst so pleasant, were the tents
Of wikkednes, wherein shall dwell his race
Who slew his brother; studious they appear
Of arts that polish life, inventers rare,
Unmindful of thir Maker, though his spirit
Taught them, but they his gifts acknowledg'd none.
Id. Ib. b. xi.

Self preservation requires all men not only barely to defend themselves against aggressors, but many times also to persecute such, and only such, as are wicked and dangerous.—Wollaston. Religion of Nature, s. 1.

But they, who get wickedly, spend for the most part, foolishly, perhaps wickedly too: and so all that stays by them is their guilt.—Secker, vol. vi. Lect. 26.

Yet, as all this arose from infirmity, not wikkednes, they

WILD, adj. } Dut. Wild; Ger. Wild;
WILD, n. } Sw. Wild; A. S. awild;
WILDLY. } an; Ger. Wilden, sylvescere.
WILDNESS. } Wachter says,—it is spoken,
WILDER, v. } 1. of beasts; 2. of plants; 3. of WILDERNESS. } any things that are in sylva, WILDING, n. } and then, allegorically, of the manners of animals. Tooke begins where Wachter ends—with the manners or dispositions of the animals, (sc.) “as willed, will'd, (or self-will'd), in opposition to those (whether men or beasts) who are tamed or subdued (by reason or otherwise) to the will of others or of societies.” (See the quotation from Beau. & Fletch.) The word would then be extended to the places inhabited by such animals, to the natural productions of such places.
Wild, adj. thus, will denote—

Self-governed or directed, in a manner to gratify or please self; untamed, unsubdued, ungoverned, uncultivated, uncivilized, irregular, disorderly, inordinate, extravagant; licentious, turbulent, ferociou, savage.

Wilder,—see BE-WILDER.

It is the greatest prayse to a citee, to haue their borders a great way of wasted, in such sort that it may seme like a *wylde*nesse.—Goldinge. Caesar, fol. 161.

I glory not in cruelty, ye wrong me;
Nor grow up water'd with the tears of women;
This let me tell ye, howsoe'r I shew to ye,
Wild, as ye please to call it, or self-will'd;
When I see cause I can both do and suffer
Freely, and feelingly, as a true gentleman.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Wild Goose Chase, Act iv. sc. 3.

Next Chemos, th' obscene dread of Moab's sons,
From Aroar to Nebo, and the wild
Of southmost Abarim, in Hesebon
And Honoraim, Seons realm, beyond

Beaum. & Fletch. The Woman's Prize, Act iv. sc. 1.

He that says, an action which God hath not commanded is of it self necessary, he that says, God is rightly worshipped by an act or ceremony concerning which himself hath no way express'd his pleasure, is superstitious, or a will-worshipper.—Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. ii. c. 3.

Two things he [God] willeth, that we should be good, and that we should be happy ; the first in order to the second, for that vertue is the certain way, and a necessary qualification to felicity.—Barrow. vol. iii. Ser. 4.

We find in ourselves a power to begin or forbear, continue or end several actions of our minds, and motions of our bodies, barely by a thought or preference of the mind ordering, or, as it were, commanding, the doing or not doing such or such a particular action. This power which the mind has thus to order the consideration of any idea, or the forbearing to consider it ; or to prefer the motion of any part of the body to its rest, and vice versa in any particular instance, is that what we call the will. The actual exercise of that power by directing any particular action, or its forbearance, is what we call volition or willing.
Locke. Hum. Underst. b. ii. c. 21.

But farther to enforce these duties, be pleased to cast a glance on two considerations. 1. What the will is to which,
2. Whom the willer is to whom, we must submit.
Barrow. vol. iii. Ser. 4.

For the same reason that a man is obliged not to depart wilfully out of this life, which is the general station that God has appointed him ; he is obliged likewise to attend the duties of that particular station or condition of life ; whatsoever it be, wherein Providence has at present placed him ;
with diligence, and contentment.
Clarke. On the Evidences, Prop. 1.

'Tis impossible but they must wish, God would be pleased

If we listen to the common discourses of mankind, we shall find them speaking of several wills, several agents in the same persons resisting, counteracting, overpowering and controuling one another : hence the so usual expression of the spiritual and carnal wills of the man, and of the beast, of self-will and reason, of denying our wills, subduing our passions, or being enslaved by them, of acting unwillingly or against our will, and the like.

WINDOW, n.

WINDOW, v.

WINDOWY.

Skinner thinks the people of Lincolnshire more properly pronounce,—Windore: the door or passage for the wind. In A. S. it is Eaght-thyrl, eah-thyrl: a bore, or hole bored for the eyes, or sight. In Sp. Ventana, from Viento, the wind; and the purpose of—

A window is,—to admit air and light; to permit sight or vision: the word is applied to the opening, and to the transparent material placed within it.

For we buldeth a burwgh, a brod and a large, A chireh and a chapitle, with chaumbers alofte.

Nowe be there lustie somer floures,
Nowe be there stormie winter shoures
Now be the daies, now be the nightes,
So stant there nothyng all vprightes.
Gower. Con. A. Prol.

You may then after your first setting forth, search and discover somewhat further then you had discovered before your wintering, so farre as you shall thinke convenient.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 434.

I'll study for thy punishment, and it shall last Longer and sharper than a tedious winter.
Beaum. & Fletcher. Cupid's Revenge, Act iv.

Petru. Pray farewell. Is there no keeping
A wife to one man's use? no wintering
These cattel without straying?
Id. The Woman's Prize, Act iii. sc. 3.

The air growing more winterly in the month of Aprill, all places were in a manner overflowed by the waters coming down.—Camden. History of Q. Elizabeth, an. 1595.

Hee compareth his carefull case to the sad season of the yeere, to the frostie ground, to the frozen trees, and to his owne winter-beaten flocke.
Spenser. Shepheard's Calender. January, Arg.

When either corne is winter-proud, or other plants put forth and bud too earely, by reason of the milde and warme aire; if there follow any cold weather upon it, all is nipped, blasted, and burnt away.—Holland. Plinie, b. xvii. c. 2.

See, winter comes, to rule the varied year,
Sullen and sad, with all its rising train,
Vapours, and clouds, and storms.—Thomson. Winter.

Death is a winter, that as it withers the rose and lily, so it kills the nettle and thistle.—Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 14.

Haste then, and thither let us take our flight,
Ere the clouds gather, and the wintry sky
Descends in storms to intercept our passage.
Rowe. Jane Shore, Act ii.

WIR

The first and on which the others depended, was the great dislike I had to be inactive for six or seven months; which would have been the necessary consequence of wintering in any of these northern parts.
Cook. Third Voyage, b. iv. c. 10.

Arcadian ease no longer charms,
For war and fame alone can please,
His throbbing bosom beats to arms,
To war the hero moves, through storms and wintry seas.—Falconer. Ode to the Duke of York.

WIPE, v. } A. S. Wip-an, ian, tergere.
WIPE, n. } To move along, and in contact WI'PER. } with, any thing; with the surface
WI'PING, n. } of any thing; to stroke.
To wipe, implies less pressure than to rub: and seems merely to denote—

A moving continuity of touch.
To wipe out, to clear off, or away.
A wipe, (met.)—is a blow, a stroke, a hit.

Thei woshe hym and wyped hym. and wonde hym in cloutes.
Piers Plouhman, p. 35.

And he turnide to the womman: and seyde to Symound, seest thou this womman? I entride into thin hous: thou gaf no watir to my feet, but this hath moistid my feet with teiris: And wipide with her heeris.—Wiclif. Luk, c. 7.

And he tourned to the woman, and sayd vnto Symon: seyst thou this woman? I entred into thyne house, & thou gauest me no water to my fete: but she hathe washed my fete wyth teares, and wyped them wyth the heeres of her heade.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

Hire over lippe wiped she so clene,
That in hire cuppe was no ferthing sene
Of grese, whan she dronken hadde hire draught.
Chaucer. Prol. to the Canterbury Tales, v. 134.

And as an hounde that goth to folde
And hath there take what he wolde,
His mouth vpon the gras he wipeth.—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

And whatsoever is done with i the lawes of God, though it be wrought by the body, as the very wiping of shoes & such lyke, how soeuer grosse they appeare outward.
Udal. Romaynes, Prol.

Whom in her lap she laid:
The black swart gore wiping dry with her clothes.
Surrey. Virgile. Ensis, b. iv.

And gan recomfort her in her rude wise,
With womannish compassion of her plaint,
Wiping the teares from her suffused eyes,
And bidding her sit downe, to rest her faint
And wearie limbs awhile.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 7.

Where their maids and their makes,
At dancings and wakes,
Had their napkins and posies,
And the wipers for their noses.
B. Jonson. Masque of Owls.

As [death] defaces all the world's glory, so it covers all disgraces, wipes off all tears, silences all complaints, buries all disquiet and discontent.—Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 14.

When therefore we see the deepest impressions of evil-custom, and the darkest stains of corrupted nature, thus suddenly wiped out and effaced, to what must we ascribe so total a reform, but to the all-powerful operation of grace?
Warburton. The Doctrine of Grace, b. ii. c. 1.

WIRE, v. } Perhaps, says Lye, from WIRE, n. } the Dut. Wieren, gyrare, cir-WIRY. } cuire, to go around;—and WIRE-DRAW, v. } Skinner knows not whether a gyrando, or from the Fr. Virer, to turn round.

Wire is applied to—
Metal spun, pulled, or drawn out into threads or fibres.

To wire-draw.—to draw out feebly into length.
Wiring, (in Fletcher,)—flowing in currents thin as wire.

The euen draught of the wier drawer, maketh the wier to been euen, and supplie werchyng. and if he stinted in his draught, the wier breaketh asonder.
Chaucer. Testament of Loue, b. iii.

It was adorned and decked with rich and precious stones abundantly, among the which one was a rubie, which stood a handfull higher then the top of the crown vpon a small wier, it was as big as a good beane.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 319.

And in one vessel both together meint,
Still them with equal never quenching firing;
Then in small streams (through all the isle wiring)
Sends it to every part, both heat and life inspiring.
P. Fletcher. Purple Island, c. 4.

In stead of yellow lockes she did deuise,
With golden wire to weaue her curled head;
Yet golden wire was not so yellow thrice
As Florimells faire haire.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 8.

WIS

This wier mine own hair covers: and this face has been so far from being dear to any, that it ne're cost penny painting.—Beaum. & Fletcher. Philaster, Act ii.

A thing so truely form'd, shap'd out by symetry,
Has all the organs that belong to man,
And working too, yet to shew all these
Like dead motions moving upon wyers?
Id. The Woman Hater, Act iii. sc. 1.

There on the other side, I did behold
A woman sitting sorrowfully wailing,
Rending her yellow locks, like wirie gold,
About her shoulders carelessly downe trailing.
Spenser. Ruines of Tim.

Where but by chance a siluer drop hath falne,
Euen to that drop ten thousand wirie fiends
Doe glew themselves in sociable griefe.
Shakespeare. K. John, Act iii. sc. 4.

You injuriously wier-draw him to presbyters, and foist in (seniores and præpositos) which are farre from the clause and matter.—Bp. Hall. Def. of the Hum. Rem. § 8.

Thou hadst land and thousands, thou spendst, and flungst away, and yet it flows in double: I purchased, wrung, and wier-draw'd, for my wealth, lost, and was cozen'd.
Beaum. & Fletcher. The Scornful Lady, Act v.

Forty other devices I had of wiremen and the chandrie, and I know not what else: but all succeeded alike.
B. Jonson. Love Restored.

I profess not myself either skilled, or delighted, in mystical interpretations of scripture; nor am I for forcing, or wiredrawing the sense of the text, so as to make it designedly foretell the king's death and murder.—South, vol. v. Ser. 2.

It [mediocrity in poetry] is become a nauseous dose, though wrapped up in hot-pressed and wire-wove paper.
Knox. Ess. No. 174.

Donne. History of the Septuagint, p. 214.

There were, at that time, on the bench of justices many Sir Paul Eithersides, hard, unfeeling, superstitious wiseacres.—B. Jonson. The Divelle is an Asse, Act v. sc. 5. N. 1.

I that am fully persuaded, that the infinitely wise God made all things in perfect wisdom, cannot satisfy myself why he should be supposed to print upon the minds of men some universal principles; whereof those that are pretended innate, and concern speculation, are of no great use; and those that concern practice, not self-evident, and neither of them distinguishable from some other truths not allowed to be innate.—Locke. Hum. Underst. b. i. c. 4.

If we will disbelieve every thing, because we cannot certainly know all things; we shall do much—what as wisely as he, who would not use his legs, but sit still and perish, because he had no wings to fly.—Id. Ib. c. 1.

In strictness of language, there is a difference between knowledge and wisdom; wisdom always supposing action, and action directed by it. With respect to the first, viz.
knowledge, the Creator must know, intimately, the constitution and properties of the things which he created; which seems also to imply a foreknowledge of their action upon one another, and of their changes; at least, so far as the same result from trains of physical and necessary causes.
Paley. Natural Theology, c. 24.

The wisdom of the Deity, as testified in the works of creation, surpasses all idea we have of wisdom, drawn from the highest intellectual operations of the highest class of intelligent beings with whom we are acquainted; and, which is of the chief importance to us, whatever be its compass or extent, which it is evidently impossible that we should be able to determine, it must be adequate to the conduct of that order of things under which we live.—Id. Ib.

Desire in a lax sense, respects only actions and events that depend not on us; as when I desire that my friend may have a son to represent him; or that my country may flourish in arts and sciences; but such internal act is more properly termed a wish than desire.
Kaims. Elements of Criticism, vol. i. p. 42.

WIT

A wish is an inactive desire. It is the result of that longing after happiness so natural to man, in cases where no expectations can be formed, no efforts can be made.

Cogan. On the Passions, pt. i. c. 2. § 3.

I sat looking wishfully at the clock; for which, to increase my satisfaction, I had chosen the inscription, "Art is long, and life is short."—Idler, No. 67.

We looked at the fruit very wishfully, but not thinking it safe to climb, we were obliged to leave it without tasting a single nut.—Cook. First Voyage, b. iii. c. 7.

WISP. Dut. Ghisp. flagellum; quispel, aspergillum: wischen, to wipe, (Skinner.) It is perhaps formed upon the verb to wipe.

A quantity, a bundle of any thing, fitted or used to wipe,—as a wisp of straw, to wipe a horse; a bundle of stalks, &c.

The virtue of that woman, were all the good deeds Of all thy families, bound in one fagot, From Adam to this hour, but with one sparkle Would fire that wisp, and turn it to light ashes.

As for the farthest cheek-teeth in a man's head, which be called genuini, (i. the wit-teeth) they come about the time he is twentie yeeres old; and in many at foure-score yeeres of age.—Holland. Plinie, b. xi. c. 25.

Men who have a great deal of wit, and prompt memories, have not always the clearest judgment, or deepest reason; wit lying most in the assemblage of ideas and putting those together with quickness and variety, wherein can be found any resemblance or congruity, thereby to make up pleasant pictures, and agreeable visions in the fancy.

Locke. Hum. Underst. b. ii. c. 11.

I shall only add to it [Locke's account of wit] that every resemblance of ideas is not that which we call wit, unless it be su an one that gives delight and surprize to the reader.—Mr. Locke's account of wit with this short explanation comprehends most of the species of wit, as metaphors, similitudes, allegories, enigmas, mottoes, parables, fables, dreams, visions, dramatick writings, burlesque, and all the methods of allusion.—Spectator, No. 62.

Indeed syllogism is thought to be of necessary use, even to the lovers of truth, to show them the fallacies that are often concealed in florid, witty, or involved discourses.

Locke. Hum. Underst. b. iv. c. 17.

This raving upon antiquity in matter, Horace has wittily described and exposed in one of his satires.

Id. Conduct of the Understanding, § 24.

I have heard (says one of them) of anchovies dissolved in sauce, but never of an angel in hallelujahs: a mighty witticism! (if you will pardon a new word,) but there is some difference between a laugh and a critick.

Dryden. The State of Innocence, Pref.

All the parts were acted to perfection; the actors were careful of their carriage, and no one was guilty of the affectation to insert witticisms of his own; but a due respect was had to the audience, for encouraging this accomplished player.—Tatler, No. 1.

He [Parker] did still courageously go on in a way of pleasing, and at the same time, exposing himself, and furnish'd his readers with matter only of laughter at him, and not at those whom he endeavoured to vilify, and was in 1682, and after, cried up as the main witmonger surviving to the fanatical party.—Wood. Athenæ Oxon. vol. ii.

Rowe. Jane Shore, Act iv. sc. 1.

If we can find in our hearts to take our leave of sin, if we can disengage ourselves from the witcheries of present allurements, if we can but get over the threshold of virtuous conversation, we shall find the rest beyond expectation smooth and expedite.—Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 17.

An old parrot he had in Brazil during his government there, that spoke, and asked, and answered common questions like a reasonable creature: so that those of his train there generally concluded it to be witchery or possession.

Locke. Hum. Underst. b. ii. c. 27.

Strange things, the neighbours say, have happen'd here;
Wild shrieks have issu'd from the hollow tombs;
Dead men have come again, and walk'd about;
And the great bell has toll'd, unring, untouch'd.
Such tales their cheer at wake or gossiping,
When it draws near to witching time of night.

Blair. The Grave.

To deny the possibility, nay, actual existence of witchcraft and sorcery, is at once flatly to contradict the revealed word of God, in various passages both of the Old and New Testament: and the thing itself is a truth to which every nation in the world hath in its turn borne testimony, either by examples seemingly well attested, or by prohibitory laws; which at least suppose the possibility of commerce with evil spirits.—*Blackstone. Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 475.

WITH. } A. S. With, withinnan, with-
WITHIN. } uttan. With has descended to us
WITHOUT. } from two different A. S. verbs, WITHA'L. } viz. With-an, to join, and (Goth.

Wairthan) Weorthan, wyrth-an, to be. From the latter we have the compounds with-in and with-out; i. e. be in, be out. With, when from the verb Wyrthan, is equivalent to By, (the imper. of Be;) and Mr. Tyrwhitt considers the expressions with meschance, with misadventure, with sorwe, to be parenthetical curses: and so far Tooke coincides—the literal meaning of those phrases being, (not, as Tyrwhitt thinks—God yeue, but,) Be mischance, be misadventure, be sorrow,—to him or them, concerning whom those words are spoken. Tyrwhitt also supposes—with evil prefe, with sorry grace—to have the same meaning; from which Tooke dissents, believing with to be in those instances the imper. of With-an, to join. This difference of opinion shews that the distinction is not always manifest: in some cases it is clear enough, as—he was slain with a sword, he was slain with all his company. Generally speaking, when with denotes—instrument, cause, means, it is the imper. of Wyrth-an, to be: when it denotes—union, conjunction, it is the imper. of With-an, to join; and see WITH, n. Usage appears to have established some distinctions, where the meaning is the same; as he died with hunger, he died by poison.

With (Wyrth) denotes—cause, instrument, means.

With (With) denotes—union, conjunction, connexion, concomitance.

Chaucer. Testament of Cresceide.

We must nedes well know that all these braunches of heretikes fallen from the church, the vine of Christes mystical body, seme thei neuer so freshe & grene, bee yet in dede but witheringes & wyther, & shal drye vp, able to serue for nothing, but for the fyre.

Sir T. More. Workes, p. 186.

The gouernment of ye whole host was committed to Camulogenus an Aulerk, who albeit he were almost wythred for age, yet for his singular knowledge in feats of war, he was called to that honor.—Goldinge. Caesar, fol. 214.

As budding branch rent from the natue tree,
And throwen forth, till it be withered:
Such is the state of men: thus enter wee
Into this life with woe, and end with misere.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 2.

In children many time an hope of excellent things appears, which in riper age for want of cherishing, fades and withers away: a certain sign that nature is not so weak as parents and tutors are negligent.

Hales. Rem. Ser. on Philip. iv. 13.

The dead witheredness of good affections; [here ye shall receive] life and vigour.—Bp. Hall. Cont. Pool of Bethesda.

Is not feare a thing naturall, and for mens preseruacion necessary, implanted in vs by the prouident and most gracious Giuer of all good things, to the end that wee might not runne head-long vpon those mischiefes wherewith we are not able to encounter, but vse the remedie of shunning those euils which wee haue not the abilitie to withstand.
Hooker. Remedie against Sorrow & Feare.

Long had the Grecians (tir'd with fruitless care,
And weary'd with an unsuccessful war,)
Resolv'd to raise the siege, and leave the town;
And had the gods permitted they had gone.
But oft the wintry seas, and southern winds,
Withstood their passage home, and chang'd their minds.

When I speake of autoriti, I folow Tullies meanig, who in the weightie importance of witnes bearing, attributeth autorite vnto such as be wittie and welthy men, because of the comō peoples iudgemente, thoughte it be not alwaies aryght, as he sayeth, yet because it is not easily alred.
Bp. Gardner. Of True Obedience, fol. 38.

Euidences of writings be shewed, witnesse be sworn, and heard before them, not after the fashion of the ciuill law, but openly, that not only the twelue, but the iudges, the parties, and as many as be present may heare what each witnesse doth say.—Smith. Commonwealth, b. ii. c. 18.

He was now so well become a constant witnesse of the passion of Christ, that by crucifying the desires of his flesh, he gave an example of an heavenly conversation unto all his subjects.—Martin. Marriage of Priests.

For mee be witnesse all the host of heav'n,
If counsels different, or danger shun'd
By mee, have lost our hopes.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. i.

Yee that in waters glide, and yee that walk
The earth, and stately tread, or lowly creep;
Witness if I be silent, morn or euen,
To hill or valley, fountain, or fresh shade
Made vocal by my song, and taught his praise.
Id. Ib. b. v.

To be a martyr signifies only to witness the truth of Christ, but the witnessing of the truth was then so generally attended with this event, that martyrdom now signifies not only to witness, but to witness by death.
South, vol. i. Ser. 3.

My words to sacred truth shall be confin'd,
My deeds shall shew the greatness of my mind.
That I have lov'd, I own; that still I love,
I call to witness all the pow'rs above.
Dryden. Sigismonda & Guiscardo.

But some have appeared among its modern advocates, actuated, I am persuaded, (for their writings on this subject witness it,) by the same humble spirit of resigned devotion which gave birth to the plan of arbitrary predestination.
Bp. Horsley, vol. ii. Ser. 19.

There is satisfactory evidence that many professing to be original *witnesse*s of the Christian miracles, passed their lives in labours, dangers, and sufferings, voluntarily undergone in attestation of the accounts which they delivered, and solely in consequence of their belief of those accounts;
and that they also submitted, from the same motives, to new rules of conduct.

Woad: a thing of so great vent and uses amongst English driers, which can not be yeilded sufficiently in our owne country for spare of ground, may be planted in Virginia, there being ground enough.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 269.

Al the Britons doe dye themselves with woade, [vitro] which setteth a bleuish color upon them.
Goldinge. Cæsar, fol. 117.

But to goe no farther than into Gaule, there groweth an hearbe there like unto Plantaine, and they call it Glastum, [i. e. woad.] with the juice whereof the women of Brittain, as well the married wives, as young maidens their daughters, annoint and die their bodies all over: resembling by that tincture the colour of the Moores and Ethiopians.
Holland. Plinie, b. xxii. c. 1.

In the meantime a proclamation was set forth to restrain the covetousness of some private men in England, who converted arable lands and the richest pasture-grounds to the sowing of the herb isatis, commonly called woad, for the use of driers.—Camden. Hist. of Q. Elizabeth, an. 1585.

Phi. Then thus I turn

My language to your prince, you foreign man.
Nere stare nor put on wonder, for you must Indure me, and you shall.

Beaum. & Fletcher. Philaster, Act i.

— I found

The new created world, which fame in heav'n
Long had foretold, a fabrick wonderful
Of absolute perfection, therein man
Plac't in a paradise, by our exile
Made happe: him by fraud I have seduc't
From his creator, and the more to increase Your wonder, with an apple.—Milton. Par. Lost, b. x.

Behold a wonder! they but now who seem'd
In bigness to surpass earth's giant sons
Now less then smallest dwarfs, in narrow room Throng numberless. Id. Ib. b. i.

And after, all the rascall many ran,
Heaped together in rude rabblement,
To see the face of that victorious man:
Whom all admired, as from Heauen sent,
And gaz'd vpon with gaping wonderment.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 12.

And have call'd them the choice handy works of nature,
the patterns of perfection, and the wonderment of women.

Beaum. & Fletcher. The Woman-Hater, Act iv. sc. 1.

How do I look, Sir, in this handsome trim?
Methinks I am wondrous brave.
Id. The Custom of the Country, Act v.

The father wonder'd at the son's return,
And knew not whether to reioice or mourn;
But doubtfully receiv'd, expecting still
To learn the secret causes of his alter'd will.
Dryden. Cymon & Iphigenia.

Thirdly, That the self-existent and original cause of all things, is an intelligent being; appears abundantly from the excellent variety, order, beauty, and wonderful contrivance, and fitness of all things in the world, to their proper and respective ends.—Clarke. On the Attributes, Prop. 8.

To this wise management it is owing, that the stream of beneficence, which at first was not great, hath, by several rivulets, which have since fallen into it, in its course, wonderfully enlarged its current, and grown wider and deeper still, the further it hath flowed.—Atterbury, vol. ii. Ser. 7.

This cloud hindred them from discerning the excellency of his doctrine, from regarding the sanctity of his life, from being duly affected with the wonderfulness of his works.

Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 43.

They might have made the same wonderment of any other rivers which run any long course from out the torrid zone.

Dampier. Voyages, an. 1688.

— Tho' 'tis hard,
'Tis wond'rous hard, when I remember thee
(Dear native Greece I) and you, ye weeping maids,
That were companions of my virgin youth!
Rowe. Tamerlane, Act iv.

Wonder expresses an embarrassment of the mind after it has somewhat recovered from the first percussion of surprise.—Cogan. On the Passions, pt. i. c. 2. § 2.

All the primary pleasures of the imagination result from the perception of greatness, or wonderfulness, or beauty in objects.—Akenside. Pleasures of Imagination, Arg.

WOO, v. } A. S. Wogan, nubere; hence

WOO'ING, n. } Wog-ere, a wooer. Awogod, am-bitus, petitus, wood, (Lye.) It is formed probably upon the verb Weg, or Wag-an, to go, to go to, to sue.

To sue, (sc.) for favour or good will; to solicit,
to court.

Fulle so frendes he had, and fele foos inowe,
Unto the duke of Normundie he went for to wouwe.
R. Brunne, p. 40.

But sire as of my lady selue
Though she haue wowers. x. or twelue,
For no mistruste I haue of hir
Me greueth nought. Gower. Con. A. b. ii.

Yet was she faire, and in her countenance
Dwelt simple truth in seemely fashion.
Long thus I woo'd her with due obseruance,
In hope vnto my pleasure to haue wonne;
But was as farre at last, as when I first begonne.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 7.

With looks, with words, with gifts he oft her wowed,
And mixed threats among, and much unto her vowed.
Id. Ib. b. vi. c. 11.

We are young yet—desire the wayes of honour,
That liberty and common conversation,
The poison of pure spirits, might, like women,
Woo us to wander from.
Beaum. & Fletcher. The Two Noble Kinsmen, Act ii. sc. 2.

— I will humble him.

And her stout heart that stands on such defiance;
And let me see her champions that dare venture
Her high and mighty woos, keep your guards close,
And as you love your lives be diligent.
Id. The Island Princess, Act ii.

— Yet we like beasts still cry'd,
Poor men can number their woers, give us
Abundance: we had it, and this curse withal.
Id. Cupid's Revenge, Act i.

My maiden muse flies the lascivious swaines,
And scornes to soyle her lines with lustfull straines.
Will not dilate (nor on her fore-head beare Immodestie's abhorred character)
His shamelesse prying, his undecent doings;
His curious searches, his respectlesse woosings.
Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b. i. s. 2.

The temple-haunting barlet [martlet] does approue,
By his loued masonry, that the heauens breath
Smells woosingly here.—Shakespeare. Macbeth, Act i. sc. 6.

Almanz. Those whom we love, we should esteem 'em

"differing in vowell, yet signifie one thing, to wit, a forrest. Of the first — Waldham—forrest retaineth yet the name. Of the second, the weald of Kent, that is, the forrest part of Kent. Of the third, which is wold, (the l, and the highnesse of the sound of o being omitted,) is become in the Netherlands wout, and in England—wood."

Yorke-wold and Cots-wold, he believes, were woody places, and had their names for that reason.

Wald is derived by Wachter from an obsolete verb, Wal-en, crescere, luxuriose crescere, to grow luxuriously; in A. S. Welig-ian, ditare, to enrich.

Wood, (silva),—a collection of trees; (lignum)

And worship her as goddesse of the wood,
And old Sylvanus selfe bethinks not, what
To thinke of wight so faire, but gazing stood,
In doubt to deeme her borne of earthly brood.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 6.

Pet. In such a number, one would swear they grew,
The hills are wooded with their partizans.
And all the valleys overgrown with darts,
As moors are with rank rushes.
Beaum. & Fletch. Bonduca, Act i. sc. 2.

But when they muster before dinner, and sweep the table with a wooden dagger, and then they are troublesome too.
Id. The Coxcomb, Act ii.

The woody nymphes, faire Hamadryades,
Her to behold doe thither runne apace,
And all the troupe of light-foote Naiades
Flock all about to see her lovely face.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 6.

Woodgods, and satyres, and swift dryades,
With many fairies oft were dauncing seene.
Spenser. Virgile. Gnat.

What is now the woodland in Warwickshire, was heretofore part of a larger wild or forest called Arden. The reliques of whose name in Dene of Monmouthshire, and that Arduenna or La Forest d'Ardenne, by Henault and Luxembourg, shews likelihood of interpretation of the yet used English name of woodland.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion. Selden. Illust.

— Fairest bud
Of maiden vertues, when I leave to be
The true admirer of thy chastitie,
Let me deserve the hot polluted name
Of the wild woodman.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Faithful Shepherdess, Act i.

Thou woodman and forrager both, see thou neither cut nor lop trees, see thou gather no greene leaves and tendrils for thy fodder at noone-tide.
Holland. Plinie, b. xviii. c. 33.

We also by our senses perceive the colour and brittleness of charcoal, whereby we come by the knowledge of another power in fire, which it has to change the colour and consistency of wood.—Locke. Hum. Underst. b. ii. c. 23.

We saw many wooden crosses erected in the way, which created some jealousy in us that here were some Spaniards.

I find the Italian a degree higher in compliment than the French; he is longer and more grave in the delivery of it, and more prodigal of words; insomuch, that if one were to be worded to death, Italian is the fittest language, in regard of the fluency and softness of it.—Howell, b. i. Let. 42.

Bp. Hall. Answer to the Vind. of Smectymnuus.

Upon a nearer approach, I find that there is so close a connexion between ideas and words; and our abstract ideas, and general words, have so constant a relation one to another, that it is impossible to speak clearly and distinctly of our knowledge, which all consists in propositions, without considering, first the nature, use, and signification of language.—Locke. Hum. Underst. b. ii. c. 33.

Man had by nature his own organs so fashioned as to be fit to frame articulate sounds, which we call words.
Id. Ib. b. iii. c. 1.

For what else are words and talk against thunder-bolts?
and the weak, empty noise of a querulous rage, against him who can speak worlds, who could word heaven and earth out of nothing, and can when he pleases word them into nothing again?—South, vol. x. Ser. 5.

Men may snarl, and word it high against providence;
but we have already observed what silly, senseless things such verbal assaults are against the Creator and Governor of the universe, and to what little purpose we spend our breath against him who gave it, and can take it away when he pleases.—Id. Ib.

Glos. Enough of this: To deal in wordy compliment
Is much against the plainness of my nature.
Rowe. Jane Shore, Act iii.

An oyster, cast upon the shore,
Was heard, though never heard before,
Complaining in a speech well worded,
And worthy thus to be recorded.—Cowper. The Post, &c.

Fabyan. Chronycle. K. John of France, an. 1356.

Henceforth his might we know, and know our own
So as not either to provoke, or dread
New warr, provok't; our better part remains
To work in close design, by fraud or guile
What force effected not.—Milton. Paradise Lost, b. i.

—Our greatness will appeer
Then most conspicuous, when great things of small,
Useful of hurtful, prosperous of aduerse
We can create, and in what place so e're
Thrive under evil, and work ease out of pain
Through labour and indurance.

workmanly done, inasomuch as he wiped it out many times and began it anew; but never was it to his mind.
Holland. Plutarch, p. 191.

Thier. Oh thou hast drunk the juyce of hemlock too,
Or did upbraided nature make this pair
To shew she had not quite forgot her first Justly prais'd workmanship.
Beaum. & Fletch. Thierry & Theodoret, Act iii.

What time this world's great workmaister did cast
To make all things, such as we now behold,
It seemes that he before his eyes had plac't
A goodly patterne, to whose perfect mould
He fashiond them as comely as he could.
Spenser. An Hymne in honor of Beaultie.

Verely dame Nature (the mother and workemistrisse of all

B. Jonson. The Case is altered, Act iv. sc. 3.

Once when the admiring people would by force have taken him and made him their king, he chose even to work a miracle to avoid that, which was the only thing that could be imagined to have been the design of an impostor.
Clarke. On the Evidences, Prop. 14.

The worker from the work distinct was known,
And simple Reason never sought but one.
Pope. Essay on Man, Ep. 3.

King. O thou hast read me right, hast seen me well,
To thee I have thrown off that mask I wore;
And now the secret workings of my brain

Reynolds. A Journey to Flanders & Holland.

Short date is granted to the farther workings of thy malice;
and all the while thou shalt heavily drag the burden of an unblessed existence.—Bp. Horsley, vol. ii. Ser. 16.

In those trifling manufactures which are destined to supply the small wants of but a small number of people, the whole number of workmen must necessarily be small; and those employed in every different branch of the work can often be collected into the same workhouse, and placed at once under the view of the spectator.

WORLD. } A. S. Weoruld, weoruld; Wo'RLDLY. } Dut. Weereld, wereld; Sw.
Wo'RLDLINESS. } Werld; Ger. Welt, werelt, Wo'RLDLING, n. } anciently wer-old, which Wo'RLDLESS. } (Wachter thinks) meant the age of man, (wer, vir, man, and old, age,) and thence transferred—ad mundum. Kilian derives wereld from weren, to endure, to last, (to wear.)
Junius thinks that weoruld was first used to denote seculum, and subsequently mundus, and that this application was made from the unceasing motion and circumvolution of ages; and thus he traces it to the A. S. verb wær-lan, bi-wær-lan, to pass, ymb-wær-lan, to pass, or go, or turn round, (to whirl.) World is applied to—

The universe, or whole system of created things; to the earth or globe, the human inhabitants, the countries or regions of it; as, (in A. S. also) to time, the age or duration of it; the state or condition, course, manner, or manners of life or existence; the business, employment, or occupation of life; a great multitude; the people.

Worldly (met.) is opposed to heavenly; as earthly also is.

So clene lond ys Engolond, and so pur with outhen ore,
That the fairest men of the world therinne beth ybore.
R. Gloucester, p. 9.

The world stode in all his welthe.
Gower. Con. A. Prol.

Yet death and time consume all wit and worldly fame.
Surrey. Par. on Ecclesiastes, c. 2.

By meane wherof the Saxons dayly drewe to the sayd

Fabyan. Chronicle, c. 83.

They bee worldelinges, and geuyng them selues in to the seruice of worldly affectes, and voyde of the spirite, they hunt after voluptuous pleasures, seke to reigne aloft, and scrape after lucre.—Udal. Jude.

For, the world, which the Greekes by the name of ornament, called κοσμος wee for the perfect neatnesse and absolute eleuancie thereof, have termed mundus.
Holland. Plinie, b. ii. c. 4.

Suffice it then, thou money-god, quoth hee,
That all thine idle offers I refuse.
All that I need I haue; what needeth mee
To covet more than I haue cause to vse?
With such vaine shewes thy worldlings vile abuse.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 7.

Saint Austin himself tells us, by so much as they lov'd their goods more or less, by so much sooner or later they should be sav'd. And what he said of this kind of sin, viz.
too much worldliness, with the same reason he might suppose of others.

Bp. Taylor. Dissuasive from Popery, b. ii. pt. 2.

So sat she, as when speechless griefs tormenting
Locks up the heart, the captive tongue enchainin:
So sat she joyless down in worldless grief complaining.
P. Fletcher. Eliza.

Si. I am content, Sir,
To prove no purchaser.
Mem. Away, thou world-worm.
Thou win a matchless beauty.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Mad Lover, Act ii.

And this [spherical] must be allowed to be the most commodious apt figure for a world on many accounts; as it is most capacious, as its surface is equi-distant from the center, not only of the globe, but (at least nearly) of gravity and motion too, and as some have thought, of the central heat and waters.—Derham. Physico-Theology, b. ii. c. 1.

When we have called off our thoughts from worldly pursuits and engagements, then (and not till then) are we at liberty to fix them on the best, the most deserving, and desirable of objects, God.—Atterbury, vol. i. Ser. 10.

But, good God! what is the heart of such worldlings made of, and what a mind do they bring with them to so holy an ordinance!—South, vol. ii. Ser. 8.

Sure there is need of social intercourse,
Benevolence and peace, and mutual aid,
Between the nations in a world, that seems
To toll the deathbell of its own decease,
And by the voice of all its elements
To preach the gen'ral doom.—Cowper. Task, b. ii.

The poor on the other hand, excluded from the hope of worldly pleasure, were likely to listen with the more attention to the promise of a distant happiness; and, exposed to much actual suffering here, they would naturally be the most alarmed with the apprehension of continued and increased suffering in another world.
Bp. Horsley, vol. i. Ser. 10.

But, supposing we are clear both of worldliness and vanity, still what can we answer with respect to pleasure.
Secker, vol. iv. Ser. 1.

WORM, n. } A. S. Wyrm; Dut. Worm; WORM, v. } Ger. Wurm. Martinus,—from Which after they consume, transferring quite

The substance of their makers into themselves.
B. Jonson. Sejanus, Act iii. sc. 3.

P. Can. I have you in a purse-net,
Good master Picklock, with your worming brain,
And wriggling engine-head of maintenance,
Which I shall see you hole with very shortly.
B. Jonson. Staple of News, Act v. sc. 1

— Damned spirits all,

Alreadie to their wormie beds are gone.
Shakespeare. Midsummer Night's Dreame, Act iii. sc. 2
And thousand flaming serpents hissing flew
About his soul, from hellish sulphur threw,
And every one brandish'd his fiery tongue,
And worming all about his soul they clung;
But he their stings tore out, and to the ground them flung.—G. Fletcher. Christ's Triumph over Death.

I have frequently found great numbers of long slender worms in the stomachs and other parts of fish, particularly cod-fish, especially such as are poor: which worms have worked themselves deeply into the coats and flesh, so that they could not easily be gotten out.
Derham. Physico-Theology, b. viii. c. 6. Note 9.

Animals of the worm kind, being entirely destitute of feet, trail themselves along upon the ground, and find themselves a retreat under the earth, or in the water.
Goldsmith. Animated Nature, pt. vi. b. v. c. 2.

I hate not foes, for they declare,
'Tis war for war, and dare who dare;
But your sly sneaking, worming souls
Whom Friendship scorns and Fear controuls,
Who praise, support, and help by halves,
Like heifers, neither bulls, nor calves.—Lloyd. Charity.

Such [delicate females] students are not to be sent to dull

WORRY, v. } Dut. Worghen; Ger. Wurgh- Wo'RRIER. } en, necare, jugulare, formed upon the respective verbs wer-en and war-en.

Worry is the same word as warray or werrey,— to attack hostilely; to continue to attack or assail; to persecute, to harass, to distress; to destroy by repeated or continued attacks.

And vor Roberd was eldore & eyr, gret folc he sende

No man's life or property will be safe; mankind would worry and prey upon one another, and we should ere-long fall a-sunder into a condition of dissolution and wildness.
Glanvill, Ser. 4.

Hence jarring sectaries may learn
Their real int'rest to discern;
That brother should not war with brother,
And worry and devour each other.
Cowper. Nightingale & Glow-worm.

A want to undo what has been done and alter past events, which being palpably impossible, the mind works without any subject to work upon, and worries herself with empty

WORST, adj. } the Eng. Worse has by some WORST, n. } been derived from to wear; WORST, v. } the A. S. Werian, gerere, et gerendo deterere, whence worse is detritus; he would prefer wriest, from wry, tortus, obliquus. (See WEAR, and DETERIORATE.) Worst is the past part. of Wyrrian,—wyrred, wryrs'd, wyrst, or worst.

To worse or to worst,—is to impair or reduce, (sc. the goodness or strength,) to diminish, to weaken, to injure or hurt, to defeat.

Worse, adj. is used (grammatically) to express comparatively a greater degree of bad or ill.

Worst,—a superlatively greater degree.

Worser,—is common in our old writers, and is used even by Dryden; yet Butler, in his Grammar, which was published in 1633, observes, (p. 37.)—"that worser and lesser are not comparatives, but superfluous comparatives of comparatives; which soon ignorantly use for wors and les."

Who so come to esse [ask] hym rygt of eny trespass, Bote he payde hym the bet, the worse hys ende was.
R. Gloucester, p. 374.

For gef thei hadde eny thing y wonne of castel or of ton,
Wel the worse it wolde be to brynge hem ther don.

In all this heat art thou become so cold,
"To leave me thus forsaken at the worst,
My state at last more wretched than at first?"
Drayton. Barons' Wars, s. 76.

The state of a regenerate man, that it is no other but an ineffective striving and struggling against sin, a contention which he is most commonly worsted, and that this striving is all that he can shew of holiness to be a testimony of his regeneration.—Bp. Taylor. Of Repentance, c. 8. § 1.

Whatever doing, what can we suffer more,
What can we suffer worse? is this then worst,
Thus sitting, thus consulting, thus in arms;
What when we fled amain, pursu'd and strook
With heav'n's afflicting thunder, and besought
The deep to shelter us; this hell then seem'd
A refuge from those wounds: or when we lay Chain'd on the burning lake? that sure was worse.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ii.

Id. Virgil. Æneis, Ded.

Through the anger of providence, a thriving army of rebels had worsted justice, cleared the fields, subdued all opposition and risings, even to the very insurrections of conscience itself.—South, vol. v. Ser. 2.

By the famous treaty of commerce with Portugal, the consumer is prevented by high duties from purchasing of a neighbouring country, a commodity which our own climate does not produce; but is obliged to purchase it of a distant country, though it is acknowledged that the commodity of the distant country is of a worse quality than that of the near one.—Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. iv. c. 8.

Shakespeare. Rich. III. Act iii. sc. 4.

"That God is to be worshipped," is without doubt as great a truth as any can enter into the mind of man, and deserves the first place amongst all practical principles.
But yet it can by no means be thought innate, unless the ideas of God and worship are innate.
Locke. Hum. Underst. b. i. c. 4.

It being evident that God cannot be the God of the dead, but of the living; and that all promises made to such wor- shippers of the true God as at any time forsook all that they had and even life itself for the sake of that worship, could be nothing but mere mockery, if there was no life to come, and God had no power to restore them from the dead.
Clarke. On the Evidences, Prop. 14.

How pale each worshipful and rev'rend guest
Rise from a clergy or a city feast!
Pope. Imitation of Horace, b. ii. Sat. 2.

To this protestation against heathenism, the propriety of which binds the worshippers of the true God in all ages to a weekly sabbath, it is reasonable that Christians should add a similar protestation against Judaism.
Bp. Horsley, vol. ii. Ser. 23.

If the worship of God be a duty of religion, public worship is a necessary institution: forasmuch as, without it, the greater part of mankind would exercise no religious worship

Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. p. 32.

Worsted. These first took their name from Worsted, a village in this county. Originally it is nothing but woollen thred spun very fine, and for the more strength twisted together. But oh! it surpasseth my skill to name the several stuffs (being worsted disguised with weaving and colouring) made thereof.—Fuller. Worthies. Norfolk.

They seemed to have with them all their property, which

Fly, fly, good knights, said hee, fly fast away
If that your lues ye loue, as meet ye should;
Fly fast, and saue your selues from neere decay,
Here may ye not have entrance, though we would:
We would and would againe, if that we could.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 9.

It will be every man's interest to join good performances to spiritual purposes, to subdue the exorbitancies of the flesh, as well as to continue the wounding of the spirits.
Hammond.

And 2. whatsoever you do, you do, first against one velleity (or woundingness) or other; and secondly, with some mixture of the contrary.—Id. Works, vol. i. p. 23.

A man's heart beats, and the blood circulates, which it is not in his power by any thought or volition to stop; and therefore in respect to these motions, where rest depends not on his choice, nor would follow the determination of his mind, if it should prefer it, he is not a free agent.
Locke. Hum. Underst. b. ii. c. 21.

WOULDING. Vox nautica (says Skinner), and he believes it to be from the A. S. v. Wealdan, to wield,—regere, gubernare.

For, on a survey, it was found that the main-mast was sprung at the upper woulding, though it was thought capable of being secured by a couple of fishes.
Anson. Voyages, b. i. c. 5.

Nor the gadering about him, or the prees,
Nor the sorrow that Polimites
Made in himselfe, to see him sore wounded.
Chaucer. The Story of Thebes, pt. ii.

Four of his olde foos han it espied, and setten ladders to the wallis of his hous, and by the windowes ben entred and beten his wif, and wounded his doughter with five mortal woundes, in five sondry places.—Id. Tale of Melibeus.

Wherewith Gysippus was soo wounded to the harte, thynkyng Titus had contempned his fortune, that oppressed with mortal heynes, fell in a sowne.
Sir T. Elyot. The Governour, b. ii. c. 12.

For after that Antony was come into his winter-garrison, & that the city of Arras continued in obedience, Comius who after his wounding that we spake of before, was wont euer to be ready at hand to his country men at euery stir.
Goldinge. Caesar, fol. 268.

This [Achilleus] is that wound-hearbe, wherewith (by report) he cured prince Telephus.

Holland. Plinie, b. xxv. c. 5.

Thammus came next behind,
Whose annual wound in Lebanon allur'd
The Syrian damsels to lament his fate
In amorous ditties all a summer's day,
While smooth Adonis from his native rock
Ran purple to the sea, suppos'd with blood
Of Thammus yearly wounded.—Milton. Par. Lost, b. i.

And sing of bloody Mars, of warres, of gusts,
Turne thee to those, that weld the awfull crowne,
To doubted knights, whose woundlesse armour rusts,
And helmes vnbruzed, wexen daily browne.
Spenser. Shepheard's Calender, October.

Come, Gertrude, we'll call up our wisest friends,
And let them know, both what we mean to do,
And what's untimely done: so haply, slander,—
Whose whisper o'er the world's diameter,
As level as the cannon to his blank,
Transports his poison'd shot,—may miss our name,
And hit the woundless air.
Shakespeare. Hamlet, Act iv. sc. 1.

I would rather bate him a few strokes of his oar, than not employ an honest man that has been wounded in the queen's service.—Spectator, No. 383.

A wound is a solution of continuity in any part of the body suddenly made by any thing that cuts or tears, with a division of the skin.—Wiseman. Surgery, b. v. c. 1.

If a man considers that all his heavy complaints of wounds and deaths arise from some little affectations of coquetry, which are improved into charms by his own fond imagination, the very laying before himself the cause of his distemper, may be sufficient to effect the cure of it.
Spectator, No. 377.

Oh! Achilles, Peleus' son!
Bear with my grief, thou noblest of the host
Since such distress hath on the Grecians fall'n.
Our bravest chiefs lie wounded in the fleet,
Some in close conflict, others from afar.

consequently, to destroy, to ruin; to distress, and, consequently, to punish, to torture. See RACK.

The constable of the castle down is fare
To seen this wrecke, and al the ship he sought,
And fond this wery woman ful of care.
Chaucer. Man of Lawes Tale, v. 4934.

Of this mervaille agast was all the prees,
As mazed folk they stonden everich on
For drede of wreche, save Custance alone.
Id. Ib. v. 5100.

Count. F. O in what tempests do my fortunes saie, Still wrack'd with winds more foul and contrary
Than any other northern gust, or southern flaw,
That ever yet inforced the sea to gape,
And swallow the poor merchant's traffic up.
B. Jonson. Case is Altered, Act iii. sc. 1.

As when a ship, that flies faire vnder saile,
An hidden rock escaped hath vnwares,
That lay in waite her wrack for to bewaile,
The mariner yet halfe amazed stares
At perill past.—Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 6.

No more guns now, nor hates, but joyes and triumphs,
An universal gladness fly about us:
And know however subtle men dare cast,
And promise wrack, the gods give peace at last.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Island Princess, Act v.

This day allotts the punishment, or gaines,
Of all our warres: thinke vpon Cæsar's chaines,
His wracks and gibbets: thinke you see this face
These quarter'd limmes stand in the markett place.
May. Lucan. Pharsalia, b. vii.

With that he rides
Through his distressed troopes, and on all sides
Sounds a retreat, from death calling them backe, Thinking himselfe not worth so great a wracke.—Id. Ib.

Thereto they vs'd one most accursed order,
To eate the flesh of men, whom they mote find,
And strangers to deuour, which on their border
Were brought by error, or by wreckfull wind,
A monstrous cruelty gainst course of kind.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 8.

Where king Latinus lent
Safe harbour for his ships, with wrackfull tempest rent.
Drayton. Poly-Oibion, s. 1.

Besides, it causeth it to seeme scortched and full of knots, yea and to grow like a dwarf or wreckling.
Holland. Plinie, b. xvii. c. 22.

Supposing that they saw the Duke's ship wrackt,
And his great person perish.—Dryden. Tempest, Act i.

It [industry] is in itself sweet and satisfactory; as freeing our mind from distraction, and wrecking irresolution; as feeding us with good hope, and yielding a foretaste of its good fruits.—Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 20.

As seamen parting in a general wrack,
When first the loosening planks begin to crack,
Each catches one; and straight are far disjoyn'd,
Some born by tides, and others by the wind.
Dryden. 2 Pt. Conquest of Granada, Act iii.

Thus we were once more safe at sea, after narrowly escaping being wrecked on the very island we but a few days before so ardently wished to be at.
Cook. Second Voyage, b. i. c. 10.

Thus the importation of wool cards, except from Ireland, or when brought in as wreck or prize goods, was prohibited by the 3d of Edward IV.; which prohibition was renewed by the 39th of Elizabeth, and has been continued and rendered perpetual by subsequent laws.
Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. iv. c. 8.

WRA'NGLE, v. } Skinner thinks from WRA'NGLE, n. } wrong (injury), because WRA'NGLER. } they who threw the blame WRA'NGLING, n. } of a wrong or injury from themselves upon another, were said to wrangle.
Wrangle has probably the same origin as wrong; i. e. the verb to wring: constringere, torquere, to constrain, to compress; to strain or press, (met.) the mind, the faculties of the mind; and hence,—

To argue or reason strictly, rigidly, severely; to dispute or discuss acutely;—and further, to twist and turn, to distort, to pervert.

Ryd forth syre Reson, and recche nat of here tales

Piers Plouhman, p. 65.

Wherof this auctor may not thinke nowe as vpon a wranglyng argument, to satisfie a coniecture diuised, therby to confirme a newe teachyng.
Bp. Gardner. Explic. Of Christ's Presence, fol. 43.

As for such other wranglyng, as is made in the vnderstandyng of the wordes of Christ, shall after be spoken of, by further occasion.—Id. Ib. fol. 14.

Wranglers and yrefull folke should not be iudges ouer the peasible, and the ambitious ouer the meke, and the malicious ouer the symple.—Golden Boke, Let. 13.

With their brethren they will wrangle and go to law, nay, they will be ready to enter the lists and combat for a plot of ground whereupon a house standeth, about some corner of a messuage or tenement or end of a little tenement.
Holland. Plutarch, p. 147.

He sheweth himselfe besides to be a lover of the truth, and is not taken for a litigious quarreller, a rash wrangler, or a bitter brawler.—Id. Ib. p. 44.

Sancta Croce the legat, who well enough understood that the council intended not to determine the truth, yet, to silence their wranglings in the council, let them dispute abroad; but the council would not end it, by clearing the ambiguity.
Bp. Taylor. Dissuasive from Popery, b. i. pt. ii. § 1

I worship as my fathers did before me.
Unpractis'd in disputes, and wrangling schools,
I seek no farther knowledge, and so keep
My mind at peace, nor know the pain of doubting.
Rowe. Royal Convert, Act i.

The giving the priest a right to the tithe would produce lawsuits and wrangles.—Swift.

Let me therefore advise this generation of wranglers, for their own and for the public good, to act at least so consistently with themselves, as not to burn with zeal for irreligion, and with bigotry for nonsense.—Spectator, No. 185.

But at last he appeared so well satisfied of her innocence, that from reproaches and wranglings he fell to tears and embraces.—Id. No. 126.

The grand debate,
The popular harangue, the tart reply,
The logic, and the wisdom, and the wit,
And the loud laugh—I long to know them all;
I burn to set th' imprison'd wranglers free,
And give them voice and utterance once again.
Couper. Task, b. iv.

The disputations at Oxford are now indeed merely formal;
but the wranglings at Cambridge still continue, and often infuse an acid into the mind of youth which turns the milk of human kindness quite sour.
Knox. Winter Evenings, Even. 70.

WRA'NKLING, i. e. Rankling, (qv.)

However seeming outwardly content,
Yet th' inward touch that wounded honour bears,
Rests closely wrankling, and can find no ease,
Till death of one side, cure this great disease
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. iii.

WRA'PPING, n. } to turn, to return; because the thing wrapping or rolling is often turned about that which wrapped or rolled.

To turn or roll round; to fold round or enfold;
to involve.

It was so wrapped under humble chere,
And under hew of trowth in swiche manere,
Under plesance, and under besy peine,
That no wight could have wend he could feine,
So depe in greyn he died his coloures.

Chaucer. Squieres Tale, v. 10,822.

A large couerchief of threde
She wrapped all about her hede
But she forgate not her psaltere.—Id. Rom. of the Rose.

In this tyme that Fraunce was thus wrappyd in these harde happes & battaylles, dyed the kyng Theodoricus.
Fabyan. Chronycle, c. 148.

Which was payed with great murmure and grudge, consyderynge y^e manyfolde myseryes that the common people at those dayes were wrappyd in.—Id. Ib. c. 323.

He was stricken from the wall wyth an arrow in the thighe.
Whiche he pulled out, and without wrapping of his wounde, called for his horse, and letted not for his hurte to geue order for such things as he thought expedient.

Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 238.

Wee shall kill them therfore as they bee wrapt in oure spoiles.—Id. Ib. fol. 93.

Some pleasant hour thy woe may wrap, and thee defend and cover.—Wyat. Comp. of the Absence of his Love.

And therein they founde a greate difficultie and muche trauaille by reason that the wreathing and wrappinge together of the boughes kepte them of from the bodyes of the trees.
Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 148.

If it be wisdom, and not cunning, this
Which so embroils the state of truth with brawls,
And wraps it up in strange confusedness.

Daniel. To Sir T. Egerton.

— Let every passion
Be fed, ev'n to a surfet, which in time
May breed a loathing: let him have enough
Of every object, that his sence is wrapt with;
And being once gluttied, then the taste of folly
Will come into his relish.

Beaum. & Fletch. The Nice Valour, Act i.

I have often thought wrapping-gowns and 'dirty linen, with all that huddled economy of dress which passes under the general name of "a mob," the bane of conjugal love, and one of the readiest means imaginable to alienate the affection of an husband, especially a fond one.

Spectator, No. 302.

My arms were pressed to my sides, and my legs closed together by so many wrappers one over another, that I looked like an Egyptian mummy.—Id. No. 90.

Let none of us then suppose he hath no account to give.
A single talent, wrapped up in a napkin, brought its possessor, you may remember, into a direful case.

Gilpin, vol. i. Ser. 11.

I quickly found, that Nitella passed her time between finery and dirt; and was always in a wrapper, nightcap and slippers, when she was not decorated for immediate show.

Beaum. & Fletcher. The Faithful Shepherdess, Act v.

Nay, weep not; let your loves speak in your anger;
And, to confirm you gave no suffrage to
The damned plot, lend me your helping hands
To wreak the parricide.—Id. The Prophetess, Act ii. sc. 2.

For, at that birth another babe she bore,
To weet, the mighty Olyphant, that wrought
Great wreake to many errant knights of yore,
And many hath to foule confusion brought.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 7.

— Our writings are,
By envious instruments, that dare
Apply them to the guilty, made to speak
What they will have to fit their tyrannous wreak?
B. Jonson. Sejanus, Act iv. sc. 3.

Ne any liv'd on ground, that durst withstand
His dreadfull beast, much lesse him match in fight,
Or bide the horror of his wreakfull hand,
When so he list in wrath lift vp his steely brand.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 1.

Secure in this belief, he left the dame,
Resolv'd to spare her life, and save her shame:
But that detested object to remove,
To wreak his vengeance, and to cure her love.
Dryden. Sigismunda & Guiscardo.

Enraged at the behaviour of this supercilious peer, and exceedingly mortified at the mis-carriage of all my efforts, I wreaked my resentment upon the innocent cause of my disgraces, and forthwith condemned it to oblivion.

Till that he came vnto another gate,
No gate, but like one, beeing goodly dight
With boughes and branches, which did broad dilate
Their clasping armes, in wanton wreathings intricate.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 12.

Some [horns] are wreathed, some not: that famous one which is preserved at St. Dennis near Paris, hath wreathy spires, and choceary turnings about it, which agreeth with the description of the unicorn's horn in Ælian.
Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. iii. c. 23.

Less wild the Bacchanalian dames appear
When, from afar, their nightly god they hear,
And houl about the hills, and shake the wreathy spear.
Dryden. Virgil. Aeneis, b. iv.

Hooker. Ser. on Jude.

If such incogitancy comes to be habitual, as it is in very many men, (first, by resisting the motions of the Holy Spirit, then by quenching him,) we shall find the consequences to be, first an indifferency, then a dulness, then a lethargy, then a direct hating the ways of God; and it commonly ends in a wretchlessness of spirit to be manifested never rest till they have wrung it in, though it loosen the whole fabric of their sense.

B. Jonson. Cynthia's Revels, Act ii. sc. 1.

There is no man so wicked, but at sometimes his conscience will wring him with thoughts of another world, and the peril of his soul.—Milton. Of True Religion.

A poore fisherman, vnknowne, vnlearned, new come from his boat with his clothes wringing wet, hath opened his mouth and taught me, In the beginning was the word, and the word was with God, and the word was God.
Hooker. Ser. on Jude.

The root sodden in wine, appeaseth the wrings and torments of the guts.—Holland. Plinie, b. xxiv. c. 19.

Otherwise it could not be, that these men (prudent and wise as they are) should have been afflicted and tormented with the diseases of painfull strangury, dysenteries and dolorous wrings in the guts, &c.—Id. Plutarch, p. 480.

And there dwels one Mistris Quickly; which is in the manner of his nurse; or his dry-nurse; or his cooke; or his laundry; his washer, and his ringer.
Shakespeare. Merry Wives of Windsor, Act i. sc. 2.

The fourth sort they call terminale, allowed onely for the remedie that they affourd to mitigate the torments and wringing of the cholique.—Holland. Plinie, b. xv. c. 21.

It is not conformable to the tenour of his administrations to convince men against their will, or by irresistible evidence to wring persuasion from stubborn or stupid minds.
Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 23.

From this excellence arise those violent contortions of the body, that wringing of the hands, beating of the breast, rolling of the eyes, foaming of the mouth, and other symptoms of madness, which never fail to gain the applause of the plebeian congregation.—Knox. Ess. No. 160.

Is't possible that such a spacious villain
Should live, and not be plagued? or lies he hid Within the wrinkled bosom of the world,
Where Heaven cannot see him?

Id. Every Man out of his Humour, Act i. sc. 1.

I am resolved to grow fat, and look young till forty, and then slip out of the world with the first wrinkle, and the reputation of five and twenty.—Dryden. Secret Love, Act iii.

Fresh are his ruddy cheeks, his forehead fair,
And like the burnish'd gold his curling hair.
But clear thy wrinkled brow, and quit thy sorrow,
I'd scorn your 'prentice, should you die to-morrow.

Pope. Wife of Bath.

Locke. Hum. Underst. b. ii. c. 11.

The distinction of public wronges from private, of crimes and misdemeanors from civil injuries, seems principally to consist in this: that private wronges, or civil injuries, are an infringement or privation of the civil rights which belong to individuals, considered merely as individuals: public wronges, or crimes and misdemeanors, are a breach and violation of the public rights and duties, due to the whole community, considered as a community, in it's social aggregate capacity.—Blackstone. Commentaries, b. iv. c. 1.

Id. Manciplies Tale, v. 17, 211.

Howe so his mouthe be comely
His worde sitte euermore a wrie,
And saith the worste that he maie.—Gower. Con. A. b. ii.

The fyrste that came and gaue them moost comforte was Henry erle of Lancastre with the wrye necke, called Torte colle.—Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 11.

Than the kyng wryed away fro hym, and comaunded to sende for y^e hangman, and sayd, they of Calys had caused many of my mē to be slayne, wherfore these shall dye in likewyse.—Id. Ib. c. 147.

The byshops go about to kepe in state stil, and hold vp the decayed partes of their power (whose building was naught, and therefore hath wryed on the one side longe ago) with proppes and staies, deuised by man's brain.
Bp. Gardner. Of True Obedience, fol. 53.

— Should I aspire
To forme a worke, I wold no more desire
To be that smith; than live, mark'd one of those,
With faire black eyes and haire, and a wry nose.
Jonson. Horace. Art of Poetrie.

Row. Thou hast hit it:
Then talks she ten times worse, and wryes, and wriggles,
As though she had the itch (and so it may be).
Beaum. & Fletch. The Woman's Prize, Act iii. sc. 1.

"As wnen a nymph, arising from the land,
Leadeth a dance with her long watery train
Down to the sea, she wryes to every hand,
And every way doth crosse the fertile plain."
Davies. On Dancing.

And cry filthy! filthy! simply uttering their own condition, and using their wryed countenances instead of a vice, to turn the good aspects of all that shall sit near them, from what they behold.
B. Jonson. The Case is Altered, Act i. sc. 4.

The first with divers crooks and turning wries.
P. Fletcher. Purple Island, c. 5.

Like a man fastned by his thumbs at the whipping-post, he wries his back and shrinks from the blow, though he knows he cannot get loose.
Bp. Taylor. Dissuasive from Popery, b. ii. pt. ii. § 6.

There intricately among the woods doth wander,
Losing himselfe in many a wry meander.
Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b. i. s. 2.

This is light enough to all intelligent persons, for an exploring the rectitude or wrynesse of their behaviours in this particular.—Montague. Devoute Essayes, pt. i. Treat. 12.

If e'r they call upon me, I'll so fit 'em,
I have a pack of wry-mouth'd mackrel ladies
Stink like a standing ditch.
Beaum. & Fletch. Women Pleas'd, Act iii. sc. 2.

But what! you cry, must the Christian never falter in his pace? is he supposed to proceed with one uniform progress?
does he miss of his salvation, if he now and then make a wry step? God forbid!—Gilpin, vol. iv. Ser. 14.

X.

X, says B. Jonson, is rather an abbreviation, or way of short writing with us, than a letter: for it hath the sound of c and s, or k and s. It begins no word with us, but ends many: as six, fox, box. In some cases it seems to approach the sound of gz, as in example.

Y.

Y, says B. Jonson, is mere vowelish in our tongue, and hath only the power of i, even where it obtains the seat of a consonant, as in young, yunker. Butler calls it both an English consonant and a Greek vowel; the latter sounded as i, and rightly used in words originally Greek: in this agreeing with B. Jonson. He adds, that the force of the consonant is seen in yarn, and therefore it is unrightly named wi: which hath in it the force of w, not y, for wi-a-r-n, soundeth warn, not yarn; but it is rather to be called yi.

YACHT. Dut. Jaghte, jaght-schip. Navis prædatoria incredibilis celeritatis, (Kilian.) So called (Skinner and Lye suggest,) from jaght-en, to hunt, to course or run after, to hasten; and applied to the vessel from its aptness for speed.

After dining with Commissioner Proby, he very obligingly ordered his yacht to carry us to Sheerness, where my boat was waiting to take us on board.

Cook. Third Voyage, b. i. c. 1.

YARD. A. S. Geard, past part. of the v. Gyrd-an, to gird, to surround, to inclose. See GARDEN, and Tooke.

A place, surrounded or enclosed, as church-yard, court-yard.

Whanne Jesus hadde seide these thingis he wente out with hise disciplis ouer the stronde of Cedron, where was a gherd, into which he entride and hise disciplis.

Wiclif. Jon. c. 18.

Me mette, howe that I romed up and doun
Within our yerde, wher as I saw a beste,
Was like an hound, and wold han made areste
Upon my body, and han had me ded.

Chaucer. The Nonnes Preestes Tale, v. 15,906.

They had great leuers in their handis, the whiche they founde in a carpenters yarde, with the whiche they gaue suche strokis that men durst nat aproche to them.

Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 16.

In our time, in the court of the prince of Bavaria, one of the lions leaped down into a neighbour's yard, where nothing regarding the crowing or noise of the cocks, he eat them up with many other hens.

Brown. Vulgar Errors, b. iii. c. 27.

Know, dame, I dream't within my troubled breast,
That in our yard I saw a murderous beast,
That on my body would have made arrest.

Dryden. The Cock and the Fox.

YARD. A. S. Gyrd; Dut. Garde, gaerde; Ger. Gert, past part. of Gyriwan, gyrian, to prepare.

A yard to mete or measure with. A. S. Met-geard.

A mete-yard,—i. e. something prepared to mete or measure with.

A yard-wand,—a wand prepared. By usage, mete and wand are now omitted. (See Tooke.) Originally no certain length was denoted; now, three feet, of twelve inches.

Sail yards,—wands, rods, to support the sails.

A maiden childe came in hire compaignie,
Which as hire lust she may governe and gie,
For yet under the yerde was the maide.

Chaucer. The Shipman's Tale, v. 13,028.

But sore wept she [the Nonne] if on of hem were dede
Or if men smote it [her hound] with a yerde smert.

Id. The Prologue, v. 149.

Hoste, quod he, I am under your yerde,
Ye haue of us as now the Governance.

Id. The Clerkes Prologue, v. 7898.

The toke this knight a yerd on honde,
And goth there as the cofers stonde,
And with thassent of euerichone,
He leid his garde vpon one.

Gower. Con. A. b. v.

He commanded the mayne-yard to be strooke downe, and to put 2. pullies, on euery yard-arme one; the hangman was called, and we were willing to confesse our selues, for he swore by the king he would hang vs.

Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 493.

— And it shall go hard.

But I will delve one yard below their mines,
And blow them at the moon.

Shakespeare. Hamlet, Act iii. sc. 4.

And now a breeze from shoar began to blow,
The sailors ship their oars, and cease to row;
Then hoist their yards a-trip, and all their sails,
Let fall, to court the wind, and catch the gales.

Dryden. Ovid. Metam. b. x.

For if I measure any thing by a yard, I know whether the thing I measure be longer or shorter than that supposed yard, though perhaps the yard I measure by be not exactly the standard; which indeed is another inquiry.

Locke. On Hum. Underst. b. ii. c. 28.

Next day towards noon, the wind abating, we loosed all the reefs out of the top-sails, rigged another top-gallant mast, and got the yards across.

Cook. Second Voyage, b. iv. c. 1.

This Tereus let make his ships yare,
And into Grece himself is forth ifare.

Chaucer. Legend of Philomene.

Botes. Heigh my hearts, cheerely, cheerely my harts;
yare, yare.—Shakespeare. Tempest, Act i. sp. 1.

— In Cæsar's flette,

Are those that often haue 'gainst Pompey fought,
Their shippes are yare, yours heavy.

Id. Anthony & Cleopatra, Act iii. sc. 7.

The sea wind arose, and brought in a rough tide within the channell, which did not hurt the Grecian galleys, being made low and snug, but greatly offended the Persian galleys, being high cargoeed, heavy and not yare of sterage.

North. Plutarch, p. 101.

— At the helme,

A seeming mer-maide steeres: the silken tackle
Swell with the touches of those flower soft hands,
That yarely frame the office.

Shakespeare. Anthony & Cleopatra, Act ii. sc. 2.

Cæsar seeing that, was a glad man, and began a little to give back from the right wing, to allure them to come farther out of the streight gulf, to the end that he might with his light ships well manned with water-men, turn and environ the galleys of the enemies, the which were heavy of yarage, both for their bigness, as also for lack of water-men to row them.—North. Plutarch, p. 777.

YARN. A. S. Gearn; past part. of Gyriwan, gyri-an, (to yare,) to prepare, to make ready. See Tooke.

Cotton, silk, wool, prepared (by spinning).

There are about 26 wind-mills about it, and the commodities of it are cotton wooll, cotton yarne, mastike, and some other drugs.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. p. 283.

But now taking in hand againe the end (as it were) of a clew of thread, or a bottome of yarne, to direct us as in a dark place, and where there be many cranks, turnings and windings to and fro (I meane the matter of God's secret judgements) let us conduct and guide our souls gently and warily, according to that which is most likely and probable.

HollanJ. Plutarch, p. 453.

When wise Minerva did th' Athenians learne
To draw their milk-white fleeces into yarne.

Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b. ii. s. 3.

Spare me but one small portion of the twine,
And let the sisters cut before your line:
The rest among the rubbish may they sweep,
Or add it to the yarn of some old miser's heap.

Dryden. Palamon & Arcite, b. iii.

YA'RRROW. A. S. Gearewe; Dut. Garwe, millefolium. See the quotation from Pliny.

Touching millefoile or yarrow, which the Greekes call myriophyllon, and we in Latine millefolium: it is an hearbe growing up with a tender and feeble stalke, like in some sort unto fowell, and charged with many leaves, whereupon it tooke the name: it groweth in moores and fennie grounds: used to very good purpose and with singular succeſſe in curing of wounds.—Holland. Plinie, b. xxiv. c. 16.

He fumitory gets, and eye-bright for the eye;
The yarrow, wherewithall he stops the wound-made gore.

Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 13.

YATE, i. e. Gate, (qv.)

YAW, i. e. the jaw, or chaw. See Junius.

YAW. A yaw is that unsteady motion which a ship makes in a great swell, when, in steering, she inclines to the right or left of her course, (Gifford.)

— O the yaws that she will make!

Look to your stern, dear mistress, and steer right.
Here's that will work as high as the Bay of Portugal.

Massinger. A very Woman, Act iii. sc. 5.

YAWL, i. e. To yell.

— There were gorgons fell,
There howling Scillas yawling round about,
There serpents hisse, there seu'n mouth'd hydraes felt.

Fairefax. Godfrey of Boulogne, b. iv. s. 5.

YAWL. Ihre has Julle, scapha, navigiolum,—which Rudbeckius derives from Julka, vacillare, a word with which Ihre professes himself to be unacquainted. He refers to the Low Lat. Agyale,—in Du Cange, a kind of fishing-boat. Mr. Thomson seems to think, is the same kind of boat as that called the Jolly-boat.

The master of the Pink, as soon as he perceived them, sent his yawl, who brought them on board.

Anson. Voyages, b. ii. c. 3.

This was a great misfortune, as the pinnace being detained on shore, we had no boat on board but a four-oared yawl: the yawl, however, was immediately manned and sent to her assistance.—Cook. First Voyage, b. i. c. 2.

YAWN, v. } A. S. Cin-an, gan-ian, geon-an;

YA'WNING, n. } hiscere, hiare, oscitare, to open YA'WNINGLY. } the yaws, jaws, or chaws.

To gape, to open: applied to the opening of the mouth—(through drowsiness.)

For they require to haue an hearer neyther grosse of capacitee and vnderstandyng, nor that when he shoulde geue eare, wyll stande gapyng and yawning as though he were more then halfe in slepe.—Udal. Luke, c. 8.

Those that yawne and slumbre in naughtinesse, are occupied in darkenesse of the soule.—Id. 1 Thess. c. 5.

He, now to proue his late renewed might,
High brandishing his bright deaw burning blade,
Vpon his crested scalpe so sore did smite,
That to the scull a yawning wound it made.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 11.

The crocodiles not only know the voice of the priests when they call unto them, and endure to be handled and stroked by them, but also yawn and offer their teeth unto them to be picked and cleansed with their hands.

Holland. Plutarch, p. 794.

Hear this then yee ignorant and seduced soules that measure your devotions by number, not by weight; or that leaning upon your idle elbow yawningly patter out those prayers, whose sound or sense ye understand not.

Bp. Hall. The Hypocrite.

And rais'd his tardy head, which sunk again,
And sinking on his bosom knock'd his chin;
At length shook off himself; and ask'd the dame,
(And asking yawn'd) for what intent she came.

Dryden. Ovid. Metam. b. x.

Alm. Sure 'tis the friendly yawn of death for me;
And that dumb mouth, significant in show,
Invites me to the bed, where I alone Shall rest.

Congreve. Mourning Bride.

Thus did the gentle hind her fable end,
Nor would the panther blame it, nor commend;
But, with affected yawnings at the close,
Seem'd to require her natural repose.

Dryden. Hind and the Panther.

Dark was the night; it was that hour
When Terror reigns in fullest pow'r,
When as the learn'd of old have said,
The yawning grave gives up her dead.

Churchill. Ghost, b. iii.

A yearling bullock to thy name shall smoke;
Untam'd, unconscious of the galling yoke.—Pope.

The time measured by the sun's revolution in the ecliptic, from any equinox or solstice, to the same again, is called the solar or tropical year, which contains 365 days, 5 hours, forty eight minutes, 57 seconds; and is the only proper or natural year, because it always keeps the same seasons to the same months.—Ferguson. Astronomy, § 371.

The reports are extant in a regular series from the reign of king Edward the second inclusive; and from his time to that of Henry the eighth were taken by the prothonotaries, or chief scribes of the court, at the expence of the crown, and published annually, whence they are known under the denomination of the year-books.

Jud. I must do that my heart-strings yern to do:
But my word's past.

Beaumont & Fletcher. Bonduca, Act ii. sc. 4.

Oftimes when Giles doth find

Harsh sighs at home, Giles wisheth he were blind;
All this doth Joan: or that his long-yearn'd life
Were quite out-spun; the like wish hath his wife.

B. Jonson, Epig. 42.

Of pitty and yearning of bowels, whether to those careless unregenerates that cannot so much as complaine of their too-pleasing corruptions, but applaud themselves in the free scope of their owne brutish sensuality, as if they had made a covenant with death, an agreement with hell; or whether, to our poore seduced brethren, that are nurseled up in an invincible ignorance of truth; and are held downe with the imperious sway of antichristian usurpation.

Bp. Hall. St. Paul's Combat, pt. i.

"And when the dead, by cruel tyrant's spite,

Lie out to rav'nous birds and beasts expos'd,
His yearnsfull heart pitying that wretched sight,
In seemly graves their weary flesh enclos'd."

P. Fletcher. Purple Island, c. 9.

league round about.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 560.

With wailing great, and women's shrill yelling

The roofs gan roar; the air resound with plaint.

Surrey. Virgile. Æneis, b. iv.

The cruell wound enraged him so sore,

That loud he yelled for exceeding paine;

As hundred ramping lyons seem'd to rore,

Whom reuenous hunger did thereto constraine.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 11.

Iago. Doe, with like timerous accent, and dire yell,

Shakespeare. Othello, Act i. sc. 1.

When after goes the cry, with yellings loud and deep,
That all the forest rings, and every neighbouring place:
And there is not a hound but fallieth to the chace.

Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 13.

Unmanly dread invades

The French astony'd; straight their useless arms

They quit, and in ignoble flight confide,

Unseemly yellings, distant hills return

The hideous noise.

J. Philips. Blenheim.

The opening valleys, and the yellowing plains?

Dyer. The Fleece, b. iv.

YELP, v. } A. S. Ge-alp-an, from Gi-ell-an,

YELP, n. } to yell. Yelp is applied to—

The short, sharp, bark of a dog, fox, &c.; of a young dog; to any similar noise.

Wo was alle his comforth, of sorow mot he gelp.

R. Brunne, p. 41.

And then he hath truly supposed,

That he him male of nothyng yelp,

But if so be tho wordes helpe,

Which as the woman hath him taught.

Gower. Con. A. b. i.

Bp. Gardner. Of True Obedience, To the Reader.

And whilst the eager dogs upon the start do draw,
She riseth from her seat, as though on earth she flew,
Forc'd by some yelping cūte to give the greyhound's view.

Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 23.

Boy. Your Perseus is come master, that will destroy him,—

The very comfort of whose presence shuts

The monster hunger from your yelping guts.

Beaumont & Fletcher. The Woman-Hater, Act i. sc. 2.

King. Bear to the dungeon those rebellious slaves,

Th' ignoble curs, that yelp to fill the cry,

And spend their mouths in barking tyranny.

Rowe. Mourning Bride, Act iv.

If they were at a fault, and an old hound of reputation opened but once, he was immediately followed by the whole cry; while a raw dog, or one who was a noted liar, might have yelped his heart out, without being taken notice of.

Spectator, No. 116.

If slavery be thus fatally contagious, how is it that we hear the loudest yelps for liberty among the drivers of negroes?—Johnson. Taxation no Tyranny.

YEO'MAN. } Lye derives from Gaeman, an

YEO'MANLY. } inhabitant of a village. Spelman

YEO'MANRY. } prefers Geonga, a young man, which Smith discountenances: he also (Spelman) suggests Gemen, common; and this is adopted by Verstegan. See the quotation from him.

A yeman hadde he, and servantes no mo

At that time, for him luste to ride so;

And he was cladde in cote and hode of grene.

Chaucer. Prologue to Canterbury Tales, v. 102.

The horse eke that his yeman rode upon,
So swatte, that unnethees might he gon.

Id. Chanones Yemannes Prologue, v. 16,031.

How manye goodly and bolde yemenne hath it broughte nature, and dyed by the ordre of lawes miserably.

Sir T. Elyot. The Governour, b. i. c. 26.

What a yeoman is I haue declared, but from whence the worde is deriued it is hard to say: it cannot be thought that yeoman shoulde be sayde a young man, for commonlie we doo not call any a yeoman till hee be married, and haue chyl dren, and as it were, haue some authoritie among his neighbours.—Smith. Commonwealth, b. i. c. 23.

I call him a yeoman whom our lawes doe call Legalem hominem, a word familiar in writs and enquests, which is free man borne English, and may dispend of his owne free land in yeerely reueneue to the summe of xl. s. sterling.

Id. Ib. c. 23.

YES

Gemen is now in the moderne Teutonick written Gemeyn, and it is as much to say as common, and as in sundry other ancient words, so in this, the letter g being altered into y, it is of gemen become among us yemen, and varying yet farther in orthography it is written yeomen. And seeing that gemen is all one with common, a yeoman is rightly understood a commoner.

Verstegan. Restitution of Decayed Intelligence, c. 10.

The third and last sort is named the yeomanrie, of whom and their sequele, the labourers and artificers, I haue said somewhat euen now.

Holinshed. Description of England, b. ii. c. 5.

Fang. Faith, I cannot tell sister, but if a man had any true melancholy to see his yeomanly father cut his neighbours' throats, to make his son a gentleman.

B. Jonson. Every Man out of his Humour, Act iv. sc. 1.

Th' appointment for the ensuing night he heard;
And therefore in the cavern had prepar'd
Two brawny yeomen of his trusty guard.

Dryden. Sigismunda & Guiscardo.

I knew a yeoman, who, for thirst of gain,
To the great city drove, from Devon's plain,
His numerous lowing herd; his herds he sold,
And his deep leathern pocket bagg'd with gold.

Gay. Trivia, b. iii.

A yeoman is he that hath free land of forty shillings by the year; who was antiently thereby qualified to serve on juries, vote for knight of the shire, and do any other act, where the law requires one that is probus et legalis homo.

Holland. Plutarch, p. 10.

There be devils dancing in the air I think—
I saw a dolphin hang i' th' horns o' th' moon
Shot from a wave, hey day, hey day,
How she kicks and yerks?

Beaum. & Fletch. The Sea-Voyage, Act i.

The horses being trised up in this manner, their riders came with loud cries behind them and some with whips in their hands to lash them, that the horse being mad withall, yerked out behind, and sprang forward with his foremost legs to touch the ground.—North. Plutarch, p. 504.

(See As.) This northern verb is probably the A. S. Agan, Goth. Aig-an, to have, hold or possess. (See Owe.) Yes, is used to denote—Assent or consent; affirmation or confirmation.

Sire kynge, quod he, that I can,
Yf thou wilt. Yes, seith the kynge.

Gower. Con. A. b. iii.

To come now to the yugh, because we would overpasse none: it is to see to, like the rest, [pines] but that it is not so Greene; more slender also and smaller, unpleasant and fearefull to looke upon, as a cursed tree, without any liquid substance at all: and of these kind of trees, it alone beareth berries.—Holland. Plinie, b. xvi. c. 10.

Fall'n yew trees often of themselves would rise:
With seeming fire oft flam'd th' vnburn'd trees.

May. Lucan. Pharsalia, b. iii.

T' enlarge his breath (large breath in armes most needful,
Or else by wrestling to wex strong and heedful,
Or his stiffe armes to stretch with eughen bow.

Spenser. Mother Hubbard's Tale.

Since the use of bows is laid aside amongst us, the propagation of the eugh-tree is likewise quite forborn; but the neglect of it is to be deplor'd.—Evelyn. Sylva, c. 25.

The tougher yegh

How small a net may take, and meash a heart of gentle kind.

Surrey. He complains of the Deceitfulness of Love, &c.

Therewith, behold; whereas the Phrygian herds
Brought to the king with clamour, all unknown
A young man, bound his hands behind his back,
Who willingly had yelden prisoner.
Id. Virgile. Aeneis, b. ii.

There he tormenteth her most terribly,
And day and night afflicts with mortall paine,
Because to yield him loue she doth deny,
Once to me gold, not to be gold againe.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 11.

This sword hath ended him, so shall it thee
Vnlesse thou yeeld thee as a prisoner.

Blu. I was not borne to yeeld, thou haughty Scot.
Shakespeare. 1 Pt. Hen. IV. Act v. sc. 3.

He shall be like the fruitful tree
Planted along a running spring,
Which, in due season, constantly
A goodly yeeld of fruit doth bring.—Bacon, Ps. 1.

Some guard these traitors to the block of death,
Treason's true bed, and yeelder vp of breath.
Shakespeare. 2 Pt. Hen. IV. Act iv. sc. 2.

For briars and thornes at their apparell snatch,
Some sleecues, some hats, from yeelders all things catch.
Id. Midsummer Night's Dreame, Act iii. sc. 2.

The fourth disposition for peace—an yieldableness upon sight of clearer truths.—Bp. Hall. The Peace-Maker, s. 13.

He that had put himself upon the pawes of the beare and lyon, for the rescue of his sheep, will now cast himselfe upon the sword of the angel, for the preservation of Israel: There was hope in those conflicts, in this yeeldance there could be nothing but death.

Bp. Hall. Cont. Numbering of the People.

There is no peace, saith my God, to the wicked: and after all his inward broyles, he falls upon the worst, so as his yeildance is worse than his fight.

Id. Ib. John Baptist beheaded.

Immaculate and spotless is my mind;
That was not forc'd; but never was inclin'd
To accessary yieldings, but still pure
Doth in her poison'd closet yet endure.

Shakespeare. Rape of Lucrece.

Cassibelan after so many defeats, mov'd especially by revolt of the cities from him, thir inconstancie and falshood one to another, uses mediation by Comius of Arras to send ambassadors about treatie of yielding.

Milton. Historie of England, b. ii.

If the thing under debate be given up to the adversary, it must be upon one of these two accounts; either, 1. That the persons who thus yield them up, judge them unfit to be retained. Or, 2. That they find themselves unable to retain them; one or both of these must of necessity be implied in such a yieldance.—South, vol. v. Ser. 12.

She should have held the battle to the last,
Undaunted, yieldless, firm, and died or conquer'd.

Rowe. Ulysses, Act iii.

The shallowness of the socket at the shoulder, and the yieldingness of the cartilaginous substance with which its edge is set round, and which in fact composes a considerable part of its concavity, are excellently adapted for the allowance of a free motion and a wide range; both of which the arm wants.—Paley. Natural Theology, c. 8.

YOKE, v. } juk; Sw. Ook; Fr. Joug; It.
Geogo, from the Lat. Jug-um, (say the etymolo-gists;) but Tooke considers it to be the past part. geoc, of the A. S. verb Ge-ican, (to eke,) to add, to join.

To join or conjoin; to connect, to bind; and (as the yoke was an instrument of bondage imposed upon slaves) to subjugate, to subdue.

Take ye me my yok on you, and lerne ye of me, for I am mylde and meke in herte and ye schal fynde reste to youre solis. for my yok is softe. and my charge light.

Wiclif. Matthew, c. 11.

Take my yocke on you and learne of me, for I am meke and lowly in hert: & ye shall fynde rest vnto your soules.
For my yocke is easy, and my burde is lyght.

Fabyan. Chronycle, c. 48.

Neyther dysdayned Paule in a setzen espistle or gentyll salutacion, to make mencion of his yoke fellow or wyfe, whom he at that time minded not to leade about wyth hym.

Bale. Apologie, fol. 121.

And for to make his poure approued more,
Wilde beasts in iron yokes he would compell;
The spotted panther, and the tusked bore,
The pardale swift, and the tigre cruell,
The antelope, and wolfe, both fierce and fell.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 6.

Al! She would fain marry.
1 Lady. 'Tis a proper calling,
And well beseems her years; who would she yoke with?

Beaum. & Fletch. Rule a Wife and have a Wife, Act i.

Then were they yok'd with garrisons, and the places consecrate to their bloodie superstitions destroy'd.

Milton. History of England, b. ii.

The mother cow must wear a low'ring look,
Sour headed, strongly neck'd, to bear the yoke,
Her double dew-lap from her chin descends:
And at her thighs the pondrous burthen ends.

Dryden. Virgil. Georgics, b. iii.

'Tis some comfort to some, that they have the liberty to walk abroad where they will: but others are both yok'd and imprison'd: and the prisoners in public prisons are used worse than a man would use a dog, they being half starved and soundly beaten to boot.

Dampier. Voyages, an. 1688.

My friend, I found, acted but an under part at his table, and being a man of more good nature than understanding, thinks himself obliged to fall in with all the passions and humours of his yoke-fellow.—Spectator, No. 7.

When we got to Matavai, our friends there told us, that this fleet was part of the armament intended to go against Eimea, whose chief had thrown off the yoke of Otaheite, and assumed an independency.

Cook. Second Voyage, b. ii. c. 11.

YOLK, or } The yellow (yellow, yellog, yelg, YELK. } yelk, or yolk) portion of the egg.

The golke of the egge can not be without the whyte, nor the whyte without the golke, no more maye the clergy and the lordes be one without another.

Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 42.

She layes her breasts out too, like to poch'd eggs
That had the yelks sucked out.

Beaum. & Fletch. A Wife for a Moneth, Act ii.

Cym. All the yolk is wild-fire,
As he shall need beleaguer no more towns,
But throw his egg in.

B. Jonson. Staple of News, Act iii. sc. 1.

As the shell and skin keep the yolk and two whites together, so each of the parts (the yolk and inner white at least) are separated by membranes, involving them.

That al the world with water shuld be lorne?
Yes (quod this carpenter), ful yore ago.
Chaucer. Milleres Tale, v. 3438.

The sely tonge may wel ringe and chimbe
Of wretchednesse, that passed is ful yore:
With olde folke, save dotage, is no more.
Id. Reves Prologue, v. 3896.

I have of yore made many a scrambling meal
In corners, behind arasses, on stairs;
And in the action oftentimes have spoil'd
Our doublets and our hose with liquid stuff.
Beaum. & Fletcher. The Woman-Hater, Act iii. sc. 4.

Right true it is, and said full yore ago.
Wyat. Of the Feigned Friend.

That youth takes pleasure in, to please his boy.
Cowper. Tirocinium.

Let us suppose the egg to be produced into day; how should birds know that their eggs contain their young?
Paley. Natural Theology, c. 18.

YULE. A. S. Gehul, Natalis Domini, Christ-masse, which in the northerne parts (of Lancashire, Yorkshire, &c.) they yet call—yeol, yewl, yeole, (Somner.) The month of December was called Ærra Geold, because it came before (ere) the nativity of Christ; and January,—Æftera Geold, because it was after, (Somner.) Ihre, in
v. Jul, enters much at large into the etymology of the word; and Dr. Jamieson is very copious both upon the festival and the name: Sw. Huel, rota, A. S. Hweol, a wheel, he seems to think as likely an origin as any; and Mr. Drake has adopted the same opinion. Skinner resorts to the Lat. Jubilum.

The gode kyng Edward to London turnes he,
The feste of gole to hold, with grete solemnite,
As Saynt Petir mynstere.
R. Brunne, p. 65.

In the third yeare after, as king Alexander with his mother Ermingard were sitting at their banket on the twelfe day in Christmas, otherwise called yule, the earle of Cathnes, hauing good opportunitie thereto, presented himselfe before the king, and besought him of grace and pardon for his passed offense.
Holinshed. Hist. of Scotland, an. 1219.

The northern parts call Christmas yule (hence the hule- block, yule-oakes, yule-songs, &c.) though much difference about the cause there.—Fuller. Worthies. Northumberland.

Z (says Wilkins) is by some styled S soft: it is framed by an appulse of the tongue towards the upper teeth or gums, and then forcing out the breath from betwixt the tongue and the upper teeth, with a vocal sound, which makes a more dense kind of hissing (than S), mixed with some kind of murmur. It is of the same affinity with S, as B with P, D with T.

ZA'NY, n. } It. Zane, the name of John.
ZA'NY, v. } Also a sillie John, a gull, a noddie.
 Used also for a simple vice, clowne, foole or simple fellow in a play or comedy, (Florio;) and Skinner seems inclined to favour this etymology: and Menage also considers it to be a corruption of Giovanni. Tooke supposes Sanese (an inhabitant of Sienna) was used to denote a fool; and that the first part of the word Save has given us Zani, and the latter,—Nese, nizzy.

Talking of stones, stars, plants, of fishes, flies,
 Playing with words, and idle similes,
 As the English apes and very zanies be
 Of every thing, that they do hear and see,
 So imitating his ridiculous tricks,
 They speak and write, all like meer lunaticks.
Drayton. To H. Reynolds, Esq.

Marry, you may bring Frisker, my zany, he's a good skipping swaggerer.—B. Jonson. Poetaster, Act iii. sc. 1.

For the fine courtier, the woman's man,
 That tells my lady stories, dissolves riddles,
 Ushers her to her coach, lies at her feet
 At solemn masks, applauding what she laughs at;
 Reads her asleep anights, and takes his oath
 Upon her pantoffles, that all excellence
 In other madams do but zany hers.
Beaum. & Fletch. Queen of Corinth, Act i. sc. 2.

Yet even this confirms me in my opinion of slighting popular applause, and of contemning that approbation which those very people give, equally with me, to the zany of a mountebank.—Dryden. Evening's Love, Pref.

But say what recompense for all this waste
 Of honour, truth, attention, time, and taste?
 To shine confess'd her zany, and her tool,
 And fall by what I rose, low ridicule?—Smollett. Advice.

ZEAL'LOUSNESS. } JEALOUS
 Warmth, fervour, ardour.

Zealot is sometimes applied to—one whose ardour outstrips his judgment.

I would to God I were once in place where I might cause your burning zeale to be known to those that have authority, power, and abilitie to recompense your travelling mind and pen.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 132.

His heart was continually, and most zealously bent to set forth the glory, laude and honour of the Almighty Creator, the heavenly and everlasting king.
Id. Ib. vol. i. p. 8.

For when our blessed Lord had propounded an instance of perfection, he that not only obeys the counsel, but thinks it to be a commandment, and necessary to be done at all times and persons, enters into an error at the gate of zeal, and at the same place lets out the excellency of his love.
Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. i. c. 3.

Stiff followers, such as zeal marvellously for those whom they have chosen for their masters.
Bacon. On the Con. of the Church of England.

If we be meale-mouthed in the scornes of religion, we are not patient, but zealelesse: here we may not forbear her, that lyes in our bosome.
Bp. Hall. Cont. Mephibosheth & Zibra.

If an erring conscience obliges us to follow it, then some men are bound to persecute the church, and the high priests sinned not in crucifying Christ; and the zealots of the Jews did well in afflicting the apostles and disciples of Jesus, because they did it ignorantly, and by the dictate of an erring conscience.

Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. i. c. 3.

I could wish these sciolous zealotists had more judgment joined with their zeal.—Howell. Letters.

She was empassion'd at that pittious act,
 With zealous envy of Greekes cruell fact,
 Against that nation, from whose race of old
 She heard that she was lineally extract.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 9.

Pol. She was both witty and zealous,
 And lighted all the tinder of the truth
 (As one said) of religion, in our parish;
 She was too learned to live long with us.
B. Jonson. Magnetick Lady, Act i. sc. 1.

And did thereto so zealously proceed,
 That those fair locks, whose curls did him adorn,
 Till he had seen the holy city freed,
 He deeply vow'd he never would have shorn.
Drayton. Legend of Robert Duke of Normandy.

There is nothing in which men more deceive themselves than in what the world calls zeal. There are so many passions which hide themselves under it, and so many mischiefs arising from it, that some have gone so far as to say, it would have been for the benefit of mankind if it had never been reckoned in the catalogue of virtues.
Spectator, No. 185.

After having treated of these false zealots in religion, I cannot forbear mentioning a monstrous species of men, who one would not think had any existence in nature, were they not to be met with in ordinary conversation, I mean the zealots in atheism.—Id. Ib.

I would have every zealous man examine his heart thoroughly, and I believe, he will often find, that what he calls a zeal for his religion, is either pride, interest, or ill-nature.—Id. Ib.

I love to see a man zealous in a good matter, and especially when his zeal shews itself for advancing morality, and promoting the happiness of mankind.—Id. Ib.

The honourable Robert Boyle, Esq. was a person no less zealously solicitous for the propagation of true religion, and the practice of piety and virtue; than diligent and successful in improving experimental philosophy, and in enlarging our knowledge of nature.
Clarke. On the Evidences, Pref.

The zealousness of our endeavours, and the applause that others entertain them with, may perhaps tempt us to think, that, because in our expressions we have surpassed ourselves, we have almost equalled our theme.
Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 296.

A furious zealot may think he does God service by persecuting one of a different sect. St. Paul thought so: but he confesses he acted sinfully, notwithstanding he acted ignorantly.—Gilpin, Ser. vol. i. Hint 12.

The Indians all offered very zealously to assist us against him, desiring, that for this purpose, they might be permitted to lie in the fort.—Cook. First Voyage, b. i. c. 16.

ZE'NITH. Opposed to nadir, (qv.)

But the reason thereof is this, because they being betwene the tropike and the equinoctiall, the sunne passeth twice in the yeere through their zenith over their heads, by meanes whereof they have two summers.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 731.

Also [they hold] that the zenith or point of the heaven is even and alike unto all.—Holland. Plinie, b. ii. c. 55.

— Heaven she is,
 Praised in herself above all praise; and he
 Which hears her speak, would swear the tuneful orbs Turn'd in his zenith only.
B. Jonson. Poetaster, Act i. sc. 1.

ZE'PHYR. Gr. Ζεφυρος, quasi, ζωηφορος, sive, το ζην φερειν, bringing life.

When zephyrus eke with his sole brethe
 Enspired hath in every holt and heth
 The tendre croppes.—Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 5.

Dryer it is [the east wind] than the west wind Favonius, which bloweth over against him from the equinoctial sun setting full west, called in Greeke Zephyrus.
Holland. Plinie, vol. xviii. c. 34.

And all within with flowres was garnished,
 That when mild zephyrus amongst them blew,
 Did breathe out bountious smels, and painted colours shew.—Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 5.

Where sweet myrrhe-breathing zephir in the spring
 Gently distils his nectar-dropping showers.
Drayton. Idea 53.

ZEST. Skinner says—is a small piece of orange-peel scraped and pressed into wine; perhaps from Fr. Zest, the inner skin of the walnut; or rather (ita me Deus amet) from Yeast. Why the name is given either to the orange-peel or the walnut-skin, the etymologists say not a word. Vanburgh is the earliest authority that has occurred. It is applied to—

Any thing that gives or adds, a relish, a savour: generally—that enhances a pleasure or enjoyment.

A smart repartee, with a zest of recrimination at the head of it, makes the prettiest sherbet.
Vanburgh. Journey to London.

And though sometimes a lucky hit
 May give a zest to Butler's wit;
 Whatever makes the measure halt
 Is beauty seldom, oft a fault.—Lloyd. On Rhyme.

Liberality of disposition and conduct gives the highest zest and relish to social intercourse.
Cogan. Ethical Treat. Disc. 1.

With an archness that formed a pleasing substitute for wit, and enough of taste to give zest and currency to his opinions, he [Cumberland] wanted little but a distrust of his own powers, to render him at once the delight and ornament of the age.
B. Jonson. Fox, Act v. sc. 5. Note by Gifford.

ZIG-ZAG. } Fr. Zig-zag. Menage con-ZIGZAG. } siders to be formed from its Z'GZAGGED. } likeness to the thing it is intended to denote: perhaps from the repetition of the first syllable of the name of the Gr. Z, i. e. zeug, zeug.

Lines turning sharply, as in the letter Z.

The outside of the south end shews the great antiquity of the building, having in it two great round arches, with zig-zag mouldings, our most antient species of architecture.
Pennant. London, p. 122.

— Such continual zigzags in a book,
 Such drunken reelings have an awkward look,
 And I had rather creep to what is true,
 Than rove and stagger with no mark in view.
Cowper. Conversation.

The middle alle has on each side four Norman round arches zig-zagged, surmounted with as many round-headed small windows.—Warton. History of Kiddingdon, p. 4.

ZINC. Perhaps formed upon the Ger. Zin, tin, (qv.)

The minerals, or semi-metals, that are dug out of the bowels of the earth, are antimony, cinnabar, zink, &c. to which may be added brimstone.
Locke. Elements of Natural Philosophy, c. 8.

ZO'DIACK. } Fr. Zodiaque; It. Zodiaco; ZODI'ACAL. } Sp. Zodiaco; Lat. Zodiacus;
 Gr. Ζωδιακος.

See the quotations from Hackluyt, Pliny, and Ferguson.

And vnderstande, that all the sterres sitting within the zodiacke of thine astrolabe, been cleeped sterres of the north, for thei arisen by the north east line, and all the remenaunt fixes out of the zodiacke, been icleped sterres of the south, but I saie not that thei arisen all by the southe east line, witnesse of Aldebrean and also Algomisa.
Chaucer. Astrolabe.

And also there ben signes twelue
 Which haue her cerceles by hem selue
 Compasped in the zodiacke.
Gower. Con. A. b. vii.

Also our authour of the sphere, Johannes de Sacro Bosco, in the chapter of the zodiacke, deriueh the etymologie of zodiacus, of the Greeke word zoe, which in Latine signifieth vita, life; for out of Aristotle hee alleadgeth, that according to the sunnes going to and fro in the zodiacke, the inferiour bodies take their causes of generation and corruption.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 53.

And hereto maketh much the orderly ranke of things therein, and namely the circle called signifier, or the zodiacke, set forth and divided by the formes of twelve living creatures therein portraied: together with the manner of the sunnes race throughout them keeping over the same course still, for so many ages past.—Holland. Plinie, b. ii. c. 3.

The planets move round about the sun from west to east in the zodiac; or, to speak plainer, are always found amongst some of the stars of those constellations, which make the twelve signs of the zodiac.

Locke. Elements of Natural Philosophy, c. 3.

Zodiack [ζωδιακος], from ζωδιον, an animal, because most of the constellations in it, which are twelve in number, are the figures of animals. The zodiack goes quite round the heavens: it is 16 degrees broad, so that it takes the orbits of all the planets, and likewise the orbit of the moon.

Ferguson. Astronomy, § 360.

He [Palingeni] once takes occasion, in his general survey of the world, to introduce a philosophical explanation of the zodiacal system.—Warton. Hist. of English Poetry, vol. iii.

ZONE. } Fr. Zone; It. Zona; Sp. Zona; ZO'NELESS. } Lat. Zona; Gr. Zωνη, from ζωνν-ειν, cingere, to gird. See the quotations from Holland and Dryden.

A girdle, a cincture.

Some there be that thinke the middle zone extreme hot, because the people of the country can, and doe live without clothing, wherein they childishly are deceived.

Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 51.

Whereas there bee of the heaven five parts which they call zones: all that lieth under the two utmost, to wit, on both sides about the poles, namely this here which is called Septentrio, i. the north, and the other over against it, named the south, it is overcharged with extreme and rigorous cold, yea, with perpetual frost and yce.

Holland. Plinie, b. ii. c. 48.

And as five zones th' aetherial regions bind,
 Five correspondent, are to earth assign'd:
 The sun with rays, directly darting down,
 Fires all beneath, and fries the middle zone:
 The two beneath the distant poles, complain
 Of endless winter, and perpetual rain.

Dryden. Ovid. Metam. b. i.

Clos'd was her eye, and from her heaving breast
 In careless folds loose fell her zoneless vest.

Mason. Isis.

Thou art not known where Pleasure is ador'd,
 That reeling goddess with the zoneless waist
 And wan'dring eyes, still leaning on the arm
 Of Novelty, her fickle, frail support.

Cowper. Task, b. iii.

ZOO'GRAPHY. } From Gr. Zωνη, life, and ZOO'GRAPHER. } γραφ-ειν, to write.
 A description of (animal) life; of animals.

Zoographers observe, that the cameleon has a very uncommon structure of his visive organs; since, to omit lesser, though not inconsiderable, peculiarities, his eyes often move independently from one another.

Boyle. Works, vol. v. p. 407.

If we contemplate the end of this minute effect, its principal final cause being the glory of it's maker, leads us into divinity; and for its subordinate, as 'tis designed for alimental sustenances to living creatures, and medicinal uses to man, we are conducted to zoography, and the whole body of physick.—Glanvill. Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 22.

ZOO'LOGY. } From Gr. Zωνη, life, and ZOO'LOGER. } λογ-ειν, to discourse. See ZOO'LOGIST. } the quotation from Pennant.

Nature has, as zoologists teach us, furnished ducks and other water-fowl with a peculiar structure of some vessels about the heart, to enable them, when they have occasion to dive, to forbear for a pretty while respiring under water without prejudice.—Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 353.

As the naturalists may thus illustrate pathology as a chymist, so may he do the like as a zoologist.

Id. Ib. vol. ii. p. 84.

Zoology is the noblest part of natural history, as it comprehends all sensitive beings, from reasonable man, through every species of animal life, till it descends to that point where sense is wholly extinct, and vegetation commences. and certainly, none will deny, that life, and voluntary motion, are superior to a mere vegetating principle, or the more inactive state of the fossil kingdom.

Pennant. British Zoology, Pref.

A.

ABA'CK. Fr. Abaque; Lat. Abacus; Gr. Αβαξ,—a, not or without, βασις, a base or basis.

A square, or square table or trencher,—not originally standing on feet,—but hung against a wall, and on which diagrams or arithmetical tables, &c. were traced or written.

In the centre, or midst of the pegme, there was an aback or square, wherein this elegy was written.

B. Jonson. Part of the King's Entertainment.

ABEY'ANCE. An inheritance hoped for or expected; or rather expecting a new master, (Skinner.)

Probably from the Fr. Abbayer, to hold or keep at bay or in expectation. Law Lat. Abeyantia. See Spelman.

Sometimes the fee may be in abeyance, that is (as the word signifies) in expectation, remembrance and contemplation in law.—Blackstone. Commentaries, b. ii. c. 7.

ABOR'GINAL; Ab-origine, equivalent to, and perhaps intended to be more forceful than—Original, primitive.

Their [the Biscayner's] language is accounted aboriginal, and unmixed with either Latin, French or Spanish.

Swinburne. Travels in Spain, Let. 44.

ACCOUCHEUR. A French noun, common in English usage, from Fr. Ac-coucher; couche,—a couch. Endenized, as the title of—

The medical attendant upon women in child-bed.

ACHROMA'TIC. Gr. Αχροματικός, expers coloris, (from a, neg. and χρωμα, colour.) Free from, without colour.

As telescopes of this description are not affected with the prismatic colours, the late Dr. Bevis proposed to distinguish them by the name of achromatic, an appellation which they have hitherto retained, though some have erroneously stated that it was first given them by the astronomer Lalande.

Brewster. App. to Ferguson's Lectures.

A'CME. Gr. Ακμη, from ακη, acies, cusps. A point, an extreme point; a summit.

In that its [France] acmé of human prosperity and greatness, in the high and palmy state of the monarchy of France, it fell to the ground without a struggle.

Burke. On a Regicide Peace, Let. 1.

A'COLYTHE. } Fr. Acolyte; Low Lat.
ACO'LYTHIST. } Acolytus; Gr. Ακολουθος, from ακολουθειν, to follow.

An attendant (in the Romish church), who carried the tapers, &c. before the superior ministers.

At the end of every station, an acolythe (an inferior kind of officer) dips this piteous patch into the oil of a burning lamp: and having wiped it as clean as he can, comes to the pope for a blessing, Jube, domine, benedicere.

Brevint. Saul & Samuel, p. 321.

[It is his duty] to ordain the acolythist to keep the sacred vessels.—Ayliffe. Parergon.

That can or may hear; pertaining to hearing or the sensation of sound.

ACRO'NYCAL. } Gr. Ακρονυχ, the first part ACRO'NYCALLY. } of the night; ακρονυχος, evening; ακρος, beginning; νυχ, night.

Evening, time of sunset; (applied to stars, &c. rising or setting at sunset.)

The achronical rising [of a constellation] is when it appears at the close of day and in opposition to the sun's diurnal course.—Dryden. Virgil. Æneis, Ded.

He [Orion] is tempestuous in the summer when he rises heliacally, and rainy in the winter, when he rises achronically.—Id. Ib.

ACRO'STIC, n. } tico; Gr. Ακρο-στιχος, the first part of a verse; (ακρος, first part, and στικός, verse.) Applied to—

Verses, in which the first letters of each line, taken successively, form a word.

Leave writing plays, and choose for thy command,
 Some peaceful province in acrostic land.

Dryden. Mac Flecnoc.

The acrostic was probably invented about the same time with the anagram, though it is impossible to decide whether the inventor of the one or the other were the greater block-head. The simple acrostic is nothing but the name or title of a person or thing, made out of the initial letters of several verses, and by that means written after the manner of the Chinese, in a perpendicular line.—Spectator, No. 60.

A'DVOCATE. After Advocation, (line 6,) insert Advowson; and in the explanation add,—

An advocate was also (consequentially) a patron, and the Low Lat. advocatio, patronage; whence Fr. Advouaison, Eng. Advowson, (Skinner;) but Cotgrave interprets the Fr. an advowing or avouching for; a taking into protection.

Advowson is the right of presentation to a church, or ecclesiastical benefice. Advowson, advocatio, signifies in clientelam recipere, the taking into protection: and therefore is synonymous with patronage, patronatus: and he who has the right of advowson is called the patron of the church.—Blackstone. Commentary, b. ii. c. 3.

AFFY. } davit."

AFFILIATE, v. } Fr. Affilier, affiliation, to AFFILIA'TION. } adopt a son (filius); generally, a child.

The verb is of modern introduction, but in common use, as the verb, to father, in bastardy.

Affiliated, (generally,)—allied, associated.

A'GNAIL. A. S. Aug-nægle, a sore or impostumation under the nail of man or beast; as,—a fellow. (Skinner.) See ANGER.

AITIO'LOGY. Fr. Aitiologie, a yielding or shewing of a reason or cause, (Cotgrave.) Gr. Αιτιολογια; (αιτια, a cause, and λογ-ειν, to discourse.) Boyle explains—

The theory which explains the causes of things. Bp. Hall uses the word. See the quotation from him in v. Chronology.

A/LBATROSS. Called, by Dampier, Alga-tross.

A large bird, of the gull kind, inhabiting the tropics, and more southerly.

They [English seamen] have several other signs, whereby to know when they are near it, as by the sea-fowl they meet at sea, especially the algatrosses, a very large winged fowl. Dampier. Voyages, an. 1691.

Mr. Foster shot an albatross, whose plumage was of a colour between brown and dark grey, the head and upper side of the wings rather inclining to black, and it had white eye-brows.—Cook. Second Voyage, b. i. c. 3.

A/LIQUOT. (Lat.) Applied to a quotient or divisor without a remainder.

A/LLIGATOR. A large species of lizard; Sp. Lagarto; Lat. Lacerta.

And in his needie shop a tortois hung,
An allegator stuf, and other skins
Of ill shap'd fishes.—Shakes. Romeo & Juliet, Act v. sc. 1.

Alligators are also in great numbers in all the creeks, rivers, and lagunes in the bay of Campeachy. [The alligator] is shaped like a lizard.—Dampier. Voyages, an. 1676.

ANAGLY'PTIC, n. } In anaglyptic sculpture, the figure is prominent, (Evelyn.)

The anaglyptic art (not produced in the world 'till about the time of Belus and the beginning of Gentilisme) was not 'till long after the use of letters.—Evelyn. Sculptura.

The present [treatise] does only touch the metals.—We might yet safely I think admit the Greek anaglyphics. Id. Ib.

ANASARCOUS. Gr. Ανα, and σαρξ, the flesh. Above the flesh, and beneath the skin; i. e. between the two.

I found his body much extenuated, his legs anasarcous and his back and hips excoriated with lying in bed. Wiseman. Surgery, b. i. c. 23.

ANCHOVY. A small fish; why so called, see Menage, Le Origini. Fr. Anchois; It. Anchiove, acciuga; Sp. Anchova.

Many fish are entirely without any bladder, that swim at ease in every depth: such as the anchovy and fresh-water gudgeon.—Goldsmith. Animated Nature, pt. iv. b. i. c. 1.

A/NTELOPE. A variety of the gazelle; an animal partaking of the nature of the goat and deer.

The pardale swift, and the tigrè cruëll,
The antelope, and wolf, both fiers and fell.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 6.

The tenth variety of the gazelle is the antelope, so well known to the English, who have given it the name. Goldsmith. Animated Nature, b. ii. c. 3.

A/PEX. (Lat.) A little tuft, tied or fastened (apum) to the top of a cap; and hence applied, generally, to—

The top, tip, or summit; the highest point.

Upon his [the Flamen's] a hat of delicate wool, whose top ended in a cone, and was thence called apex. This apex was covered with a fine net of yarn.

B. Jonson. Part of the King's Entertainment.

APO/THECARY. See the quotation from Stowe; and, for the etymology, see POTHECARY.

But afterwards the world grew to be so full of deceit and couenage, that some fine wits and nimble heads devised to set up apothecarie shops promising and bearing us in hand that every man might buy his life and health there for money.—Holland. Plinie, b. xxiv. c. 1.

When an Argosey came with Greeke and Spanish wines, viz. Muscadele, Malmesey, Sacke and Bastard, the apothecaries of London then went into these marchants, and every man bought such rundlets, vessels, and quantities, of those rich wines, as they thought they should retayle in the city, vnto such as vsually bought them for phisicke & for the communion table.—Stowe. Chronicle.

A/PRICATE. v. Lat. Apricari, to bask in the sun. Ray notices this word as a new coinage by Boyle, who much affected such Latinisms.

A/RABESQUE. (Fr.) Arabian-like, (Cotgrave.)

I was much taken with the principal front of the inner court [of the palace of Andalusia.] I was not a little surprized to find lions, castles, and other armorial ensigns of Castille and Leon, interwoven with the arabesque foliages. Swinburne. Travels through Spain, Let. 31.

A/RSON. Old Fr. Arson, ab ardendo; ardere, to burn. A burning; in law,—

"A malicious and wilful burning of the house or outhouse of, another man," (Blackstone. Com. b. iv. c. 16.)

A/STRAGAL. It. Astragala; Sp. Astragal; Fr. Astragale; Gr. Αστραγαλος. Cotgrave explains,—

"The nuckle bone or bonket; also the game with such bones; the first bone of the instep; also a small and round member in architecture (plain or wrought or writhen), and termed by our workmen an astragal or small belt."

The astragal has its analogy from that bone a little above the heel, whence the French call it the talon or heel itself, nor improperly.—Evelyn. On Architecture.

BAIZE. Dut. Baey; Dan. Bai; Sp. Bayeta; It. Bajetta; i. e. Baius pannus, from Baie, where this cloth was first made, (Minshew.) Rather, (says Skinner,) from base, because it is—

An inferior or coarser cloth, to which some ascribe an English origin. It is enumerated by Dyer among "the countless list of woollen webs," (Fleece, b. iii.)

BA/LKERS. Spies, who, standing upon a high rock near the sea, in the season of the her-ring-fishery, observe the shoals of fish coming, and, by moving bows, point out to the fishermen, waiting in the boats, the course they are taking:—I know not, continues Skinner, whether from the Dut. Balck, a bulk or beam; and, consequently, any high place; or, perhaps, be-lookers; A. S. Beloceras, lookers after fish; though he confesses that Somner has no such word.

When the season of the yeere and weather serueth, they [the fishermen] lie hovering upon the coast, and are directed in their worke, by a balker, or huer, who standeth on the cliffe side, and from thence best discerneth the quantitie and course of the pilcherd.

Carew. Survey of Cornwall, fol. 32.

BARTON. A. S. Bere-tun. Somner says that Bere-wic, or Bere-tun, (whence the more modern Barton.) is Villa frumentaria. Tun is any inclosed place, (from A. S. Tyn-ian, to inclose,)—a towne, village, yard, barton, &c. the country lying within the bounds of a city. It was also called a bark-en, which Skinner derives from the A. S. Beorg-an, munire, to fend or fence; he calls it—locus clausus, an inclosed place (in respectu, sc. agrorum); Ray,—that in Sussex it is the yard of a house; and the word bar-ton appears to be composed of the A. S. Beorg, or beork, a place of defence, and tun, inclosed; and to mean, simply,—

Any place inclosed for security, separate possession, privacy, &c. &c.

That part of the demaines, which appertaineth to the lords dwelling house, they call his barten or berton.

Carew. Survey of Cornwall, fol. 36.

The first that devised a barton and mue to keep foule was M. Lenius Strabo, a gentleman of Rome, who made such one at Brindis, where he had enclosed birds of all kinds.—Holland. Plinie, b. x. c. 50.

BAZA/R. A word now in common use, from the Persian, applied to—

A number of shops and stalls under the same roof.

BE'EMOL. Low Lat. Be-mollis, i. e. b-mollis or b soft; called, by Bacon, a half note.

A true computation ought ever to be by distribution into equal portions. Now there be intervenient in the rise of eight, in tones, two beemolls, or half notes.

Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 104.

BINE. (sc. of the hop,) the bind, quia instar vinculi aut fascia ambit.

BLOTE. v. Infumare, to smoke; Minshew derives from Dut. Bloedt; Skinner, from blos-en, rubescere; whence he adds, our bloat coloured. See BLOWZE.

To smoke (sc. herrings) till dry.

BLU/DGEON. Not in our older lexicographers.

A stick formed to inflict severe blows, (perhaps to fetch blood; a bloody (A. S. Bloodig) blow.)

By them the innocent are put in terror, affronted & alarmed with threats and execrations, endangered with loaded pistols, beat with bludgeons, and hacked with cutlasses.—Fielding. On the Increase of Robbers, s. 8.

BOLT-SPRIT, or } "Vox nautica," says Bo'wSPRIT. } Skinner, "from Dut.
Bolt, vectis, a bar, and spritt, a sail-yard."
A transverse beam in the mast of a ship.

Ariel. ——— Sometime I'd diuide,
And burn in many places: on the top-mast,
The yards and bore-spritt, would I flame distinctly,
Then meet and ioyn.—Shakes. Tempest, Act i. sc. 2.

Then on the leeward sheet the seamen bend,
And haul the bow-line to the bow-sprit end.
Falconer. Shipwreck, c. 2.

BOUQUE/T. Fr. Bouquet, a nosegay or posy; (a bush or bush) of flowers.

Sweet briar, hawthorn, lilies, nettles, roses,
What a nice bouquet for all sorts of noses.
Woolcot. Odes of Importance.

BO/WLINE, } Vox nautica, from the Fr.
Bo'ULINE, or } Boline, bouline. Rudens qui-Bo'LINE. } dam in navi. Skinner, Dan.
Borline.

A tack or cord in a ship, with which mariners use to draw the sail, which way they list, that they may thereby gather the wind. Fr. Bouline,—perhaps, from boule, globus, from its round form, (Minshew.)

The ship no longer can her top-sails bear;
No hopes of milder weather now appear:
Bow-lines and halyards are cast off again:
Clue lines haul'd down, and sheets let fly amain.
Falconer. Shipwreck, c. 2.

BRONCHIAL. Gr. Βρογχος, the throat. Fr. Bronchique (muscle), one of the five muscles that open the larynx.

Such [inflammation of the lungs] may happen either in the bronchial or pulmonary vessels, and may soon be communicated from the one to the other. Arbuthnot. On Diet, c. 3.

BU/MBOAT. Dut. Boom-schip, navigiolum ex uno ligno;—boom-kaen, scapha ex uno ligno, (Kilian.)

A small ship or boat of one beam, or log; a lumpish, heavy kind of boat. See Buss.

C.

CU/RRANT. Fr. Raisine de Corinthe. A fruit introduced from Corinth.

The ruby tintured corinth clustering hangs,
And emulates the grape.—Somerville. Hobbinol, c. 3.

DEVO/LVE. Add to the quotations:—

Which line of Ahud falling in Joseph, as having no issue, the right of inheritance devolved upon one of the younger line, viz. upon Mary, and consequently upon Jesus her son and legal heir.—South, vol. iii. Ser. 7.

Nay, the king, and also the people in general, might have gained by either a devolution or extinction of some payments, whereof the right discontinued but an hour were irrecoverably lost to the city.

State Trials. The King and the City of London, an. 1682. N.

He hath by reservations, provisions, collations of vacancies apud sedem, resignations, devolutions and other such tricks extremely encroached on the rights of all, to the infinite vexation, damage and mischief of Christendom.

Barrow. Of the Pope's Supremacy.

The education of youth of both sexes principally devolves upon the women, not only in their infancy, but during that period, in which the constitution both of body and mind, the temper and dispositions of the heart, are in a great measure formed.—Gregory. Comparative View.

Wherever there is a house, the stranger finds a welcome, and to the other evils of exterminating tacksmen, may be added the unavoidable cessation of hospitality, or the devolution of too heavy a burden on the ministers.

Johnson. Journey to the Western Islands.

OMISSIONS.

I.

ISINGLASS. Ger. Haus-blase; Sw. Hus-blaes:—Icthyophylla, composed of haus, the name of a large fish (the sturgeon) found in the Danube; and blase, a bladder; the glutinous matter, called housblase or isinglass, being extracted from the bladder of this fish. Pliny says,—“A fish there is, named Icthyocolla, which hath a glewish skin, and the very glue that is made thereof, is likewise called icthyocolla. Some affirme, the said glue is made of the belly and not of the skin of the said fish,” (b. xxxii. c. 7.)

Icthyocolla, or ising-glass, is also made of the sound of our fish, [the common sturgeon] as well as that of the others, but the beluga affords the best.

Pennant. Zoology. Common Sturgeon.

M.

MIDGE. A.S. Mycge; Ger. Mucke; Dut. Mugge; Dan. Myg; Fr. Mouche.
A small fly; a gnat.

R.

RE/TRO-SPECT. } An English compound
RETROSPE'CTION. } (comparatively modern) RETROSPE'CTIVE. } of the Lat. Retro, backwards, and spectum, past part. of specere, to look.
Retropiciens is used by Vitruvius.
A look or view back upon things past; reflection.

As you arraign his majesty by retrospect, so you condemn his government by second sight.—Addison. Freeholder.

Can you take delight in viewing
This poor isle's approaching ruin,
When thy retrospection vast Sees the glorious ages past.

Swift. To Janus. On New Year's Day.

In vain the sage, with retrospective eye,
Would from the apparent What conclude the Why,
Infer the motive from the deed.

Pope. Moral Ess. Ess. 1.

Retro-spects, with bad reckoners, are troublesome things.
Warburton. Remarks on Occas. Reflections, pt. ii. Rem. 13.

Sense on the present only feeds; the soul
On past, and future, forages for joy.
'Tis hers by retrospect, through time to range;
And forward time's great sequel to survey.

Young. The Complaint, Night 8.

— Where shall we seek relief,
Where ease th' oppressive anguish of the mind,
When Retrospection glows with conscious shame,
By grey experience in the wholesome school
Of Sorrow tutor'd.—Cooper. Power of Harmony, pt. i.

— In sequester'd bow'rs
The pow'r of art resides; Reflection firm,
And vagrant fancy at her sov'reign nod
Attendant wait: behind, th' ideal train
Of Memory, with retrospective eye,
Supports her throne, whilst Contemplation guides
Her trophied car. Id. Ib.
